Camp Meeting.	Begins
Palmer Creek	Oct. 1
South Mississippi Holiness	Oct. 8

The General Passenger Department of the Texas and Pacific Railway Company will issue on the first of October, and regularly thereafter, a publication to be known as The Texas and Pacific Quarterly.

The object of this publication will be to keep the superior advantages of this line, not only before its patrons, but before the traveling public throughout the country. Whatever will pertain to the development of the State, or to the advancement of the interests of the railroads, will be set prominently before the readers of the Quarterly. Short letters from the people will be appreciated and carefully considered.

Low Vacation Rates.

Every day from June 1 to September 30, inclusive, the Queen and Crescent Route will sell excursion tickets at low rates to the Mountains and Seashore; return limit October 31, 1897.

This route offers tourists the most perfect train service in the South. Through Pullman sleepers on solid vestibuled trains with latest appointments.

Inquire of your nearest Queen and Crescent ticket agent for descriptive matter, rates and full information.

BREAKING THE BARS.

Sigh not the old heroic ages back,
The heroes were but brave and earnest men.
Do thou but, hero-like, pursue thy track,
Striving, not sighing, brings them back again.

Divinely gifted man,
Whose life in low estate began,
And on a village green;
Who breaks his birth's invidious bars,
And grasps the skirts of happy chance,
And breasts the blows of circumstance,
And grapples with his evil stars;
Who makes by force his merit known,
And lives to clutch the golden keys
To mold a mighty state's decrees,
And shape the whisper of the throne.
And moving up from higher to higher,
Becomes on Fortune's crowning slope
The pillar of people's hope,
The center of the world's desire.

The Advent of a New Fairy.

BY REV. M. M. BLACK, M. A.

Though the Epworth League has not yet attained her majority, she exhibits such dignity of purpose and readiness of service, such largeness of growth and enthusiasm of effort, as to elicit the profoundest wonder and admiration. Whatever misgivings and feelings of distrust her promoters may have had at the beginning of her career, they have all been speedily dissipated, and the most ardent hopefulness has taken their place. Already this new child of Methodism has won a commanding place for herself in the church, and under her banner hundreds of thousands of consecrated youths and maidens march with firm step and lofty purpose. She numbers her followers in every State and Territory in the Union, and, eager for conquest, she has braved the dangers of ocean, and in distant lands, undaunted by ignorance and heathenism, she has unfurled her banner to the breeze.

The Epworth League, then, is no longer an experiment. Her development and progress have far exceeded expectation. No other organization connected with the church has aroused such intense enthusiasm, or has grown with such rapid strides. It is inspiring in the highest degree to know that in every branch of Methodism the young people are thus banded together, and that, though in different camps, they are making common cause against the forces of evil.

He who fails to perceive the importance of enlisting the youth of the church in religious work and in efforts toward self-improvement is blind to the best interests of Christianity. Much attention has been given for some time to the religious instruction of the children through the agency of the Sunday-school, whose power for good is inestimable. Nevertheless, there remains much to be done that is not done by the Sunday-school. Unfortunately, the majority of our young people, after they reach the age of sixteen, drop out of the Sunday-school, and, for the most part, are thereafter neither reached nor utilized by the church. Many of them enter manhood and womanhood with the crudest notions of what the church teaches, and with scarcely any conception of duty or service. They grow up with the idea that all religious work must be left to their elders, and are led to believe that the church condemns all amusements as sinful. Since old heads can not be made to grow on young shoulders, and since the love of fun, when not excessive, is both natural and innocent, it is no wonder that the church has never gained the hold upon youth that it is her privilege and duty to have.

How can we expect young people to become useful in the church unless they are trained to be so? "As the twig is bent, the tree is inclined." A man who joins the church in middle life seldom becomes as serviceable as some younger person who begins early to employ in the Lord's cause whatever talents he may have. It is not so much a matter of consecration in this case as it is of training and development.

The great Dr. Johnson is credited with saying, "You can make something out of a Scotchman if you catch him young." "So," as our Sunday-school Editor remarks, "we are sure of having an army of Christian workers in the church of the future if we catch and train them when young."

As the Sunday-school is the nursery of the church, the Epworth League ought to become its training-school, where the consecrated youth are equipped for service and set to work for the Master. Her object is to save from defilement and estrangement by providing wholesome influences and associations, to direct in proper and useful channels the superabundance of youthful energy, to foster the noblest ideals, and to stimulate the truest self-culture ere the poetic period of life has departed and the sordid, practical spirit has taken possession of the soul. The League has come to do a long-needed work. Its origination was a happy thought, and its success is a matter of surprise and congratulation.

In its departments the League is a triunity, no one of whose parts can be omitted without marring its symmetry and impairing its effectiveness. As spiritual culture is the highest duty of man, the Devotional Department is given the first place in the League building, and should always be made prominent. The primary object of the League is not to provide entertainment or to disseminate knowledge, but to foster habits of piety and to develop Christian character. No League that neglects the devotional feature can hope to achieve the best results. Unless love to Christ and a deep sense of responsibility to God are made the main springs of action, the zeal of our Leaguers will be spasmodic and their obedience partial. Hence the importance of having the young people to meet and sing and talk and pray and study God's Word together.

The League also pays due attention to the intellectual and social wants of the young, for true piety consists neither in Puritanism, nor in contempt of culture. The aim of the Literary Department is to get the Leaguers interested in good literature, to enlighten them as to the doctrines, history and polity of Methodism, and to provide wholesome entertainment from time to time, so as to counteract in a measure the drawing power of worldly amusements. Man is social in his nature, and also has an innate fondness for amusement. Christianity can not afford wholly to ignore these two facts. In some towns and communities the League has already revolutionized the character of the amusements participated in by the young people. Instead of dances and card parties, the League social is the attraction, at which those present are entertained by music, readings, recitations, and short talks, followed by conversation and good fellowship. If we spent half as much effort in striving to keep the young from straying, and in providing wholesome influences and amusements, as we put forth in endeavoring to win them back after allowing them to drift, we would accomplish infinitely more. Who can straighten a tree that has been permitted to grow crooked? The League has a vast field for usefulness before it in looking after this feature of the life of youth, and it has come none too soon.

Since fervor, faith and knowledge are not all of religion, it is eminently fitting that the League should lay great stress upon Christian philanthropy—and personal—helpfulness. Pious thoughts and superior wisdom are little worth if they do not result in religious activity and impel to a life of usefulness. In the Charity and Help Department of the League the young are trained to visit the sick, to look after strangers, to hunt out and relieve distress, and to comfort the afflicted. It means much for the church and for the burdened pastors that the Leaguers are becoming enlisted in this all-important work, which so few are willing to do.

There is a great work before many of our pastors in the matter of organizing Leagues and developing them. It might seem that our pastors, especially those on large circuits, are already overburdened, and that the supervision of a League would increase this burden. This is true at first. No pastor can hope to have a live, flourishing League without earnest, patient effort. But in a short while he is more than compensated for all his trouble by the help and encouragement given him by the Leaguers, by the increased interest in church affairs, and by the tone of spirituality which begins to manifest itself. The pastor who does not expect to make a success of his League is foredoomed to failure. There ought to be a League in every church where seven or eight seriously disposed young people can be induced to sign the pledge. If they are not organized into a League, the devil will soon organize them into something else. No pastor ought to give over the effort to start a League because he fails the first or the second time he tries. If we proceeded on that plan, none of us would ever raise our Conference collections.

It has been objected by some that the League is not a success in the country; that it is adapted only to the towns. This is a mistake. Many of the most flourishing Leagues in Southern Methodism are on circuits. Of course, in some sections where the people are scattered and there is a lack of suitable leaders, nothing can be done. In other instances, however, all that is needed is a fair amount of pluck and perseverance on the part of the pastor.

When the League was in its infancy some one might have said that inasmuch as the young people above a certain age are not being reached by the Sunday-school or by the regular services, it was folly to form a separate society for them. Time, however, has demonstrated the wisdom of the policy. Multitudes of young people who had hitherto taken little or no part in church work now labor enthusiastically in the League. The realization that the League is their own, and that they are expected to do something with it, is largely accountable for this. Nothing so develops one as responsibility, provided it be not excessive or too early assumed.

Among the beneficent results of the League movement is an increased interest in the cause of missions. In two or three States the Leaguers have undertaken the support of several new missionaries, and considerable sums have been pledged for this purpose. If this zeal, however, can be utilized in raising the regular assessments, we think that it will be better for the church in the end. In our own State the Leaguers propose to raise this year the sum of $1,000 for the Orphans' Home at Water Valley.

If the Methodism of the future is to hold her own and make new conquests, she must bestow yet greater attention upon the training of the young. The secret of the continued growth and strength of Romanism is to be found in her orphan asylums and her parochial schools and convents, where children and youth are persistently instructed in the doctrines and usages of the Romish Church, and are constantly surrounded by Romish influences. From cradlehood to manhood and womanhood there is constant watch-care and training. Can we afford to be less attentive and watchful? To leave our young people unprovided for after they reach their teens is to make a fatal mistake. There must be no gap in our training and guardianship of youth.

It has been said that there is already too much machinery in the church, and that the League is but another burden and a channel for diverting energy that ought to be concentrated elsewhere. As to the League's usefulness we have previously spoken. As to additional machinery we might learn a lesson from Roman Catholicism which possesses the wonderful power of directing and utilizing with marked success every organization and order that springs up within her fold. No other church in Christendom has so many religious orders and societies as she. This policy of hers, we may safely assert, is another reason for her continued hold upon the world.

In the League, then, we behold an organization which signally shows the continued adaptability and resourcefulness of Methodism, whose founder uttered the memorable words now re-echoed round the world: "I desire a league, offensive and defensive, with every true soldier of Jesus Christ."

Epworth League Echoes.

BY REV. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD.

We acknowledge receipt of complimentary copies of the Epworth News and the Epworth Herald. The former is published in interest of the Epworth Leagues of North Carolina; the latter is the official organ of the Epworth Leagues of the M. E. Church.

A letter recently received from a member of the Senior League, Main Street Church, Water Valley, reveals the fact that material aid has recently been rendered a poor and deserving family by these wide awake Leaguers. Kind reference is made to the newly appointed pastor, Rev. W. T. Browning, and the statement is made that the League continues to grow in interest as also in numbers.

We quote here a sentence from the letter of a pastor which appeared in the ADVOCATE, of Aug. 12: "We have a good field north of us here, and have good prospects of success. Have organized an Epworth League at a place in the country where we have no church, which is doing good work, and will probably be the nucleus of a church organization."

Announcements have been made to the effect that District Epworth League Conferences are to be held in the bounds of the Sardis, Corinth and Meridian districts.

During our recent visit to West Point, Miss., we had the pleasure of meeting the Junior Leaguers. They represent a large and enthusiastic body of bright young girls and boys studying to become "workmen that need not to be ashamed." At the beginning of the service Bibles were distributed, and each Leaguer was enabled to take part in the service. By special request of the pastor, Rev. W. S. Lagrone, your correspondent delivered his lecture on "Methodism: Its Past, Present and Future," at the eight o'clock service (Sunday night) for the benefit of the Senior and Junior Leagues.

Sam Jones Camp Meeting.

BY "REX."

The Sam Jones Camp Meeting for the current year has passed into history. Rev. Jno. A. B. Jones preached a short, but appropriate and interesting sermon on Friday night, Aug. 26, which was the opening service. The attendance at the opening and during the entire ten days was up to the average; but there was, as I saw things, a lack of interest and spirituality not common at these meetings. Happily our Lord sometimes does a work of righteousness, and saves men where there are no surface indications of such a work being done, and it may be that the final judgment may demonstrate my mistake and show fruits of that meeting of an abundant character. I earnestly pray that such may be the case.

On Sunday, at 11 A. M., Dr. Black, of the ADVOCATE, preached one of his masterly and most eloquent sermons—a sermon that I do not remember ever to have heard surpassed. The interest was intense and the people profoundly moved. Indeed, the same might be said of the several efforts of the Doctor while on the grounds, and the only wonder is, that more visible results were not seen. However, the preacher did his whole duty, and the harvest must be from God.

Prof. Hunnicutt, of the University of Georgia, and a brother of Dr. Hunnicutt, was with us from the twenty-seventh to the closing service of the camp meeting. He did some as good preaching as was ever heard, except by those who sat under the teachings of our blessed Lord. In many respects the Professor is a remarkable man. Intellectually, he is so; socially, he is lovable and winning; spiritually, he is consecrated and zealous beyond his physical strength. His personal history is stranger than fiction, and he lives in the constant enjoyment of the religion of the gospel he preaches and in close communion with God. He enjoyed two days' respite from pain last week—the first for forty years.

Wednesday brought Bro. Alex. Watkins, who stayed with us until Friday night. He also did some most excellent preaching, as he usually does, and made appeals to sinners that struck me as inexpressibly pathetic, loving, and moving. Incidents connected with Bro. Alec's visit made it a benediction to me and mine, and will keep it green in our memories until we exchange the cares and trials of life for the rest and glory of heaven.

Dr. Carter, of Centenary, was also with us, and did some splendid preaching, as he always does. Bro. M. M. Black preached but once, but it was an excellent sermon. There were several other preachers who did effective work.

One brother, as is the custom of some of our second-blessing brethren, must needs bring this vexed and unprofitable question into undue prominence, forgetting that a camp meeting is not a theater for the discussion of non essentials or doctrinal points, but for the salvation of sinners. This brother's zeal so far outran his discretion and subverted his sense of propriety that he devoted about four-fifths of his discourse to a quartette of his ministerial brethren, each one of whom, with one exception, was old enough to be his father.

I hope I may be excused by my brethren for my condemnation of the practice of lugging these things into camp-meeting services, because I remember that much good was prevented being done at former meetings on these grounds by preaching sermons in opposition to the second-blessing theory of sanctification; hence I am the uncompromising opponent of such preaching, by either side, on these occasions. Many of the best and most consecrated of the laity in attendance on these meetings are honest believers in this doctrine, and I love them and respect their feelings much too much to write a word that could wound their sensibilities. What I object to in the professors of this belief—i. e., those with whom I have been familiar—is their propensity to proclaim their own sanctity and holiness on the house-tops, the corners of the streets, or in any place where they have an opportunity to do so. None of this have I seen in my brethren of Amite and Wilkinson counties; hence there is no antagonism between us, and only peace and brotherly love obtains.

Later a brother spoiled an otherwise good sermon by calling for those addicted to alcoholism, the tobacco habit, etc., to come to the altar, promising them an entire salvation from the desire for these things—a promise frequently made, and always without the warrant of God's Word. God is not more considerate of the people in our day than he was to St. Paul, whom he refused to deliver from the "thorn in the flesh," assuring him that "my grace shall be sufficient for you." That our Master will furnish the necessary amount of grace to enable his children to overcome any besetting sin is absolutely true; that he ever did more than this we do not believe.

It is a source of regret that some preachers so entirely forget that there is not necessarily wisdom in a multitude of words, especially in prayers, and that their praying and preaching would be more fruitful of good results if they used less than half as many words. A ten-minute prayer in public is entirely too long.

It would be as well, also, for our preachers to weigh their words before giving them utterance; as I heard one brother say, in his sermon, that keeping the Decalogue is the lowest plane of Christian character, when, in fact, it requires the very highest possible state of grace to enable us to keep these Commandments, the sum and substance of which, according to the Master, is to "Love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, soul, might, mind and strength, and thy neighbor as thyself." Can we do more than this? I think not.

Large crowds were in attendance on both Sundays, and the most of them listened with attention and, let us hope, with profit to the sermons. God's people enjoyed several seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Our beloved brother, Dr. Hunnicutt, was happy as a lord all the time. His presence, and that of his brother and other beloved ministers of the gospel of our Lord, in our tent was a benediction to us. This list includes yourself, Bros. Alex. Watkins, Geo. Hull, M. M. Black, Dr. Carter, and Bro. Flowers. God grant that, without the loss of one, we may meet in the same place at the next camp meeting on Sam Jones, and finally in heaven. Bros. Cassels, Roberts, Sessions, Van Randall, et al., were tireless in their efforts to have things in proper shape, while Sisters Cassels, De Lap, Burt, Longmire, Aunt Mary Whittington, and others whose names I can not recall, used every effort to make the preachers' tent as comfortable as possible. Bro. and Sister Huff attended to the wants of the inner man, and fed us as well as could be desired. The choir, under the excellent leadership of Bro. Bob Longmire, gave us excellent music, albeit we should have preferred more of the old-fashioned Methodist revival hymns. But we do not blame them. I have met ministerial members of the Mississippi Conference who do not know "When I can read my title clear," who would be astonished to hear "On Jordan's stormy banks I stand," and never dreamed that, "Come, humble sinner, in whose breast a thousand thoughts revolve," has an existence. These inspired poetical renditions of the gospel of our Lord are rapidly following the class meeting and the spirituality of Methodism to the shades of the past. It is sad, but none the less true.

Next year will find us better prepared to make transient visitors comfortable, and as the meeting will commence in the first week of August, we hope for a much larger attendance and a corresponding increase in good accomplished.

The services closed Sunday night with a characteristically good sermon from President J. A. B. Jones, and the usual farewell songs and incidents. Hands were taken, the parting tear was shed, and promises to meet each other in that upper and better country were made.

The annual meeting of the Association was held on Monday morning, and officers elected for the current year, but one or two changes being made, and these in the personnel of the Executive Committee. The session was most harmonious, not a ripple of unpleasantness appearing.

Natchez, Miss., Sept. 7, 1897.

ETERNITY!

BY ELLEN M. H. GATES.

Oh, the clanging bells of Time!
Night and day they never cease;
We are wearied with their chime
For they do not bring us peace
And we hush our breath to hear
And we strain our eyes to see
If thy shores are drawing near—
Eternity! Eternity!

Oh, the clanging bells of Time!
How their changes rise and fall
But in undertone sublime
Sounding clearly through them all,
Is a voice that must be heard,
As our moments onward flee
And it speaketh aye one word—
Eternity! Eternity!

Oh, the clanging bells of Time!
To their voices loud and low,
In a long, unresting line
We are marching to and fro:
And we yearn for sight or sound,
Of the life that is to be,
For thy breath doth wrap us round—
Eternity! Eternity!

Oh, the clanging bells of Time!
Soon their notes will all be dumb.
And in joy and peace sublime
We shall feel the silence come;
And our souls their thirst will slake,
And our eyes the King will see,
When thy glorious morn shall break—
Eternity! Eternity!

Letter from "Gilderoy."

There are some singular experiences in this life. We never get done with them as long as we live. A preacher in his fifty ninth year, and in the thirty-ninth of his ministry, has lately had a rare experience. He went to assist a brother in a meeting. A holiness meeting, so called, had just closed, and twenty-eight of the converts—Christians sanctified, or sinners converted and sanctified all at once—had just joined the church when this old-like preacher arrived. Things were at high tide. This old preacher preached an old sermon on the older text, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling, for God worketh in you to will and to do of his good pleasure!" Later he found out that the idea of working out one's salvation was out of date and behind the age. The whole thing, from sin to full salvation, comes instantaneously and by one act of simple faith. What a pity God did not know this when he inspired Paul to write that Scripture. It is so much easier to spring from sin into full salvation by one leap than to travel the old, harder and longer route laid down in God's Word and trod by our fathers for ages past. These young folks, from fifteen to twenty-five, had learned more in one week than this old preacher had in fifty-two years of hard study and harder experience. Verily this is a fast age in religion as in other things. Men and women, even boys and girls, come into full salvation by the normal method, as compared to the old way. They are "saved and sanctified" by first intention, as the surgeons say when a wound heals at once and without supuration. They jump from the middle of a bad case of sin into full, complete and entire sanctification at one spring.

This old preacher preached again on "justification by faith, and by faith only," another old sermon, the growth of a life-time. In this sermon he tried to show the state and condition of those who sinned after justification, and how they got rid of such sin, or sins. This, however, was out of harmony with the views of those who had been "sanctified and saved" by the new method. Their dissent was first manifested by withholding the "Amens" of approval, so hearty and frequent in the first part of the sermon. I doubt if any one of these new converts knew that we have an Article of Religion on "sin after justification." I am pretty certain they thought they knew more of the Bible and of Methodist theology by direct revelation than the old preacher knew by a lifetime of hard study. This direct revelation feature of the new method of full saivation is the most dangerous thing in it. It tends to make people wise above what is written, either by revelation or in the way of exposition. They are beyond the need of instruction. They are teachers, everyone of them, and no longer need to be taught. Age, long experience, hard study and extensive information are as nothing to a beardless boy, or a girl in her teens, who has a revelation from God. Having the Spirit, he or she knows the mind of God, and they are oracles to the ministry and church of God. It is a moral evil and a mortal offense to cross one of them.

When the old preacher was done, and the benediction had been pronounced, further dissent was shown when the leader of this band, a local preacher, a young man, sprang to his feet and cried out: "He don't know. We know. We are sanctified and saved. Hallelujah! Bless God." Those who had graduated in salvation with him, or under him, the week before, ran together in one corner of the church and had quite a religious jollification over their knowledge in the things of God in comparison with the ignorance and blindness of the old preacher. It was manifest to every sensible man and woman present that this local preacher and those acting with him were moved by the spirit, but it was not the Spirit of God. One spirit is often mistaken for another. This mistake was made by Saul of Tarsus before he became Paul the Apostle. This action on the part of these young people was ungentlemanly and unlady-like. Religion ought to make people genteel, generous, civil and polite. It ought to make young people respectful to age and to men called of God to preach the gospel. Men and women who have religion ought not to do spiteful things in the church and in the name of Christ. Full salvation by faith in Christ was never meant to make boors out of men and women. Boorishness comes of ignorance, or of a bad spirit. Paul was polite and conformed to the rules of etiquette prevailing in every court before which he appeared. It is a mistake to think that boorishness is a sign of superior holiness. It comes of the carnal mind, of gross ignorance or of bad raising. Whatever may be thought of the sermon, it is bad manners to show one's displeasure in public, and it is worse to show one's chagrin by pretending to praise the Lord.

For the first time in a ministry of thirty nine years this old preacher had gotten where a large lot of boys and girls, most of them converted the week before, knew more by revelation than he had been able to learn by a life-time of study. And for the first time he had gotten beyond the limits of his commission. He had been commissioned to call sinners to repentance, but here all, or nearly all, were in full salvation, or professed to be, and they were not willing for sinners to be called. If one did not preach holiness as they understood it, why, he must be howled down. It struck the old preacher that they were intense partisans, if not holy-hearted Christians; that they had fiery and furious zeal, but not zeal according to knowledge. Here the old preacher found more show of great piety in combination with less civility and common politeness than in any place he had ever been in all his life. If this is holiness, sanctification, full saivation, we may well pray, "From all such, good Lord, deliver us."

The older, wiser and more level-headed people in that community did not approve the bad conduct of these young zealots. They, too, will know more when they grow older and have larger experience—most of them will. Some of them the old preacher fears are incurables.

The old preacher, finding his way blocked for doing good, and fearing he might do harm, left and came home.

GILDEROY.

A Good Book.

Eleven years have passed since the first edition of only five hundred copies of this book appeared. Since then a second edition of one hundred copies has been issued under the imprint of our Publishing House—or printing house—for while we have one of the finest printing houses in America, we have one of the poorest Publishing Houses. Six hundred copies of one of the most interesting and valuable works ever printed in a Methodist establishment! The binding is serviceable, the paper good, the typography excellent. The index, however, is defective and unsatisfactory. The chapter headings are helpful; but a proper index ought to be prepared for the third edition, which ought to be ten thousand copies. After having been required to read and stand an examination on Neander's "Planting and Training of the Christian Church," one is apt to wonder why this thoroughly good book by one of the most thoroughly equipped men in Southern Methodism was not long since put into the course of study for our undergraduates and for our local preachers. But, unheralded and unpublished, a few hundred copies were printed, and our men of influence have apparently deemed it unworthy of notice, while many a book of less worth has called forth fulsome praise and whole columns in our official organs.

There is not a "high-church" pretension of any denomination which Dr. Harrison does not expose and explode. He shows the missing links in the so-called "apostolical succession" to be more abundant than in the Darwinian theory of evolution—whether it be through the Established Church of England or through the Church of Rome, and the tangled threads which no man has ever been able to unravel. He brings to light the fact that but little more than one hundred years ago the Baptist Churches of Virginia, in convention assembled, unanimously resolved that the episcopal form of church government was scriptural, and forthwith called themselves "The Baptist Episcopal Church," elected Bishops and fixed the bounds of their dioceses and prescribed their official duties! He shows the perplexities and difficulties encountered by Samuel Seabury (a pensioner on the British government for services rendered against the Americans during the Revolutionary War) in seeking ordination as Bishop of Connecticut, and how, failing in England, he went to Scotland and received ordination in a private room at the hands of the Scotch non-juror Bishops (who had been ousted from office and from church by virtue of the laws of England), and thenceforth signed himself "Samuel Connecticut." He shows how White and Weems appealed to Congress and the President, and the ministers to France, England, and Denmark to assist them in getting the tremendous help of ordination by authority of the British Parliament instead of the endowment of power by the baptism of the Holy Ghost. He gives a rich and racy letter—and a wise letter it is—from Benjamin Franklin to the perplexed theologians in search of the apostolical succession, and shows how Franklin tried to get for them the Roman Catholic succession, and the Lutheran succession, but in vain; and how at last by an Act of Parliament they obtained the boon for which they sought from a church whose first Archbishop Cranmer had never been deacon or priest, but while a layman, was appointed archbishop by Henry VIII. to reward him and qualify him to grant that lustful monarch a divorce from a lawful wife in order to marry Anne Boleyn. He further shows that Archbishop Secker and Bishop Butler of that presumptuous hierarchy were never baptized. He shows that with the mysterious and incomprehensible and fabulous apostolical succession (so-called) obtained by Act of Parliament, Dr. White assumed superiority over "Samuel Connecticut," and managed so diplomatically that the Seabury succession long since expired and all the present succession of the church is from Dr. White, and the Act of Parliament!

Every citation of ecclesiastical authority usually cited and relied on to bolster up the pretensions and arrogance of "the clergy," he has hunted down, and shown to be utterly at variance with the assertions and claims of the pretenders.

Dr. Harrison got hold of some of the books which are circulated privately among "the clergy" (like some of the rituals in the higher degrees of Masonry), and gives lengthy quotations from these books of doubtful authority. His refutations show very plainly why these books are not published to the world.

It would have been well had some of our Presbyterian brethren read Dr. Harrison's book before preparing their recent Westminster Confession addresses. If any of our brethren in the Methodist Church have been shaken by those addresses, a perusal of "The High Churchman Disarmed" will steady their nerves and confirm them in their faith in Methodism.

If Dr. Tigert has not yet read Dr. Harrison's book, it would not be a fruitless task for him to do so before writing much further on "The Making of Methodism." Indeed it might modify some of his views on the episcopacy in our church.

But this article is about as long as the editor and the readers of the ADVOCATE may care to have. So it is closed with the assertion that Dr. Harrison's book ought to be in the hands of every Methodist preacher and in every Methodist home, and read by every member of the Methodist Church. It would do good to intelligent people of other denominations. It is a readable and reliable book.

Rev. J. T. Howell.

Rev. J. T. Howell, son of T. J. and R. A. Howell, was born in Montgomery county, N. C., Sept. 30, 1858, and died at West, Miss., Aug. 6, 1897.

Bro. Howell received the last years of his education at the Southwestern Presbyterian University, Clarksville, Tenn. When thirteen years of age he was converted and joined the Presbyterian Church near Vaiden, Carroll county, Miss. In the words of one who for some time was his teacher, "Joe was always a good boy, and sat among the members near the pulpit."

In the early life of the subject of this notice his father moved near Black Hawk, where he died, leaving to Joe the care of his mother and little sisters. To this sacred trust he was ever faithful, and his devotion to his aged mother was beautiful. He clung to her to the very last.

He was most happily married to Miss Allean Brewer, Dec. 23, 1885. God gave them seven children, three of whom have preceded him to the better land.

Bro. Howell united with the M. E. Church, South, in 1886, and in October of the same year was licensed to preach. He was admitted on trial at Winona, Nov. 23, 1887; received into the Conference at Holly Springs in 1889, at which time he was ordained deacon by Bishop Galloway. He was ordained elder at Corinth by Bishop Granbery in 1892. During his ministry he served the following works: 1888, Sidon; 1889, Red Banks; 1890, Mount Vernon; 1891, Lewisburg; 1892, Pleasant Hill; 1893 and 1894, Winona circuit; 1895, Carrollton circuit; 1896 and 1897, West circuit, where he ended his earthly labors in the midst of warm friends.

Such devotion upon the part of a neighborhood is seldom seen as was manifested toward the sick pastor. Every want was hastily attended to, and the kindness and attention of his skillful physician, Dr. Rogers, I have never seen surpassed, remaining by his bed until he had passed away, and then helping to prepare him for burial.

Bro. Howell was a preacher of no mean ability. He possessed a cheerful disposition and attractive manner which won for him many friends. He was gifted in song, and often have his own eyes filled and his congregation melted to tears while he sang some sweet song of Zion.

He was always hopeful. During the long months of his last sickness he never felt nor looked despondent. The writer was privileged to visit him often, and he was cheerful to the last. At one visit, after prayer, I said, "Joe, how does the grace of God meet your wants in your sickness?" He replied: "In every respect it is full and sufficient. I am happy, so happy, while lying here, that I feel like shouting. Brother, the Lord is good to me, and I have so many good friends to care for me. I am all right and ready if the end has come." Then, reaching out his hand and waving it over his mother, sister, wife and little children, he said, "The Lord will take care of these, but I believe the Lord has work for me to do yet." He was so devoted to the ministry and the work that it was a source of grief to give them up. We bade each other good-by in tears, and the next time I saw him he was entering "the valley of the shadow of death." He quietly fell on sleep, leaving his weeping wife and four little girls sorely bereft. His aged mother and sister bade him farewell to meet in heaven.

Thus passed away one of our bright, promising, hopeful young men in the full strength of manhood. May the rich blessings of God rest upon the bereaved family and the brotherhood, that we may be as ready to die as he was!

Lake Camp Meeting.

Last Sunday night we closed the twenty-second camp meeting on the Lake Camp Ground. The Lord was with us in saving power from the first service to the close. The preaching was done, and well done, by the preachers of the Brandon district, assisted by Bro. Weems, presiding elder of the Vicksburg district; Bro. Selby, of Bolton, and Bro. Barr, of Vinville. The visible results are: Twenty-five accessions, seventy-five conversions, several backsliders reclaimed, and God's people generally lifted to higher planes of Christian experience. The oldest members of the association say that this was the most interesting and spiritually profitable meeting they have ever attended there. So testifies the old veteran, H. R. Caldwell, who has been a regular attendant for several years. He, too, did effective service. J. S. Weems, L. E., was with us, doing faithful service in the altar.

The Brandon district, led by the prudent, painstaking, faithful W. W. Simmons, P. E., is making advance movement along all lines.

The following-named brethren did the preaching at the camp meeting, viz.: W. W. Simmons, J. M. Weems, R. Selby, W. M. Sullivan, D. P. Bradford, P. H. Howse, J. H. Foreman, W. L. Linfield, P. D. Hardin, R. H. Barr, and H. R. Caldwell.

The ever-faithful chairman of the Executive Committee, W. M. Thornton, was present, aiding the pastor and presiding elder in planning and appointing.

To "M. L. Paine Memorial"—

DEAR SISTERS IN JESUS CHRIST: I have received your appreciated letter, in which you tell me of the report Miss Lelia Roberts gave of my humble Christian character. I am very grateful to her for the good opinion she has of me; but I do not consider myself worthy of such high merit, because I can say that I am a humble servant of my Master and Lord, Jesus Christ, and of my brothers and sisters and all humanity, for I desire to serve and please all.

Touching your desire to know something of my Christian life, I have much to say; but am not capable of explaining myself well, for I am not a person of much learning. I taught myself in my own home, in the midst of many occupations, but always trusting in the mercy of God, believing that he could help me to learn; and when I came to the knowledge of the gospel, I dedicated myself to the reading of the Scriptures and Christian papers. Through these I have had the joy of belonging to the fold of Christ, and a desire to help all my fellow-creatures to receive the same benefits. As I belonged to the Roman Catholic Church for fifty years, and was faithful in the performance of all that is taught in that religion, perhaps it was through divine inspiration that I, without ever having entered a house where the gospel was preached, or known what a Protestant was, when I went one time to visit some neighbors, who told me that they had attended a Protestant service, and gave me a description of what was said and done, then and there I confessed that I was a Protestant. The neighbor went the next Sunday to Mier, the town near the rancho where I lived, and communicated to the minister what I had said, and the next day he came to my humble home, and to me it was such a pleasure that I can never forget it. I remember the words he said as he entered, "I come seeking the lost sheep of Israel," to which I answered, "I am one of them," and from that time, by the help of God, I commenced to bear the cross of Christ. Immediately my friends and also my family began to oppose me, and these words of the Master were fulfilled, "Ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake." But this was in my favor, for I prayed and studied the Bible, in order to defend the faith that God, in his mercy, had given me. He also gave me much Christian love to talk to my fellow-creatures, and when an opportunity presents itself, I can not do otherwise than speak, whether I am in the street, on the plaza, on the train—wherever I may happen to be. Please remember me in your prayers. Pray God may bless me in my work.

Yours,

Meldon, Miss., June 26, 1897.

For the encouragement of our missionary sisters, I will state that the members of "M. L. Paine Memorial" of Prairie Chapel, North Mississippi Conference, desiring to advance the cause of missionary work in our Lord's vineyard, and endeavoring to enlighten the heathens, sent $60 to our Conference treasurer for the support of a Bible woman. Soon she was assigned work in Saltillo, Mexico, with Miss Roberts, who writes: "She is the most consecrated, spiritually minded Mexican woman they have. It will be difficult to find another her equal in our Mexican congregations. She was fifty years a Roman Catholic, and has been converted to Christianity fifteen years. The last two years of her life as a Catholic she was getting faint glimpses of the light by means of a Bible (read on the sly) and tracts left there by American soldiers during the war with Mexico. When 'twas thought a crime to educate women, she learned words were made up of letters, and by asking friends what different letters were, finally managed to read slowly. She hungered so much for knowledge, and persisted in learning from every available source, until she could teach a small school. As the Bible was the object most dear to her heart, the priest often tried to make her burn it, saying it was a Mexican book. She is the happy mother of two ministers, and one son a prominent man in Mexico. She is a thorough Methodist, and knows the Bible better than the average preacher."

Report of first month's work accomplished by Matilda de Osuna was: 55 visits, distributing 236 tracts, reading, praying and talking with those who would permit her. Through her influence five persons have joined the church and five have been baptized. She also assisted others twice a week in teaching the Bible and praying with them. Her work bears the name of our sainted "M. L. Paine" (Bible woman). This living monument was erected Jan. 1, 1897. Being one of the Lord's own, no estimate can be placed on the good she will accomplish.

MRS. J. L. LENOIR, Cor. Sec'y.

Como, Miss., Sept. 6, 1897.

The above two letters speak for themselves. Only wish we had more societies like the one at Prairie Chapel, and more Bible women in the foreign fields like Matilda de Osuna. Let's hear from some of the rest of our societies who are supporting Bible women or scholarships.

Yours for Christ,

MRS. E. P. COLEMAN.

Selections.

In one of his epistles St. Paul has a remarkable passage about working for God. He tells us that God and we are co-workers, and that we can do nothing without him. This is true even in our common affairs. In a little shop on a back street a man makes a mariner's compass. It is taken on board a great ship, and by means of its trembling needle the vessel is guided over the sea unerringly to its destination. A man made the compass. Yes; a man and God. A man did the mechanical work, but the wonderful instrument together; but it was God who put into the magnet its mysterious power. This illustrates a common law. God and man are co-workers; and without God man can do nothing, while God's perfect work needs man's best.—R. Miller, D. D., in "Things to Live For."

If you have any trial that seems intolerable, pray—pray that it be relieved or changed. There is no harm in that. We may pray for anything not wrong in itself, with perfect freedom, if we do not pray selfishly. One disabled from duty by sickness may pray for health, that he may do his work; or one hemmed in by interne impediments may pray for utterance that he may serve better the truth and the right. Or, if we have a besetting sin, we may pray to be delivered from it, in order to serve God and man, and not be cursed by Satan's to mislead and destroy. But the answer to the prayer may be, as it was to Paul, not the removal of the thorn, but, instead, a growing sight into its meaning and value. The voice of God in our soul may show us, as we look up to him, that his strength is enough to enable us to bear it.—J. F. Clarke.

To Whom It May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mul-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of sores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. BLACK,

Medical Missions.

The following letter from a student of the Imperial Medical College of Tientsin, who is a member of our church, reflects the spirit of our converts among the Chinese. This young student was prepared by Dr. Park in our Medical College in Suchow. Let us pray that he may come back not only better prepared to heal the bodies of the Chinese, but that he may lose nothing of the spirit that breathes through every line of this letter.

Tientsin, March 9, 1897.

Dr. W. H. Park—

MY DEAR TEACHER: The sweet warm season has returned; the frozen river is opened and the steamer ships commence to sailing, so I have the opportunity to write you again. Our school is opened on the twentieth day of the first moon. Probably we can be finished our course at the end of this year. I hope I may come back to see you all in the next Spring. I will be very glad if you will write to me a few lines and tell me something about the missionary work in Soochow, and the present condition of your hospital.

Many new missionary stations had been opened in the interior of China. I think no longer the gospel will be preached to every part of China, than she will become a blessed nation, and getting strong again. I pray God send more workers to China and help us to save those lost souls from death into life, and from cursing into blessing. Please pray for me to get more wisdom from God, and for the evangelization of China. Please kindly send me a copy of last year's missionary report, because I am anxiously to know how many souls have been converted and baptized during last year.

Your obedient student,
MABEL TANG.

Letter from El Paso.

Rt. Walter R. Lambuth, Nashville, Tenn.—

DEAR SIR: We have had a pleasant vacation, though the work has been difficult in many ways, especially immediately after the flood. Our people were scattered to the four winds, but now many of them have returned to town, and our church is as it used to be. We have found most of our school children. The Junior League is again doing nicely. We have a nice little band of officers, and they are beginning to understand the work-ings of the League and are willing workers.

One little girl, Juna Castillo, has just come in and says that she and her sister had a letter from her father down in Mexico, and he tells them if they do not get work, they must return to Mexico. Their father does not allow them to attend Protestant services, whips them severely when he knows of their going, which sometimes they do, for they have become Protestants. She say they are converted and want to join the church, but can not without their father's permission. If they go to Mexico, they will not be able to attend Protestant services. They are asking our prayers.

The school-room has been partly repaired, and Bro. Carbin has advised our taking girls only another year. The school would be full to overflowing then; and while I think it best that the boys and girls be separated, I wish that something could be done for the boys. The Lord willing, that school will be opened in September. The work continues to grow in interest, and we praise God and take courage. Sincerely,

EFFIE EDINGTON.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. John W. Ramsey, Waterford, Miss., Sept. 3, 1897: "Have just closed a good meeting at Pine Mt., Waterford charge, resulting in ten conversions and nine accessions. Rev. J. E Buck was with us a few days and did some faithful, earnest preaching."

Rev. W. D. Bass, Corinth, Miss., Sept. 2, 1897: "I have just closed a great meeting for Rev. J. A. Wilson, of Belzona charge. The meeting was held at Hickory Grove. Ninety-five additions in all, 67 of whom joined our church. Bro. Wilson is in good favor with his people. His health is not good."

Rev. G. W. Ferrer, Westville, Miss., Sept. 4, 1897: "Allow us to 'score one' for Jones' Branch. We had a powerful meeting, resulting in a sound revival of the membership and 13 accessions. The meeting was a success from beginning to end. We are now very hopeful of a bright future for that place, which for the last year or two has passed through quite a trying ordeal. We praise God for victory in his name. We were assisted by the local brethren."

Rev. J. W. Tinnin, P. C.: "We have just closed a meeting of eight days at Georgetown, Miss. The Lord gave us the victory. Nine souls were converted and 3 sanctified. Glory! Rev. H. G. Scuddy, D. D., of Tyler, Texas, assisted us. He is a great preacher, full of faith and the Holy Ghost. He won the hearts of the people in the first services of the meeting and grew in their affections to the close. I never saw a congregation more completely in love with a preacher than were the Georgetown people with Bro. Scuddy. If you need a revival in your church, call on Bro. Scuddy. He is a success."

Rev. P. O. Lowrey, P. C., Farmerville, La., Aug. 25, 1897: "We closed a good meeting at Marion on the fifteenth instant. Bro. B. Wright, of Vienna, did some splendid preaching for us up to Thursday night. The Baptist preacher preached several times during the meeting also, as it was a union meeting with the Baptists. Quite a number professed to have found their Savior, and ten were received into the Methodist and one into the Baptist Church as a result. On the last day we preached on entire sanctification, and almost the entire membership of both churches came forward seeking the blessing, and six or a dozen entered in by faith. So more and more are we convinced that the General Conference of 1824 was right when it said: 'If the Methodists give up the doctrine of entire sanctification, or suffer it to become a dead letter, we are a fallen people.'"

Rev. P. H. Fontaine, New Orleans, Sept. 3, 1897: "I am a Methodist because of the cardinal doctrines of justification by faith, witness of the spirit and entire sanctification obtainable in this life. I have for many years realized the need of these in the so called Christian Churches, and especially the last and higher Christian experience. I was an Episcopalian, and knew that it was sadly needed amongst her preachers and people; so with all the denominations that I have been acquainted with; but I never heard it preached until in 1893 by C. M. Crossley. Shortly afterward I joined the Methodist Church. Last year I sought the experience and professed it, but was made to doubt by being informed that it was not taught as a work of grace obtained through faith. I purposed to be loyal to the M. E. Church, South. Since that time I have applied myself to our doctrinal standards and the Bible, all the while crying unto God to aid me. That I have been living a justified life none can doubt. I constantly have been troubled by the actions of those who professed the experience, but sinners are also troubled by those who professed to be Christians. Original sin in its accepted definitions staggered me. If it were out, could we sin? Adam had none, and he was tempted and, yielding, to doubt God, fell into sin. Could we get original sin back if once it were out? Adam got it in him by sinning; we could do the same. Would children born to sanctified parents have original sin? Possibly no; probably yes. Original sin comes from Adam, not from our parents. All doubts being settled, I made a complete surrender of my will to God, and, glory to his holy name! a sweet, abiding peace came to my heart, and now I know that I am sanctified wholly. . . . I am just from the Ebenezer Holiness Camp Meeting, where I saw about 300 justified, or sanctified, by faith. The days of Wesley were brought to my mind by the wonderful Holy Ghost power. . . . I have been told to preach the experience, but not to preach it as a work of grace subsequent to justification. Now, I never have heard any preach it and get people to seek the experience unless they preached it as a subsequent work."

BAY ST. LOUIS.

The recent report of our town being so much burned up was much exaggerated. True, we have had two quite extensive fires, and each required herculean effort, aided by favoring winds, to prevent widespread desolation. While some of our own people suffered severely, the church and parsonage escaped. On both of these important buildings we have put substantial improvements. By securing a loan from our Parent Board of Church Extension, we were able to pay off a considerable overhanging debt and to aid the beautiful building erected through the energy and faith of Bro. N. B. Harmon. This work still delights the eyes of all beholders. Our parsonage was found too small for a genuinely orthodox Methodist preacher's family, so we planned and worked for enlargement. Through a liberal donation by that princely layman, L. N. Dantzler, of Moss Point, smaller gifts by some of our home folks, and accommodations as to time by others, we were able to add two nice rooms and a wide back hall-way. This gives us a commodious home. The sea breezes blow through from south to north in a most enchanting style. Few in this region are more favored. A few coats of paints to the new part and same to the old set off the preacher's home to good advantage. We are starting a fine young orchard. Four months of constant drouth and heat killed none of the twenty-five young fruit trees. We watered them from the well. The orange trees killed down more than a year ago are springing up anew from the old roots, and may yet feast the eye and palate of the ubiquitous Methodist preacher of the future.

Within the past week we received and recorded a deed to a right nice piece of church property adjacent to the far end of Waveland—our beautiful suburban sister. It consists of two and a half acres of land well located, where two important country roads unite, and with a neat building already erected suitable for preaching and Sunday-school work. It was freely donated to us by a German Evangelical Association for the love they bear to us and the cause of Christ. Here we have already a monthly appointment for preaching in the week time, and a Sunday-school well started. We hope to take that whole section for Christ and "Christianity in earnest."

Let all the brethren, and specially former pastors, pray for this, and for a general awakening all along these shores, so blessed by God and so cursed by the sin of Sabbath desecration.

More

Medicinal value in a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla than in any other preparation.

More skill, more care, more expense in manufacture. It costs proprietor

Hood's Sarsaparilla

The man may be able to whip the lion single-handed, but he is not taking chances, and is not going to disdain the assistance of helpers with hot irons. The same is true of a wise man who is having a tussle with ill-health. It is barely possible that he may have the natural inherent resisting power that will enable him to conquer disease without the assistance of medicine, but he is not willing to take the chances and will not disdain the help of the right remedy.

When a man feels out-of-sorts, when his head is achey, dull and heavy, his body lazy, his nerves jerky, his sleep broken, his appetite finicky, his skin sallow, his breath foul and his mouth bad-tasting, he is having a struggle with ill-health. If he is wise he will take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It gives edge to the appetite and makes the digestion perfect. It invigorates the liver. It makes rich, red, pure blood. It puts vim into every organ and fiber of the body. It drives out all impurities and disease germs. It imparts the glow of health to the skin and the vigor of youth to the muscles. It tones the nerves and gives refreshing sleep. It builds firm flesh, but does not raise the weight above Nature's normal. It cures 98 per cent. of all cases of consumption. All medicine stores sell it. An honest dealer will not suggest a worthless substitute for the sake of a little extra profit.

The most valuable book for both men and women is Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. A splendid thousand-page volume, with over three hundred engravings and colored plates. A copy, paper-covered, will be sent to anyone sending twenty-one cents in one-cent stamps, to pay the cost of mailing only, to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y. Cloth-bound 31 stamps.

"Oh live for those who need you,
For those who know you true,
For the heaven that bends above you
And waits your coming, too.
For the good that needs assistance,
For the wrong that needs resistance,
For the future in the distance,
And the good that you may do."

It is better to be good than great.

The greatest of faults is to be conscious of none.—Carlyle.

What God chooses for us is better than what we choose for ourselves.

The devil is never so well pleased as when he sees the church of God divided into warring factions.

True greatness is achieved not by one great act, but by the faithful performance of little duties from day to day.

The devil does not want to change the opinion of the man who thinks that he can serve God just as well out of the church as in it.

Count up a man's calamities, and who would seem happy? But, in truth, calamity leaves fully half your life untouched.—Charles Burton.

Try all the ways to righteousness you can think of, and you will find that no way brings you to it except the way of Jesus.—Matthew Arnold.

The immediate need of the world at this moment is not more of us, but, if I may use the expression, a better brand of us.—Henry Drummond.

No, there is no victory possible without humility and magnanimity; and no humility or magnanimity possible without an ideal.—Thomas Hughes.

There exists, in the economy and course of nature, an indissoluble union between virtue and happiness, between duty and advantage.—Selected.

Simon Magus thought that the gift of the Holy Ghost could be bought with money. His modern successors think that if a church has plenty of money, it does not need the Holy Ghost.—Baltimore Advocate.

Show me the man you honor. I know by that symptom, better than any other, what kind of man you are yourself; for you show me what your ideal of manhood is, what kind of man you long to be.—Carlyle.

God hides some ideal in every human soul. At some time in our life we feel a trembling, fearful longing to do some good thing. Life finds its noblest spring of excellence in this hidden impulse to do our best.—Robert Collyer.

Culpable Blindness.

Not all who have eyes use them intelligently and conscientiously. It is surprising how often vision is restricted in its range, not by physical barriers, but by likes and dislikes, by predilections and prejudices. People frequently see in themselves and in others what they wish to see. It was impossible for the scribes and Pharisees who lived in the time of Christ to see how any good thing could come out of Nazareth. Vision, whether physical, intellectual or spiritual, is largely influenced by personal tastes, feelings and habits. The habit of looking at things impartially and with an earnest desire to know the truth is of vast importance.

While it is well for us occasionally to shut our eyes to disagreeable facts and objects, to practice this constantly will surely result in distorted vision and one-sided views of life. Failure to note the existence of suffering and vice by no means rids the world of their presence or diminishes their horror. The habit of looking on the bright side of things, or taking note of the good as we pass along, ought not to cause us to entirely overlook the multitude of evils that exist. Distress, ignorance and crime are neither obliterated nor lessened by being ignored.

The mistake of shutting the eye and ear to everything unpleasant is one that not a few people of means and culture are making. In their eagerness for self-advancement and self-enjoyment, they ignore as far as they can everything disagreeable and distressful, and attend only to those things that minister to personal pleasure and interest. A large number of professing Christians refuse to see that many in the lower walks of life hunger for Christian fellowship and sympathy, and that others than the people of their social circle have claims upon their love and attention. Their attitude towards the sinning and the unfortunate is expressed in the words, "Come thou not near, for thou mightest trouble me." Such selfishness is unchristian and inhuman. Among the gravest sins of omission chargeable to many believers is that of ignoring distress and wickedness almost entirely.

How frequently those who have ease and abundance of this world's goods give hardly a moment's concern to the wants of the poor, the needs of the heathen, or the dreadful condition of the outcasts of society, unless these things are forced upon their attention! Fearing that their peace may be disturbed and their sympathies worked upon, many people desire to hear and know as little as possible about sin and suffering. Many a city dweller knows almost nothing about the poverty and iniquity that abound to an appalling extent in his own metropolis, because he does not wish to be troubled with anything but his own affairs. The old adage that "there are none so blind as those who will not see" is constantly being verified around us. One-half of the world not only does not know how the other half lives, but the sad fact is, it does not care.

Since a clear realization of the needs and distresses of our fellow-beings stirs the conscience and moves to acts of benevolence and self denial, not a few persons are much averse to learning more about the darkness of heathenism and the woes of mankind. They are willing to be Christians, provided it costs them nothing in the way of sympathy, sacrifice or money.

The meagre contributions of many people to the missionary cause are undoubtedly due to the fact that they refuse to consider the deep degradation and misery of the heathen. The belief that the gospel is just as necessary to the Chinese and the African as to the Anglo-Saxon is not to their liking, and so they ignore it as far as possible.

Most people are willing to relieve distress when it obtrudes itself upon their attention, but they are unwilling to hunt it out. In consequence, the worthy poor often suffer, while the undeserving receive large alms.

Censurable shutting of the eyes may also be noticed in regard to many other things, such as the liquor evil, social impurity, gambling and political corruption. The fact that we have no part in these evils is no reason for acting as if they did not exist, or for remaining in ignorance as to their pernicious effects.

The true Christian can not maintain an attitude of neutrality towards evil, nor can he content himself with mere inoffensiveness. Harmlessness is no guarantee of acceptance with God.

To pass by on the other side, to shut our eyes to the needs, physical or spiritual, of a fellow-being is to sin grievously. Christ's work is not to be done by sparing ourselves disagreeable duties or by overlooking things not to our taste.

What a glorious thing it would be if every Christian would adopt and live by the motto of the ancient sage who said, "Nothing that concerns mankind is foreign to me!" If we wait for the orphans, for the disconsolate, for the afflicted and for sinners to seek us out, we shall never find them, and they will suffer and perish without the assistance which we are able to render them.

Give Your Fads Time to Season.

We heartily sympathize with the prevalent desire that the spirit and principles of Christianity be made more comprehensive and fruitful in the betterment of social conditions. That minister is commended who is burdened with the conviction that Christianity has a much larger and more direct mission to perform in improving the social status of our communities. "Applied Christianity" is a magnificent phrase, standing for the utilitarian manifestation of the mind that was in Christ.

But connected with this worthy impulse and desire to make our Christianity more diffusive and remedial, there are temptations and dangers which the ministry especially should consider. The deepened sense of social wrongs and grievances peculiar to this age has developed a great coterie of would-be reformers who present panaceas for every possible condition. Many of these moral and reformatory specifics contain some truth, and some are presented by honest advocates who conscientiously believe in the merit of their own theories. It is only true, however, to say that many of these modern schemes for social betterment are pressed and defended for purely selfish purposes, and also for the accompanying notoriety. It is, therefore, much wiser for our ministers to proceed cautiously in connection with the many modern social and political methods which promise the speedy and quick redress of all well-known and hateful evils. The air is full of fads and moral and political empiricism. If fascinated with any or many of them, let the reader take time for these new schemes to ripen.

If the minister finds himself disturbed in his traditional views by the presentment of some new social and political system, and is captivated by it, let him counsel with the best representatives of all denominations concerning the subject in question. If he finds that men in whose judgment he has always confided are not adopting these new theories, then he should certainly distrust his own judgment.

There is nothing more pitiful than when a minister, infatuated by some new moral and social panacea, proceeds to pour out his half-digested half-truths upon his congregation as a substitute for the gospel. Many a faithful minister has been once misled by such delusive pretenses. A single infatuation or eccentricity may be borne by the church and condoned by a congregation, but when a pastor comes to have a mania for fads and schemes, his usefulness has ceased.

After all, there is to be no improvement upon the fundamentals of the old gospel. Men are not to be made better by new schemes or mechanical contrivances. Sin must be forgiven and spiritual regeneration begun before the individual man, the unit of society, can be improved. Our communities are to be saved not by some moral or political invention pressed down upon them from without, but by the salvation of its units from within—unit by unit, and unit upon unit.

The sensible minister, when once he has wasted himself over his disappointing fads, will return, with Peter, to embrace anew the old truth: "Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."—Zion's Herald.

In Toronto, Canada, there are one hundred and ninety-eight churches, and only one hundred and forty-two saloons. No saloon keeper can hold office in the city.

Yellow Fever.

The yellow fever has spread from Ocean Springs to Mobile, Biloxi, Barclay, Perkinston and other small places. In this city there have been up to the time of going to press (Wednesday morning) fifteen cases, besides the one reported in our last issue.

Every precautionary measure known to sanitary science has been adopted to prevent the spread of the disease. Every infected house is guarded day and night, and no one is allowed to go in or out except the attendant physicians, and they are required to change and disinfect their clothing at every visit. The public may rest assured that there is no attempt on the part of the press or the health authorities to conceal anything. Every case that is reported, even by rumor is promptly investigated by a committee of yellow fever experts, and their report to the Board of Health is at once given to the press. While we do not doubt that there will be a few other cases, traceable, as the present ones are, to contact with persons from Ocean Springs, we do not believe that the fever will become epidemic here. We believe that sanitary science is prepared to restrict the disease to a few localities.

Why Is It?

Since the yellow fever scare began remittances from subscribers have been "like angels' visits, few and far between." Why is this? Can it be that the Methodist people of Mississippi and Louisiana are afraid to go to the postoffice to make a remittance? Or do they suppose that printers can live on air during yellow fever times? We can assure the brethren that the yellow fever has not diminished the cost of getting out our paper one iota; and we can also assure them (all except those who live at three or four infected points) that their postoffices are as safe places as can be found.

Julian Hawthorne, sent to India as special correspondent of the Cosmopolitan Magazine, says this of the missionaries there: "They are the only persons who know what is actually going on in that land of misery, for they go about quietly everywhere, see everything, can not be deceived or put off the scent by the native subordinates. It was my great good fortune to be thrown with the missionaries from the start, and I was able to compare their methods and knowledge with those of the government people."

If in the common things that round us life there is not the material we need to build us up into the stature of a perfect manhood, then we shall find it nowhere under heaven's cope. The carpentry of Jesus and the narrow life of Nazareth furnished all he needed.—John Chadwick.

On account of quarantine regulations the opening of East Mississippi Female College has been postponed till Oct. 6. For the same reason the opening of the State University at Oxford has been postponed till Sept. 30, and that of the A. and M. College at Starkville till the twenty-ninth.

By the will of Dora B. Pike, of Chelmsford, Massachusetts, her entire estate is left to Bishop Hurst to be held in trust. During the lifetime of Mary E. Chase the income is to be paid to her, and upon her death the entire estate is to revert to the American University.—Central Methodist.

Democrat-Star, of Sept. 10, says:

The protracted meeting just closed at Zion Church was a most successful one, resulting in the accession of sixteen new members to the church. Rev. I. W. Cooper, of Moss Point, has the thanks of the entire community for the good work he performed here, and he will ever be gratefully remembered for his untiring energy.

Miss Helen Gould's recent gift of $5,000 to Bishop Vincent will enable him to erect a building which he has long wanted at Chautauqua. The structure is to be called the "Hall of Christ," and will be used as a gallery and repository for sacred art and literature. It will be the most attractive building on the grounds.—Exchange.

Over the door of the cathedral of Milan the visitors read, carved amid the sculptured roses: "All which pleases us is but for a moment." Over another door, around a carven cross, it says: "All which troubles us is but for a moment." But over the main entrance are these words: "That only is important which is eternal."

Branch Two of the Debs Social Democracy in Chicago has gone on record as friendly to anarchy by declaring the assassin of Canovas a patriot and by denouncing the President for sending a message of condolence to Spain. The followers of Debs are a dangerous rabble, and the sooner we realize it the better.—Boston Journal.

"He rakes with the teeth up," was said of a pastor who did not expect results. "Are not some Christian parents, Sunday-school teachers, class leaders, preachers, and other Christian workers," asks the Michigan Christian Advocate, "raking 'with the teeth up?' Aim for results; expect them; look for them, get them."—Zion's Herald.

Our sewing machine offer is still open. It has been omitted of late on account of the heavy demands on our advertising space. Let our subscribers take note of the fact that our machines are never sent from here. They are shipped direct from the factory in Chicago. Hence there is no danger of their being the medium of spreading pestilence.

The Ideal American is the title of a new venture in journalism in this city. It is a 32-page monthly pamphlet, published and edited by Rev. J. Vital, of the M. E. Church. Mr. Vital is doing mission work among the Italians of this city. He was for eight years a Romish priest in Italy. The Ideal American is intensely antagonistic to Romanism.

John Wesley said in 1778: "I find more profit in sermons on either good tempers or good works than in what are only called 'gospel sermons.' The term has now become a mere cant word; I wish none of our society would use it. Let but a pert, self-sufficient animal, that hath neither sense nor grace, bawl out something about Christ or his blood, or justification by faith, and his hearers cry out, 'What a fine gospel sermon.'" It is over a hundred years since John Wesley used these words, and still we find people who have the same notions of preaching, and of religion. As Wesley said, the term has become mere cant, and cant becomes tiresome and offensive to all who appreciate the realities of religion.—Methodist Herald.

From a private letter from Dr. I. W. Cooper we quote as follows:

This coast is under a great shadow—the yellow fever. Everything under quarantine. Nearly every family that could leave has left for the country. So far as I have learned, the Protestant pastors are at their posts of duty—ready for any service. This is as it should be. Moss Point is free from fever. Let the church pray for us.

To preserve one's self-respect is of the utmost importance. To lose it is a disaster measureless in its effects. What if a man maintain a fair outside and keep up a reputation for virtue, when all is rotten within! He knows that he is a bad man, a mean and false man, if no one else does; and this knowledge is fatal to his self-respect and peace of mind.—Pittsburg Advocate.

The increase of native Christians in India was from 1851 to 1890, inclusive, from 91,100 to 559,700. At the present time there are probably three-quarters of a million; and there are 300,000 children under Christian instruction—some estimate it at half a million; 5,000 native preachers and 10,000 native teachers at work, besides 1,000 European and Eurasian preachers, and at least 1,000 women workers.—New York Advocate.

We learn from Dr. Sawyer that the St. Tammany Camp Meeting was a good one. The membership were greatly revived, there were a number of conversions, and a few additions to the church. The congregations were large and attentive, and the preaching was done by Revs. Nathan Roberts, Jno. T. Sawyer, and Jno. F. Kent. The closing service on Wednesday night was one of great power and gracious results, a splendid altar service being had after a strong sermon by Bro. Roberts.

The Albany (Mo.) Advocate, in a recent issue, has a highly complimentary notice of Rev. Edgar C. McVoy, who, as our readers will remember, was transferred from the Denver Conference in the early part of the present year to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Rev. D. M'Allen. Albany is quite an important station. Bro. McVoy has filled the place so acceptably that the church and congregation petitioned for his return for another year. The petition was granted. The recent session of the Conference was held at Albany.

Next week our readers will be regaled with another of Miss Belle Kearney's charming letters descriptive of scenes in the West. Among her many engagements she has one that is decidedly unique; she is to lecture in the mammoth Mormon Tabernacle at Salt Lake City. How she contrived to get the use of this building she has not informed us. She seems to have the faculty of doing almost anything she takes a fancy to. Perhaps we shall yet hear of her lecturing in a Romish cathedral or a Buddhist temple. Hurrah! for our Mississippi Belle.

Rome makes much of her converts from Protestantism. She boasts much over them that people become alarmed at her progress. But it is to be remembered that Protestantism gains as much, if not more, from Rome as she loses through Romish proselyting. It is not wise in Protestants to magnify departures from their fold and minimize their accessions from Rome. Protestant missions in Papal countries are more successful than Romish missions in Protestant lands. The truer Christian faith is bound to win in the long run if faithfully and earnestly pushed.—Exchange.

It is a misfortune for any man to be soured on his church. He may complain, he may be candid, but he ought to be loving toward his individual brethren and toward the church as a whole. The words of a sorehead, a malcontent, do not set with the man that hears them; but they start a wave of disloyalty and discontent that may break on distant shores. Prudence and justice on the one hand, and patience and charity on the other, are much needed in the churches of the land. Moderation and conservatism will prevent heart and church divisions and enable the people of God to present an unbroken phalanx in their war with worldliness, sin and crime.—Holiness Methodist.

MUL-EN-OL is the most modern remedy for pain, and is free from all objectionable features of the old-time remedies. MUL-EN-OL tastes good, smells good, and does good. It soothes and cools, instead of irritating. It instantly quiets the pain, and effects a permanent cure.

MUL-EN-OL

Drives away every sort of pain—external or internal, in old or young. When you meet with an accident, or are attacked by sickness, MUL-EN-OL, if applied at once, will prevent it from becoming serious. Have it ready. Sold everywhere. Price 50c., $1.00, $2.00. Prepared by FINLAY, DICKS & CO., New Orleans.

The Week of Prayer.

The attention of the church is respectfully and urgently called to the Annual Week of Prayer of the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society, occurring Oct. 11–18. An appropriate program to meet the needs of both individual churches and of the society has been prepared by an experienced pastor.

That for Sunday evening can be observed to the profit of each community. Every church, whether connected with the society or not, is requested to follow out the program, and to give the collection to this important work. Programs can be obtained free of cost by applying to the general secretary, Mrs. R. K. Hargrove, West Nashville, Tenn.

The church should be loyal to its own institutions, and especially to one so helpful in all its home mission fields. The presiding elders, pastors and local preachers are called upon to aid these women everywhere as an organized arm of the church. This call for the universal observance of this week is made by those the church itself has commissioned to the work.

MISS BELLE H. BENNETT, President.
MRS. R. K. HARGROVE, General Secretary.
MRS. W. D. KIRKLAND, Treasurer.

Leaf River Camp Meeting.

The Leaf River Camp Meeting has come and gone, leaving a sweet blessedness in many hearts, and a delightful aroma behind it that will linger in many of the people until the next meeting. Some fifty-odd souls were sanctified, regenerated and reclaimed, with a general uplifting of the church and the moral elevation of the tone of that entire section of the country.

It so happened, however, that only four preachers responded to Bro. Vandenburg's earnest call, viz.: Dr. Beard, Dr. Harmon, R. B. Downer, and L. P. Meador, with the local brethren.

From the first to the finish of the meeting, the preaching was effective and telling; the full gospel and strait-edge of divine truth was laid alongside of the conscience, the memory and judgment. The surprise of the preaching was by the Rev. E. J. Taylor, superintendent of education for Perry county. Dr. Beard, however, charmed us by his choice, specific elaboration and applications of the Scriptures, carrying captive the will noiens voiens. But when he made the Bible, from Genesis to Revelation, a letter—a sanctified letter—on sanctification from God, appealing to the church and to all believers in Christ Jesus to obtain it at all hazards, even the hazard of life itself, and sustained the appeal, and the call of God and Christ, by specific Scriptures, and then dove-tailed the argument by many Scriptures, we surrendered without another doubt on the subject.

The time is short, God is at hand.

NOTA BENE.

Water Valley, Miss.

Great revival at Water Valley Camp Ground. The meeting began seven days ago, and will continue three days longer. Up to date there have been over 70 conversions, and more than 40 have joined the church. The following brethren are doing the preaching: Morehead, Standefer, Savage, Bruner, Cole, Braswell, Browning, Sadler and Bowen. We never witnessed such power at a camp meeting. J. A. BOWEN.

DONT BURN YOUR MONEY!

A GREAT CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY. IMPROVE IT.

We are pleased to call the attention of our subscribers to the most marvelous invention of the nineteenth century. It is known as the Self-Heating Flat Iron and is unlike any device that is invented to iron with. As flat irons are usually heated on the cooking stove, you consume a large amount of fuel unnecessarily, because to heat two or three irons hot enough for ironing you have to heat up the whole stove and keep it hot. This makes the room hot and makes ironing one of the most unpleasant, unhealthy and dreaded labors of the household, besides consuming a large amount of fuel. With the self-heating flat iron all is changed. The iron is heated by a small burner in the iron, which maintains a perfect even heat, so it is impossible for you to burn the clothes you are ironing. You do not have to run from stove to table to change irons, nor do you have to iron in a heated room, but can get in the shade and cool. It costs only a half a cent an hour to keep your iron hot. The handle is always cool, the iron is light and of convenient size and you have no trouble in getting it just the proper temperature. This is an all-important feature; if iron is too hot, it makes the starch so miserably yellow that it disheartens many a tired wife and mother, and not only does it discolor the starch, but burns the clothes. It saves your wives saves your cash—saves your clothes—saves your fuel. Wherever the Self-Heating Flat Iron has been seen it has created the greatest excitement and it is easily estimated that over one million of these irons will be required to fill the demand. It is low priced, simple in construction and can not get out of order. How many millions of tired, worn-out women whose back and limbs have ached after several hours ironing would not sacrifice a new bonnet or a new dress or some other luxury to secure an iron that has so many advantages. Experienced canvassers state "they never seen anything sell like the Self-Heating Flat Iron;" they make from $15.00 to $100.00 a week selling it without any trouble.

We would advise any of our subscribers who may want a perfect Self-Heating Flat Iron for their own use, who may want to make money, or who may be out of employment and who may desire a nice clean business with plenty of money, to write to J. F. Casey & Co., 1151 St. Charles St., St. Louis, Mo., as there will be an immense demand for the self-heating flat iron this summer, as the hot weather comes on. Everyone will want one and a great deal of money can be made selling them. Agents easily make from $15.00 to $30.00 a week and find it the easiest thing in the world to sell.

The company is composed of well-known business men of St. Louis and any of our readers will be fortunate to secure a position with them.

Epworth League

BY REV. HERMANN W. KNICKERBOCKER.

TOPIC FOR SEPTEMBER.

THE CHRIST OF ST. PAUL.

SEPT. 19.—HIS CHARACTER AND TEACHINGS.

(II. Cor. x, 1; Rom. i, 16; xii, 9-21.)

1. "The meekness and gentleness of Christ" is the quality which, more than any other, differentiates him from the great teachers and philosophers of the world. His soft, gentle, yielding, humble, forgiving spirit disqualified him in the eyes of the world. The Jews wanted a Messiah, self-assertive, Napoleonic, who would enforce his demands with the sword and establish an earthly kingdom. This man of meekness was not to their notion; yet the very reason for which they rejected him was the divine attribute which made possible his universal dominion.

2. Meekness is the hardest lesson we have to learn. It is so foreign to the teaching of the world—so contradictory. Self-sacrifice instead of self assertion, humility instead of pride, resignation instead of rebellion, submission instead of fighting, forgiveness instead of revenge—these are some of its demands. It is one of heaven's sweetest flowers transplanted into the soil of earth. As a tropical exotic blooming in the frozen north speaks of the warmer clime of the Southland, so does this pure white blossom, growing on the desert-waste of earth, point us to the skies. A fragile flower, true; yet, bending like the rush to the world's raging winds, it lives on, while the defiant oak is uprooted and destroyed.

3. The realm of moral power is distinct from that of physical. No one would be so foolish as to try by moral suasion to run a locomotive; yet some demand of God the application of physical power in order to the accomplishment of a moral end. Because there is no manifestation of power on a physical scale, the gospel is none the less "the power of God unto salvation unto everyone that believeth." The weakness of the lowly Nazarene and his handful of disciples is in striking contrast with the power of the Cæsars; yet, while the wreckage of the Roman Empire has long since drifted down the stream of human history into the all-engulfing ocean of the past, the empire of Jesus in the hearts of men is spreading to the four corners of the world. With Paul, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ."

4. "Salvation unto everyone that believeth." The appropriation of Christ, so that he will influence—yea, dominate—the life, is the "belief unto salvation." "How can I believe?" The answer is, by repentance. The process is moral rather than intellectual.

5. Read Romans xii, 9-21, which is a practical application of gospel teaching. The human method is to get rid of crime by getting rid of the criminal; the divine, by making the criminal a good man. The world overcomes its enemies by killing; the Christian, by prayer and forgiveness. "Be not overcome of evil (according to Christ's plan), but overcome evil with good."

DOTS.

The next meeting of the Union Epworth League will be held at Carondelet.

The time of meeting has been changed from the second Thursday to the second Tuesday in each month. This will give the Algiers League an opportunity to attend. Let everybody take notice!

From one who is well qualified to judge, we learn that the Tohonpitonlas League entertained beautifully.

At the union meeting each League in the city was requested to appoint a reporter to furnish local dots for the League column in the ADVOCATE. Please attend to this. Send dots to the editor at 813 Foncher street.

The editor is indebted to Miss Susie Lyons for report of last meeting.

● Deaf Twenty-Five Years.

For many years I suffered from Catarrh, which destroyed my hearing, and for 25 years I was so deaf I could not hear a clock strike by holding my ear against it. Had tried every known remedy and nothing gave me the slightest relief. I obtained Aerial Medication and in three weeks my hearing began to improve, now can hear common conversation across a room; can hear a clock strike in an adjoining room 30 feet away, and think I am entirely cured and my hearing permanently restored. —EDWIN COLEMAN, Box 585, Wichita, Kansas.

Restored His Hearing in Five Minutes.

I suffered from Catarrh ten years. Had intense headache, continual roaring and singing in ears, took cold easily. My hearing failed, and for three years was almost entirely deaf, and continually grew worse. Every thing I had tried failed. In despair I commenced to use Aerial Medication in 1888, and the effect of the first application was simply wonderful. In less than five minutes my hearing was fully restored, and has been perfect ever since, and in a few months was entirely cured of Catarrh.—ELI BROWN, Jacksboro, Tenn.

"After being deaf thirty years have used Aerial Medication with very beneficial results, the improvement was felt from the start, and I now hear ordinary conversation first-class. My left ear had been useless many years, but gradually coming right. I am well known in Sheffield, and the restoration of my hearing has caused quite a talk. I feel in duty bound to very gratefully do all I can for this wonderful treatment.—J. MALLABAND, Clark Grove Rd., Sheffield, Eng.

HOME CIRCLE.

THE RECONCILIATION.

BY ALFRED TENNYSON.

As thro' the land at eve we went,
And plucked the ripen'd ears,
We fell out, my wife and I,
We fell out, I knew not why—
And kissed again with tears.
And blessings on the falling-out
That all the more endears,
When we fall out with those we love
And kiss again with tears!
For when we came where lies the child
We lost in other years,
There above the little grave,
Oh, there above the little grave,
We kissed again with tears.

Be Gentle, Mothers.

Yes, be gentle with the little ones, even if they are trying at times. Send them off to school with kindly words, not sharp or nagging ones. It is well to impress upon them the fact that it is wiser and easier to put everything for school in its proper place at the right time, than to get agitated and flustered and oftentimes disagreeable, hunting for wraps and books when the hour for school is close at hand. There is a great deal more force in counsel that is given pleasantly than in cross, fault-finding tones. We hear some mothers chide the children in such loud, sharp tones that it goes right to the tenderest part of our hearts. A sensitive child feels such treatment much more than the mother is aware. Such a mother would be shocked to hear anyone say she did not love her child, or feel tenderly towards it. Of course, grown persons know that she loves it, and if it were in any danger, how heavy her heart would be and how anxious; but do her children know it?

We must control ourselves if we would control others. Children know when mother is angry with them and lets her temper get the upper hand. Then combativeness in the child is immediately aroused. But when a child has hurt the dear mother's heart by misconduct, and mother's eyes are tearful and there is a sorry look in her face, how quickly the child's best feelings are appealed to, and how soon mother finds loving arms around her neck and whispered words of repentance in her ear. Be gentle, mothers, speaking in pleasant tones of voice, even when necessary to admonish. I wish I could recall a little poem published years ago, in which a mother who was impatient with her little one so often, was left childless. Then she realized how little she had appreciated that child, and so she rocked to and fro longing to have the little one back again that she might show her patience and love.

The Loneliness of Age.

The loneliness of age! How few think of this, and treat with tenderness and consideration those who have outlived their generation, and whose early companions and friends have been taken from them? Unable to engage in the activities of life, they are no longer brought into contact and sympathy with those around them, and no tie of common interest and mutual dependence binds them together. They necessarily, to a greater extent, live in a world of their own, with which those around them are not familiar. The communings of their hearts are with the scenes of the past and the companions of other years, who have long ago passed away. Lover and friends have been taken from them, and their acquaintances laid in darkness. The forms they admired and loved are gone, the eyes that looked into theirs with the tenderest affection are sightless, and the voices that cheered and stirred their souls have long since been silent. Their early world of hope and joy has become desolation, and they sit in silence contemplating the ruin that has been wrought. They are to pass on to the reunion that awaits them, and the glad greetings of those they love. Who would not do what he can to cheer the loneliness of the aged, to smooth their pathway, and comfort them in their declining years?—The Churchman.

"Only waiting till the shadows
Are a little longer grown"

Through Suffering.

Are there not some in your circle to whom you naturally betake yourself in time of trial and sorrow? They always seem to speak the right word, to give the very counsel you are longing for; you do not realize, however, the cost which they had to pay ere they became so skillful in binding up gaping wounds and drying tears. But if you were to investigate their past history you would find that they have suffered more than most. They have watched the slow untwisting of some silver cord on which the lamp of life hung. They have seen the golden bowl of joy dashed to their feet and its contents spilled. They have stood by ebbing tides, and drooping gourds, and noon sunsets; but all this has been necessary to make them the nurses, the physicians, the priests of men. The boxes that come from foreign climes are clumsy enough; but they contain spices which scent the air with the fragrance of the Orient. So suffering is rough and hard to bear; but it hides beneath it discipline, education, possibilities, which not only leave us nobler, but perfect us to help others. Do not fret, or set your teeth, or wait doggedly for the suffering to pass; but get out of it all you can, both for yourself and for your service to your generation, according to the will of God.—Rev. E. B. Meyer.

Ten Minutes with the Bible.

Young people, you can not be strong, useful Christians if you neglect your Bible. Let that sentence be taken as an axiom of the spiritual life. But profitable Bible reading means more than a hastily read verse in the morning, and a sleepily read chapter at night. These, to be sure, are better than nothing; but there are many things better than these. Ten minutes spent with your Bibles, when your mind is fresh and free from all outside distractions, when you have risen from your knees and your heart is yet aglow with the joy of communion, are worth hours of study spent on any other book you can name. But remember the Bible is a book, one organic unity from Genesis to Revelation, and must be studied as such. Try to divest your mind of all idea of chapters and verses, except as mere finger-posts, or milestones, to mark the way, and read as if they did not exist. Before you read any portion of it, find out, if you can, whom God used to write it, when, where, to whom and under what circumstances it was written; then try to put yourself in the place of those for whom it was primarily intended, and to find out what was the mind of the writer. Above all, do not forget that human commentaries are uninspired, but that the Holy Spirit has been given to "guide us into all truth," and that he is the Author of the Book.—Journal and Messenger.

Result of a "Dare."

A certain elderly gentleman, who was uncommonly nice in his tastes and habits, made exception in one respect. He chewed tobacco. Of course, he did not manifest this habit in public. He was very secret about it, and the fact of his indulgence was known to but a few intimate friends. One of these asked him, on one occasion, how it happened that he, who was so particular about everything else, should have taken up this offensive practice.

"Oh," he remarked, with a sad smile, "when I was a schoolboy, the lad who sat next to me chewed tobacco. He used to dare me to take a quid, and I had not the moral courage to decline. Thus I formed the habit, which has clung to me throughout my whole life."

Of course, this gentleman has lived long enough to perceive that it would have been a greater mark of courage had he declined the "dare" of his school companion. Boys do not stop to think of that. They are so fearful of being charged with cowardice that they really make cowards of themselves without knowing it.

For Over Fifty Years
MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for Diarrhœa. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

You picture to yourself the beauty of bravery and steadfastness. And then some little wretched, disagreeable duty comes which is your martyrdom, the lamp for your oil; and, if you do not do it, your oil is spilled.—Phillips Brooks.

A Service to the King.

There is a sweet story of two little girls and Emperor William I. of Germany, grandfather of the present emperor, who, however, was then only King of Prussia. The old king had a daughter who he loved very dearly. But she died when she was quite young, and the king grieved very much. He had a flower called by her name. Two little girls who lived in a village near the palace heard of the king's sorrow and his love for this flower. So they went out into the fields and gathered their arms full of flowers of this kind and carried them to the palace. The way was long and they came there hot and tired, and the flowers were all dusty and withered. A great big soldier, who was sentinel at the gate, tried to drive them away, but just then the king came out. They went to him and said that they had brought the flowers because they had heard that he loved them so well. The king very gently took the faded flowers from their arms, and the tears fell from his eyes as he thought of his daughter. He took the little girls into the palace and had them sit at his own table. They feasted there with all the grand ladies and gentlemen of the court. And they never forgot that to their dying day.—Helpful Thoughts.

Sunshiny Christians.

There is no sunshine for those who persist in keeping their shutters barred. Joy is not gained by the asking for it, but only by the acting for it; we have got to walk with Christ if we want to walk in the sunshine. There is a lamentable lot of moping and grumbling and sour-spirited Christians who disgrace the name they bear. If one of this sorry regiment should ask a shrewd man of the world to embrace Christianity, he might well reply: "No, I thank you; I have troubles enough now, without being troubled with such peevish and doleful religion as yours seems to be." What a letter of recommendation some Christians carry in their cheerful countenances! . . . Here are three things which you, the ailing souls, most need—more faith, more vigor, more joy in the Holy Spirit. Your divine Physician offers them to you, if you will accept them; but you must let him bestow them in his own way, and on his own terms. A happy day would it be in all our churches if the fever patients and the emaciated dyspeptics and the restored paralytics would come trooping out of the hospital and report themselves for duty.—Theodore L. Cuyler.

The Congregationalist offers this note of warning and suggestion, which, while especially applicable to the vacation season, applies also to all other seasons of the year:

"In many a Summer hotel on Sunday morning may be found a group of Christians excusing themselves to one another for not going to church. Reasons are plenty enough for staying at home. The audience may be strangers, the singing poor, the sermon meager; while the stimulating book, the opportunity for private meditation, or the privilege of idleness after exhausting work, may be attractive. But when all these conditions hold, the chief loss to the Christian who stays at home is the loss of sympathetic association in worship which cultivates spiritual sensitiveness. As many know from experience, peculiar and special enlightenment and exaltation come from mingling in an assembly of worshipers. Stately phrases of prayer and praise, even in a foreign tongue, bring one not only nearer to God, but closer to his fellow-men, moving him to respect them and enjoy their presence. Life is made worthier, all honorable thoughts richer, all right aims nobler, by such public worship."—Central Methodist.

There is no more thrilling spectacle than that of a young man, conscious of power, and full of ambitious aims and generous impulses, standing at the door of life's opportunities, with one foot already advanced upon the threshold, flushed with hope and full of confidence. Little knows he the test of skill and strength that will soon put him to the proof. Without prescience of impending tempests, he takes his measures. What revelations will be made to him in the next five years! Happy will he be, indeed, if, with the invincible instinct of candor and sincerity, he shall understand, as he sees successive hopes drift to their wreck, that nothing is lost while honor and faith remain.—E. M. Marvin.

It is not what we earn, but what we save, that makes us rich.

It is not what we eat, but what we digest, that makes us strong.

It is not what we read, but what we remember, that makes us learned.

It is not what we intend, but what we do, that makes us useful.

It is not a few faint wishes, but a life-long struggle, that makes us valiant.—Exchange.

Hygiene.

Popular Fallacies.

1. That warm air must be impure, and that, consequently, it is hurtful to sleep in a comparatively warm room. A warm room is as easily ventilated as a cool one. The warm air of a close vehicle is less injurious, be it ever so foul, from crowding, than to ride and sit still and feel uncomfortably cold for an hour. The worst that can happen from a crowded conveyance is a fainting spell; while from sitting even less than an hour in a still, chilly atmosphere, has induced an attack of pneumonia—that is, inflammation of the lungs—which often proves fatal in three or four days. It is always positively injurious to sleep in a close room where water freezes, because such a degree of cold causes the negatively poisonous carbonic acid of a sleeping-room to settle near the floor, where it is breathed and rebreathed by the sleepers, and is capable of producing typhoid fevers in a few hours. Hence, there is no advantage, and always danger, especially to weakly persons, in sleeping in an atmosphere colder than the freezing point.

2. That it is necessary to the proper and efficient ventilation of a school-room, even in warm weather, that a window or door should be left open; this is always hazardous to the sick and convalescent. Quite as safe a plan of ventilation, and as efficient, is to keep a lamp or a small fire burning in the fire-place. This creates a draft, and carries bad airs and gases up the chimney.

3. That outdoor exercise before breakfast is healthful. It is never so. And, from the very nature of things, is hurtful, especially to persons of poor health; although the very vigorous may practice it with impunity. In Winter the body is easily chilled through and through, unless the stomach has been fortified with a good warm breakfast; and in warm weather miasmatic and malarious gases and emanations speedily act upon the empty and weak stomach in a way to vitiate the circulation and induce fever and ague, diarrhœa, and dysentery; entire families, who have arranged to eat breakfast before leaving the house, and to take supper before sun-down, have had a complete exemption from fever and ague, while the whole community around them was suffering from it, from having neglected these precautions.

4. That whatever lessens the cough is "good" for it, and, if persevered in, will cure it. On the contrary, all coughs are soonest cured by promoting and increasing them; because nature endeavors by the coughs to help bring up the phlegm and yellow matter which is in the lungs, as the lungs can not heal while that matter is there. And as it can not be got rid of without coughing, the more coughing there is, the sooner it is got rid of—the sooner are the lungs cleared out for the fuller and freer reception of pure air, which is their natural feed. The only remedies which can do any good are such as loosen the phlegm, and thus less cough is required to bring it up. These remedies are warmth, out-door exercise—anything which slightly nauseates.—The National Educator.

How to Find Out

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains your linen, it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

WHAT TO DO.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, fulfills every wish in relieving pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passages. It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to get up many times during the night to urinate. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine, you should have the best. Sold by druggists; price, fifty cents and one dollar. You may have a sample bottle and pamphlet both sent free by mail. The Preacher.

BY J. W. HARMON.

Who is the preachar? And whom does he represant? Thara ha stands hefore the people ordained by the authorities of tha church, and professing to be ordained spiritnally hy the hands of God. The thrilling, mighty theme he hears to all carries eternal life or eternal death. What a theme to be borne by mortal lips, towering above every other theme in the world! Let the pulse of the world stand still while snch a thame is presented to intelligent human beings. Let tha pulse of the preachar throh with celestial fire whila presenting snch a theme to immortal spirits who shall liva forever. Let his imagination, if it be possible, cope with the eternal issues of heaven or hell. Let his perceptive faculties take fire and carry him along with a flood of spiritual powar. Let love, pathos, eloqnance and divine unction flame up every soul to a whita, glistering heat that shall know no abatement. The thema demands it; the destiny of millions demands it; God the Father, God the Son, God the Holy Ghost demands it; redeemed souls demand it; our loved dead goea up to join in the song of angels and the raptures of eternity demands it at tha hands of evary preacher.

Merey, man, are you run mad with excitement? Hava you been asleep in theea last days? Know yon not that many of those who come before the people as heaven's ambassadors deliver this wonderful message as if it was of no particular importance, and neither life nor death eternal at staka? Tha preacher sometimes delivers this mighty message from God as if he doubted it himself. Thare is no fiery earnestness about him. At times he is dull; the worth of souls does not burdan him. Sometimes he turns aside to so many other themes that we lose sight of heavan and hell as the inevitable destinies of all. He discourses on art, science, astronomy, philosophies, and throws open so many secret doors into the arcana of nature that we hecoma bewildered. He never mentions hell as the home of lost souls, and only incidentally refers to heaven. Sometimes he cheers the hearts of many by intimating that there is a possibility of hell's wide doors being thrown open in tha fullness of time, and all sinners being united, to join with the righteous in the praise of God, and to adore the Savior.

O lor the day of Pentecost to come again to the church! O for tongues of fire to light upon the preachers and call back wandering souls!

Faith Is the Gift of God.

Many have confounded the words "faith" and "believing," using them as synonymons. There is as much difference between faith and believing as between sight and seeing. Sight is a noun, and is a faculty, and, of course, is the gift of God. Seeing is tha exercise of the faculty of sight—that is, the act of man. So faith is a faculty, a talent, and, consequantly, is the gift of God. Believing is the exercise of the faculty of faith. The eye is the telescope by which we see the visible things in nature, and faith is the telescope through which we see things otherwise invisible, and which only can he discerned spiritnally. We walk by sight, using tha instrument for seeing; and, spiritnally, we walk hy faith, using the means of believing. "By grace are ye saved," bnt this grace must be used by the moral agent, or he will have "received the grace of God in vain." Through faith are ye saved, hnt this faith, this gift, must be exercised, or the faculty will remain dead and inoperative, and believing expresses the active operation of faith. Then, what is faith? It is the powar hy which we believa, or the gracious ability to believa and lay hold of the object, which brings salvation. Thare are degrees in faith, as "little faith," "great faith." The apostles said, "Lord, increase onr faith." James tells us that faith may be dead—that is, unprodnctive, because not used. Mamory is strengthened by use, and so is avary faculty of the mind and soul; hence we hava strong faith and weak faith. By a failnre to exercise any faculty, the weaker it becomes, and we may lose the powar or ability to repent, tha powar or ability to believe. Tha moral powars become paralyzed hy the opiates of sin and neglect, and hecome dead and inoparative. John i, 12: "Bnt as many as received him (accepted him as the Messiah) to them gave he power to become the sons of God, aven to them that believe on his name." To everyona who will accept Jesus Christ as tha Savior of the world he will give tha grace of faith, the power or ability to believe. There is no passage in tha Bible which reads, "He that hath faith shall be saved." The word reads, "He that believeth shall he saved." Salvation is predicated npon the exercise of faith. Believing faith must be active, or possess a living principle which must he put into active exercise, before good results can be realized. If not living and active, it is dead and unprodnctive. God imparts the grace of faith, bnt that grace must be used by the moral agent in order that it may be productive of good. Phil. ii, 12, 13: "Work ont your own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God that worketh in you, both to will and to do, of his good pleasure." In this passage you see the sovereignty of God and tha agency of man clearly and properly presented. God works in man in order that he may have the ability to will, the ability to do. With this view the sovereignty of God is maintained, and man's moral agency left free and nntrammeled. Man can not work without the ability to do, and God can not do for man what he is required to do by the exercise of his free agency. God can not repent for man, nor believe for him, any more than he can see or eat for him. God gives the power or ability to believe, which is faith, but man must do the believing. So this view meets the Calvinistic theory, and beautifully harmonizes with Arminian theology. In reading the Bible we should hear in mind one thing: that there is a condition, either expressed or implied, attached to every promise, and a condition attached likewise to every threat recorded in the Bible. There is not one unconditional promise in the Bible where man's moral agency is involved. James ii, 17: "Faith without works is dead." And Christ tells us that the work of God is to believe on him whom he has sent. To believe, then, in one sense, is a work, and is the exercise of the grace of faith.

Often the word "faith" is used when "believing" is evidently implied: "Thy faith hath saved thee," "Perceiving he had faith to be healed." We see, therefore, the co-operation of the divine sovereignty and the free agency of man, each acting in its own sphere, and neither encroaching on the other.

Jesus Christ has redeemed every human being, hnt so one—infants and idiots excepted—is saved unless he complies with the condition of salvation, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." Heb. xi, 1: "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Mr. Caughey illustrates the passage in this way: You lend a friend a thousand dollars. He is perfectly solvent. He gives you his note for its payment when called for. Now, that note is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. Do you see the application?

Deafness Can Not Be Cured

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that can not be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

BARNES—Died at Byram on July 24, 1897, IVAN F., son of Dr. I. F. and Mrs. Lillie Barnes, aged nearly nine months.

'Tis sad for one who knew and loved this little one to record his early death. Not yet had his little feet become weary of life's journey, hnt, after weeks—yes, months—of patient suffering, his life went ont, leaving to aching hearts the tender memory of one whose mission was accomplished, whilst it could be said, "Of snch is the kingdom of heaven."

Dear little Ivan was a favorite of all who knew him—so bright, a real little sunbeam. Whilst life lingered hope still whispered to the loving parents that the dark death angel might leave the sweet little boy with us, bnt the Savior, who makes no mistakes, called him to a brighter home than this. Then, look up, stricken parents; time will

"Soon waft us to that happy land
Where, with unchanging love,
Our reunited, our 'gone before,'
Still wait for us above.

"Though like the Autumn leaves they fall,
Leaving our sad hearts bare,
Forgotten all the pain will be
When we shall meet up there."

BY

SAMUEL SMILES,

A beautifully illustrated book of 644 pages, cover stamped in gold, marble edges, size 8vo, red cloth. Probably no books of the same general type were ever written that have so much interested and inspired to worthy action the various classes to whom they were addressed, as have the productions of SAMUEL SMILES. The marked interest which attaches to MR. SMILES' productions is chiefly due to his happy use of biography. Readers who tire of extended biographical histories find here groups of the wise and distinguished of earth, each giving testimony to the various principles the author wishes to inculcate. The interest excited by the novel arises solely from our interest in the lives and struggles of men and women. They are interesting biographies; but much more interest should attach to lives actually lived and conquests actually made, provided they are produced with equal care. The home is the epitome of society and government. The application of these principles to every member of the home—the importance of their inculcation in the home, where character is chiefly molded—and the value of such lessons in making every home what it may be and should be, has dictated the title,

The advance of the Anglo-Egyptian column under General Sir Herbert Kitchener to Khartoum will be delayed until January, owing to a lack of funds. The troops meantime will be concentrated at Berber.

Leze majesty has sent a young engineer of Liegnitz, in Silesia, to jail for six months. He expressed his opinion of Emperor William at the dinner table, and his loyal mother in-law at once denounced him to the police.

The Spanish Minister of War has cabled Captain-General Weyler asking for an explanation regarding the capture by the insurgents of Victoria de las Tunas, province of Santiago de Cuba, which is defended by seven forts, having two Krupp guns among the armament.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

THE HEAVENWARD CALL.

BY LUCY LARCOM.

What shall I do, my Lord, my God,
To make my life worth more to thee?
Within my heart, through earth abroad,
Deep voices stir and summon me.

Through strange confusions of the time
I hear thy beckoning call resound;
There is a pathway more sublime
Than yet my laggard feet have found.

My coward heart, my flagging feet,
They hold me in bewildering gloom;
Come thou, my stumbling steps to meet,
And lift me into larger room!

The dearest voice may lead astray.
Speak thou! Thy word my guide shall be;
O not from life and men away,
But through them, with them, up to thee!

It is not much that hands can do.
Keep thou my spirit close to thine,
Till every thought thy love throbs through,
And all my words breathe truth divine!

With souls that seek thy pure abode,
Let my unfaltering soul aspire!
Make me a radiance on the road,
A bearer of thy sacred fire!

Letter from Miss Belle Kearney.

With its rich gold fields, silver mines, beds of coal, mineral waters, health giving climate and beautiful scenery, Colorado stands as the rarest gem of the mighty West that lies east of the Pacific slope. A sense of positive relief is experienced in leaving the arid plains of Wyoming and sweeping across the State line into the smiling acres of wheat which surround the flourishing towns that are named in honor of Ex-Gov. Eaton and Horace Greeley, who came out to Colorado in the early days and helped to open up its vast resources to an astonished world, transforming a forbidding cactus prairie into a flower garden, and finding possibilities of fabulous wealth hidden in the bowels of the earth. Under the green of hills and the gold of grain are now found veins of coal in this section have industriously worked, yielding handsome profits.

Denver is a superbly built city, having some of the finest business houses and most princely residences in the United States. The capitol is an imposing structure of unusual elegance. Like other places throughout the West, Denver is noted for its superior educational institutions and splendid churches.

In going to Maniton Springs, we gained our first glimpse of Pike's Peak, which stands in a group of mountains rising suddenly into prominence from the rolling plains about them. The view was tame and decidedly disappointing. Not a fleck of snow in sight, nor a suggestion of vegetation—only a bare, reddish-colored elevation having the appearance of the ordinary Rocky, utterly devoid of beauty and bereft of sublimity. In ascending the Peak later, however, these first impressions were supplanted by nobler ones. A cog-wheel railroad has been built from Maniton up to the very summit of Pike's Peak. Instead of having to climb wearily over the rude trail, or ride on burros with a chance of losing life at every slip of the feet of the little animals, one can quietly sit in cushioned seats in a railway car and be carried up into those great heights with all the luxury that could be desired. Usually only one car is taken up at a time. This has a seating capacity of fifty. The engines are made with two double sets of cog wheels that have jagged surfaces, by which the brakes, both air and steam, move. These brakes are so strong that either has the ability to stop the engine or the car. The power is supplied to the engines through the cog-wheels. The locomotive pushes the car in ascending and precedes it in descending. The road is 47,992 feet long. A sensation of perfect security is felt as one is lifted up, up, up, into those rarified regions past tumultuous mountain brooks making the air musical with their songs; past delightful stretches of forests of pine, birch and aspen, clapping their hands in ecstasy and holding their heads close together to whisper of their joy; past placid lakes sleeping soundly in the sunshine; past boulders of solid granite frowning in angry disdain over the snort of the consequential little engine tugging breathlessly at its cargo of poor humanity; past gorgeous scenic displays of magnificent mountains, deep, cool valleys, and 40,000 square miles of far-away lands dotted with habitations; past the timber line, coming upon a titanic mass of broken rocks, and we find ourselves standing upon the top of one of the loftiest peaks in all the world, gazing down into interminable depths from an elevation of 14,147 feet above the level of the sea. The first sensation that is realized by a delicately constructed person is a fullness in the ears, producing partial deafness; a sharp clutching of the lungs, a dizziness and deadly nausea. In the clefts of the rock particles of ice and snow are found, which, if applied to the face and taken internally, will cause a cessation of sea-sickness. These physical miseries are not to be wondered at when it is comprehended that water boils at 184 degrees Fahrenheit on Pike's Peak, and the barometer stands in the neighborhood of seventeen inches. Ninety-one years ago Major Pike first looked on the eminence that now bears his name, declaring that he believed "no human being could have ascended to its pinnacle." Pike's Peak was first scaled in 1819. To-day thousands upon thousands are carried to its summit, and stand in the region of snow and clouds and storms in the midst of everlasting desolation.

Maniton Springs is one of the most celebrated Summer resorts in this country. It sits close at the base of Pike's Peak, and is surrounded on almost all sides by lofty hills. The most abundant springs of iron and soda water gush from the earth in different portions of the village, and is given out freely to the thirsty travelers by accommodating boys who stand from one day's end to another dipping up the sparkling beverage and handing it out in glasses to the eager bystanders. Just beyond the limits of Manitou is the Garden of the Gods—a most curious locality where red sand-stone has been wrought by the action of the elements into the most inconceivably fantastic shapes—birds and beasts and people; gate-ways, cathedral spires and mammoth ruins, all standing like monuments scattered over a plain, with hardly a touch of vegetation to give a vivid contrast—only the deep blue sky to form a background. After a charming drive through the Ute Pass the Cave of the Winds and the Grand Cavern are reached. The latter is fraught with peculiar interest. Like similar creations, it consists of tremendous excavations in the interior of the earth in the form of tunnels and vestibules, lanes and avenues, rotundas and ghostly houses with eerie chambers nearly all of rock and calcite formations, but many have the appearance of coral-work and frost-tracery. From the ceiling hang beautiful stalactites and cones of clear alabaster, while from the floor rise innumerable stalagmites. Some of the apartments are immense. Grand Concert Hall is seventy-five feet in height and nearly five hundred feet long. Piled up in a corner of the Grand Cavern is a collection of bones of human beings belonging to a prehistoric race. The fossils were found at the mouth of the cave when it was first discovered. The most surprising revealment in the cavern is the Grand Pipe Organ, which consists of thirty stalactites hanging in perfect order and marvelous symmetry from the ceiling nearly under the vast Guadaloupe Dome in a natural gallery about thirty feet from the floor. Music is produced by striking the stalactites with little wooden sticks. The organ player climbs to the loft, and, touching the stalactites, which look like suspended colored ribbons, succeeds in filling the apartment with soft, alluring strains of melody, rising from comic airs to the majesty of Coronation. These musical stalactites are said to be the most wonderful in creation; but it is a mistake. There are some in the Luray Cavern of Virginia that are superior in depth of tone and sweetness, and the stalactite and stalagmite formations of Luray are incomparable for beauty.

The towns of Manitou, Colorado City and Colorado Springs are so close together that they constitute one continuing city extending several miles. A short distance beyond the last is found South Cheyenne Canyon, noted for its wonderful scenery and as the place where Helen Hunt Jackson desired her body to be buried. The canyon is short, but stupendous. Ponderous granite mountains come so near together that on first sight it seems impossible that a roadway could ever be forged between them. It looks as if a mighty hand had prised the boulders apart, and that they may at any time close up their ranks again. In the grandest part of the canyon are found Seven Falls, that present a scene full of entrancing loveliness. The granite has been smoothly terraced by mother nature in seven different places in a great gorge, and over these surge volumes of water clear as crystal. At this point we leave our carriage, and, climbing up several flights of steps hundreds of feet high, we find ourselves on the brow of a mountain, and at once commence to search for the sacred spot where the body of that sweet singer and romance writer, Helen Hunt Jackson, was laid to rest. We found it on the slope overlooking the yawning clefts in the canyon and in close proximity to the Seven Falls. A cool, peaceful nook under the sighing pines "sun-crowned" "in lonely lands." A mass of stones now lie on the empty grave, and between these are wedged numerous cards of visitors who desired to let the hawks and eagles and mountain grasses know that their majesties had called and left an evidence of their conceit.

Helen Hunt Jackson died in San Francisco. In her last days she requested that she be buried in South Cheyenne Canyon. As soon as was practicable, her husband had her body brought from the city, where it was laid temporarily, and carried over the mountain heights by a carriage road to her favorite place, where she had often sat and read and written far removed from the din and strife of the outside world. Only a few friends formed the mournful party as it filed its way through the mountain fastnesses with its precious burden to the abiding place that had been chosen above all on earth in which to wait for the resurrection morn. The burial-ground was so unusual that it attracted hordes of visitors, who began to make it a rendezvous for picnics and headquarters for advertisements. The notoriety and accompanying desecration grew so offensive to Mr. Jackson that he had his wife's remains removed to the cemetery at Colorado Springs, and the grave marked by a modest head-stone. Mr. Jackson is president of the El Paso County Bank. He is a gentleman of handsome face and courteous bearing, middle-aged and prosperous. Since the death of "H. H." he has married her niece, and at present lives in an elegant home in Colorado Springs. Helen Hunt Jackson will linger forever in the memory of mankind as the friend of the Indian—"Ramona" and "A Century of Dishonor" immortalizing her as the strongest advocate for that unfortunate race known in the literary or philanthropic world.

BELLE KEARNEY.

To the Church in the Arcadia District.

DEAR BRETHREN: The whole assessments made by the various Boards of Stewards for the support of the ministry, together with the assessments ordered by the Annual Conference, amount to the small sum of two dollars and five cents per member. What a small sum this when we remember that there are something like 150 members in the district that pay from $10 to $50 each to these claims, and then two or three hundred more that pay $5 to $10 each! Now, here are less than five hundred members that pay more than half of all the claims, leaving more than six thousand members to pay less than half the claims. And I do not know a single member in the district that is wholly supported by charity. There is evidently something wrong somewhere.

I write this letter in the interest of our Master's cause, and urge that every dollar for your pastors be paid, together with all that was assessed by the Annual Conference. There have been gracious revivals, more or less, in every pastoral charge in the district. Many have been saved and brought into the church, and there are several more meetings to be held. Verily, God has been good. And now, after his goodness and mercy to you and your children, will you not bring your tithes into the Lord's store-house, and let him pour you out a blessing in temporal things? Will not the men of God—the stewards—see to it that every member of our church is seen and earnestly entreated to do something on these claims? How can a man that has been appointed by his Quarterly Conference to the responsible position of steward rest until he has done his utmost to secure the salary of his pastor?

Brother stewards, after nineteen years in the ministry, I am sure that it largely depends upon you. May you so feel it!

I am about to commence my fourth round of Conferences. As far as possible, let every charge be ready to report amount, or in sight. Will the pastor or stewards read this letter to your congregations everywhere in the district? I hope so. I want one hundred subscribers to our Conference organ, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. I want our people to take our organ and read it.

And now, brethren of the Official Boards, be at the fourth Quarterly Conference. Be there in the interest of your church; be there to arrange for the future welfare of your church.

Brethren, my heart yearns for the prosperity of our Zion.

Your brother and co laborer,

B. T. CREWS.

Arcadia, La., Sept. 15, 1897.

Bethel Camp Meeting.

I have been waiting for others better qualified to do so to give you an account of the meeting held at this historic camp ground during the first of August. I call it a historic place because Dr. Winans in his diary speaks of attending camp meeting here as early as 1823. Here in the early days of this century. Drs. Winans, Drake, Jones, and many of the pioneers of Methodism in Mississippi, preached the gospel and helped to make the Methodist Church what it is in this section of the country. For quite a number of years, especially after the war, this camp ground was abandoned. The tabernacle and tents were either moved away or rotted down. Six or seven years ago it was again revived. Now we have quite a number of comfortable tents, a commodious tabernacle. It is situated in a good community just a convenient distance from the railroad and towns. Most of the people who attend here come to be benefited by the meeting. There are no gate fees, and the association has no difficulty in meeting all expenses. I feel confident that the wisdom of the association in depending on our regular itinerant preachers to do the preaching was vindicated by the success of the last meeting.

We had no scarcity of preachers. Rev. T. B. Clifford, of the North Mississippi Conference, and agent of the Mississippi Methodist Orphanage; Rev. John Green, of the Texas Conference; Dr. C. W. Carter and Rev. Charlie C. Miller, of the Louisiana Conference; Drs. J. M. Weems and W. L. C. Hunnicutt, Revs. T. B. Holloman, H. M. Ellis, B. F. Lewis, Jones, Tucker, and this scribe, of the Mississippi Conference, were on hand. These brethren each in his peculiar style preached the gospel so as to make lasting impressions for good on the hearers. The preaching was good, forceful, practical, and spiritual. It is impossible to calculate the good accomplished by these pure gospel sermons. Many seeds no doubt were sown in hearts that will bring forth fruit for years to come. We had present quite a number of laymen that were ready for any good word and work. They did valuable service privately, at the altar, and in the woods prayer meetings. The ladies also did much good in a similar way. There are comparatively few people in this section that do not belong to some church. There were eight applicants for church membership. The main work, however, in this camp meeting was done in the church. Much was done in the way of strengthening and establishing the older members of the church in the faith. Backsliders were reclaimed, and many in the church who had never been converted professed to be converted.

The meeting gradually grew in interest from the beginning. The last day was the best of all. Several who have been regular attendants here for several years said that there was a greater spiritual victory the last Sunday of this meeting than any they had ever witnessed there. At least twenty persons professed reclamation and conversion during the services of the last Sunday. Thirty-five or forty claimed reclamation and conversion during the entire meeting. I have spoken with several since the close of the last camp meeting at Bethel, and they say that it was the best they remember attending there. It is both gratifying and encouraging to see the Lord thus honoring the plain, old-fashioned practical preaching of the regular itinerant preachers in the conversion and salvation of souls. Bethel is a nice place to spend a week or ten days away from the noise and bustle of railroads and city life. Here the people can worship God without distraction, hear the good, old-fashioned gospel, enjoy the good, pure country air, and drink from nature's own fountains some of the very best spring water. Mansfield Female College.

The forty-sixth session of this institution of Christian education opened on Wednesday, the ninth instant. The enrollment of pupils on the first day far exceeded that of any previous term for years, and many more are expected. This session promises to be a most prosperous one.

President and Mrs. Sligh are meeting the high demands made upon them, who seem to be pre-eminently fitted for the grand work committed to their charge. They are held in high esteem by our people, and we bespeak for the Mansfield Female College a greater degree of usefulness under their skillful management. The faculty is up to date, and fine work is being done in the respective departments. This college educates the heart as well as the mind, and qualifies the young lady for duties in this eventful age in which she must be a prominent factor.

Our people are growing in appreciation of Mansfield Female College, and this fact was well attested by their very liberal response to the call of Bro. J. L. P. Sheppard for improvement funds, which have been judiciously appropriated, and, as a result, many long felt wants have been supplied to the gratification of all. We contemplate further improvements just as means are made available, and in this connection we would respectfully and most earnestly beg all parties whose subscriptions to our improvement fund are yet unpaid to remit and cover same as soon as practicable. Our contracts were based on these subscriptions, and our failure to realize on them has somewhat embarrassed the local Board. We trust that this call will result in a complete liquidation of said list and with additional remittances from friends of Methodism. "He who gives quickly gives twice." "God loveth a cheerful giver."

Our college has claims on the Methodists of Louisiana that should inspire a loyalty that would fill its halls to overflowing. It is an ideal college home, situated in the hills of North Louisiana, in a most healthy region, where the best influences prevail for the development of Christian character of the highest type. Give us your girls, and we will endeavor to return them to you fitted for life's exalted duties.

A. F. JACKSON, Sec. of Board.

Natchez District.

The work in Natchez district this year seems so far to have been chiefly, though not entirely, that of seed-sowing and cultivating for harvests yet to be gathered. The church, like the tree of life, should bear twelve crops of fruit and yield her fruit every month. Our pastors have all been faithfully filling their places, and the people have everywhere given them cordial hearing. Protracted meetings have been held in many places with good results. Indeed, I think I never saw more serious, thoughtful and even eager listening to the gospel than I have witnessed this year. Twice I have preached three times in a day, and still the people wanted more.

The missionary cause is eliciting unusual interest, and, unless unexpected calamities prevent, we look for good reports on all the collections from almost every part of the district. The health of our people has been generally good, though one of our pastors, Rev. R. A. Breland, has suffered a sore bereavement in the death of his wife. A few others have had illness in their families.

We have had two camp meetings not more than twenty miles apart. At both the attendance was large on Sundays. The preaching was excellent, much of it, at both places, and everybody seemed to enjoy it. The chief speakers have been mentioned in this ADVOCATE. Bethel was conducted on the old style, without enclosure or gate fee. At Sam Jones, on the Valley railroad, they charge a small gate fee. At both places the order was well-nigh perfect, and the listening serious and appreciative. Few publicly professed conversion at either place, and but few joined the church. However, if all the good spiritual results were to be weighed, it would, I think, require one of the strong angels to hold up the balances. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.

No Fear of Death.

Some one who was evidently much disturbed at the thought of sudden death one day asked Wesley what he should do if he knew he should die the next day. "What should I do?" he said. "Exactly what I shall do now. I should call and talk to Mr. So-and-So, and Mrs. So and So, and dine at such an hour, and preach in the evening, and have supper, and then I should go to bed and sleep as soundly as ever I did in my life."

The shortness of life is bound up with its fullness. It is to him who is most active, always thinking, feeling, working, caring for people and for things, that life seems short.—Phillips Brooks.

THE BRIGHT SIDE

It is better to praise the rose
Than ever to speak of the thorn.
Would we fight? If we look there are plenty of foes
For us in our own hearts born
Better hide the faults that we see
And hold up the good to sight
Than to scorn the evil continually
Without trying to make it right.
Why should we rail and fret
At the foibles of men until
We the beautiful law of love forget,
Hate the doer instead of the ill?

Ministerial Education.

Ministeriai edncation is bsing widely discnssed, and, demanding, as it does, onr most earnest consideration, is engaging the thonght of all who are concerned for the interests of the chnrch. The time was when the advantages for an edncation were few; but now that colleges and schools of high grade are scattered ali over the land, yonng men who do not make nse of the opportnnities afforded, and secnre an edncation for themselves, are withont excnse. He who enters the ministry unedncated is at an especiai disadvantage, and wiii soon find himseif bringing np the rear of the procession. A call to preach is a call to prepare. The young man who hnrriedly enters the ministry without having previonsiy prepared himself for the responsibiiities of his high and holy caiiing is making a mistake that wiii seriously interfere with his life's work, and prove a hindrance to any progress he might otherwise make; and the qnestion of his snccess, acceptableness and efficiency is a donbtfni one. But iet him first iay the foundation of a good, practicai edncation, and, aii other things being equai, his snccess is assnred and his efficiency certain. To exciude iocal infinences, and thus raise the standard of educationai qnaiifications for the ministry, the power to grant iicense to preach was taken from the Quarterly Conference and intrusted to the District Conference. An advanced step was intended, bnt that it has not snceeeded as fully as was expected is evidenced by the action of a certain District Conference, which granted iicense to preach to a man whose edncation was very limited, and who was capabie of but littie or no deveiopment. I know it is a responsible position to assume to say that a man who professes to he caiied of God shaii not preach. Bnt the interests of the church must be the first consideration of those who iove the canse of Christ, and the chnroh's interests must be piaced above the feeiings and interests of the individual, or eise the chnrch wiii snffer.

The time has been, perhaps, when the demand for an edncated ministry was not so great or so urgent; bnt that day has passed, and the time has now come in the history of the chnrch when an educated ministry is absolutely essential if she would keep step with the progress and advanced thonght of the world. The mission of the church concerns man in his threefoid natnre—mind, body, and soni. To reach and save man thns constitnted is the great pnrpose for whieh God estahiished the chnrch; and if she fail here, she faiis aito gether. An educated ministry is an essentiai factor in her man-saving mission.

But what is it to be educated? I answer, first, it is not simpiy remaining for a few months in the classic halls of Miiisaps, or Vanderbiit, or the State University. And, yet, is it not true that some who are in authority so consider it? And is it not true that the young man who receives the lowest degree conferrabie by the above-mentioned coiieges is rated more highiy than another who has secured equaiiy as good an edncation at some other coiiege? I am saying nothing against the said colleges. God bless them in their work of preparing our yonng men for the ministry and for iife! But they are not the only sonrces of knowiedge, and there shonid be no difference in the rating of men equaiiy educated, because one has attended a chnrch schooi and the other has not. Let them stand npon their individnal merits and the thoronghness of their education.

But what is education? I answer that it is not the storing the mind with facts, principies, etc. This is a part, but not aii. To be educated is to have the mental faculties drawn out to that stage of devoiopment where the mind is capabie of striking out on independent lines of thought, and thinking for itself. It is to have the power to think for one's self, to form proper premises, and from them reason to logicai conciusions.

This is education anbjectiveiy considered, bnt objectiveiy it is the successfui and practicai appiication of these logicai concinsions to life.

YESMAR.

"Ths Monk and ths Princs."

One of the books profitable for preachers to read, though oalculated to interest and instruct others as well, is "The Monk and the Prince," by the late Bishop Haygood. The lessons tanght in its pages are drawn from the character and oareer of the Dominican monk, Fra Girolamo Savonaroia, as in the close of the fifteenth century he lived and preached in beautiful, rioh, art-loving Florence, incessantly warring upon Lorenzo de' Medici, called "the Magnificent." This he did in the interest, as he conceived, of religion and the freedom and prosperity of the state and people. In his zeal he even thnndered against the oorrnptions of Rome, which conrse finaliy led to his apprehension and trial by order of Pope Aiexander and his being bnrned at the stake.

Bishop Haygood, aii along in this intensely interesting book, makes apt and teiiing points having appiication to some preachers, and some not preachers, of onr own day. While with consnmmate skill he lays open the faise, he with masterfnl hand portrays that which fiils the measnre of the divine standard for pnipit and pew. The following is from the chapter entitied "Hunting a Star Preacher": "The new preacher in Santa Croce who had gained the ear and won the appianse of Florence was Fra Marlano da Genazzano, A. M., Ph.D., D. D, S. T. D., LL.D—and more in prospect and hope. The history telis ns that Dr. Genazzano was a man of the rarest gifts of snch sort as were his. He dressed well—his priestiy robes were in the best style of the Franciscan mode. He was 'au fait' in the most select society and performed marriage ceremonies with exquisite grace and dignity; aiso officiated at funerals in a most impressive manner. He wore no raiment of hair, nor did he gird himself with a leathern belt about his loins. He did not dwell in wilderness solitudes, nor was his meat 'locnsts and wild honey.' His manners showed a certain natnral grace that the best associations had bronght to 'fin de siecle' finish. The delightfni and fascinating Doctor had a smooth and well-modnlated voice, whose softer tones were flute-like in their sweetness; upon occasion his deeper tones were like the basso profundo of the great oathedral organ. When he preached his congregation glowed with sensnons deiight and were never made afraid by what they heard. It is said of him: 'His pulpit styie was replete with classic learning and the fashionabie graces of styie.'"

We qnote a few passages from other chapters: "For the most part, it is absointeiy certain that the work of God has gone on in this world throngh the faithful and ioving labors of men whose names do not find place in encyciopædias. This world-saving work goes on through men nnknown to fame and concerning whom history has been and will be ignorant. By men who never had a titie other than 'Brother'—nobiest of them aii. These men never had eulogy by the newspapers, and they wonld be ashamed to hnmiliation to contrive their writing or publication—honest, olean-sonied gentlemen they are. Estimated by money, their labors are not reqnited—yet they are patient and manly, rich in grace and in the iove of their divine work." "What hurts the character of a preacher mars all his work, and so damages the church and God's work in the world." "It ought not to be conceivabie that one should enter the ministry for its pecnniary rewards, or for other considerations as selfish and unworthy. But we can not donbt that such men have lived and, to the eye of men, done exceedingiy weii." "No preacher is safe from the periis, only hinted at in this chapter, who has not caught the spirit of Jesus—and has not iearned the meaning of the Pentecost and received its baptism of the Hoiy Ghost and of fire."

These few excerpts indicate the character and vaine of this book. It will benefit any preacher or layman who will give it a careful reading.

JOHN T. SAWYER.

Centrifugal Christianity.

It is best defined in the words of Jesus—"That ropentance and remission of sins shonid be preached in his name, beginning at Jernsalem." (Luke xxiv, 47.) Jerusalem was chosen as the centre of movement; from that centre influences must radiate until ail nations should he encircied by it. The prophecy of this centrifugal tendency had lain hid in the original promise to Abraham: "And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." (Gen. xxii, 17.) God had always designed the reiigion of Jesns to be missionary. The preparation, from the time of Abraham to Christ, had been gradnaliy foensing the light and heat of revelation upon Jerusaiem as the centre of a world-wide gospel.

Christianity, then, is essentially centrifngal in the operation of its spiritnal forces, steadied and ordered by gravitation in Christ Jesus, the true centre of the system. The ohnrch nniversal teaches that in regard to denominations the strongest are those that possess the missionary impulse; the weakest are those that have it not. The history of the individnal heart brings forth a lesson of value. The heart, in the holy ardor and passionate glow of a new love, feels that love-movement towards all mankind. The repression and stifling of the oonvert's constraining impnlse to bring all men into the same experience works out a coldness and backslidden condition of heart which in itself is an irreparabie injury to the soni. "Ichabod" is written over the door of the church or heart that neglects to kindle by prayer, efforts, means, the coal of missionary zeal that God first placed on their aitars.

Christ said, "The Son of man is come to seek and to save the lost." That is the pnrpose of his entrance into human conditions. "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." What is the spirit of Christ? Pre-eminently, it is a seeking and saving spirit to the lost. The lost are those "having no hope, and without God in the world." This cnts to pieces the false distinction of geographical distances, places the lost on their trne basis of spiritual remoteness from God, irrespective of any partioular acre of land npon which they, perchance, may happen to dwell. National boundary iines do not determine the question of who are the heathen, but moral distance from God does. St. Pani gives a vivid conception of those who are actnal foreigners and aliens—"Bnt now in Christ Jesus, ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the biood of Christ. Now, therefore, ye are no more strangers and foreigners, bnt feiiow-citizens with the saints and of the honsehold of God." It is not steam and electricity, as some are so fond of stating, that makes us nigh, hnt it is the biood of Christ. The life-giving tie of blood binds me to every man that knows God, independently of class, creed or custom. It is keenly anggested by an eminent preacher that the nomenoiature "foreign" and "domestic" sets up an nnfortunate antagonism between the two, and ereots barriers of mileage and oaste which prevent one seeing the scriptural position; that the heathen are "those having no hope, and without God in the world;" the Christians are aione those that are bronght "nigh by the blood of Christ." It excludes the nobler thought that "in Christ Jesus there is neither Greek, nor Jew, circnmcision nor nncircnmcision, Barbarian or Scythian, bond nor free: but Christ is ali, and in all." These artificial, earthly distinctions are lost to sight, swallowed np in the transcendently iuminous fact that "Christ is aii, and in all." The spirit of Jesus is peculiarly a seeking and saving spirit; he who possesses the mind of Christ will have this same spirit reproduced in his heart. The work Jesns wrought depends for its continuance on his disciples doing precisely what he came to do. If the first disciples had refnsed to obey the missionary impnlse imparted by the Master, the church at Jerusalem would have become extinct by virtne of its own inertia, and the disintegrating forces at war upon it.

The man who believes in "home," but not in "foreign" missions, only partly believes in the fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man. He defeats Christ's mission as far as it lies in his power by argument and influence. He sets himself against the command of Jesus in Luke xxiv, 47. His arguments are incontrovertible evidence that the essence and spirit of the gospel is neither felt nor understood by him. The spirit-filled Christian will gratefully give the gospel to the heathen abroad, even if there was no nnmistakabie command to that effect. He who wants religion, solely to keep him out of heli, will never send the gospel to others to keep them out.

HARRY W. RICKEY.

A Son's Tribute to His Father.

On the twenty-sixth day of Febrnary, last, Rev. J. W. Luter departed this life and entered into his eternal rest. In the hearts of the widow and orphan to whom he spake words of sympathy and comfort he is forever enshrined. The beggar to whom he gave the cup of cool water reveres his memory. Only those who knew him best could appreciate his sterling worth. He made no compromise with sin, and when sent to places where vice and immorality were sure passports to social recognition, where the arch demon, drink, was claiming his victims daily, he shrank not from his arduous task, bnt calmly put on the armor of his Lord, and sheathed not his sword until Satan and his legions had been put to flight.

He hoped for no reward in this life, bnt he had an abiding faith that "beyond the snnset's radiant glow" God had prepared a mansion for him, and there, in company with the loved ones who preceded him, he awaits the grand reunion.

When time shall be no more, what an array of redeemed souls will testify that it was throngh his instrnmentaiity that they were bronght into the fold! The army of good influences which he left behind will live forever to add fresh laurels to his heavenly crown. Let those who visit his tomb keep silent, lest some worldly word render the spot unhallowed. He has gone from earth forever. Let ns weep no more, but rather rejoice that he is at rest. May we all meet him in that house not made with hands! P. F. L.

DEAR SISTERS: It is with many misgivings and a deep sense of my own unfitness and inefficiency that I have assumed the duties and responsibilities of the president's office. But, while conscious of all this, I am encouraged as I remember my two sources of aid—the strength and wisdom given for the work by our heavenly Father, and the faithful cooperation of my sisters. These are the two arms of my power, and, next to God, my sisters, am I dependent upon you for aid and support. There is not one of you whose help I can dispense with. Not one of you but can increase my usefulness and greatly aid in the successful execution of the duties of my office. None of you doubt that without God I am nothing. Would that each one of you could feel, as I do, that without you I am nothing. I am encouraged thus to rely on you, knowing your faithful service in the past. There are scores among you whose names are a tower of strength to me, knowing, as I do, your love and zeal, and many there are whose names I do not know, but whose influence I have felt in the great work accomplished, and whose love and zeal I am persuaded are unabated. So confident am I of this continued support I thank you in advance, and rejoice over what another year's record will reveal as having been done.

Another annual meeting, with its inspiring associations, is gone, and we are now fairly settled for the work of another year. We rejoice in these annual gatherings, but they are only a part of the year's work, for back of all such occasions, and that which renders them possible, is the steady, faithful work of the auxiliary in holding its regular monthly meeting, payment of dues and other funds, and unceasing prayer for the blessing of God on the work and workers. So we must be diligent now, that when another annual meeting shall come we may have occasion to rejoice in the growth and prosperity of our society.

Let each auxiliary understand what is planned for the year, and work toward its accomplishment. You have made liberal pledges, and I would urge upon you the necessity of considering and formulating plans for redeeming these pledges, that when the end of the year comes there may be no fear of failing short. Let each officer and member do all in her power to make the monthly meeting interesting and inspiring, that as often as you gather together you may go forth with hearts burning to do still greater things for the Master. There is no excuse for dull meetings when our missionary and church periodicals are so full of interesting and thrilling facts concerning the work. Continue faithfully in the effort to secure new members, for in every community are many who should be united with us in this work.

Lady managers of Juvenile Societies have an inspiring object for the year in leading the little ones in their work for Korea, and will find much to aid them in our periodicals, and will always be assisted by our corresponding secretary, Sister McIntosh, whose heart is throughly enlisted in this work. Her circular letter to the young people and juveniles, if rightly used, will be helpful in securing their earnest cooperation.

Above all else, let unceasing prayer be made for the outpouring of God's Spirit upon our work, that when we have done our best his blessing shall give abundant increase. MRS. G. H. LIPSCOMB.

Pray with Us.

The Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society will hold a Week of Prayer, from Oct. 11 to 18, for the evangelization of our own land; that the Spirit may, in high places and in the lowest, move upon the hearts of the people to recognize the majesty and power of Almighty God, and acknowledge the Prince of Peace as the true ruler of this land; that the power of the saloon and the gambling den may be broken, and social purity become the rule in all classes.

We appeal to those only who believe in the power of united prayer; but those we earnestly entreat to unite with us in this service. No one can fail to see how corruption, disbelief, and manifold evils of all kinds prevail in this Christian (?) land of ours. The most careless reader must know that the foul flood of evil, flowing out from the land into all nations, vastly exceeds the small pearly stream that throngh our foreign missionary efforts carries the pure, saving truth of Christ to heathen lands. The power of God is with the pure stream, and will magnify the blessings it carries. Its precious waters shall cause the desert to blossom as the rose; but, O God, forgive us for the great rush of evil going from our land to hear into eternal ruin millions who might have received from us only good if we, Christ's followers here, had not been careless of the increase of sin on every side and in our own homes.

I have small sympathy with the boasted optimist that would ignore the force of these facts; still less with the pessimist who is overpowered by them, and his spiritual energy and faith are so paralyzed that he forgets our God is mighty to save. No; let us look the facts squarely in the face, and, with hopeful confidence in the power of our God, put forth in prayer the simple faith that moves mountains, and give, unreservedly, our full force to God to be used as his agency to accomplish our prayers, for the last is what is needed. The great heart of God is grieved for the evil of the land, and, more, for the failure of his people to put themselves at his service to reach those who have shut their hearts to the approaches of the Holy Spirit.

Unite with us in this prayer service, we ask in Christ's name. To those who are pastors, we appeal especially for united effort in prayer. We beg that they will call together the women of their congregations at the appointed time, and lead them in this service where they are not already preparing for it. If it should be so that you can not hold the Week of Prayer at the time appointed, set another time; but let your prayers ascend in earnest, sincere faith to the throne of the Almighty Father for our own country.

Those who have not the programs and subjects arranged for the Week of Prayer can find them in the October number of Our Homes, which we shall be glad to send to all who will write in time for it.

Our "World."

It is a thought not sufficiently familiar to most that "the world" concerning which the Bible has so much to say is for us the particular society in which we individually move. We are apt to think of it as something much further away, and probably much lower in moral life. It is nevertheless true that there is a religious world as well as a fashionable world, a clerical as well as a commercial world. The minister's peril is from the latter, not from the former. He is in danger of lowering his tone to the level of the particular set with whom it is for his interest to be popular. Out of deference to those in higher station, or through fear of criticism and ridicule, he may easily quiet the voice of conscience or intermit his testimony, or alter his line of conduct. If so, he has become worldly in as true a sense as though he went to the theatre and the ball room. These latter things have no attraction for him. Hence abstention from them is no measure of his consecration. It is standing alone, because his own highest nature demands it, in the very surrounding where his lot is cast and in the face of those on whose favor his advancement rests, that shows the mettle of the man and stamps him for God.—Zion's Herald.

How to Prepare for Death.

To prepare for death does not make a convent necessary. We need not go into a cell and mortify the flesh, and conjure up ghostly sights, and drown all the voices which our senses speak to us. To prepare for death is to do one's ordinary work faithfully, and one's whole duty nobly. To prepare for death is to trade honestly, to give cheerfully and study faithfully, to speak kindly, to smile cheerily. To prepare for death is not to chase one bright thing from life's pathway, is not to ignore one strong affection; it is not to miss up one true pleasure; it is not to make one sweet thing sour, or to make believe that a bitter thing is pleasant to take. That is the glorious side of this truth. The Christian watchfulness which our Lord commands is not a timid, twittering apprehensiveness. It does not mean that we shall constantly be asking awestruck whispers: "Is he coming? Is he coming?" This watchfulness simply means that we faithfully are doing our every-day duty every day. —F. E. Clark, D. D.

A Cheerful Service.

All who love Christ obey his commandments cheerfully and willingly. They are subject to no physical compulsion. Their will is free, and their heart responsive. They do not serve their Lord as slaves, nor with resistance. As David has it, "I run in the way of his commandments." They do not consider it as a grievous burden, or as a weariness, or as a hardship. They do not need to be spurred on to duty by the goads of conscience, nor are they content with putting off their Lord as little as possible. They act from choice, not from necessity; from love, not from fear; readily, not constrainedly. Christ's service is to them not a chain which galls and frets their spirits, but a path which afford their souls the freest liberty and greatest delight.—Presbyterian.

When you are invited to the house of God, remember that it is the Lord that invites you, and he does it of grace. He does not need your presence there, and is rich enough and lord to do without your service. You have need of him; not he of you. He who fancies he is paying the Lord a compliment by listening to his gospel is worse off than Lazarus who lay at the rich man's gate full of sores, and who knew and felt his need. There is no wretchedness greater than that poverty of soul which knows not its poverty.

To Whom it May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mul-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of sores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. BLACK,

THE GREAT COMMISSION.

BY MRS. A. E. F. COLLIER.

(Read by Mrs. A. F. Watkins at anniversary meeting of Annual Conference of the W. F. M. S. Mississippi Conference, and sent in by Mrs. L. D. Jones, editor of W. F. M. S. column.)

On fair Judean hills,
Not far from the city's walls,
Where olive groves and murmuring rills
The sight and sense enthralls,
The Master stood, and gathered there
Were the eleven toil-worn men.
In love, without a thought of fear,
They received his last command.
"Go ye into all the world and preach
The gospel to every creature." (Mark xvi. 15)

The sun, in quivering shafts of light,
Fell on each saddened face,
Crowning the Master's head with halo bright,
So instinct with life and grace,
Christ read each throbbing heart,
We knew they would be sure,
And felt that each would do his part,
Faithful, true, and pure.

A soft white cloud of silvery hue
Hung poised, as in mid-air.
It was a strangely solemn scene
As angels viewed it there.
The Master blessed them then,
And asked that grace be given.
As the cloud enfolded him,
And their Master was—in heaven.

The sad disciples gazed above,
As tho' to pierce the fleecy cloud
That hid their Savior from their love.
Then in silent prayer they bowed,
Asking help and guidance now
To keep their promise to their Lord.
And well they kept the solemn vow
To spread the gospel's word.

Long years have passed since that sad time.
But we still have the record true
How these men made their lives sublime
Keeping the faith for me and you.
That command still binds our hearts
As it did in long-gone ages.
That command must sway the world,
For 'tis writ on sacred pages.

Dare we sit still with idle hands,
Trifling with earthly toys?
Can we reject this great command
Which brings eternal joys?
Ah no; we must not, can not cease
Working for our Lord.
His love will yield eternal peace
If we obey his blessed word.

Wesson, Miss.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. W. G. Backus, P. C, Bogue Chitto, Sept. 11, 1897: "We have just closed a very profitable meeting in Johnston Station. The church was greatly revived; four accessions and several conversions. It was the best meeting enjoyed there for several years. Bro. B. H. Rawls, from Auburn, did all the preaching, and his preaching was in demonstration of the Spirit and with power. Bro. Rawls is fine help in revival services."

Rev. J. M. Huggin, Big Creek, Miss., Sept. 8, 1897: "Closed a nine days' meeting here on last Monday night, resulting in the church being greatly revived and nine accessions to it on profession of faith. Rev. R. M Davis, of the North Mississippi Conference, and Rev. H. H. Hallums, of the Free Will Baptist Church, gave us two good sermons each. With this exception the pastor had no help but that of the laity. To God be all the glory."

Rev. A. D. Miller, Hermanville, Miss., Sept. 9, 1897: "We have had a gracious meeting at Hermanville, Miss. It continued nine days. The church was greatly blessed; several converted, we hope, and twenty-six added to the membership—some good material of which the church is very proud. Rev. C. C. Miller, of Jackson, La., did all the preaching after he got to us, and he certainly did it well. He just captured my people. Any brother wanting help will do well to get him."

Rev. M. L. White, Montrose, Miss., Sept. 13, 1897: "Just closed my sixth revival meeting. The one at Mt. Zion accomplished good. Assisted by Bro. Langford, Cedar Grove meeting was quite good. Meeting here at Montrose was something unusual; lasted ten days. Bros. Bradford and J. T. Abney did most of the preaching. The Brandon District High School opened with a larger attendance than for years. Prof. Burton is infusing life in this school. He is so earnest and zealous."

MEETING AT HOLLONDALE

We are now in the midst of a great meeting. The church people are greatly revived, and many sinners, old and young, are being converted to God. We have had to hold the fort most of the time all alone. The pastor, Bro. Mimms, being summoned by telegram to attend his wife who is ill at Honston, Miss, left us early in the meeting. Sister Mimms is still very ill with malarial fever. Let the brethren pray for her recovery. We were glad to have Bro. Charlie Spraggins with us several days last week.

W. M. McINTOSH:

Hollondale, Miss., Sept. 13, 1897.

Rev. W. L. Anderson, P. C., Rural Hill charge, Sept. 13, 1897: "We have closed three of our protracted meetings—all attended with very satisfactory results. The Lord was often with us in great power. At Rural Hill Rev. A. T. Buck assisted us, where also Rev. W. D. Burroughs, of Hill House, preached two very feeling, effective sermons. Bro. Buck preaches a full-orbed gospel very effectively. Bro. D. W. Babb did the preaching for us at Plattsburg. He plows a straight, deep furrow, and don't let his plow-share slip out of the soil. It wears sharper. Rev. T. B. Clifford did us three days' efficient work at Center Ridge and helped us to pitch one of our best meetings. Center Ridge and Rural Hill are preparing to ceil their houses of worship. Pray for us."

Rev. Thos. J. Martin, Ringgold, La., Sept. 7, 1897: "Rev. C. F. Staples is senior preacher, and Rev. W. H. Ledbetter is junior preacher of the Lanesville work. There has been a revival of religion at seven of the nine appointments that has resulted in some fifty accessions. There has been organization of Sabbath-schools and prayer meetings at all the appointments where protracted services have been held. Some appointments have a regular prayer meeting, a ladies' and young men's prayer meeting. There are more family altars than ever before. Some fifty, or more, persons publicly promised to erect family altars. Bro. Staples is a good spiritual preacher and a fine organizer. He is getting the work in hand. Our people are pleased with him. To the regret of all, Bro. Ledbetter has had a throat trouble that has compelled him to cease preaching almost entirely. He has been afflicted with sickness in his family most of the Summer. We ask the prayers of the church in his behalf, that he may be restored to his health and do the work that God has called him to do. The Annual Conference will find the Lanesville charge in good condition."

Rev. Robt. W. Vaughan, P. C., Valley circuit, Louisiana Conference: "We have held three remarkably good meetings on the work to date. The first at Pleasant Valley. Rev. Jas. R. Roy did most of the preaching. I never witnessed a more gracious meeting. I never saw the work of the Holy Spirit so manifest. The church wonderfully revived, many souls saved, and seven accessions; several family altars were erected. The fire is still burning, as I have just returned from there. At Cotton Valley we had a glorious meeting, Rev. John C. Slighassisting. The Holy Spirit came in power, souls were saved, and backsliders reclaimed. Had seventeen accessions. At Blocker's Chapel Rev. D. C. Barr did some able preaching, great good was done, nine accessions, and others to follow. A large saw-mill plant has been established this year in the bounds of my work, which, I think, is the beginning of a new era for the Valley circuit. The leading stockholders are Methodist. We have had regular appointments with them since March, and will hold a meeting there the first week in October. They are anxious for a church, and a movement is on foot to build immediately. Some of the means have already been secured. We hope to have the company donate the land and lumber, and to erect the building by Conference. The country (1½ miles this side the Arkansas line) is thickly settled and a good farming country, and this will be a permanent point. With this assistance we hope to make the Valley circuit the banner circuit in the Arcadia district. The goodness of our God has been unbounded. Praise his holy name! Pray for us."

Rev. E. F. Edgar, Barlow circuit, Sept. 10, 1897: "This is a good country and a good people. This charge ought to be the best country charge in our Conference. We are striving to make it such. Some advancement has been made, but much remains to be accomplished. We have just closed our round of protracted meetings, by which there was much good done. There were many conversions, reclamations, reconciliations, and about twenty accessions to the church. There has been a great uplift in Christian experience and life. The work done was deep, and we trust will abide forever. We were assisted in two of our meetings by Rev. J. T. Abney, at Lebanon, and Rev. C. McDonald, at Rehoboth. These brethren did us faithful and efficient service. Their preaching was of the right type and of a high order. They greatly endeared themselves to us all. Our meetings at Brandywine and Blue Hill were held by the pastor. The meeting at Brandywine was suddenly brought to a close on the third day by continuous rains. However, it was a very profitable meeting to many. We had only two days' service at Blue Hill, but great good was done. There were about thirty penitent seekers after salvation at the altar, and six additions to the church. Special mention of the meeting at Rehoboth should be made which was a great success. The church was almost dead, not only because of negligence and unfaithfulness, and general evils, but especially on account of enmities, ill will, feuds, etc., which prevailed to an alarming degree. All were reconciled, and peace reigns. The oldest citizens say, 'It is the best meeting ever held here.' Oh, that the work may continue and abide! The ADVOCATE was not forgotten, and hope soon to send a long list of subscribers. This report would be unfaithful if closed without making a kindly mention of the presence and faithful service rendered by Rev. George Morrison in prayer and song services. Bro. Morrison will surely wear a glorious crown in the future world. We are profoundly grateful to all for assistance rendered."

Nervous

People wonder why their nerves are so weak; why they get tired so easily; why they do not sleep naturally; why they have frequent headaches, indigestion and Nervous Dyspepsia. The explanation is simple. It is found in that impure blood feeding the nerves on refuse instead of the elements of strength and vigor. Hood's Sarsaparilla feeds the nerves pure, rich blood; gives natural sleep, good digestion, is the true remedy for all nervous troubles.

The grace of God is both spur and bridle to the tongue of man; grace, like a spur, provokes to speak for God and for the good of others; and grace, like a bridle, stops us from speaking what may grieve the Spirit of God, and justly offend others.—Burkitt.

Set out in the very morning of your lives with a frank and manly determination to look simply for what is right and true in all things. . . . This is the only way to know God's will and do it. You may not find it at once, but you have set your face in the true direction to find it.—J. J. Taylor.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for Diarrhœa. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

THE WEDDING RING.

Death lurks in every place in this "vale of tears." There is no happiness, no joy, no gaiety, no success, no sorrow and no failure that may not secrete him. Marriage is a favorite hiding-place for death, where women are concerned, is in the very happiness and rapture of wifehood and the sacred joy of motherhood. But too frequently there is death in the embrace of love, and the first touch of baby-fingers is succeded by the chilly grasp of the grim destroyer.

If wives and mothers would only resort to the right remedy when they suffer from weakness and disease of the delicate and important feminine organs that are baby's threshold to life, there would be fewer husbands bereft, and fewer homes saddened by an infant's loss. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes the feminine organs strong, healthy and vigorous. It fits for wifehood and motherhood. It banishes the maladies of the period of suspense, and makes baby's entry to the world easy and comparatively painless. An honest druggist will not try to induce a customer to take an inferior substitute for this great remedy, for the sake of extra profit.

"Mrs. Seagle was a great sufferer from a combination of female diseases, a few years ago, from which she has been entirely cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription," writes Geo. A. Seagle, Esq., of Box 130, Wytheville, Va. "She is thoroughly convinced that there is no medicine on earth equal to the 'Favorite Prescription,' and she doesn't hesitate to say so. She has recommended it to her lady friends, and in all cases, where it has been given a fair trial, it has given entire satisfaction."

In cases of constipation and torpid liver, no remedy is equal to Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They regulate and invigorate the stomach, liver and bowels. They never fail. One little "Pellet" is a gentle laxative and two a mild cathartic. They never gripe. An honest dealer will not urge a substitute upon you.

The finest watch in the world is absolutely worthless if it has no hands. Make an application of this to Christians, especially to yourself.

In business and in society everybody wants to be in the front rank; but in the service of God all except a very few desire to be in the rear rank.

The happiest man is not the richest man, nor is he the smartest or most noted man. He is the happiest man who lives the best and uses for God's glory all that he has.—Standard.

It is as easy to magnify a disappointment as it is to minify a blessing. But let us not forget that our disappointments, after all, may be our blessings. God does not engage to satisfy our wants, but he will supply our needs.—Standard.

While some books, like steps, are left behind us by the very help which they yield us, and serve only our childhood or early life, some others go with us, and in mute fidelity, to the end of life, a recreation for fatigue, an instruction for our sober hours and solace for our sickness and sorrow. Except the great outdoors, nothing that has so much life of its own gives so much life to us.—H. W. Beecher.

Religion is for use and service. In it are justice, brotherly kindness and truth. The knowledge of God's presence in the every-day life is the need of the hour; a religion that sanctifies the store and the office, a religion that runs into the business of Monday and Tuesday, making you as careful about your credits and debits as you are on Sunday about your praises and prayers. The trend of religious thought to-day is in the right direction.—Harcourt.

The Providence of God.

The doctrine of God's providential care is one of the most comforting truths of our holy religion, and is worthy of our constant remembrance. The belief that the great Creator and Father of all exercises watchfulness and control over the works of his hands, and that he orders all things for the good of those who serve him, is calculated to inspire feelings of the deepest reverence and gratitude.

The Pagan view of divine providence falls immeasurably below that of the Bible. The gods of the Greeks and Romans were conceived of as manifesting little concern in the affairs of men, changing the course of events and exercising their power only in behalf of nations and favorite heroes. The belief that one supreme God constantly superintends all things, and that he notes the smallest events and objects, and takes concern for the welfare of every one of his creatures, was far beyond the conception of even the most enlightened Pagans. The gods of the heathen are often pictured as outwitting each other and as engaging in contests of strength and skill merely for their own pleasure and advantage. While some notion of divine providence has always prevailed among men, wherever it has not been corrected and enlarged by Christianity, it has been at best but a vague and imperfect one, sadly lacking in power to inspire patience and hopeful trust. The Scripture doctrine is that God not only takes cognizance of great objects and events, but that nothing is so small or insignificant as to escape his knowledge or attention. The Master said as an encouragement to our faith: "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father. Fear ye not therefore; ye are of more value than many sparrows."

We are all more or less prone to make God's providence too general. We admit that the Lord is omniscient, and that in a general sense all things are under his control, but many of us fail to realize that he is concerned for us as individuals, and that nothing can befall us save through his permission. Most of men, Christians as well as others, are far too ready to ascribe events to blind chance or luck, as the saying is.

It by no means lowers our conception of the dignity of God to believe that his love and care extend to small things, to the trivialities of life. Were this not the case, his love and wisdom could not be infinite, nor could we have reason to hope in his mercy. Why should it seem incredible that the Lord "who made the heavens and the earth and all things that are therein," should be observant of and concerned for the smallest thing that he has created? Admitting that the Creator has knowledge of all things, shall we limit his power by affirming that he acts only in great matters? Are not all things possible with him?

The universe is not a great machine constructed by the Creator and set agoing like a locomotive without an engineer to regulate its actions and keep it in order. This may accord with the Pagan idea of the cosmos, but it does not accord with the teachings of the Bible; for the Word of God not only declares that "by him were all things created," but that "he upholdeth all things," and that "by him all things consist." Since God fashioned the tiniest objects in creation, as well as the greatest and grandest; since the feeblest insect, the smallest herb, the most diminutive animalcule—all are his handiwork; since he gave to every creature life and individuality; since "without him was not anything made that was made," is it to be thought incredible, or even strange, that every one of these, small as well as great, should be an object of his loving care?

He who spoke worlds into being surely has knowledge of and interest in everything that exists. According to the Scriptures, nothing that concerns the welfare of any of his creatures, though it be but a sparrow, is to him a matter of unconcern. How profoundly encouraging the truth that man, more than all other creatures, is perpetually guarded and preserved by divine power! The Apostle Paul, meditating upon the measureless depths of divine love displayed in the plan of redemption, triumphantly exclaims: "If God spared not his own Son, but delivered him up to die for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" How glorious the truth that every individual of the race has a share in God's mercy and providence!

The Bible abounds with illustrations of God's providence manifested in behalf of those who revered his name. Who has not derived comfort from the story of Joseph, the miraculous preservation of Moses, the deliverance of Daniel and the three Hebrew children, and many other like instances that might be mentioned?

Many imagine that though such protection was granted, and such signal displays of providence were made in Bible times, this is not the case now, as if, forsooth, God were asleep, or as if he no longer cared for his children. Christian biography is full of examples of divine protection and guidance, many of them truly marvelous. Thousands of times has it been verified in the lives of Christians, that "the angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him and delivereth them."

It is related that one evening John Knox, the great Scotch preacher and reformer, because of feelings he could not explain, refused to take his accustomed seat at table, nor would he allow any one else to do so. Suddenly while all were sitting at meat, a shot was fired through the window, just back of the vacant chair, the occupant of which, had there been one, would have been instantly killed. Knox always believed that it was the providence of God that saved his life. Many similar instances equally wonderful might be presented from the pages of history.

The Lord not only protects his servants in many ways from dangers, seen and unseen, but they are ever under his guidance, so that all things are made to contribute to their good. John Wesley said: "By the grace of God I never fret; I repine at nothing. I am discontented with nothing. I see God sitting upon his throne and ruling all things well." A presiding elder in the North India Conference, some months ago, wrote these memorable words: "I have found I could not be consecrated to God in all things, unless I took every event as coming from his hand. I now say every day, This, whatever happens, is the will of God concerning me." What a great gain it would be if we could always feel that we are in God's hands, and that he overrules all things for our good.

Trust in God's providence, however, should not lead us to inactivity or slothfulness, for the Lord will not remove difficulties and evils within our ability to overcome. Nor should we presume that God will protect and defend us when we are not in the pathway of duty. Only to those who love God is it said that all things shall work together for their good.

That the righteous are often afflicted and suffer many evils is no reason for doubting God's providence. If our prayers were always answered just as we expect, we would never undergo any misfortune or sorrow, and thus a valuable means of discipline would be lost, nor would anybody ever die. On the other hand, to suppose that because people are afflicted and distressed, God has forsaken them, is to make the mistake of Job's three friends and of certain self-righteous persons who told our Savior of the Galileans whose blood Pilate had mingled with their sacrifices. These last the Master rebuked, saying: "Suppose ye that these Galileans were sinners above all the Galileans because they suffered such things? I tell you, Nay; but except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish."

Yellow Fever.

During the last week the yellow fever has been on the increase. At Biloxi the total number of cases up to Wednesday was 71: deaths, 3. Total cases at Edwards, 67; deaths, 2; at Mobile, total cases 32; deaths, 5. The disease still exists at Ocean Springs and Scranton, but is making slow progress. Cases are reported at Cairo. In this city the number of new cases since our last issue is 52, making a total of 74 to date. There have been 6 deaths. At least 4 of these fatal cases should be left out of the account in estimating the virulence of the disease. The first death (which we reported two weeks ago) was that of a patient who, though not treated for yellow fever, recovered so as to be on his feet. He went to a restaurant and gulped down about a dollar's worth of cakes, confections, ice cream, etc. Of course, the next item on the programme was a funeral. Another case was that of a person who had been down with malarial fever for several weeks before taking the yellow fever. In 2 other cases no physician was called in until it was too late. Leaving these 4 cases out of the account we have 2 deaths out of 70—a death rate of less than 3 per cent. This would be a marvelously low death rate for any kind of fever in the most salubrious rural region. From letters received and from what we see in the daily papers we judge that the general public outside the city has much magnified the perils of residing in the Crescent City at this time. We have gone every day from our residence to our office and back, a distance of nearly two miles, using first one and then another of four different car lines that are almost equally convenient to us, and have gone anywhere and everywhere that we had any business. During the three Sabbaths since the fever began we have preached (or tried) every Sunday at points extending from near Canal street to Peters avenue, four miles above Canal. Yet in all our journeys to and fro we have not yet caught a glimpse of a flag flying in front of a residence, betokening the presence of yellow fever, or even suspicious fever. The fever is not epidemic here, and the Board of Health and the medical fraternity are doing all in their power to prevent its becoming so. The system of quarantine and disinfection in use here is working well, and we hope and believe that the scourge will be kept within bounds.

In view of the multitude of people that Ocean Springs poured into our city after the fever had broken out there, the only wonder is that the number of cases is not ten fold greater than it is.

Preachers and Questions of the Day.

Many will advise young preachers to identify themselves with questions of social ednoation and progress. There are many men in the ministry of Christ who are never heard of as preachers of the gospel. We hear of them as politicians, debaters, statesmen, liberals, tories and agitators; but, as for their preaching, we seldom hear a word about it! This is, to say the least of it, remarkable, and I can not but regard it as painfully instructive.

Are ministers, then, not to take any interest in the questions of the day, and in the subjects and problems which are interesting and vexing the common mind? I am far from answering in the negative. I am as deeply interested in social questions as most of my brethren, but I would approach their consideration and solution from a different point than that which they have selected. I believe it is possible to preach upon capital and labor without naming either of them.

We are not made to be dividers and judges as to social questions, but to reveal a kingdom which will bring all contention and confusion to final reconciliation. We must not be tempted to consider and treat symptoms without first deeply probing the seat of the disease. When a man is suffering from heart affection, it will do him small good to attend to the condition of his toilet. We must read and understand the heart itself, if we would do any substantial and permanent good to the patient. I am old fashioned enough to believe that if the gospel of the grace of God as shown in the life and teachings of Jesus Christ will not settle all questions of temperance, peace, war and the like, no invention of amateur reformers will ever touch the great necessity. The preacher has no interest in classes regarded strictly as such; his interest is in man, and if he be faithful to that charge, he will touch every class as the sunlight touches the face of the whole earth.—Joseph Parker, in Homiletic Review.

Ministers Need Prayers, Not Criticism.

The Holy Spirit brings liberty, for "where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty." Many Christian people wonder why it is that their minister hasn't more power, and why he doesn't do more. He may be well trained for his post and eminently fitted for the building up of God's people, but he hasn't perfect liberty in his service either in the community or in the pulpit. Now, the trouble may be in the pulpit, but it has been my experience that in almost all the cases you need not go beyond the church vestibule to find the cause of the minister's bondage. Listen to the criticisms of the average congregation as it leaves a church. Before it reaches the sidewalk the message and the messenger have often been disposed of, and topics of greater interest occupy the conversation. The Holy Spirit will not work in an atmosphere of criticism.

Supposing that on the day of Pentecost the apostles had been criticising Peter, do you think the Holy Spirit would have worked so miraculously? Imagine John whispering to James, "It doesn't seem to me that Peter is quite up to himself this morning," and James replying: "I am disappointed myself. This is a representative audience, and he lacks polish and finish." Suppose Andrew had turned to Matthew and said: "Really that is too bad for Peter to be so harsh on the Pharisees and rulers. There are so many other things upon which we can agree I do wish he would avoid all controverted subjects." Do you think that if that had been the attitude of the apostles there would have been any conversions? I believe that had we been present at that notable meeting we would have heard the prayers of many of the disciples on behalf of Peter at that moment, and although the words were plain and simple they were borne home to the conviction of thousands because the Holy Spirit could work freely. What the minister needs, my friends, is your prayers, your sympathy, your confidence, and not your criticism.—D. L. Moody, in Ladies' Home Journal.

Two Kinds of Methodists.

We have a great variety of Methodists in our church. They are of all classes, conditions and ages. It would be impossible to classify them. But there are two kinds conspicuously known throughout the church:

First, Mission Methodists. They are splendid folks. "They believe in the conversion of the world." They pray about it at their family altars. Their names are found in the list of contributors for this cause. They sympathize with the Lord Jesus in this work. Usually these Mission Methodists attend the means of grace. They pay the pastor, and are diligent in all lines of church work. They read our church papers, and are posted in all the aggressive movements of the Lord's cause. We earnestly pray that this class of Methodists may be increased many times.

Second, Omission Methodists. There is only one letter to distinguish this class from the former; but that letter makes a great difference. It is an interjection, an exclamation of surprise! And well it may be used in such a relation. An "Omission Methodist!" We have a few everywhere. Possibly some might be discovered in this immediate region. They omit many of the precious duties and privileges of the church. They are of the number who cry out, "We have heathen enough at home," when you ask them for money to carry out the Lord's last command. Their "omission" is seen when the subscription for church expenses is presented. This quality of "omission" is conspicuous in all their relations to the church. Usually they are hospital sort of Christians—needing very much nursing and care. If proper attention is not paid, they become sulky, and balk altogether. These "Omission Methodists" are hard to manage. May their number grow beautifully less! To which class do you belong?—Selected.

A Protest.

In the name of sincerity and honesty of interpretation, I wish to enter my protest against such teaching as the above. Sin and sickness are different in their genesis, development and remedy, and are so differently treated under the gospel.

"Laziness, lying, indifference and levity," are sins for which the Holy Ghost offers no cure save upon condition of repentance, renunciation and accordant faith. Now, does the author of the above extract mean to say that we are to be healed of "cancers, tumors, consumption, lameness," by the same process of repentance, renunciation and faith? Such would seem to be his teaching, and such confounding of saving faith and the faith of miraculous healing of the body is misleading and perverting the Scripture. One may have healing gifts and miracle-working faith, and not know Jesus by saving faith at all. See Matt. vii, 22, 23: "Many shall say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name have cast out devils, and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity." When such teaching as this is put forth under the banner of Bible holiness, I must protest, and while perfect love "suffers long and is kind," it is not blind to perversion of the blessed truth of God's Word.—Christian Standard.

The sermonic critic is usually one-sided. He is so full of the demand as to overlook the merits of the minister's discourse. His sense is acute for the faults and blemishes that he has no taste left for the good things of the spiritual dish served for his nourishment and enrichment. He would find his work more acceptable, well balanced and profitable if he employed more judgment in his criticism. Where it is given in a kind and appreciative spirit, and is made by due discrimination, it is not without its practical uses.—Presbyter[illegible]

Topic for September.

The Christ of St. Paul.

Sept. 26.—His Betrayal, Crucifixion, and Resurrection.

(I. Cor. xi, 23; i, 23; ii, 2 and 8; Gal. ii, 20; iii, 1; I. Cor. xv, 20.)

1. Historical.—At night in the Garden of Gethsemane on the Mount of Olives was enacted the first part of the world's tragedy. Christ had been praying alone in the darkness, when Judas came, and with him a great multitnde with swords and staves. Having prearranged the sign by which he would point out Jesns, Judas approached him, saying, "Hail, Master!" and kissed him. Then they took Jesns and led him to Caiaphas, where he was adjndged "guilty of death;" and when the morning was come, was sent with the bonnd hands of a criminal before Pilate, who, after trying vainly to shirk the responsibility of jndgment, turned him over into the hands of the Jews. After putting a purple robe on him and a crown of thorns on his head, mocking him, spitting npon him, and smiting him with their hands, they led him forth amid the hooting, shonting rabble of Jerusalem unto Golgotha, where they crncified him between two thieves. After terrible suffering he died about three o'clock, and "when the even was come" Joseph of Arimathea took the body and laid it in his own new tomb and rolled a great stone to the door of the sepulchre. They sealed this stone and set a watch to keep the disciples from stealing the body, but the third day he broke the bonds of death and rose again and appeared unto many people dnring the forty days before his ascension.

2. No matter what motive may be assigned to Judas in his betrayal of Christ it was an execrable deed. Deceit, hypocrisy, falsity are ineradicable elements of the act. The friendly kiss of salntation was a lie and covered the trne motive. God knows no excuse for a lie. We are not to do evil that good may come. This spirit of Judas is alive to day. Let it be condemned!

3. (a) "We preach Christ crncified, unto the Jews a stumbling-block." The world can not understand it today. Some one has said "it is a fact without a philosophy." Yet Christ himself points to analogous facts in nature—"Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone." All life is founded upon death—spiritual as well as physical. We are inconsistent when we accept physical life as a gift from physical death and refuse to accept spiritnal life from the hands of the crucified Christ. (b) The Christian is dead unto sin and alive unto Christ. He lives spiritually by faith in the Son of God. This life is not dependent upon a physical environment. The body dies and leaves it untouched. It bridges the chasm of death. It is the life of heaven on earth. We know we shall live beyond the grave because we live to-day a life that is outside the province of disease and death. Blessed thought!

4. The resurrection is a seal to all that Christ said and did—a divine credential. It is the first fruits and prophecy of the general resurrection. Take hold of Christ, for he says, "I am the resurrection and the life."

Epworth College.

On account of the quarantine regulations the opening of Epworth College, at Holly Springs, has been postponed nntil the excitement passes away. Due notice will be given. J. W. Hornoll, Pres.

Opening of East Mississippi Female College Postponed.

Owing to the rigid quarantine established against trains coming from West and Sonth to Meridian, Pres. Beeson has decided to postpone the opening of the College and Conservatory of Music to a later date, which will be announced in due time. This will not interfere with the length of the session, but the college will continne its session longer in June. This will give students from the Sonth and West an equal showing with other students. It will also give more time for the completion of the new three story brick extension which, we learn, is very much needed. We hear that Pres. Beeson has already engaged for more students than he had last year. He expects to fill the new addition as well as the old. He tells us that his new waterworks have been completed, and he has as fine, pure water as any in the land, coming from a well 314 feet deep, pumping it out fresh every day. It gives an abnndant snpply for hot and cold baths, lanndry, sewer and all other purposes. This is certainly a fine thing for the college. Pure water in abundance is a necessity in a college.

Board at Millsaps College.

Mrs. Emma Mayes Cook, who for several years has had charge of one of the boarding halls at Millsaps College, is still at the Williams Hall, where she will be pleased to furnish board and lodging on very moderate terms. Those who board with her will find large, well furnished rooms, good fare, and home-like snrroundings.

Edward McGehee College of Woodville, Miss.

The Edward McGehee College of Woodville, Miss., opened Wednesday, Sept. 1, with a fair attendance of day and boarding students, which has been increasing until the enrollment equals that of any former session at this period of the work, while the boarding department within the college promises to equal that of any former year, if not exceed it. On Friday night a teacher's recital was given, which was greatly enjoyed by all. The Sunday following the opening sermon was to have been preached by Bro. R. D. Norsworthy, of Jackson, Miss; but greatly to the disappointment of all, the quarantine regulations prevented his reaching us.

The college building has been practically refurnished. Neat oak bed-room suits were purchased last year; but at the beginning of this session each room was refitted with new springs, new mattresses, new tin sets, etc. Everything has been done to make the college comfortable and home-like. The beautiful grove has been cleared of its rubbish, and croquet sets purchased for the recreation of the boarders.

As to the teachers and the curriculum. The latter has been completely revised, while the former are specialists. Every teacher in the faculty spent the Summer under special instructors preparing for the work of the session. Much to the gratification of the friends of the institution, a Kindergarten Department has been added, fitted out with appliances for thorough and complete work in this, now very important, branch of our educational system.

In short, this college is thoroughly prepared to meet all the demands made upon it for college work. The standard of scholarship has been raised, and the principal is determined to make a diploma from Edward McGehee College compare with that from any institution of its kind in the State; and, moreover, to send out her girls imbued with religious principles. I have no healthier recommending this institution to the friends of Christian education.

Another Thousand Dollar Letter.

Mr. Editor: Since sending you the letter of Bro. Hoagland, which informed you that he had given $1,000 towards the erection of the Haygood Memorial Hall—provided our church raised $24,000 more—I have received, in cash and subscriptions, $1,653.14.

I thank God and take courage, and believe that our church will not let this day of grace go by without suitably providing for every immediate need of Paine Institute. I am acquainted, of course, with the constant calls made upon our pastors, and upon our church, but I trust that we will rally to this cause, which is connectional, and that when the General Conference convenes we shall be able to report the Haygood Memorial Hall finished and dedicated.

The terms of the subscription (cash, or payable at subscriber's pleasure between now and May 1, 1898) will give an opportunity to many to contribute. Contributions may be handed or sent to any of our editors, or pastors, who will cheerfully act as agents for me. If there are parties who are unable to give anything themselves, but who desire to help this enterprise, I will let them know how they may do so, if they will send me their names.

Let every man and woman who loves the poor and needy, and who, with Jesus Christ, wishes to preach the gospel to them, send me a contribution, whether small, or great, and may the blessing of God accompany each such subscription.

R. J. Bigham.

A Third Thousand Dollar Letter.

The following letter is from a man who has constanly exhibited love for his church and for our Lord Jesus Christ. He deserves, and will receive, the grateful appreciation of his brethren, and will doubtless have added thereto the comfort of a good conscience. I hope his example will lead others to contribute according to their means:

St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 1, 1897.

Dear Bro. Bigham: Yours of twenty-seventh of August, together with its inclosures, is just read. I will join Bro. Geo. T. Hoagland on the same conditions and amount, viz., $1,000 when the full amount is secured. Yours truly,

Sam'l. Cupples.

Bishop Holsey raised at the Missouri Annual Conference, in cash and subscriptions, $211, which added (together with Bro. Cupples' $1,000) to $7,372.43 (amount previously reported) makes $8,583.40 received to date on the $24,000 which must be raised in order to secure the $1,000 of Bro. Hoagland.

R. J. Bigham.

Perfection in Cake-Making.

Housekeepers frequently wonder why it is that they can not make biscuit and cake that are light and palatable, and that taste as delicious as the biscuit and cake made by their mothers and grandmothers, the delightful memory of which even to this day creates a sensation of pleasure to the palate. The trouble arises from the highly adulterated state of the materials they have to work with, particularly the cream of tartar and soda used to raise or leaven the food. Cream of tartar and soda that are now procurable for domestic purposes contain large quantities of lime, earth, alum and other adulterants, frequently from five to twenty five per cent., and consequently vary so much in strength that no person can tell the exact quantity to use, or properly combine them, to insure perfect results. From using too much or too little, or because of the adulterants in them, bitter, salt, yellow, or heavy biscuits or cakes are frequently made. These adulterants are also injurious to health.

All this trouble may be avoided by the use of the popular Royal Baking Powder. Where this preparation is employed in the place of cream of tartar and soda, its perfect leavening power always insures light, flaky, digestible biscuit, cakes and pastry, that are perfectly wholesome and free from the impurities invariably present when the old raising preparations are employed.

The Royal Baking Powder, we are informed by the most reliable scientists, is perfectly pure, being made from highly refined ingredients, carefully tested, and so exactly proportioned and combined that it never fails to produce the best and uniform results. An additional advantage in its employment comes from the fact that bread or other food made with it may be eaten while hot without fear of indigestion or any unpleasant results, while being equally sweet, moist, and grateful to the palate when cold.

Just a Word or Two.

Since my last items Bro. T. B. Holloman and Dr. I. W. Cooper have sent me names, etc; but the help comes too late. The plan which was being developed is definitely abandoned.

Dr. Cooper writes me that Moss Point will meet the missionary assessment on that charge and contribute $300 on the debt. Well done!

Dr. Lambuth writes me that the subscription list of the Methodist Review of Missions has been considerably reduced so far as our Conference is concerned. Two, three, four and five years' arrearages on the part of subscribers was found to be too expensive to the publishers of the Review of Missions. About twenty-five names have been dropped from the list, already too short. Brethren, let's pay up and renew our subscriptions. There is no better missionary publication to be had anywhere. It ought to be in the hands of every traveling and local preacher and of every intelligent layman. T. L. Mellen,

Millsaps College.

We have been obliged to postpone the opening of our college session on account of the quarantine regulations now in force throughout the State. As Jackson is free from sickness of every kind, and the general sanitary condition of the town is so fine at this time, we can open as soon as the quarantine restrictions are removed. I suggest, therefore, that all students who contemplate coming this session shall be ready to come promptly when we announce the day of opening. This will be done, I hope, soon.

A Fine Violinist for E. M. F. College Conservatory, Meridian, Miss.

President Beeson tells us he has just closed a contract with Prof. Albert de Chaudron, a master of the violin and other stringed instruments, to teach in his Conservatory next session. Prof. Chandron is a native of France, is of a noble family, has been to this country for several years, having taught in Northern Conservatories. President Beeson has induced him to come South and take charge of this department of the Conservatory. He is a very fine teacher of mandolin as well as violin. He is a brilliant performer on the violin, always taking the audience by storm. Northern Conservatories, where he taught, say he is a great musician, hard to excel. This is another master stroke for our Meridian Conservatory. It is a fine thing to have such an array of talent in Mississippi. We predict great things for this Conservatory.—Meridian Daily Post.

Love thy mother, little one!
Kiss and clasp her neck again—
Hereafter she may have a son
Will kiss and clasp her neck in vain.
Love thy mother, little one.

Gaze upon her living eyes,
And mirror back her love to thee—
Hereafter thou may'st shudder sighs
To meet them when they can not see.
Gaze upon her loving eyes.

Press her lips the while they glow
With love that they have often told—
Hereafter thou may'st press in woe,
And kiss them till thine own are cold.
Press her lips the while they glow!

Oh! revere her raven hair!
Although it be not silvery gray;
To early Death, led on by Care,
May snatch save one dear lock away.
Oh! revere her raven hair!

Pray for her at eve and morn
That Heaven may long the stroke defer—
For thou may'st the hour forlorn
When thou will ask to die with her.
Pray for her at eve and morn!

Husbands and Wives.

It lies very much with the wives, Rev. F. B. Meyer says, to make it easy for their husbands to show them tenderness. A woman makes a profound mistake who frets and pouts and puts herself into a bad temper that she may be petted into a good one. It is a bad policy. A man will be tempted to coax her back once or twice, but he loses his respect for her each time. It really alienates him in his deepest nature, and brings division between them. She is no longer his equal, one with him in spirit, heart and life, but his toy and plaything. After a while he will live in perpetual fear that one of these fits of caprice is coming on, he will hide anything likely to induce them; and so begins a course of insincerity which is the grave of love.

No, when a woman perceives the expression of tenderness waning, let her keep her secret. Like Enid, she must possess herself in patience. Never altering her own behavior, never less, but more sensitive to every spoken and unspoken wish; light, gentle, sympathetic, patient; expressing her tenderness by those little arts that women learn without going to school, and the love will emerge from its Winter, and sow the soil again with flowerets.

But let men be more thoughtful and tender. When they feel most put out and irritated, either with or without cause, it would be well to force themselves to bridge the yawning chasm by a caress. Kiss and be friends, they used to say, when we were children. Let us be careful to maintain the outer forms, and the inner spirit will not be far away. We should not be less courteous to our wives than to our friends.

A wife's feelings are peculiarly susceptible. To leave the house for our daily work, or to return to it after hours of absence, without some recognition, is a mistake, and worse. Let us not forget the fret and worry, the perpetual burden of the children at home, the scheming and planning, the daily provision of dinner, the letting out of frocks for growing children, the darning and patching of boys' clothes, the tidying, and cleaning, and washing; and if there are servants, the even greater anxiety involved in managing these. No woman would do for pay what thousands are doing for love. They ask no other wage than tenderness, which is the expression of a true and honest affection. And a woman can tell in an instant if it is that, or a mere subterfuge for fidelity.—The Watchman.

The Secret of Successful Entertaining.

"I do all I know how to do when I see that my table is properly appointed, and my menu correct," I heard a woman say this morning. But there was one among her listeners who could tell her how dull her dinners and evenings were. No one is happy with a hostess who conveys an impression of having done her duty, even all her duty, to the fullest. One likes it no more in hospitality than one does in love. A sense of having done a duty dams many a spring at its source, and nothing refreshing to soul or body can ever flow out afterward.

The woman who apologizes for the little she has must always be a failure when she entertains. Yet her non-success is no greater than that of her sister who is so overwhelmed by her grandeur as never to be able to equal her conditions. There are hostesses in great houses who seem to be no more a part of their surroundings than frightened mice who sit in corners.

The secret, in fact, of success in entertaining is as subtle and elusive as the secret of charm. Yet few things in life, unless it be the way to bring up children, tempt the world into laying down so many laws on the subject, or into framing so many precepts. The secret, however, must always be elusive, because it lies in the power of personality—the personality of host and hostess; and by personality I mean the expression which each individual nature has consciously or unconsciously framed for itself. And in this expression lie tact and taste, generous impulse, kindly feeling, love of others, subordination of self, readiness to give and willingness to receive, power of adaptability, desire for harmony. And these tests of success hold good whether entertaining involves lavish display, in which the unaccustomed are apt to be bewildered, or includes only hospitality extended to those who would otherwise be without shelter.—Harper's Bazaar.

The Ins and Outs of It.

If you get best wear out of a coat, best work must have gone into it. You can't get good bread out of poor flour.

Moral: You can't get the best out of anything, unless the best is in it; and the best has to be put in before it can be taken out. Now, we have a rule to test those sarsaparillas with a big "best" on the bottle. "Tell us what's put in you and we'll decide for ourselves about the best." That's fair. But these modest sarsaparillas say:—"Oh! we can't tell. It's a secret. Have faith in the label." . . . Stop! There's one exception; one sarsaparilla that has no secret to hide. It's Ayer's. If you want to know what goes into Ayer's Sarsaparilla, ask your doctor to write for the formula. Then you can satisfy yourself that you get the best of the sarsaparilla argument when you get Ayer's.

It kills doubts but cures doubters.

Christian Old Age.

Old age ought to be the most beautiful period of a good life. Yet not always is it so. There are elements in the experience of old age which make it hard to keep the inner life in a state of renewal. The bodily powers are decaying. The senses are growing dull. It is lonely. There is in memory a record of empty cribs and vacant chairs, of sacred mounds in the cemetery. The work of life has dropped from the hands. It is not easy to keep the joy living in the heart in such experiences. Yet that is the problem of true Christian living. While the outward man decays, the inward man should be renewed day by day. This is possible, too, as many Christian old people have proved. Keeping near the heart of Christ is again, as always, the secret. Faith gives a new meaning to life. It is seen no more in its relation to earth and what is gone, but in its relation to immortality and what is to come. The Christian old man's best days are not behind him, but always before him. He is walking, not toward the end, but toward the beginning.—Northwestern.

The Rise of a Boy.

This boy goes to business, and at his business begins by simply doing the things he is told to do, and doing them in a common and ordinary way. If he stops here, he remains, all his life long, a drudge. But if he begins to see that business has a significance; that his life is not merely sweeping the store, not merely writing letters, not merely selling goods; if he begins to see the higher life involved in business; if he begins to see that business is a greater instrument of beneficence than what we call beneficence; that trade is clothing thousands of men where charity clothes ten; that agricultural and milling industries are feeding thousands of men where charity feeds ten; if he begins to see how the whole history of the world is linked together, and is God's way of building up humanity and serving humanity—as he gets this large view and enters into it, life is enriched and becomes itself the minister whereby love is enlarged and conscience is strengthened, the school wherein he is educated out of the lower into the higher. He has now risen, or is rising, from that which is mortal into that which is immortal and eternal.—Dr. Lyman Abbott.

Get Control of Your Child.

You hear a great deal said about controlling children and bringing them up in the right way, but these teachers rarely remind you where to begin. There is such a thing as crushing the spirit by brute force. This is not training. Make very few points with a little child; steer round the shoals. But the point made, it must be carried. Do not let the baby become a tyrant. Smile and pet and reward him when he is good; but when you are displeased with him, let him see it. When he is naughty, punish him. Hold his hands when he is very young; afterward tie both them and him, if need be. The most dutiful daughter I recall to mind is one who was tied a prisoner to the bed-post when she was unruly. I am no advocate of whipping after four years old. Get the mastery before that age, else you may never have it. The tendency of the period is to throw off parental authority. Do not cut your own loving bonds with the blunt edge of a too dormant sense of duty to the babe at your breast.—Ladies' Home Companion.

Christianity wants nothing so much in the world as sunny people, and the old are hungrier for love than for bread, and the oil of joy is very cheap, and if you can help the poor on with a garment of praise, it will be better for them than blankets.—Professor Drummond.

know us, and have been waiting two, ten, or twenty centuries for us—some of them—and are eager to give us a sign and unbosom themselves, it is the law of their limbo that they must not speak until spoken to; and as the enchanter has dressed them, like battalions of infantry, in coat and jacket of one cut, by the thousand and ten thousand, your chance of hitting on the right one is to be computed by the arithmetical rule of Permutation and Combination—not a choice of three caskets, but one of half a million caskets all alike. But it happens, in our experience, that in this lottery there are at least fifty or a hundred blanks to a prize. It seems, then, as if some charitable soul, after losing a great deal of time among the false books, and alighting upon a few true ones which make him happy and wise, would do a right act in naming those which have been bridges or ships to carry him safely over dark morasses and barren oceans, into the heart of sacred cities, into palaces and temples.—Emerson.

Read no mean books. The scholar knows that the famed books contain, first and last, the best thoughts and facts. Now and then, by rarest luck, in some foolish Grub street is the gem we want. But in the best circles is the best information.—Emerson.

Advantage of Sleep.

In reply to the question, Is it wise for a man to deny himself and get along with a few hours' sleep a day, to do more work? Tesla, the great electrician, is said to have replied: "That is a great mistake, I am convinced. A man has just so many hours to be awake, and the fewer of these he uses up each day, the more days they will last—that is, the longer he will live. I believe that a man might live two hundred years if he would sleep most of the time. That is why negroes often live to advanced old age, because they sleep so much. It is said that Gladstone sleeps seventeen hours every day; that is why his faculties are still unimpaired in spite of his great age. The proper way to economize life is to sleep every moment that is not necessary or desirable that you should be awake."

The use of beer is found to produce a species of degeneration of all the organism, profound and deceptive. Fatty deposits, diminished circulation, condition of congestion, perversion of functional activities, local inflammation of both the liver and the kidneys are constantly present.

Intellectual stupor, amounting almost to paralysis, arrests the reason, changing all the higher faculties into mere animalism, sensual, sluggish, varied only with the paroxysms of anger that are senseless and brutal.

In appearance, the beer-drinker may be the picture of health, but, in reality, he is most incapable of resisting disease. A slight injury, a severe cold, or shock to the body or mind, will commonly provoke acute disease, ending fatally. Compared with inebriates who use different kinds of alcohol, he is more incurable, more generally diseased.

The constant use of beer every day gives the system no recuperation, but steadily lowers the vital forces. It is our observation that beer drinking in this country produces the very lowest form of inebriety, closely allied to criminal insanity.

It is reported that recent medical statistics in Switzerland show that fifty per cent. of the young men who would otherwise be eligible for military service are rendered unfit by excessive drinking. Such facts are strong arguments against the liquor traffic.—Scientific American.

For the woman who knows that her youth is passing from her and who looks with apprehension toward approaching old age, there is cheer in the opening stanza of Rabbi Ben Ezra, that beautiful poem into which Robert Browning has put so many thoughts. If she has to look back upon a youth of neglected opportunities and wasted days, there is infinite comfort in the knowledge that the last of life may atone in a measure for the first; that it is still possible to make old age good and beautiful if she will have faith and take heart. Or, if life for her has been full of striving toward the true and the pure, there is inspiration in the thought that, even though the first part has been of account, the last may be of more; that it is possible to live more and more grandly unto the end. And for both it is a source of comfort that there is a divine plan which embraces life from beginning to end, and a divine hand which leads all the way. Here are the lines:

Grow old along with me!
The best is yet to be
The last of life for which the first was made:
Our times are in His hand
Who saith, "A whole I planned,
Youth shows but half; trust God; see all, nor be afraid!"

WALTERS—Mrs. SARAH C. WALTERS was born in Pittsburg, Pa., May 14, 1821, and was the daughter of George and Julia Bogge, and granddaughter of Rev. John Wrenshall, "one of the early pioneers of Methodism who came over from England in 1796—a local preacher who had served under John Wesley. Losing her mother when quite young, she was placed with her four sisters at Edgaworth Seminary, Braddockfield, Pa., where she remained until her education was complete. She moved to St. Louis, Mo., with her father's family in 1836."

While visiting her sister (Mrs. Jordan) in St. Charles, Mo., she married Mr. P. A. Slocklager, a merchant of that place. Under the pastorate of Rev. John Fielding, her uncle, then president of St. Charles College, she joined the Methodist Church in 1836. Her husband's health failing, he was advised to go South. Acting upon this decision, she left family and friends (though only seventeen years of age) without a murmur.

This was the beginning of that beautiful development of character which followed every step in life—submission; acknowledging always the hand that so often bore down heavily in its afflicting power as that of her kind Father—"not in anger, but in love."

Her husband dying, she returned to her father in St. Louis, Mo. After a short time she removed to Shreveport, La., to be with a much-loved sister. In 1851 she married Mr. John Walters, of Shreveport, La. Of the many children given her, but two were spared—one by each marriage. In her church relations, when strength and health were hers, she was most happy and active, her theme, "the poor," being uppermost in her thoughts—always their friend, dispensing and administering. When fortune no longer allowed liberal gifts, then the loving hand-grasp, the sympathetic tear, the "God bless you!" was received in love, as given by one who was known and trusted by "them" as their friend. If in her great desire to labor for the Master there was one chord which vibrated above others, and brought those around her under its influence, it was her unlimited love for missions. Her desire and interest in the cause never seemed to wane, but increased and grew as the years passed by. Could there be a more beautiful and appropriate offering than that placed over her by loving hands—the sheaf of grain ripe and ready for the harvest? What a benediction she has been to those who called her "mother"! Gentle in rebuke, tender in sympathy, firm and immovable in her convictions of right or wrong—surely "her children rise up and call her blessed." Of her sisters, one only remains—Miss Julia M. Bogge, of Austin, Texas.

DAUGHTER.

CARPENTER—Whereas, God, in his all-wise providence, has removed from our Sunday-school our esteemed brother and fellow laborer, Mr. Louis CARPENTER; And, whereas By the death of Mr. Carpenter we have lost a member who was regular in attendance and faithful in the performance of his Christian duties; And, whereas, By his strength of character, chivalrous nature and untiring energy he won the esteem of all who knew him; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in his death this Sunday-school has sustained an irreparable loss, society has lost a most worthy member, and the community a loyal citizen.

Resolved, That we shall miss his cheerful presence, his lively interest in our church and Sunday-school work, and the sound of his musical voice which mingled in our songs of praise every Sabbath.

Resolved, That we cherish the memory of this noble young man who was a friend to every good word and work; and while we bow in humble submission to the will of a merciful Father, knowing "he doeth all things well," yet we deeply deplore this sad dispensation of his providence, and mourn the loss of our friend and brother.

Resolved, That we recommend the upright life he lived to the young men as a model by which to pattern their lives.

Resolved, That we tender our heartfelt sympathies to the bereaved mother, heart-broken brother, and to all whose lives have been saddened by this sore affliction; and while our hearts bleed with theirs, we bid them hope with us in the promise of Him who assures us a reunion where partings are unknown.

W. B. MIDDLETON, for Com.

ARNETTE—Mrs. SARAH JANE ARNETTE, after a brief illness at her home in Port Gibson, Miss., was called, on the afternoon of Aug. 9, 1897, to sweet reward and rest in her heavenly Father's house.

Sarah Jane Brown was born in Adams county, Miss., near Washington, Jan. 20, 1849. The family soon moved to Franklin county, where most of her girlhood was spent. She was educated at the Memphis Female College, being present there during the three sessions, 1864 to 1867.

On Sept. 15, 1870, she was married to Mr. A. M. Arnette. The marriage took place near Meadville, Miss., but the young couple made their home in Jefferson county, Miss., where they lived till 1888, when they came to Port Gibson, Miss., from which place she was called to her heavenly home.

For a number of years Sister Arnette has been a member of the Methodist Church, and, though by ill-health and home-cares prevented from often attending church, none who knew her doubted the reality of her Christianity. Those who knew her well say, "She spoke no ill of anyone," which is high praise amid the temptations of this time. She was a devoted wife and a fond and indulgent mother. Her place was home. There she was loved best; there they will miss her most. We sorrow not for her, for her sorrow is at an end; but our sympathy and prayers go out for those who mourn—a husband, a married daughter, and a son just entered upon manhood. May God keep and comfort them, and bring the family safely together on the eternal shore!

H. M. ELLIS.

VARDEN—Mrs. E. A. VARDEN (nee White) was born in East Feliciana parish, Jan. 2, 1813; was married to Mr. T. J. Varden, Dec. 1, 1870, and died Aug. 8, 1897.

Sister Varden joined the M. E. Church, South, at fifteen years of age, thus giving nearly forty years of her life to God's service. She loved her church, and she will be greatly missed at the divine service, for she was always there unless providentially hindered.

She was the mother of three children. One preceded her to the better land in its infancy, leaving a son and daughter to mourn the loss of an affectionate mother.

Her sickness was of short duration. Everything was done that could be done by human skill, but to no avail. He that rules all things said, "Come up higher, where pain and sickness is no more," and her spirit took its flight to go and live with Jesus. Her body was laid to rest in the Pine Grove Cemetery in the presence of a large congregation of loved ones and friends.

May God bless the bereaved husband, and the son and daughter, to whom she was so devoutly attached; and may they so live in this life that when the summons comes for them that they will be prepared to meet her who has gone before!

PHILLIPS—Died at her home near Delhi, La., Aug. 14, 1897, Mrs. LENA TRAVIS PHILLIPS. She was born Dec. 6, 1856. "None knew her but to love her, none named her but to praise."

At the age of eighteen she gave her heart to her Redeemer, joining the Presbyterian Church; but a few years since she united with the Methodist Church, in which faith she continued until her death.

She was the wife of Mr. Sam Phillips, and leaves a bereaved husband, three children, and many relatives and friends to mourn her irreparable loss. She was interred in the Delhi Cemetery, where two years before she laid a sweet babe to rest.

This dear friend was a dutiful daughter, a mother to her younger brothers and sisters; a loving, faithful wife; a devoted mother and true Christian woman.

Dear Lena, we are sure our great loss is your gain; that you have but resigned the sickness, sorrows, and petty vexations of earth for the rest and pure enjoyments of bright, beautiful heaven. And we know that when time with us shall be no more, that you will welcome us to the golden shores of an eternal home.

A FRIEND.

BERNARD—Sister SALLIE LEE BARNARD (nee Burrow) was born in Marshall county, Miss., Jan. 6, 1853; joined the Southern Methodist Episcopal Church at the age of thirteen years; was married to Mr. Wm. Barnard, Nov. 20, 1873, and died Aug. 28, 1897.

Thus is chronicled an eventful life. Sister Barnard gave herself to the Lord and to the church in young life, and lived an humble, consecrated life. Her home was her place of work, usefulness, and delight, and there is where she will be missed most; but she has gone to the home above to be at rest for evermore, waiting and watching for those left behind to follow on.

May they all so live that they can make an unbroken family above! The Lord bless the bereaved husband and children, and may we all take warning and get consolation from this, another triumph of faith!

Her pastor, J. H. SMITH.

WOOD—On the third day of January, 1897, the hearts of Bro. K. P. and Sister Iola Wood were gladdened by the birth of their son, PRESTON FINN; but he was spared to bring joy and sunshine into that happy home for only eight short months, for on Aug. 9 the Lord said, "Suffer the child to come unto me, and forbid him not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

The consoling and happy thought is that his soul was not left here to be stained with sin, but flew away like the morning dew on a zephyr breeze, with all its purity, to the heavens from whence it came.

Look to God, bereaved ones, and his grace will be found sufficient, though you be plunged to the very lowest depths of grief. May God bless and comfort you! is my prayer.

ROGERS—Died at the family residence in Alexandria, La., on Friday, Aug. 13, 1897, at 11:45 A. M., Mrs. CLARA A. CURTIS, wife of the late David M. Rogers, aged seventy-nine years and eight days.

Mrs. Rogers was born and raised in Alexandria; connected with one of the oldest families, pioneers of the parish; a devoted mother, consistent member of the Episcopal Church; passed away like a Summer cloud to rest, the breeze passing through the pines singing her last requiem.

BEAUCHAMP—Another one of our members has passed away, viz.: Bro. D. C. BEAUCHAMP, aged sixty-six years. He died at his home in Carthage, Aug. 3, 1897. His end was peace. He leaves three sons and two daughters. The oldest two are about grown. Their mother died several years ago. Bro. Beauchamp filled places of honor and trust in his county first and last. For many years he has been engaged in the practice of law. God bless his children!

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that can not be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

No. 210 St. Charles St., New Orleans, La.

"If a woman reads Pearline 'ads,' and acts upon them, she'll have plenty of time to read everything else in the paper." That is what a woman writes to us, and she's a woman who ought to know. How large a part of your time is spent in getting things clean? Haven't you something better that you'd like to do if you had the time for it? Time is one of the things that Pearline saves. To hurry up housework and make every kind of washing and cleaning quick and easy, use Pearline. 541

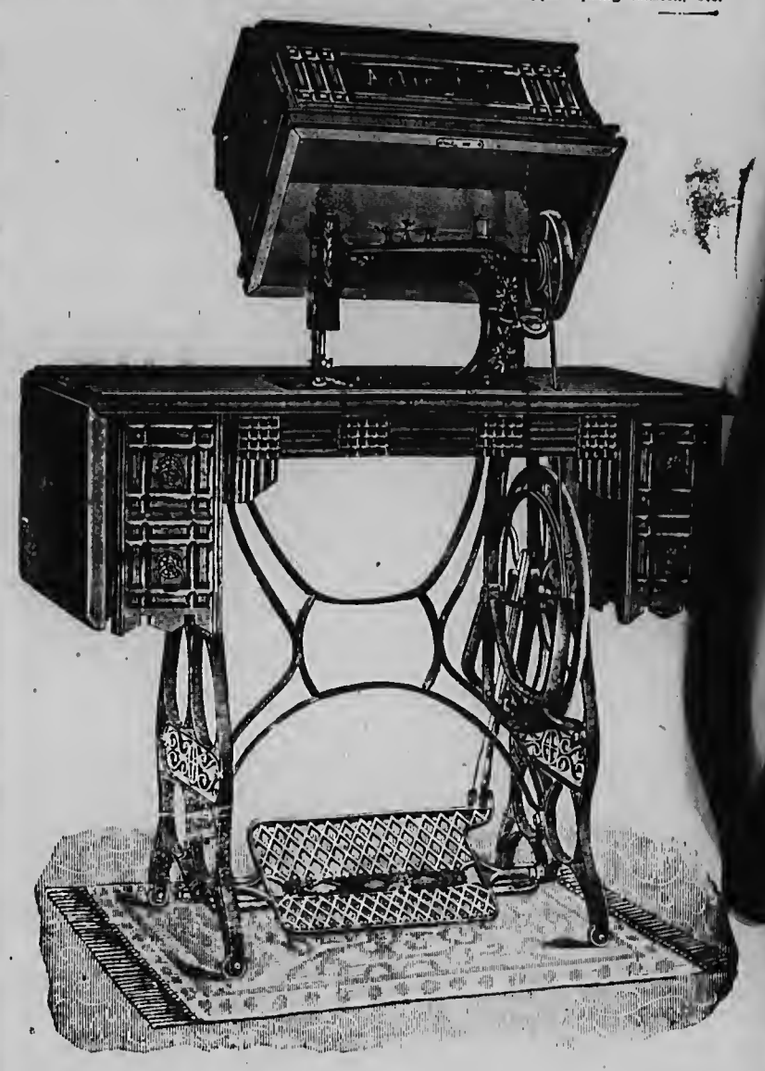
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.



The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take-up, convenient foot rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one feel ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearing polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF THREADING—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell, without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

OUR OFFER.

To anyone, not now a subscriber to this paper, who will send us $19, we will send the machine and the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE one year. To old subscribers we make the following offer: Pay your subscription to April, '99, and send $17 additional, and we will send you the machine. This price does not include freight.

We allow purchaser to test the machine for ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

TO AGENTS:

We will send this machine free to any preacher or other person who will send us twenty new subscribers with the cash—$10. Address

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

South Carolina is opening up a market for her phosphates in Japan.

The Chinese laundrymen of Boston have formed an organization for mutual protection and for "union prices."

At a camp meeting in Nyack, N. Y., the other day $30,000 was raised in fifteen minutes for the Christian Alliance.

The Episcopal mission to seamen, in Philadelphia, employs a gospel launch, and finds it very effective in reaching the seamen of the port.

The rumors to the effect that the authorities at Washington are preparing for some important move in the direction of the settlement of the Cuban question has had the effect of somewhat unsettling business.

The consolidation of the City of New York with half a score, more or less, of cities and towns around it into one municipal organization, under the name of "Greater New York," will place under the city government more than three millions of population.

The American Wire Nail Works, employing 700 men; the Lippincott Lamp Chimney Plant, which works 400 men, and the Macbeth Lamp Chimney Works, with a like number of men on its pay rolls, resumed in full blast on Sept. 20, after a shut down of two months and a half.

There will be no football matches played this Winter between the cadets of West Point and Annapolis. Some time ago Secretary Alger and Mr. Roosevelt were in favor of the resumption of the contests, but Colonel Ernst, superintendent of the military academy, has put his foot down and says it shall not be.

A letter has been received by the commanding officer of the Lonisiana Naval Battalion, Commander J. S. Watters, from Assistant Secretary of the Navy Theodore Rooseveit, expressing great gratification at the showing made by the battalion during its recent tour of duty on board the United States ship "Montgomery."

The proposition which originated with Colorado that the Free Masons of the United States, by delegates from grand lodges, unite in the year 1899 in a centennial memorial of the death of Washington, is meeting with general favor, and unless signs fail the century promises to wind up with one of the most notable Masonic gatherings that has ever been held.

FOREIGN.

It is said that the British repulse in India will kindle the blaze of rebellion along the whole border.

General Woodward, United States Minister to Spain, has given Spain warning that the war in Cuba must soon end.

Captain-General Weyler has cabled to the Spanish government that he is confident of being able to pacify Cuba in four months.

Yellow fever and cholera are unknown in Australia, and malaria is of very infrequent occurrence. The very dry air of that continent acts as a remedy against lung troubles.

The man who, on Sept. 16, made an attempt upon the life of President Diaz of Mexico, was set upon by a mob of infuriated citizens and murdered. Twenty members of the mob have been placed under arrest.

Twelve young Abyssinians selected by the Negus are on their way to St. Petersburg to be educated. Four will enter the Technical School and eight a military academy. The Russian government has offered them all free tuition.

The Bishop of Majorica, Baicaric Islands, has excommunicated the Spanish minister of finance, Sener J. Reverter, for taking possession of the treasury of a church in his diocese. The minister proposes to appeal against the Bishop to the Holy See.

Yellow fever is slowly increasing in Cuba, and the cases now under treatment take a malignant form, ending in death. Dropsy from anaemia is very common just now, as food is scarce and high in price and almost beyond the means of the poorer classes.

The Japanese are to have a superb exhibition at Tokio, the buildings covering some ten acres of ground, and the exhibits numbering over 120,000. The collection of gas and electrical appliances, many of which are of native invention, will be especially interesting.

The German Emperor is not deterred from his wanderings by the fact that he foots all his railroad bills, much the same as other mortals. Last year he paid 100,000 marks to the Prussian roads alone. He uses his own private cars, which are decorated mostly in white and gold.

It is reported that as Emperor William and Emperor Francis Joseph were leaving the station at Budapest a sharp detonation was heard, which was followed by a thick cloud of dust and smoke. The crowd took fright, broke through the military cordon and swarmed around the imperial carriages. Neither of the Emperors was hurt.

IT is a significant fact that responsible dealers sell and responsible painters use Pure White Lead (see list of genuine brands) and Pure Linseed Oil. They know their business. Those who don't know, try to sell and use the "just-as-good mixtures," "so called White Lead," &c., &c.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

Some publishers are putting off Bibles on their subscribers which they claim are just as good as the Holman. There is no other as good. It has all the Oxford helps and the self-pronouncing feature besides. Every person, whether educated or uneducated, needs help in pronouncing Bible names. The Holman Bible gives you the pronunciation, not in an appendix where it has to be hunted up, but in the book itself wherever the name occurs. Paper and binding are excellent. See offer on our fifth page.

The Opelousas District Epworth League Conference will meet at Lafayette, Sept. 30, at 8 o'clock, and adjourn at noon the next day. There will be three sessions. I hope every pastor will be present, and that each League will send two or three delegates. I also would be glad to have as many young people from each charge as can come. We will have a programme that will be both instructive and interesting.

Rev. Jules V. Penn.

Jules Victor Penn was born on Nov. 10, 1861, in Covington, La. His father was George Henry Penn, Esq., a prominent lawyer in that section of the State, and his mother was Clotilde Dolbear, the daughter of a distinguished educator of New Orleans.

The first great sorrow in the life of the child came when, at about four years of age, he lost his mother, a lovely and gifted woman, to whom he was very devoted, and whose memory he cherished with a tenderness that was pathetic. The death of his father, a few years later, left the orphaned and dependent boy to the care of his maternal grandfather, by whom he seems, after a little while, to have been given to the Rev. James English, a local Methodist preacher living in Pike county, Miss. Here he remained until he was about eighteen years of age.

If any who knew him should call to mind that there were irregularities in his life or imperfections in his character, let the disadvantages of homeless orphanage plead for kindly judgment. He never knew the softening touch of a loving mother's hand. Too soon there was taken from him the guiding and strengthening influence of a worthy father. Of him it may be said that he never knew the happiness of a home until he found it in the hearts and homes of his people. The virtues of his character, the merits of his work, were achieved not by means of, but in spite of the surroundings of his early life.

In August, 1879, while attending a meeting at Adams Camp Ground, in Lincoln county, Miss., he was converted through the instrumentality of Rev. Henry P. Lewis, of the Mississippi Conference. It is probable that he returned to New Orleans soon after his conversion, for in the following April he entered Centenary College as a beneficiary of the Carondelet Street Church, New Orleans. The Rev. Felix R Hill, D. D., was at this time the pastor of Carondelet, and through his kindly interest the financial aid was given which enabled the young man to enter college, preparatory to the work of the ministry to which he now looked forward. One year later (April 30, 1881) he was licensed to preach by the Quarterly Conference of Jackson (La.) station.

Returning to New Orleans at the close of the session, he was for a few months the assistant secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association of that city, but in September he returned to Centenary, where he spent the following session.

On the twenty-seventh of June, 1882, he took charge of the Little River circuit, Alexandria district, Louisiana Conference, to which he had been appointed as a supply. Here he remained until the session of the Louisiana Conference at Mansfield, where, on the twelfth of January, 1883, he was admitted on trial into the traveling connection and appointed to Vidalia and Troy. After one year he was received by transfer into the Mississippi Conference during the session of that body held in Natchez, December, 1883, and was appointed to Dennisville circuit.

The years 1885 and 1886 were spent in Natchez as pastor of Wesley Chapel, and the two years next following in Jackson, La., where, with great acceptability, he labored among the colored people who had known him only a few years before as a student in the college. The year 1890 was spent in teaching in Scott county, Miss., and in 1891 we find him serving the Homewood circuit, in that county. In 1892 and 1893 he was pastor of our church in Waynesboro, in 1894 in Pearlington, in 1895 in Vossburg, and in 1896 in Rolling Fork and Carey. His return to this work in 1897 was not a surprise to those who knew of the success which had attended his labors there during the preceding year. In the Spring of 1897 he was forced by the high water to leave his circuit for a while, but returned about the first of June, and threw himself with his accustomed zeal into his work. While thus engaged, preaching with unusual fervor and doing the full work of the ministry, he was stricken with typho-malarial fever. He was seriously ill from the beginning, and neither by himself or his friends was there entertained much hope of his recovery. He did not wish to die; he desired to live, and spoke regretfully of leaving his work; but he was ready to go and resigned to the Master's will, and when the summons came he was not afraid. Just after midnight, on the morning of Aug. 5, he passed away, and at five o'clock the next afternoon was buried at Rolling Fork, Miss. The noble people among whom his life work closed attended him with affectionate care during his long illness, and in their sorrow at his death showed how closely he had bound them to him.

Bro. Penn was twice married. In December, 1889, he was married to Miss Ione Kiblinger, of Jackson, La., who lived but little more than a year after their marriage; and in November, 1892, he was married to Miss Caro Minor, of Boligee, Ala., who, with her little daughter, mourns his death.

The character of our brother was marked by many excellencies. As a preacher, he was unusually gifted. He was graceful in manner, persuasive in voice, and spoke with great fluency. He was always forcible and often eloquent. As a pastor, he was faithful and industrious; as an administrator, he was wise and skillful, enlisting with rare success the co-operation of the members of his charge. His intense earnestness in the accomplishment of the work in hand seemed contagious, and was an important element in his success as a worker. As a builder of churches and parsonages, he was, perhaps, unequalled by any man in our ranks, and his conspicuous success in this department of church work was such, possibly, as to overshadow his work along other lines; and yet in no part of an itinerant preacher's work was he other than efficient. The financial interests of his charge were never neglected. His church register always showed substantial increase in membership, and he was diligent in his efforts to promote the spiritual life of his people.

Comparisons are invidious, but in justice it may be said of him with regard to every work he ever served, that his successor had need to bestir himself to keep the pace that had been set for him, and his predecessor was efficient indeed if his labors were not surpassed.

The last months of his ministry were characterized by abounding zeal, and his last sermons were said by those who heard them to have been marked by more than usual spiritual fervor and power.

Our brother no longer lives and labors among his fellow men, but his memory will be cherished in many hearts, and the itinerant preacher in the years to come will find the evidences of his faithful work in the comfortable home in which he lives and the attractive church in which he preaches. A. F. WATKINS.

For Young Preachers.

No young preacher should be assigned to a pastoral charge until he gives evidence of gifts as well as graces. Whenever a young man feels called to the work of the ministry it means to get ready to preach as well as to preach. Something more than mere education is needed. Such training in pastoral theology as will develop the sense of tact, called the sixth sense, is absolutely necessary to success. Some young brethren are so dull of comprehension that they never learn how to adapt themselves to circumstances and conditions; hence they are unpopular and unsuccessful.

I wish every young preacher would read the "Preacher's Manual," by Dr. Adam Clark, and learn how to conduct themselves at the people's homes. Some brethren are so exacting in their demands that they soon lose their hold on their people, and nine times out of ten the blame is at their own doors. Bishop McTyeire once said in my hearing: "Young brethren, be good mixers. If you have dyspepsia, don't tell anybody. Eat bacon, corn bread, and long collards, and never grunt." I would suggest that our young brethren learn how to conduct every sort of a meeting. I have learned a great deal by watching older preachers, especially the successful ones. If I didn't know how to do a thing, I kept my eyes and ears open to see how somebody else did it; and if I could improve on it, I did so; and if I couldn't, I did it as I saw or heard it done.

MINISTERIAL REMUNERATION.

Preachers do not preach for money, but it takes money to run this ministerial machinery. The preachers in charge depend upon their own people for a living; but when they go out and help in another charge, it is reasonable and right that they should be remunerated for their services. In addition to their traveling expenses, they should be paid for their services as an expression of appreciation and an evidence of love for the Master. When a brother labors for a week for a people, wearing out his clothes, exhausting his physical and intellectual energies, and laying himself out for them, he should receive a reasonable compensation. Why is it that any people are not willing to give as much to a neighbor pastor who comes and works as to give to an evangelist? The neighbor pastor preaches the same blessed gospel, and if the pastor and the people would rally to him as they should, he will hold as great a meeting as the evangelist, and yet they will not give him over $20 possibly, but they will give the evangelist $200 to $1,000, or more. Why this difference? Is it because the people are itching for something new?

PREACHING OUR DOCTRINES.

It is the honest opinion of this scribe that our sermons are not sufficiently doctrinal. I do not mean controversial, but I mean that they should be expositions of the great cardinal doctrines of the gospel, which are the cardinal doctrines of Methodism. Free moral agency and personal responsibility need to be thundered from our pulpits with more force than ever. In this age, when men are claiming that heredity influences action, and that the will is governed by superior motives which one has inherited from his parents, there is need for the old gospel of personal accountability to God. When great preachers of a sister denomination boldly declare that "whatever is, is right," it becomes our duty, as Arminian Methodists, to preach that the gospel is a protest against such fatalism, and that man must turn to God and live because he can. Presiding Elders and Districts—Some More.

The caption of this article will remind the reader of a lively discussion in the ADVOCATE just before our last Annual Conference. The theme was prolific, and writers a-plenty were ready to enter the lists. As in a chase, the eager pack, Tray, Blanche, and Sweetheart, all join in noisy pursuit of the flying quarry; so, many affected with the "cacoethes scribendi" had the gratification of seeing themselves in print. Some unused to the manner and some accustomed to write, preachers young and preachers older, laymen and a "lay woman," or so, some wise and some otherwise, some for and some foment the presiding elders, and the districts as they stood, gave an airing to their opinions.

These correspondents made things lively for a time, and it did look as if something was going to "happen." And, truth to tell, it was not strange that one or more of the hunted quarry discovered symptoms of nervousness: But Conference came and passed. The prolific theme was scarcely in it. All the beloved whose time had not expired were returned to their districts, left in size, shape, and number, intact. What a lull there was! The chase was over. Not a mouth from the now silent pack opened more; not a pen of all these ready writers penned a line more.

The presiding eldership is organic in Southern Episcopal Methodism, and before it can suffer any material change our whole polity must be thrown into a state of solution, and then be crystallized according to some new form. The great body of our people are slow to make radical change. They love the church and are loyal to its institutions. By way of illustration: While the above-mentioned discussion was at its height "the boys"—preachers—on one district were getting up a handsome Conference suit for their "beloved presiding elder," and he wore it to Conference.

Some years ago a German adventurer went down into Africa, assumed the name of Emin Pasha, and became a sort of chief among the dusky tribesmen. After a time he was reported dead; slain, perhaps, by his rebellious subjects. There were conflicting rumors. It was not certain for some time whether Emin Pasha was dead or alive. The newspaper reporters, getting short of a sensational theme, some member of the fraternity, of more fertile brain than the rest, suggested, "Let's kill Emin Pasha some more."

As there is nothing of very general or stirring interest filling our Advocates just now, will not some of the ready writers of last Fall write about presiding elders and districts "some more?" BELOVED.

Why This Waste?

A few more years, and nineteen centuries will have passed to record since the advent of the Lord Jesus Christ. The apostle declared that the gospel was God's dynamite unto salvation. Christ assured us that our need was the Holy Ghost. Pentecost brought the heavenly gift, and ever since God has been waiting to be gracious. Yet we read in a late NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE of a camp meeting where, after a ten days' siege against the hosts of hell, the reporter says, "There was, as I saw things, a lack of interest and spirituality not common at these meetings." There was much landation of the Master's eloquent sermons, and of one sermon it was wondered that "more visible results were not seen," and the declaration was made, "However, the preacher did his whole duty, and the harvest must be from God." Then some criticisms are made of sermons, prayers and songs not quite up to some supposed standard. It was a long article of two columns. I failed to note the report of one backslider reclaimed, one soul converted, or one regenerated soul entirely sanctified. Why such waste of power? There is leakage somewhere. I admired the frankness, the sincerity of the reporter, and felt sorry that he was not able to make a better showing for the force expended.

Has it come to pass that Zion is on the defensive? That after a ten days' battle on chosen ground—the flower of her mighty veterans leading and directing the battle—the result seems to be no more than would follow a sham battle? Mark you, this fight is not to be considered phenomenal; it is only one of many occurring constantly. I love the men engaged in the contest reported. They are my brethren beloved; their failure is my failure. I am inquiring the cause; it ought not to be so. I fear the Achans are not all destroyed; the trouble is in Israel's host. God somehow can not use us; our guns discharge with wonderful accuracy, and the reverberations indicate that they were heavily charged; but, strange to say, the slain are few.

Might it not be well to commence our camp and protracted meetings with twenty-four solid hours of fasting and prayer by the leaders and members for the emptying of self and sin and the infilling of the Holy Ghost? Would it not be well for the ministers to abstain from all levity in the preachers' tent, and elsewhere—innocent though it might be—and, altogether, spend twenty or thirty minutes in fervent prayer before every service for the brother about to preach? Would it not help for every preacher to be so filled with the Holy Ghost until he felt the fire burning within, consuming all desire to preach any other than a soul-delivering or comforting sermon? Ought we not to be so entirely sanctified unto the Lord until he could "guide us with his eye?" Select your own route to get into this consecrated state, but see that no time is lost in placing yourself before him, so that he may fill you with the "fullness of God." If the preferred route keeps you too long amidst the shadows of unbelief and uncertainty, try the other.

Brethren, we must get there, and that quick, if we want our ministry to have no wastage of power.

R. B. DOWNER.

Correspondence.

From Bro. Emery.

After a sojourn of nine days in bed I am now able to sit up and make grateful acknowledgment through the columns of the ADVOCATE of the many acts of kindness shown us by our friends during the dark hours of our recent trial. Later, when they will not fear to receive a letter from "an infected district," I will write them in person.

On the twenty second of August, a few days after his return from a visit to Ocean Springs, my son Carl was taken with what the attending physician pronounced yellow fever. In due time my son Frank, Mrs. Emery, and the writer succumbed. The three last named were, towards the last, all in bed at the same time. Fortunately, Mrs. Case, my wife's mother, who had had the fever in 1878, was with us. She, assisted by Carl, who was convalescent, did all the nursing. A yellow flag floated over the gate, and guards sat there day and night, admitting no one but the physician, Dr. H. Chevis Tebo, to whom we are lastingly grateful for his skillful and unremitting attention day and night for more than a month.

More than once tears came to our eyes as the visible manifestation of the appreciated Christian love and kindness shown in the many telegrams and letters that poured in upon us. I make grateful acknowledgment of letters containing financial assistance from the following: Bros. W. A. White, O. G. Swetman, and J. A. McKinley, and Sisters Belfour and Stilphen, of Biloxi; Bros. John A. McLeod and J. L. Turner, of Hattiesburg; many friends of Lumberton, whose names as yet are unknown, through Bros. A. L. Summer, W. W. Pigford, J. J. Brooks, J. M. Jenkins, and Sister E. I. Welsh; Bro. P. R. Baldwin, of Biloxi, and Sisters E. N. Everett and Ella Everett, of the Seashore Camp Grounds; also many unknown friends of Poplarville, through Bro. and Sister H. C. Archer.

I have also received telegrams or letters, either speaking comforting words or offering aid, from the following: Revs. H. E. Partridge, I. W. Cooper, J. P. Drake, G. R. Ellis, T. B. Holloman, T. L. Mellen, and Bro. J. B. Calhoun, of Purvis.

Lastly, but by no means least, my dear friend and brother, Rev. C. A. Powell, has, by means of many telegrams and letters, cheered us by kind words and offers of assistance.

But, best of all, our heavenly Father has been with us through it all, sustaining us by a wonderful manifestation of love, speaking peace to our hearts, and filling us with an unspeakable assurance of his divine presence. Through his children here and elsewhere he has most graciously supplied all our wants, and to these friends he will in due time most assuredly fulfill his promise contained in Matt. xxv, 34-40. CHARLES F. EMERY.

Opelousas District Camp Meeting.

Some thirteen or fourteen years ago this district procured ten acres of land at the Kennison Springs, near Opelousas, La., upon which to build a camp ground. Measures failed to accomplish anything. At the District Conference in Jeanerette, this year, a resolution looking to a revival of former plans was passed which secured wise committee work that knew no failure. A neat tabernacle, a preachers' home and a boarding house were erected by Bro. W. T. Blackshear at the instance of the committee. With that much on the grounds a camp meeting was announced. One family put up a cloth tent and others came out and spent the whole day, while many others attended at night.

The following preachers of the district assisted in the services of the meeting: Revs H. O. White, M. C. Manley, H. Armstrong, T. K. Faust LeRoy, T. S. Randle, R. P. Howell, J. W. Porter, J. M. Henry, H. L. Hughes, Martin Herbert and the writer. This scribe was put in charge of the choir which was made up of some of the best voices and souls of the district. The organist will pardon me for forgetting her exact name (for it is French), but she was the once Miss Ola Evans, of Church Point. Her work was well performed. Bro. Skiles, of Opelousas, was our skillful cornetist. The choir was consecrated to camp meeting work. They would sing with the spirit, and when called upon would go down into the altar work and do their duty there. In fact, good workers were not scarce at this camp meeting.

The preachers were in the Spirit of the Master, and delivered their messages of life with the old-time fire. The collection for the expenses of the meeting and the improvements upon the grounds was real good and in the spirit of Christianity.

It is the desire of this district to make this institution a gracious success. We need, at least, twenty-five tents on the ground. Every pastoral charge in the district should try to build a tent, or at least to put that much into the cause. The grounds are well shaded with forest trees loaded with flowing moss. The surrounding groves are beautified with shady vines. Drainage is excellent and natural. The water gushing from the springs is first class. Wells can be had at about the proper depth and at a nominal cost.

It was estimated that we had about twenty conversions and a good work done within the church. The meeting lasted but six days, beginning on the fourth and ending on the ninth. R. M. BLOCKER.

FAITH.

Thou art coming; we are waiting
With a hope that can not fail
Asking not the day or hour,
Resting on Thy Word of power,
Anchored safe within the veil.
Time appointed may be long,
But the vision must be sure:
Certainly shall make us strong,
Joyful patience can endure.

O, the joy to see Thee reigning;
Thee, my own beloved Lord!
Every tongue Thy name confessing,
Worship, honor, glory, blessing,
Brought to Thee with glad accord—
Thee, my Master and my Friend,
Vindicated and enthroned,
Unto earth's remotest end
Glorified, adored, and owned!

Reply to "Gilderoy."

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE, of Aug. 5, there is a letter from "Gilderoy," in which the following statement occurs: "Man is a depraved being in a guiltless or justified state." He then remarks as follows, "To the average mind—especially a mind blinded by erroneous teaching—this looks like a contradiction in terms." This statement has reference to the moral relation and condition of infants under the gospel dispensation, and is meant to avoid the consequences of attaching guilt to new-born babes. As well as we remember now, "Gilderoy" sets forth the true views of the authors named. We recollect distinctly that Dr. Miley reaches the conclusion that infants under the gospel dispensation are guiltless, and so in a state of justification, though in a condition of depravity, which he defines as moral ruin. We deny the congruity of the terms of the above statement, and think they admit of being reduced to an absurdity. We deny also that, as a proposition, it expresses the fact of the divine administration; nor can it be established by just inferences drawn from the Word of God, or from the experience of the saved soul, without going very far into an analysis of the doctrine of depravity to ascertain its effects upon the moral constitution of the soul, and to what extent it hinders the exercise, in the right way, of the moral powers; but taking the definition of depravity given by Dr. Miley as the soul's "moral ruin," and we say it is impossible to reconcile that definition with the supposition of the justified state of infants as expressed in the above proposition. But before we proceed further, we wish to make a few observations on the distinction usually drawn by writers on this subject between depravity and sin. This is done to make plausible the supposition that a depraved being may be justified while in this condition. While it is true depravity is not sin, yet it is a sequence of sinning, and is the sure and certain evidence of an antecedent unlawful act, as well as a present ruined condition. For purposes of analysis, it does very well to distinguish between them, but they should never be referred to in arguments of this sort as separable, but as two forms of an identical fact. The same is true as respects justification and regeneration; they are two forms of spiritual condition. This distinction is also often used as if it meant a difference in relation, when, in truth, it should mean no more than to distinguish between two phases of one and the same relation manifested from different points of view, which to one another are as antecedent and consequent as to time, but expressive of one great fact divided into two forms of experience, the existence of the one implying the existence of the other; so as depravity becomes the evidence of sin, so also regeneration becomes the evidence of salvation. Justification is usually defined as right relation to God's law. If justification be right relation to the law, then this relation must refer to both functions of that law, as both are expressed in that relation; but the justification supposed to be conferred has no reference to the mandatory function, but only to the penal function, for the mandatory function requires capacity for moral obedience; but this is impossible to the depraved or morally ruined. So, on supposition, the depraved be in a state of justification, then the law both justifies and condems at the same time; and then to suppose right relation of the soul to the law with wrong condition, as is the case, if the soul be in a state of justification and moral ruin, would be to suppose that the law of God takes no cognizance of the moral condition or affection of the soul; and, if so, then the love of God shed abroad in the heart, or regeneration, is not necessary to meet the requirements of the law. For if justification may be separated from regeneration, this would require that the law should be not expressive of one relation, but two; and if so, then the affection might be loosed from the relation of which justification is the expression of; and, if so, then a sinful life is compatible with a justified state of soul. But a sinful life is the opposite of the demands of God's law upon the soul; so, then, that state of the case which would make such a life possible must be out of harmony with the law also; and hence it follows that a sinful life is deducible from the supposition of justification with depravity and moral ruin. Now, if that which is logically deducible from a proposition be contrary to the law of God, the proposition is also.

Let us now notice a little further to see the incongruity of this position. If depravity be moral ruin, then it is known only by its connection with sin, and so it is the evidence of sin. Now, if it be the evidence of sin, how is it possible to remove the sin and the evidence remain? To suppose so is to suppose that the evidence of the existence of a condition of soul may continue after the condition has ceased to exist. And, further, to suppose depravity to be to sin as an evidence of existence, and to suppose sin to cease its presence in the soul's relations to the law, as in a justified state, would be to suppose that the soul is a false witness to itself, for the evidence is to the effect that the soul is guilty, while the supposition is that it is justified. This is incongruous, and to our mind absurd. For it is to suppose the law of God, which is expressive of an identical relation in its operation towards a single individual, does so contradictory in that when it refers to the state of the soul it justifies; but if expressive of a single relation as is supposed, when reference is had to the soul's condition it condemns. Now, if the law be one with two functions, how can these things be without contradiction, and to suppose the law in its operation toward the moral state or condition of an infant, to find fault with the one and not the other would be to suppose that the ground and reason of the objection was the unsuitableness of the gospel to meet the just requirements of the law, and that the death of our Lord does not interpose to prevent it. And as the existence of the infant, both physical and moral, is traceable to the redemptive, rather than the creative act, then to suppose the law to find fault to either the relation or condition in which demption has placed it, is to suppose the law makes demands which the gospel is powerless to perform, and requires a condition of soul beyond its power to confer. And so the supposition that the natural state of the infant offers hindrances to the operations of grace if the above argument be true, is absurd, for it is to suppose the gospel is in opposition to itself, for the supposition is, that the present condition of the infant, and the place occupied by it relative to all demands made by the divine government upon it in any way whatsoever, is a gospel position. And to suppose right relation or justification, with wrong condition or moral ruin, would be to suppose a partial salvation as the product of a perfect plan, or else the plan must be supposed imperfect to meet the exigencies of the case.

If it be objected that in making depravity the evidence of sin that we have introduced an element of experience which is not permitted in arguments on this subject, we answer that the Word of God insists that impurity of heart is positive proof of a want of reconciliation with him. Moreover, we have in making that argument gone on the supposition of the uniformity of the divine administration and the identity of the human mind, and that like processes and procedures of the Holy Spirit, with none to hinder, would be similar in all similarly constituted souls, and so the end reached would be the same in all. But on supposition the position of an infant be one of justification and moral ruin, then this is contradictory of experience, and is an assumption, without a known case parallel to it, as existing anywhere under the administration of God. Now, we say that inductively we have no just grounds to suppose that the end reached by the Holy Spirit in the salvation of other souls or that the processes are different than what are realized by ourselves in salvation. This inference goes from what we know to what we don't know, and is a legitimate inference; but whoever realized justification separate from regeneration? By what logical right has anyone to infer that an infant is in a justified state, yet depraved?—as such a statement of the case is unknown to the experience of the saved.

But, upon the other hand, all who are saved experience together justification and regeneration, and consequently in drawing conclusions respecting the salvation of others the only warrant we have is to infer that they are affected in the same way as ourselves, and that the methods used and manner of operation, as well as the end reached, are similar. But let us suppose that an infant at the beginning of being to be related to the divine government in the way as expressed by the terms of the proposition—that is, justified, but depraved, or, as Dr. Miley expresses it, in a condition of "moral ruin," and to continue so until the line of accountability is reached. Now, the question is, from every point of view, what is the suitable thing to be done? No doubt the answer would be by those who hold the theory of justification and depravity, or "moral ruin," as Dr. Miley puts it, to meet the responsibility of the soul's present position, that faith in order to regeneration is the next condition to be met. But justification is the first fact following upon an exercise of faith, and the terms of the proposition require the soul to be now justified; so according to the terms of the proposition that is prior to faith, which should be after it. This is an absurdity. To suppose the soul now to be in a state of justification antecedent to faith; then, according to Arminian theology, to suppose justification immediate upon faith would be to suppose that faith put the soul in the attitude towards God it now occupies; and so upon supposition that regeneration would follow upon justification after faith, when faith only serves to put the soul in its present position, why will it not follow upon its present position of justification? To say it will not is a contradiction.

And, further, the act of concurrence, of which faith is supposed to be, may be properly defined as non-opposition to the Spirit's work of saving the soul, and is precisely parallel to the antecedent non-resistance of the soul prior to responsibility as is supposed. And from all this it follows that the end of the operation of faith is to bring the soul to the attitude of passivity as respects regeneration, which is the posture it now is in. So it is. Whoso receiveth the kingdom receiveth it as a little child, and except you be converted and become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter the kingdom of heaven.

Bro. Peebles on "Growth."

My dear Bro. Peebles feels called upon to show the "lackings" of an article I published some time ago under the caption, "Growth in Grace." After reading what he has to say about that article, I can see neither its "lackings" nor its superfluities. I still hold to the correctness of the statement that, "growth in nature involves accretions to the substance of the growing thing or animal," although Bro. Peebles sees in it a "growing monstrosity." If things do not grow by additions to their substance, I confess I do not know anything about it. I did not intend by that statement to explain the process of growth of which I know nothing, and suspect Bro. Peebles in the same predicament. But Bro. Peebles sees, or thinks he sees, mischievous mistakes in what I say about spiritual growth. He beholds me "floundering in the mud, or groping in the dark." I wish he had told me which. In proof, he quotes from my article: "We are in a state of grace when born into the kingdom of God, but imperfect and immature, and hence under necessity of growing to maturity—not holiness—by a gradual process." What great heresy in the above quotation that causes my good brother to rush into print! The above sentence would have passed muster with Bro. Peebles if I had left out the negative phrase, "not holiness," which I put in to show that I do not believe in the growth theory of holiness. But why did not my brother say that these two words put me in that awful mud-hole, or else obscured my vision, one or the other, or both, and then come to my rescue? Let us take one clause of the sentence objected to at a time thus, "We are in a state of grace when born into the kingdom of God." Bro. Peebles will not object to that proposition. There is not a Christian on earth that disputes it. The next clause predicates imperfection and immaturity of the new-born believers. If my brother disputes that, he opposes St. Paul and universal experience. The next clause requires a gradual growth into maturity, but denies growth into holiness. That denial is, I suppose, what aroused my good brother.

But he quotes again, "Every moral, accountable creature is either holy or unholy." Is that not so? But, continuing the quotation, "If the latter, it is because of unholy principles in the nature not yet destroyed or subdued." I put that hypothetically, and no one can object to it. I go on to say, "This state of things may exist in the justified believer which renders him unholy, but innocent as long as he maintains a justified state." Bro. Peebles asks, "Can not anyone see from these statements how he flounders, staggers, and plunges into darkness?" And then answers his own question to his own liking, "Certainly they can."

Well, well; I did not know that I was in that awfully bad fix, and it seems to me that a fellow would feel tired after going through such a course of gymnastics. I have known drunken men to imagine every man they met was drunk. Bro. Peebles will know how to make the application. It is a great deal easier to deal in coarse, uncharitable epithets than it is to produce a sound, sensible argument; and I suppose it comes handier to Bro. Peebles, as he has given us the former and withheld the latter. Why did he not lay his finger on the precise heresy contained in my article, and then proceed to refute it? I infer that Bro. Peebles objects to my theology because I teach with Mr. Wesley, Clark, Watson, and all other authorities, that we are not entirely sanctified in regeneration. He asks the question, "How can a person be born again without being holy?" I infer from this question that Bro. Peebles believes we are entirely sanctified or made holy when we are regenerated, and he objects to my theology because I do not agree with him on that point. Very well; I can afford to part company with him, since it puts me in better company—Paul, Peter, Jesus Christ, Wesley, Clark, Watson, and nearly all evangelical Christians of all ages and countries.

I close by asserting that entire sanctification is not contained in regeneration. Let Bro. Peebles refute it; not by interrogations and exclamations, but by arguments.

Mrs. H. W. Foote, of North Miss. Conference
Mrs. E. R. Parker, of Mississippi Conference
Mrs. E. R. Kennedy, of Louisiana Conference

To the Members of the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society of the Mississippi Conference:

We give some of the following items from the eleventh Annual Report, as we are sometimes questioned on these points:

WEEK OF PRAYER.

Our annual Week of Prayer will be observed Oct. 11 to 18, 1897. A program has been prepared and distributed. We trust that the members of every auxiliary will carefully examine this program, for understanding and knowing the motive that prompted the preparation by the General Committee will be followed with a loyal and enthusiastic observance of the Week of Prayer.

The contribution of the annual Week of Prayer is the only general collection asked of the auxiliaries on which the general treasury can rely for expansion and progress.

Some auxiliaries prefer to raise their Week of Prayer money by making life members. This popular method aids the general treasury as effectively as by taking a collection.

MITE BOXES.

—The distribution of mite boxes, the sending out of certificates, and the charge of the Baby Roll, have been grouped under one head and wisely consigned to the care of Mrs. Jno. J. Tigert, whose loving enthusiasm and faithful labor is an inspiration to all. The general fund is increased by mite-box collections. All the contents of the boxes should be remitted to the Conference treasurer, to be forwarded to the general treasurer.

At the last convention, in Little Rock, it was decided that we adopt the paper mite box for free distribution, only asking a return of postage. The wooden boxes can be bought from the superintendent by sending the money.

LIFE MEMBERSHIP.

One year ago the Central Committee adopted a plan for issuing life membership certificates. By the payment of $25 anyone becomes a member for life, receiving a certificate that entitles her to that honor, and exempts her from all dues thereafter. One hundred dollars makes an honorary life member. This is one way the mite boxes can be used. Certificates of membership are sent to life members and honorary life members as soon as the general treasurer reports to the superintendent of this department that the sums stated have reached her, with the names.

BABY ROLL.

The payment of twenty-five cents will admit the baby into the band. All not over five years of age may join. The Conference that secures the largest list of names will be awarded a medal at the next convention.

WOLFF RECORD BOOKS.

The Wolff Record Books may be secured at the Publishing House at the following prices: Conference Secretary and Treasurer, seventy-five cents each; Auxiliary Secretary and Treasurer, twenty cents each; District Secretary, fifty cents.

DUES.

The membership dues of all adult members is ten cents per month. Young people and children, five cents per month. The confusing distinction between connectional and local members is done away with, and all paying regular dues are members.

Mrs. William E. Linfield has kindly consented to serve as district secretary of the Brandon district. We hope that every pastor on the district will give her his hearty co-operation. Reports of work done in that district will be reported to her at the same time as to the Conference secretary. Address Mrs. W. E. Linfield, Morton, Miss.

Only eleven auxiliaries reported this quarter. Please let the auxiliary corresponding secretaries be regular and prompt.

Lovingly we ask the prayers and hearty co-operation of all in forwarding our work.

Conversions within the Church.

BY REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

It was to one of his three favorite disciples that Christ addressed the solemn words, "When thou art converted strengthen thy brethren." The astonished disciple—who had a supreme confidence in his own strength—replied, "Lord, I am ready to go with thee both into prison, and to death." Within a few hours came the disgraceful fall, the deep repentance, and the merciful recovery. There are two kinds of scars—those received in gallant battle, and those received by pitiable falls; and Peter carried the scar of that night's cowardly denial of his Master to his dying day.

Peter's backsliding was quickly followed by Peter's recouversion. Jesus prayed for his recreant disciple that his "faith might not fail" entirely; and but for that merciful intercession of his Master he would not have come out of that disgraceful episode a reconverted man. The process through which Peter passed bore all the marks of conversion. There was pungent repentance of his sin; there was an exercised faith in Christ; there was an honest spirit of obedience and a renewed consecration of himself to his Lord's service. There was a turning to Christ, and that is exactly what the word "conversion" signifies.

Are there no backsliding members in our churches who have sadly fallen from grace, and become like barren fig trees? Verily the number of enrolled members who seldom answer to the roll-call of duty, or who are either lagging at the rear or laid up in the hospital, must be painfully great. In such cases lies the weakness of the Christian Church. These who wear the livery of Christ, and "wound him in the house of his friends," do an amount of mischief that they can not compute. Perhaps the person who reads this article may be now in a condition of lamentable spiritual declension. Yours is a case for "discipline"—not by the officers of your church, but by yourself. Feel of your pulse, and see if there be any warm heart-beat of love for your crucified Lord. Look into your account-book and see how much money you have contributed to him in comparison with what you have spent on yourself. Cast your eye over the year just closed and discover, if you can, any real progress in the Christian life, or any genuine effort to save a single soul. You are living on a past and worn-out experience, and not on a present love and loyalty to Jesus. Your religion is all parsed in the "past tense." Like some apple trees at this season, your roots may be alive under all the biting cold; but there are sadly few fruits of the Spirit on your bare branches.

Now, don't go back into some past year and dig up a by-gone experience. An unfaithful wife might just as well hunt up her marriage certificate to prove that she is now the wife that she ought to be. That certificate is really a swift witness against her. Your former good condition is only an evidence of your diseased condition to-day. You know, and everybody who knows you knows, that you are not a healthy, active, useful and happy Christian. Perhaps your grieved Master might have said during the last twelve-month, "I will let him alone this year also," and yet you are cumbering his ground. Don't use palliatives, or try to quiet conscience by anodynes. That new-year bell is really an alarm-bell, and means—one year more lost, and one year nearer the judgment seat!

What better use for the "Week of Prayer" than to make it a week of penitence? It is not the "conversion of the world" that is the important matter now, but your own conversion. One honest hour with your own conscience and alone with your neglected Savior; one square look at yourself in the mirror of Bible truth; one prayer from the bottom of your heart to the Holy Spirit to change your backsliding heart; one new and entire re-surrender of yourself to Jesus Christ, will be worth infinitely more to you than all the meetings you can attend, or all the sermons you can listen to. Throw your past hopes to the winds; dig down deep and rebuild anew on the Rock. Now is the accepted time and now is the day of salvation for you. Quench not the living Holy Spirit; he wants to lead you back to Jesus. Do what that divine Spirit prompts you to do and persuades you to do; and you are a reconverted man or woman! Oh, if there were thousands of such conversions inside of the church, what hosts of souls might be converted on the outside! It was the reconverted apostle who wrought the mightiest day's work of his life in Jerusalem right after the Pentecost.—Exchange.

It is a fine thought that every individual is a center of influence. From him radiates an energy that impresses a large circle. The smallest infant in the cradle is a potent factor in the life of his parents. From the humblest street boy there goes out as from a hidden spring an influence pregnant with evil or good. No man lives to himself. We are bound together like net-work. If we could only measure the subtle power which streams from the most obscure, we would be amazed. The sum total of all these energies in human life.—Texas Advocate.

Flesh is the anagram of self, and in Scripture 'tis all one to walk after the flesh and to seek one's self. If then, men walk after the flesh, they shall die, for every man's perdition is of himself.—Vening.

"Thy will be done" is the keynote to which every prayer must be tuned.—A. J. Gordon.

To Whom It May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mul-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of sores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. BLACK,

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. Sam Q Bass, Sept. 21, 1897: "Please say to the brethren through the columns of your paper that I closed out a wonderful meeting yesterday at Mount Olivet Church, on Eureka circuit, for Rev. C. P. Moss. About 85 conversions Twenty-five of these were members of the church, but had no religion. Forty-six additions to our church and 14 to other branches. I have held many meetings, but never held one with greater power than was manifested in this one. People absolutely went out to buggies and pulled their friends in the house, and they were soundly converted. The meeting only continued 8 days—three services a day. No better people than the people of Mount Olivet. Bro. Moss is one of our promising young men—a fine pastor and a good man to work with. I have not heard him preach. I began here (Terz) with him last night with a fine prospect."

Rev. W. R Williams, P. C., Brown's Creek circuit, Sept. 18, 1897: "I closed my meeting at Mt. Pleasant yesterday with a result of nine conversions. Bro. B. P. Fuillove, of Corinth circuit, did the preaching after Monday. I have never seen a pulpit filled fuller by any preacher in my life. Bro. Fullilove is one of the most spiritual men I have ever met in my life. As an orator he is wonderfully gifted. I have never seen greater power than he possesses while demonstrating truth. In fact, he was a great blessing to myself and people. 'Onward and upward' is his aim through life. He no doubt will point many a poor soul to Christ before his end comes. He left us yesterday evening to ride on horseback over much rough hilly ground, a distance of forty miles, to his home in Corinth. As I close these lines I pray God's blessings upon him and family."

Rev. L. J. Jones, P. C., Raleigh, Miss., Sept. 10. 1897: "On Aug 7 we began a meeting at Bay Springs, near Taylorsville. We had Bros. M L White, from Montrose, and Bro W. G. Backus, from Bogue Chitto These brethren were on hand during the first hour's service, and continued the meeting five days. We had a fine meeting. These brethren did the preaching, and they did it well On account of sickness in my family I failed to reach them until the fourth day. On Aug 21 we began a meeting at Trinity. Bro W W Simmons, our presiding elder, did the most of the preaching. We had a fine meeting. Fifteen accessions to the church. Young Bros. Williams and Thomson were present and rendered good help. On the twenty-fourth at this place our quarterly meeting was held. Every church was represented. A good report for third quarter Our work is in advance of last year in everything, and I feel that God has blessed us in our efforts to do good. Our church at Bay Springs only received twenty-five dollars from Church Extension Board. It is now completed, worth or cost five hundred dollars—all paid for. Trinity Church is now ceiled, which adds greatly to the comfort of all. Fairmount is building a new church, the cost of which will be about five hundred dollars. They ask not for help, but haul their lumber thirty miles, and will pay as they go. I expect to preach in the new church on Saturdays and Sundays in October. Pleasant Hill will have their new church ready for their meeting the fourth Sunday in this month, and I suppose their church will be worth five hundred dollars. They pay as they go. We have had two cases of slow fever in our family. Pray for us."

Rev. D. Scarborough, Coffadelah, Miss., Sept. 15, 1897: "We have held five meetings this Summer on the Neshoba circuit—lacking one of having finished our annual round of protracted services. All of these meetings were seasons of great refreshing from the presence of God. We began at Hester's Chapel on the second Sunday in July, and continued six days. Rev. J. H. Holland was my helper, who preached the Word with power and in demonstration of the Spirit. The church was greatly revived; nineteen were converted, and fourteen joined the church—one by certificate. About ten families promised to take up family prayer. It was the verdict of all that this was a glorious meeting. .....On the third Sunday in July we started in at Cook's Chapel, with Rev. P. D. Hardin, of Decatur, as our assistant. Rev. J. F. Robinson preached one sermon, and Bro. Holland three. The meeting moved on slowly for the first day or two. There were obstacles in the way, but the gospel hammer soon broke these barriers down and the revival fire began to fall. The church was greatly stirred; several were converted, nine joined the church, and one promised to erect a family altar. Bro. Hardin is a strong preacher for a young man, and will do any brother good work in a protracted meeting.....Our next effort was at North Bend, where we began on the first Sunday in August. I was assisted by Rev. J. J. Golden and Rev. J. H. Holland. The gospel was preached with earnestness and to the edification of the people. The meeting lasted five days and resulted in much good. A considerable number were converted, ten joined the church, fifteen heads of families promised to take up family prayer, and the whole church was aroused.....Our fourth meeting was at Mars Hill, beginning on the fifth Sunday in August. The preaching was done by the pastor and Rev. J. H. Holland. Here we also had a gracious meeting. Eight joined the church and fully as many were converted.....We next protracted at Pine Grove, where we had the help of Rev. J. C. Long and Rev. J. H. Holland. The meeting began on the first Sunday in September, and lasted four days. Much good was accomplished. Six joined the church....I am happy to say that the work is progressing. Since Conference I have received 43 members on profession of faith, and 4 by certificate; baptized 15 infants, organized 2 Epworth Leagues—one of which is as good as can be found anywhere in the country. We observed Children's Day at every church on the work; collected $14 70. Our collections are behind, but we are trying hard to raise them. May the Lord help us to do our whole duty!"

Rev. C. H. Ellis, Meadville, Miss., Sept. 16, 1897: "Since last writing for your excellent paper I have visited a number of places and held special services. At Fernbank, Ala., we had a glorious meeting with our faithful and efficient brother, W. T. Daniel, of the Alabama Conference. Not less than seventy-five found the Lord in conversion, reclamation or entire sanctification. Plans were matured for establishing a camp for an annual holiness meeting. Millport and Fernbank will join in this enterprise. . . . Our next meeting was at Carthage (Miss.) Camp Meeting. To this I was invited both by the Board of Directors and the pastor, Rev. H. P. Lewis. This association of Christian men to secure definite teaching of entire sanctification as a second work of grace are men who both know and love the doctrine and discipline of the church. From good authority we learn the teaching of holiness as a second experience has increased the interest in all lines of work, adding much to the financial as well as spiritual department. We had with us in addition to the faithful and efficient pastor Rev T. L. Mellen, of Canton, and Rev. D G. W. Ellis, of Meridian. If there was any clash in teaching or testimony or method of work through the ten days, it did not appear. Truly we, as ministers, dwelt together in unity. The doctrine of entire sanctification was definitely taught, but not that alone, and God honored the Word in the salvation of souls at almost every service from beginning to the close. It is a fact worthy of note that we have on our church rolls many unconverted persons. These seek pardon, and large numbers living in a backslidden condition are restored, so that church-joining can not be made a test of the success of such meetings. The fact is, our pastors, who are competent judges, say their members need regeneration before they are ready for the higher experiences of entire sanctification and enduement of power. Under these conditions we labored at Carthage, and the Holy Spirit gave testimony to the Word, and many were added to the Lord.... Returning to New Orleans, Aug. 17, I remained to Sept. 3. With the exception of one sermon and prayer meeting service at Carrollton Avenue, my services in the city were on special lines. As I see it, the outlook in the city is hopeful. God is working. Especially in the W. W R Mission, on Bienville (608), organized and superintended by our brother, J. H. Haag. At every service the power of the Holy Spirit was manifested in some way. God is raising up a people there to rescue the neglected masses. This work should receive the sympathy and hearty support of all the churches, as this is the work of rescue. Here I saw more than one who had been saved from self-destruction by the timely aid, both spiritual and material, given at this mission. These now give promise of lives of usefulness. Let not the curse of Meroz (Judges v. 23) be upon the people of God as to this work. The Salvation Army is also doing a much needed work, and deserves the warmest sympathy and support of all who feel interest in rescuing the lost. Both Douglas Square and Union Gospel Missions seem to be well attended, and those in charge seem full of zeal and faith. . . . On Sept. 3 I left the city for Hamburg, Miss., to hold a ten days' meeting with Bro. R. A. Breland. Hamburg is on the Mississippi Valley railway, 175 miles from New Orleans, and five miles from Roxie, where we held a meeting in July. Much might be said of the work and workers here, but our communication is already too lengthy. God gave victory from first Though our last day was threatening, and rain began to fall early in the morning, the large church was well filled by 11 A. M, and souls were saved and sanctified. It is worthy of special note that the officials of the Baptist Church gave the use of their house, as it was much larger than the Methodist. About forty testified on Sunday to having received pardon, reclamation or sanctification. About half claimed the latter experience.... We begin a ten days' meeting to-morrow with Bro. R. S. Gale at Meadville. Will those who read this help us by their prayers, that God may continue to own his word, and to open to us an effectual door to preach the gospel in its fullness?"

A SEA OF FLAME.

On the evening of November, 28th, 1878, a fire broke out in the British ship Melanie, loaded with 700 barrels of petroleum. An awful mass of flames shot up from the main hatch and the vessel quivered from stem to stern with explosion of the barrels. Her seams opened and the blazing petroleum poured out into the river, spreading a belt of fire around her. The master and seamen jumped overboard. Captain Sharp, whose vessel was lying close-by, propelled a small boat through the blazing river and after a severe scorching and imminent peril, saved the seamen from a horrible death.

All over civilization there are thousands of men in more imminent danger than were those seamen. They are threatened with consumption or are already in the clutch of that deadly disease. If they only knew it, help is at hand. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures 98 per cent. of all cases of consumption. It also cures bronchitis, asthma, throat and nasal troubles and all diseases of the air passages. It is the great blood-maker, flesh-builder, and nerve-tonic. It makes the appetite hearty, the digestion perfect and the liver active. The "Golden Medical Discovery" is the product of that eminent specialist, Dr. R. V. Pierce, who, during the thirty years that he has been chief consulting physician to the great Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, at Buffalo, has treated more cases than fifty ordinary physicians treat in a lifetime. Thousands given up by doctors, have testified to complete recovery under this marvelous medicine.

WOMAN.

Not she with traitorous kiss her Savior stung,
Nor she denied him with unholy tongue;
She while Apostles shrank could danger brave,
—E. S. Barret.

Egotism is bad anywhere, but it is inexcusable in a preacher.

The best way for a man to get out of a lowly position is to be conspicuously effective in it.—Rev. Dr. John Hall.

If we would think more about our own sins and less about the sins of our neighbors, we would be better off.—Baptist Standard.

No matter how loud a man's professions are, if he does not pay his debts, or make a life-long effort to do so, he is not a Christian.

When you hear a man mouthing about some Bible mystery, you can always gag him by asking him if he has lived up to that part of it that is not mysterious.

A man is relieved and gay when he has put his heart into his work and done his best; but what he has said and done otherwise shall give him no peace.—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

An inheritance of money may or may not be a desirable thing, but an inheritance of character, an ancestry of generous, true-hearted men, who did justly and loved mercy, and walked humbly with their God, this is a thing that kings might covet.—Edna Lyall.

A wise man not long since said that while there are a few people who can be properly spoken of as "the salt of the earth," there are a great many who could be appropriately called its pepper. He might have added that many of these belong to the church.

Nothing that is of real worth can be achieved without courageous working. Man owes his growth chiefly to that active striving of the will, that encounter with difficulty which we call effort; and it is astonishing to find how often results apparently impracticable are thus made possible.—Exchange.

Go with mean people, and you think life is mean. Then read Plutarch, and the world is a proud place, peopled with men of positive quality, with heroes and demigods standing around us, who will not let us sleep. Then, they address the imagination: only poetry inspires poetry.—R. W. Emerson.

Readiness.

We are firmly convinced that many people are failures both in business and as Christians because of their lack of the necessary quality of readiness. The possession of one or two good qualities and virtues is not enough to insure success or establish character. The man who aspires to honor and usefulness can not afford to slight any legitimate means of spiritual advancement. Industry and perseverance, though highly important, can not atone for habitual unreadiness, by which we mean slowness to act, lack of promptness and preparation for duties and emergencies.

There is often occasion for prompt and decisive action, as in war, in commerce, in treating disease, and in philanthropic work. Readiness in diagnosing disease, especially a pestilence, like yellow fever, is a priceless power. Hesitancy or a slight delay frequently involves serious suffering and disaster. There are few men who act unhesitatingly just at the right time—neither too soon, nor too late. Some men take a whole day, or even longer, to decide a matter that ought to be decided in a few minutes. While men differ greatly in temperament, some being naturally ready minded and others slow of perception and decision, all ought to cultivate the habit of readiness, so that they may never be taken unawares. King Ethelred of England, noted for his inefficiency, and known in history as "the Unready," has many followers in modern times.

The great reason why some men succeed so much better than others is because of their readiness to seize opportunities. Napoleon was right in saying that "every moment lost gives opportunity for misfortune." How often work of various kinds, religious and otherwise, is delayed or goes unperformed because of the dillydallying of unready people! Such persons are always going to do this or that, but somehow they are never quite ready, because of the weather, or their feelings, or some other weak excuse. Without ready performance there can be no faithful discharge of duty. Many persons are so unthoughtful and unready that a sick neighbor is nearly well or nearly dead before they call to see him, or offer to nurse him. The poor often suffer because of the unreadiness of Christians to help them when they most need assistance. Charity to be most effective must be prompt. The old Latin proverb, "He gives twice who gives quickly," contains a great truth. If you have a friend or neighbor who has been bereaved or who is in affliction, do not delay in your condolence and kindness, but be ready of comfort and relief. Strangers are often lost to the church and to Christianity by the tardiness of church members in visiting them and showing courtesies. Readiness to show welcome and interest are of no slight value in winning souls and in building up the church. We are to "be ready unto every good work."

Lack of promptness in attending to any matter, sacred or secular, betokens indifference, and is hurtful to a large degree. The notion that one time will do as well as another for attending to our religious duties soon serves as an excuse for not attending to them at all.

Preparation for action is as important as promptitude. Readiness for service not merely implies unhesitating service, but ability and equipment for service as well. When the African Association of London, wanting to send Ledyard, the traveler, to Africa, asked him when he would be ready to go, he replied, "To-morrow morning." Not every man who enlists in war is prepared for military duty. Not every good man or woman who wishes to work for the Lord has the training of the mind and heart necessary to certain forms of usefulness. Though many would like to do good, not all such strive earnestly to subdue the habits and dispositions that stand in the way of their influence, or are willing to undergo training required for the higher spheres of effort. It is one thing to plan a good deed; it is quite another to be ready for its immediate execution. However charitable we may be, if we live extravagantly, we shall have little left for the Lord's cause, and be ill-prepared to meet the calls of charity. An earnest desire to overcome peculiar temptations and besetting sins will be of little avail without preparation to meet them through prayer, watchfulness, and the study of God's Word. God's superabundant grace can make us ready to cope with any sin or difficulty. "Put on the whole armor of God," says the apostle, "that we may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." Only the man who has been delivered from the guilt and power of sin is ready to lead others to the Lamb of God.

We owe it to the Lord to use every possible means of increasing our usefulness. Just as a physician is expected to thoroughly prepare himself for his profession, that he may be ready to minister to all kinds of sickness; so the Christian, and, above all, the Christian minister, is expected to be "thoroughly furnished unto all good works," not lacking in knowledge or in any grace. It profits little that we have zeal if we have not wisdom nor the love that bears with the faults and weaknesses of our fellow-men. Every bit of knowledge that we gain, every affliction and misfortune, every blessing, every noble purpose, and every act of worship ought to contribute something to our readiness in the Lord's service. It is said that Von Moltke had planned the campaigns and manœuvres of the German army long before the Franco-Prussian war took place, nearly every important movement of the enemy having been anticipated and guarded against. Nor can we hope to make conquests and win great victories in the name of the Lord unless we plan and pray beforehand. Some speakers have little to say worth hearing because they postpone preparation till the last minute, and then are forced to utter ill-digested thought. Readiness of effective speech is due as much to habits of meditation and observation as to natural fluency.

Ability to be useful, however, is no guarantee of the faithful use of powers and possessions. Along with readiness of service there must be willingness to serve. It is often the case that those most able to do good, to dispense charity, to exert a wide influence, are least willing to do so. Ready obedience is what the Lord requires at our hands. To perform duty promptly and gladly commends us both to God and to men. Nobody likes to keep a servant who does everything complainingly, unreadily, as it were, under protest. A good act is often spoiled by being done reluctantly. A favor may be bestowed in such an unready way as to render it despicable in the eyes of the recipient. Our service is measured not so much by what we do as by the spirit in which it is performed. Though we be able to do but little, to shed but a feeble ray of light, if we give gladly, according to ability, it counts for a large offering. "If there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not."

For the worshiper readiness to hear is an essential part of devotion. The writer of Proverbs exhorts us when we go up to the house of God, "to be more ready to hear than to give the sacrifice of fools; for they consider not that they do evil." How few church goers are ready and receptive listeners! Some who read these lines, it may be, are ready for anything save death and the judgment. How important the injunction, "Be ye ready!"

Yellow Fever.

At Edwards the total number of cases is 180; deaths, 7. Biloxi—cases, 114; deaths, 5. Mobile—54 cases; deaths, 8. Scranton—10 cases; deaths, 2.

In this city the number of cases is 160; deaths, 19. As stated in a former issue this death rate is larger than it should be, owing to the fact that many cases are not reported until the patient is beyond the reach of medical skill. This is especially the case among the dagoes. Rather than be quarantined indoors, and thus have their fruit stands closed, these people will carefully conceal a case of sickness until death sets in. But even the death rate as it stands is by far the lowest New Orleans has ever had—less than 12 per cent. In '78 the death rate was over 28 per cent., and it was about the same in '53. This is, therefore, the mildest type of yellow fever that has ever existed in the United States. Notwithstanding the 19 deaths from yellow fever, the mortality is less in this city than it was at this season last year. Of the 160 cases above reported, 38 have been discharged and are now at liberty to engage in their accustomed pursuits.

The Cataract of Crime.

For more than twelve years The Christian Advocate has lugubriously prophesied an increase of crime and lynchings in this country, and the prophecy has been fulfilled to the horror of many communities and the disgrace and shame of the nation.

Among the causes are the maudlin sentimentality with which crimes are treated, the ease with which an expert can be procured to swear a criminal insane, or the crank expert who believes everyone insane, the influence of detailed discussions of crimes and murders in the newspapers, the law's delays, the increasing depravity and recklessness of youth, the great decline in the conduct and order of judicial proceedings, the want of reverence for religion, the flippancy of juries, the frequency of pardons, the denial of a place to retribute justice, and the unnatural and debilitating doctrine that the sole purpose of punishment is reformation.

Unnecessary delays in the execution of the law should be frowned down, and governors should be elected with some respect to their courage. There are several crimes which should be punished with death: murder in the first degree, attempts to murder by the use of poison, train wrecking and attempts at train wrecking, assaults such as those committed by the persons usually lynched, the setting fire to inhabited houses, and the lynching of prisoners already in the hands of the law. Were the death penalty inflicted in such cases the number of such crimes would diminish and also the number of lynchings.

If the death penalty be not inflicted upon the perpetrators of such crimes, the tendency to lynching will increase, the practice of lynching will react upon public morals, and both crimes and lynchings will greatly multiply.—New York Advocate.

Honest Christians.

The man who is not just as honest in trading as he is in praying is not a Christian. It is not possible to be a sinner in business and a saint in religion. The thief in the Board of Trade is a hypocrite in the church.

We do not believe that all successful business men are dishonest. It is a satisfaction to believe that in every department of trade and commerce there are men whose principles are as pure as gold. There are merchants, bankers, mechanics, farmers and professional men, everywhere, who live as uprightly in their business transactions as they do in their domestic relations. There are men who would prefer poverty to ill-gotten wealth.

Granted that a man might gain money by lying, what kind of a reward is it, after all? Riches gained at the expense of conscience are like corroding acids—they eat away the foundations of life, and leave their possessor poor indeed. It never pays to lie. It matters not what the motive may be, the loss is always greater than the gain. Exemption from punishment or disgrace is a poor compensation for a tarnished conscience. Masses of wealth have no power to confer lasting joys. Titles, wealth, learning and fame are trifles compared with a clean conscience.—The Angelus.

A traveler who did not believe in missions visited Fiji, and counseled a Christian chief to give up his faith in the Bible, which he said was no longer believed by the cultured intellect of Europe. The chief pointed his visitor to a huge stone, and to a large oven on the hillside, and told him that on the one they were formerly accustomed to murder their captives and in the other to bake them for eating; "and that," he added, "is what we would have done with you if the Bible had not come here."—Selected.

What shall it profit if you have acquired books, and lost the love of reading; acquired influence, and lost the joy of usefulness; acquired power, and lost the pleasure of service? He that thus gains his life loses it in the gaining. This is an enigma. Ponder it.—Lyman Abbott.

The power of religion depends not upon the number who profess it, but upon the character and life of those who practice it. A church evinces its power according to the Christ-spirit and activity which it displays. The world is won by Christianity when and where its truths and principles find living exemplification.—Presbyterian.

Justice Stephen J. Field, of the United States Supreme Court, has continued in office longer than any predecessor. Chief Justice Marshall went on the bench Jan. 21, 1801, and served until his death, July 6, 1835—thirty-four years, five months and six days. Thirty-four years, five months and twenty days is the record of Justice Field so far.

Zion's Herald mentions the following dangers to which the Epworth Leagues are exposed: "Being conventionized to death;" "being ministerized to death;" "being benevolentized to death;" "being politicalized to death." There are young people's organizations, not connected with the Methodist Church, that are imperiled from the same causes.—The United Presbyterian.

We believe that if the lay officials of the church would feel their obligations to meet the salaries of pastors and presiding elders in an equal manner—faithfully present them to the church and follow their presentation by persistent personal solicitations—every dollar of these obligations, so sacred, and really the dearest of all to our membership, would be raised.—Rev. A. J. Wheeler, Colema, Mich.

Guard your pastor's reputation. Always talk him up, never down. Place a sweetly charitable construction on all his actions and words. Be ready promptly and earnestly to defend him at all times against hurtful, malicious attacks. The devil feels he has achieved a mighty victory when he can damage the reputation of a faithful preacher. Defend your pastor. Never hear him spoken against without taking his part. Express your firm and dignified displeasure with the worldling who would make him ridiculous, the scorner who would render him contemptible, or the base defamer who would brand him as immoral. Your pastor's reputation is his strength. You can help him by guarding it lovingly and courageously.—Baptist Courier.

Count Von Moltke in his lifetime told the Germans a plain, though not very acceptable, truth, when he said: "Beer is a far more dangerous enemy to Germany than all the armies of France." Were France to invade her territory thousands would rally to the defense of the Fatherland, yet intemperance attacks the home and community and performs its destructive work year after year, and she looks on with blinded indifference and unconcern!—Presbyterian.

Tact has its basis in unselfishness. It grows out of thinking of another while you are talking or dealing with him. Even though a man may be exercising tact for selfish purposes, he must give the other person the first place in his thoughts and plans, for the time being, in order to enable him to be tactful. Tact grows out of and indicates consideration for the rights and feelings of others; a lack of tact shows a lack of consideration for their feelings and rights.—Sunday-School Times.

Postmaster-General Gary has announced himself in favor of the immediate establishment of a system of postal savings banks in this country. He proposes a commission to which the matter shall be submitted, and which will consider the various systems in operation throughout the world, and report as to the most available system for this country. It is quite likely that a bill for the establishment of a system will be introduced into the next Congress.—New York Advocate.

Figures fail to express the quality of work. The regeneration of one heathen may mark a greater work of grace than the conversion of a thousand who have a Christian civilization as their heritage, and are invested by an atmosphere laden with sympathetic influences. One Roman Catholic is a type of that entire church, and one heathen has in him all the roots of heathenism. God speed our missionaries who preach a gospel that can save to the uttermost!—Review of Missions.

As the people in some sections are so panic stricken that they refuse to receive New Orleans papers lest they may thereby become infected, we present the following which shows that there is no danger from that source:

Postmaster-General Gary has authorized the announcement that all mails leaving New Orleans, in any direction, are thoroughly fumigated under directions prepared by Surgeon-General Wyman, of the Marine Hospital service, and issued by the second assistant postmaster-general. There is no danger, he added, of yellow fever's transmission through the New Orleans mails.

It is said that a great orator once gave this advice to a young speaker (Mr. Pitt to Lord Wellesley) who asked his counsel: "You are more anxious about words than about ideas. Remember that if you are thinking of words, you will have no ideas; but if you have ideas, words will come of themselves." That is true as regards ordinary eloquence. It is no less true in considering the eloquence of religion. In theology, in religious conversation, in religious ordinances, we ought as much as possible to try to get beneath the phrases we use, and never to rest satisfied with the words, however excellent, until we have ascertained what we mean by them.

Miss Helen Culver, whose gift of four biological laboratories, costing $325,000, and an endowment fund of $700,000 to the University of Chicago, was formally handed over to that institution a few days ago, said in commanding the enterprise: "This is the happiest moment of my life. I believe this money could not have been utilized to a nobler purpose than to devote it to that science whose object is to assuage the sufferings of humanity and to make life enjoyable here on earth." These words reminds us that one of the notable signs of our times is the increasing number of men and women of wealth who have learned the joy of beneficence, who have realized that their riches are held by them in trust, and who have felt the exalted pleasure which comes to a human soul when it imitates the spirit and ministry of Him who said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."—Central Advocate.

MINDEN HEARD FROM.

The second response to the call to the Epworth Leagues of our Conference to assist in getting up a repair fund for our college has been received from the League at Minden. Through their secretary, Bro. E. L. Stewart, the young Methodists of that town send in ten dollars as their subscription. We always had faith in North Louisiana. It is the land of our nativity, and we are not ashamed of it. Let us hear from others. If you can't bring the money yourself, send it by means of the postoffice. In spite of the quarantine, we still get our mails. We've heard from the northern and southern branches of our Conference; now let the next response be from the "Middling" Methodists! THOS. CARTER.

Grenada Collegiate Institute.

As the yellow fever excitement came on while we were in the midst of our opening and kept a large number of pupils from entering, it was deemed best to suspend literary work till after the excitement should pass off. The excellent sanitary condition and remarkably good health of Grenada is such that we can safely resume just as soon as the quarantine is raised. The date of the new opening will be duly given. The Conservatory of Music is in full operation now. All time will be made up and the full course taught by the same excellent faculty.

A KLONDYKE GOLD MINE AT HOME.

DONT BURN YOUR MONEY!

We are pleased to call the attention of our subscribers to the most marvelous invention of the nineteenth century. It is known as the Self-Heating Flat Iron and is unlike any device that is invented to iron with. As flat irons are usually heated on the cooking stove, you consume a large amount of fuel unnecessarily, because to heat two or three irons hot enough for ironing you have to heat up the whole stove and keep it hot. This makes the room hot and makes ironing one of the most unpleasant, unhealthy and dreaded labors of the household, besides consuming a large amount of fuel. With the self-heating flat iron all is changed. The iron is heated by a small burner in the iron, which maintains a perfect even heat, so it is impossible for you to burn the clothes you are ironing. You do not have to run from stove to table to change irons, nor do you have to iron in a heated room, but can get in the shade and cool. It costs only a half a cent an hour to keep your iron hot. The handle is always cool, the iron is light and of convenient size and you have no trouble in getting it just the proper temperature. This is an all-important feature; if iron is too hot, it makes the starch so miserably yellow that it dishearteus many a tired wife and mother, and not only does it discolor the starch, but burns the clothes. It saves your wives' saves your cash—saves your clothes—saves your fuel. Wherever the Self-Heating Flat Iron has been seen it has created the greatest excitement and it is easily estimated that over one million of these irons will be required to fill the demand. It is low priced, simple in construction and can not get out of order. How many millions of tired, worn-out women whose back and limbs have ached after several hours ironing would not sacrifice a new bonnet or a new dress or some other luxury to secure an iron that has so many advantages. Experienced canvassers state "they never seen anything sell like the Self-Heating Flat Iron;" they make from $15.00 to $100.00 a week selling it without any trouble.

We would advise any of our subscribers who may want a perfect Self-Heating Flat Iron for their own use, who may want to make money, or who may be out of employment and who may desire a nice clean business with plenty of money, to write to J. F. Casey & Co., 1151 St Charles St., St. Louis, Mo., as there will be an immense demand for the self-heating flat iron this Summer, as the hot weather comes on. Everyone will want one and a great deal of money can be made selling them. Agents easily make from $15.00 to $30.00 a week and find it the easiest thing in the world to sell.

The company is composed of well-known business men of St. Louis and any of our readers will be fortunate to secure a position with them.

"THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD:

OUR SAVIOUR IN ART."

Cost over $100,000 to publish. Contains nearly 200 full-page engravings of our Saviour, direct from the world's great paintings by Great Masters. Agents are taking from three to twenty orders per day. The book is so beautiful that when people see it they want it. "FIRST GLANCE AT THE PICTURES BROUGHT TEARS TO MY EYES. 12 orders first day. Cleared $150 first week's work with this book."—J. C. BOYD. "A DREAM OF LOVELINESS. 48 orders first week."—B. WARD. "MOST BEAUTIFUL BOOK I EVER SAW. 27 orders first three days."—ALENA FARR. "77 ORDERS FIRST TEN DAYS' WORK."—J. O. SIKWAN. "Some high-grade man or woman of good church standing should secure the agency here at once," says every editor, "as $500 can soon be made taking orders for it." Finest book for Birthday and Christmas Gift ever published. Bound in Pearl White and Gold, in Royal Purple and Gold, and in Levant Morocco and Gold. Size, 10x12 inches. Also a man or woman of good church standing can secure position of Manager of this territory, to devote all their time to employing and drilling agents and corresponding with them. Good salary. In Old Mexico.

Miss Belle Kearney, who has been so fitly designated as "The Frances Willard of the South," will spend November and December in the Land of the Montezumas, reaching Chihuahua about Nov. 16, and the City of Mexico about the second week in December, and will sail over the Gulf of Mexico from Vera Cruz back to New Orleans. We trust all missionaries of whatever nationality or church, all the way from Chihuahua to Vera Cruz, will mark these dates, and wherever possible gather English-speaking audiences to hear this thrilling, eloquent and earnest advocate of temperance and righteousness. And where English-speaking audiences can not be gathered, furnish her the very best of interpreters and invite all the most cultivated and appreciative Spanish-speaking people to hear her.

There are few countries in the world much more in need of such work than Mexico. The fermented sap or milk of the pulque plant is as great a curse to the masses of Mexico as Vodka is to the 80,000,000 Russian peasants. The gorgeous pictures of the pulque shops, frescoed within and without, with whole families—fathers, mothers and children—all drinking together, mothers failing in the streets of the City of Mexico, and immense railroad trains one after another pulling into the city loaded exclusively with this blighting, stupefying curse, still haunt our memory after a decade of years. The children of the schools who go home to dinner and drink their noon supply of pulque are in the afternoon really less susceptible to learning and culture than sober puppies or pigs.

Few American women have ever so impressed England and New England as this gifted daughter of Mississippi, of whom the whole South may be very justly proud. Lady Henry Somerset regards her as one of the most effective platform speakers of all the temperance workers of to day. Miss Kearney will give the readers of the Advocate the benefit of her observations in that unique and picturesque Southern Republic beyond the Rio Grande. Again we say to all missionaries, patriots and philanthropists in that land, to give her the right hand of fellowship and a broad-gauge right-of-way, and we will stand surety for the satisfactory results of her work.—St. Louis Advocate.

Whitworth College.

Whitworth College opened its thirty-ninth session, on Sept. 8, with an enrollment of 65 boarding pupils. The spread of yellow fever and consequent quarantine regulations have prevented any growth in our patronage, but the work of the class-room is going on satisfactorily. We are in no danger of infection. Our town being high and removed from all swamps, and having passed through the great epidemic of 1878 without a single case of yellow fever, our patrons have a right to feel that their daughters are safer here than they would be in their own homes.

We urge upon all our patrons who were out off by the fever to send us their daughters as soon as the quarantine regulations will permit. We have made arrangements to give the young ladies who come in late extra care, so that they may complete the year's work satisfactorily.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Epworth League

BY REV. HERMANN W. KNICKERBOCKER, 813 Poucher St., New Orleans.

TOPIC FOR OCTOBER.

ST. PAUL'S DOCTRINE OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

OCT. 3.—CONVICTION FOR SIN. (Rom. viii, 20, 27; ix, 1, 2; I. Cor. ii, 10-12.)

1. The references given have nothing whatever to do with the subject. Patience is one of this writer's virtues that has been considerably exercised because of his relation to the Epworth League Topic Card. We would say a good deal if we said all we think. We have decided, however, to "let patience have her perfect work," and feeling assured that when this topic card is exhausted, she will have accomplished it, we are strengthened in our resolve to 'grin and bear it."

2. Conviction for sin is the result of a divine illumination of the heart. The Holy Spirit shows the soul its own sinfulness. There is probably no experience of the human being that is more terrible than to feel its own wretchedness and guilt. The anguish comes not so much from a view of the black record of the past as it does from a sight of the black and guilty heart of the present. To tear the heart from the bosom and fling it away would be relief. "O, wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord."

3. Conviction for sin is a necessary preliminary to salvation. Man will not give up his sin unless he is first convinced of it. As this is God's work, it is always done. The restlessness and lack of peace in the universal human heart is partly due to this conviction—to the feeling that it is not right and ought to be. From an exterior point of view the world seems placid in its sin, but the waters of the heart are troubled.

4. The natural channel for the forces generated by conviction is repentance unto faith. These are but different stages in the same process. Conviction, repentance, faith, complete the circle from God back to God. But man has power to arrest this movement—to quench the Spirit. What an awful power and responsibility! One way of quenching the Spirit is by simple resistance, but by far the more effectual way is by giving the awakened soul another stupefying draught of sin. We know a young man in this city to-day who, some years ago, was under deep conviction for sin. After resisting the moving of the Spirit for several days, he went deliberately and bought a lottery ticket, and immediately the Spirit left him. He said that as soon as he sinned, he was bothered no longer. And, so far as we know, he has not been "bothered" since that day. "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God."

A Correction.

The papers in Vicksburg and Memphis, in reporting yellow fever cases, say we have had one suspicious case, and that one is my son, Bennie B. Parker. Our dear boy has been very sick indeed with malarial fever, but never had any symptom of yellow fever. In fact, there never was a time in the history of the city of Jackson when there was as little sickness of any kind as now.

For fear that this report may injure the business and educational interests of our city, I make this correction. J. S. PARKER.

The Holman Self-Pronouncing S. S. Teacher's Bible.

Divinity Circuit, Round Corners, etc.

Concordance, with Contexts, over 40,000 References; Index to Persons, Places and Subjects, 16,000 References; Scripture Atlas, with Index; Glossary of Bible Words; Bible Calendar; Summary and Analyses of the Old and New Testaments.

A Self-Pronouncing Dictionary of Proper Names and Foreign Words contained in the Bible, comprising about 3,500 words, giving the pronunciation, the meaning, and the location of the text where the word occurs for the first time.

Exhaustive Articles on Biblical History, Geography, Topography, Natural History, Ethnology, Botany, Chronology, Music and Poetry; a Complete Harmony of the Gospels, Tables of Parables, Miracles, Prophecies, Prayers, Money, Weights and Measures, Jewish Sects and Orders, etc.

TWELVE FULL-PAGE MAPS IN COLORS.

Every proper name in the text is syllabified and accented, and has the vowels marked according to the most authoritative modern standards of pronunciation. The text is in exact conformity with that of the world-famous Oxford S. S. Teacher's Bible. All the valuable "Helps to the Study of the Bible" contained in the Oxford Bible are retained.

The only Teacher's Bible with a self-pronouncing text. No similar Bible was ever obtainable heretofore; in fact, no publishers ever attempted its publication.

"The essence of fifty expensive volumes, by men of sacred learning, is condensed in these 'Helps.'"

The large-type (Bourgeois) edition sells to persons who are not subscriber for $3.75. Our subscribers get it, conditions specified below, for $2.35. The same Bible in Minion type, which is somewhat smaller than Bourgeois, we offer to our subscribers, on conditions named below, for $1.55. To those who are not subscribers we sell at $2.75. We also handle an edition in still smaller type (Emerald). Our subscribers get this for $1.00.

In order to get anyone of these at these rates it is necessary to pay your subscription one year in advance, viz., to September, '98. (A little later it will be October, '98.)

For twenty cents we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside of the book.

Address REV. W. C. BLACK, 512 Camp St., New Orleans, La.

Some publishers are putting off Bibles on their subscribers which they claim are just as good as the Holman. There is no other as good. It has all the Oxford helps and the self-pronouncing feature besides. Every person, whether educated or uneducated, needs help in pronouncing Bible names. The Holman Bible gives you the pronunciation, not in an appendix where it has to be hunted up, but in the book itself wherever the name occurs. Paper and binding are excellent. See offer on our fifth page.

First Shot Fired by Farragut's Fleet.

On the twenty-eighth of May, 1862, Vicksburg was bombarded by Commodore Farragut's fleet, which, having come up from New Orleans, was anchored around the bend below the city. A number of shots were fired which fell short. At last, however, the Federal gunners succeeded in getting the range of the city, and a 24-pound Parrott shell came crashing into the Crawford Street Methodist Church. This shell is now to be seen embedded in the south wall of the church, and is a familiar sight to residents and visitors to this city.

In view of the proposed demolition of the old church and the erection on the same site of a new building, the disposition of the historic shell has become a matter of interest. It has been suggested that it might be sold to some person interested in collecting relics of the Civil War, or to some museum of war relics.

The Building Committee of the new church have decided to invite correspondence with any party interested, with a view to the sale of the shell.

For eighteen years I was not able to do any work, was confined to the house three years, often confined to the bed: took cold on the slightest exposure, eyes were weak and discharged great deal of mucous, was deaf in right ear, suffered intensely with pain in head, had fainting spells, often thought would lose my mind, and was a misery to myself and friends. Eighteen months ago used Aerial Medication, in two weeks hearing was fully restored, Catarrh gradually subsided, and in six months was entirely cured. It has been one year since I used the treatment, the disease has not returned, and I feel like a new person.—MRS. KATE ELLEGOOD, 2221 Walnut St., St. Louis, Mo.

34 years ago I had risings in my ears, had Catarrh 30 years, hearing failed, for many years could not hear loud conversation two feet away, had continual roaring in ears, hoarseness, throat sore and dry, intense pain over eyes, and "stopped-up" feeling in my head. General health so impaired was not able to work. Used Aerial Medication in '92. It stopped the roaring pain and soreness, fully restored my hearing, for five years have been free from Catarrh.—WM. F. BOWERS, Howell, Ark.

HOME CIRCLE.

MOTHER, HOME, AND HEAVEN.

BY MARY J. MUCKLE.

There are three words that sweetly blend,
That on the heart are graven:
A precious soothing balm they lend—
They're Mother, Home, and Heaven.

They twine a wreath of beauteous flowers,
Which, placed on memory's urn,
Will e'en the longest, gloomiest hours
To golden sunlight turn!

They form a chain whose every link
Is free from base alloy;
A stream where whosoever drinks
Will find refreshing joy!

They build an altar where each day
Love's offering is renewed;
And peace illumes with genial ray
Life's darkened solitude!

If from our side the first has fled,
And home be but a name,
Let's strive the narrow path to tread,
That we the last may gain!

A Boy Who Worked Up.

One day, many years ago, a bright boy found employment in a photograph gallery in Nashville, Tenn. His wages were small, but he took good care of them, and in the course of time he had saved up a snug sum of money. One day a friend, less thrifty than he, came to him with a long face, and asked for a loan of money, offering a book as security. Although the other knew there was little probability of his ever being repaid, he could not refuse the request.

The grateful lad went away in such haste that he left the book behind. The kind youth examined the volume with enriosity. It was a work on astronomy, by Dick, and it so fascinated him that he sat up all night studying it. He had never read anything which so filled him with delight. He determined to learn all that he could about the wonders of the heavens. He began thenceforth to read everything he could obtain relating to astronomy.

The next step was to buy a small spy-glass, and night after night he spent most of the hours on the roof of his house studying the stars. He seemed, second hand, the tube of a larger spy-glass, into which he fitted an eye-piece, and sent to Philadelphia for an object glass. By and by he obtained a five-inch glass, which, as you know, is an instrument of considerable size.

Meanwhile he worked faithfully in the shop of the photographer; but his nights brought him rare delight, for he never wearied of tracing out the wonders and marvels of the worlds around us. With the aid of his large spy-glass he discovered two comets before they were seen by any of the professional astronomers, whose superior instruments were continually scanning the heavens in search of the celestial wanderers. This exploit, you may well suppose, made the boy famous. He was invited by the professors in Vanderbilt University to go thither and see what he could do with their six-inch telescope. In the course of the following four years he discovered six comets. He was next engaged by the Lick Observatory. With the aid of its magnificent instrument he discovered eight comets, and last Summer astonished the world by discovering the fifth satellite of Jupiter. He invented a new method of photographing the nebulæ in the milky way, and has shown an originality approaching genius in his work in star photography.

Perhaps you have already guessed the name of this famous astronomer, which is Prof. E. E. Barnard (now in charge of the Yerkes Observatory of Chicago University), and this is the story of how he worked up.—Chicago Record.

Echoes.

All boys and girls have, at some time or other, enjoyed listening to echoes. An echo is a sound wave, reflected and repeated by striking an opposing surface. There are some very remarkable echoes. A writer in 1766 declares that near Milan there was an echo that repeated the report of a pistol shot sixty times, but no such echo is now known. Sir John Herschel states that there was an echo at Woodstock Park that repeated seventeen syllables in the daytime and twenty at night. In 1839 Dr. Page noticed one at Belvidere, in the State of New York, that repeated three syllables eleven times, and that with great distinctness; and also in Fairfax county, Va., that repeated thirteen syllables three times.

Other wonderful echoes are those of the Welterhorn, or Jungfrau, one near Coblentz, and one at the lakes of Killarney. There is a gallery in Europe called the "whispering gallery," because anything uttered in the faintest whisper is echoed back in very loud tones.

But there are other echoes besides those of the voice. Our spirit, actions and looks are reproduced in those around us, and hence may be said to be echoed back. The boy who goes out with a bright, happy face will see his good humor reflected in other faces; but he who goes out sullen and frowning will be apt to find frowns upon every face he meets. I have somewhere read of a little boy who, with a scowl on his face, looked into a large and beautiful mirror. Of course he saw a scowling boy, and, not stopping to notice that it was only himself, became very angry; the boy in the glass also became angry, and only when the real scowling boy, in a fit of temper, had broken the mirror did he discover that he had struck at his own image. Grown persons, like this silly boy, often go through life angry at others, when it is themselves at fault. Kindness awakes kindness, and bad temper provokes the same evil spirit in others. At the great day of judgment the words and deeds of a lifetime will be echoed back. How important it is that we only utter pure, truthful and loving words, and that we perform only kind and noble deeds! There are echoes before the day of judgment. Youth decides the character of our later years, for old age is the echo of early life.—Rev. Jesse L. Gilbert, in Sunday-school Advocate.

The Sunshiny Woman.

When we come to count over the qualities that endear our friends to us, almost all of us think first of cheerfulness. The sunshiny man or woman, who brings a bright thought or word, or even a glad smile with them, are always welcome as the flowers in May. Each heart knoweth its own bitterness, each soul has its own troubles and trials and vexations, and so we turn to the one who can lighten our sadness with the radiance of a cheerful spirit.

Sunshine of the soul is largely a matter of cultivation, for there are but few so unfortunate as not to have had some grief. The selfish sit down and brood over their sorrows. They give themselves up to fits of despondency and moodiness, and are a kind of moral wet blanket on the pleasures of all with whom they come in contact. They tell you their sorrows and bedew you with their tears until it seems that there must be a kind of luxury of woe in which they rejoice.

After all, the cheerful spirit is but an example of "that brave attitude towards life" of which Stephenson wrote. It is a courageous bearing of inevitable burdens. A determination not to fret, and not to add to the sorrows of the world the griefs of one's own heart.

A woman who had had many sorrows and heavy burdens to bear, but who was noted for her cheerful spirit, once said in explanation: "You know I have had no money. I had nothing I could give but myself, and so I made the resolution that I would never sadden anyone else with my troubles. I have laughed and told jokes when I could have wept. I have always smiled in the face of every misfortune. I have tried never to let any one go from my presence without a happy word, or a bright thought to carry with them. And happiness makes happiness. I, myself, am happier than I would have been had I sat down and bemoaned my fate."

This gospel of happiness is one that every woman should lay to heart. What it means to a man to come home at night to a cheerful wife, no one but he who has had to fight the hard battle of life knows. If he is prosperous, it is an added joy; but it is in misfortune that it shines like a star in the darkness. A complaining wife can kill the last bit of hope and courage in a sorely troubled heart, while a cheerful one gives new courage to begin the fight over again.

The mother who lets her children grow up to be moody and discontented, subject to blues and sulks, is failing in her first duty. She is handicapping them in the race of life. Cheerfulness is one of the prime requisites to success and happiness. The sunshiny man or woman has everyone for a friend, for this sad old earth must borrow its mirth, it has sorrow enough of its own.—Selected.

How to Abolish Worry.

How can worry be abolished? That is the question which we propose to answer. Simply drop the morbid idea that causes it and put in its place a true thought. Let go of it! If it comes back again, kick it out as you would a robber entering your room. Whenever it appears drive it away. Stamp your feet on the floor. Clinch your fists if need be, but in some way oust it. Do not let it have possession of the chambers of the mind, to leave its evil effects. But do not fail to put other ideas, other thoughts in its place. If not, other and perhaps worse ideas involuntarily come in and fill the void, and the last state of the person may be worse than the first.—Journal of Hygiene.

Loose talk seems to be one of the hardest habits to break and to overcome, when once established; that is, the habit of talking in a way that, if it is not exactly vulgar, borders on it and is an insinuation of vulgarity. A great many people think it is not wrong to laugh at a vulgar insinuation or a sentence that may have two meanings, and very much of this goes on among both sexes, unfortunately. The consequence is that our young boys and girls grow up with loose ideas, and only a little start in this line is necessary to make great inroads on pure thoughts, and pure lives even; for if one's talk is impure, either by inference or openly, it is sure to contaminate the character and hurt the influence.

We know of some excellent Christian people, otherwise, who have not yet overcome the habit of telling an occasional story that borders on vulgarity, and who would not hesitate to laugh at someone who told a story that insinuated, at least, something vulgar.

There needs to be a strong stand taken by God's people on this question, for it means so much. Let us remember that this is one of the devil's keenest and easiest ways of hindering the work of Christ in the hearts of his followers.

But what we have said is entirely aside from a great and powerful reason why we should not indulge in anything of this kind—because the world looks on astonished and disgusted, and puts us down at once as hypocrites, if we do, or say, or countenance such things.—Exchange.

For Over Fifty Years

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for Diarrhœa. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

The world is not a playground; it is a schoolroom. Life is not a holiday, but an education. And the one eternal lesson for us all is how better we can love. What makes a man a good cricketer? Practice. What makes a man a good artist, a good sculptor, a good musician? Practice. What makes a man a good linguist, a good stenographer? Practice. What makes a man a good man? Practice. Nothing else. There is nothing capricious about religion. We do not get the soul in different ways, under different laws, from those in which we get the body and the mind. If a man does not exercise his arm, he develops no biceps muscles; and if a man does not exercise his soul, he acquires no muscle in his soul, no strength of character, no vigor of moral fibre, nor beauty of spiritual growth. Love is not a thing of enthusiastic emotion. It is a rich, strong, manly, vigorous expression of the whole round Christian character—the Christ like nature in its fullest development. And the constituents of this great character are only to be built up by ceaseless practice.—Professor Drummond.

Memories bring gladness or sadness according to their moral element. To revisit the scenes of one's earlier life recalls memories which give pleasure or give pain. Every remembered act of kindness toward another, or of opportunity improved, is a precious treasure. Every recalled instance of misdoing, or of neglected occasion of helping others or of gaining good, gives an added pang of hopeless regret. Memories are a permanent investment, and, once made, they can not be changed. Now is the time to make such investments for future income. The words and deeds of to-day will bring a steady return for the coming years.—Sunday-School Times.

The successful people in this world are commonly those who make the most of their opportunities. That martial mastiff, Frederick of Prussia, defied half of Europe to conquer him for seven bloody years, simply by his intuitions of the right moments, and his prompt use of them. His famous pupil, Napoleon, was the king of opportunities; he used to say: "There is a crisis in every battle, a ten or fifteen minutes on which the fate of the battle depends. To gain this is victory, to lose it is defeat." In every battle of life there are pivot occasions on which the greatest interests are depending. The loss of these never can be retrieved.—Selected.

Recently a Bradford man gave his wife a mammoth lamp for a birthday present. She gave it his name, and when he asked why, she replied: "Well, you know, dear, it is handsome to look at, requires a good deal of attention, is sometimes unsteady on its legs, is liable to explode when half full, flares up occasionally, is always out at bedtime, and is bound to smoke."—Exchange.

The more godly a man is, the heavier often doth he find his crosses, for the pain of exile is the greater because of his love.—Thomas a Kempis.

Sleep after Eating.

Advocates of the after-dinner nap have a powerful, and to them all-convincing, argument in the fact that most animals sleep immediately after eating. Yet the propriety of such a habit among human beings bids fair to be an open question for some time to come.

One authority has recently added his mite to the collection of statistics upon this interesting subject by making a series of experiments upon two persons of normal digestive abilities.

The stomachs of these two persons were emptied a few hours after meals, some of which had been followed by sleep and others not, and the contents analyzed.

The normal stomach acts upon its contents by churning them about, and in this manner subjecting every particle to the action of the digestive fluids.

The above-mentioned investigator found, as the result of his experiments, that the constant effect of sleep is to weaken the churning movements of the stomach, while the acid quality of the digestive juices is at the same time increased.

On the other hand, he found—what is quite as interesting—that simple repose in a horizontal position stimulated the motions of the stomach without increasing the acidity of its juices.

The conclusion reached by this experimenter was that while a recumbent position after eating is not to be regarded as harmful, but in the majority of cases as beneficial, one should be cautious about sleeping directly after a meal. Especially should this caution be observed in cases where the stomach is naturally weak, or where there is an over-acidity of the digestive fluids.

When all is said, however, the above experiment proves little more than that in such matters each person is a law unto himself, that the after-dinner nap differs in no respect from other habits, which can be indulged in with impunity by some, while they work havoc with the health and happiness of others. Rest after eating is certainly beneficial, both from a rational and a physiological standpoint. Whether sleep can be advantageously indulged in is a question that must be determined by the individual himself by careful experiment.—Youth's Companion.

DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER

40 YEARS THE STANDARD.

IT IS EASY TO TELL.

People who fail to look after their health are like the carpenter who neglects to sharpen his tools. People are not apt to get anxious about their health soon enough. If you are "not quite well" or "half sick" have you ever thought that your kidneys may be the cause of your sickness?

It is easy to tell by setting aside your urine for twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys. When urine stains linen it is evidence of kidney trouble. Too frequent desire to urinate, scanty supply, pain or dull ache in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

There is satisfaction in knowing that the great remedy, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp Root, fulfills every wish in relieving weak or diseased kidneys and all forms of bladder and urinary troubles. Not only does Swamp-Root give new life and activity to the kidneys—the cause of trouble, but by treating the kidneys it acts as a tonic for the entire constitution. If you need a medicine take Swamp-Root—it cures. Sold by druggists, price, fifty cents and one dollar, or by sending your address and the name of this paper to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., you may have a sample bottle of this great discovery sent to you free by mail.

AT THREESCORE YEARS AND TEN.

BY REV. B. F. WHITE.

Years threescore, plus three and seven,
I have traveled toward heaven;
Childhood, led by parent hand,
Toward the blessed, happy land;
Boyhood's feeble, suffering day
Saw me staggering up the way;
Youthhood saw me climbing still
Up the charming, holy hill;
Manhood, led by the Savior's hand,
Up heaven's steeps, so pure and grand;
In riper years the battle strong
Seemed very hard and very long;
In age I saw the mountain peaks
Of which the Master often speaks;
Now light from every heavenly hill
Doth my trusting spirit thrill
With hope and peace and God-like love
Akin to that which shouts above;
Look! look! the gates of pearl are open wide,
And in I'll sail on sweeling tide.
Come all who've heard my warning voice,
And with me now and e'er rejoice.

OBITUARIES.

ENOCHS—JOHN FLETCHER ENOCHS, the subject of this paper, was born in Rankin county, Miss., May 25, 1827, and died at his home in Copiah county, Miss., Aug. 3, 1897. He was a son of John R. and Mrs. Polly Enochs, who were the parents of a large family of substantial Methodist children. He was converted at the old Sardis Church, in his native county, in the year 1845, and about the same time united with the church, then being a youth of eighteen years. His conversion was thorough, and he developed into an intelligent, active, and strong Christian manhood.

In early life he was married to Miss Rebecca Jane Black, a lady in every way worthy of him, whose strong character and beautiful Christian life were a benediction to her husband and children, and are a fond and pleasant memory to her many surviving friends and relatives. Ten sons and one daughter were the gifts of God to bless this happy couple. Three of these sons, with their saintly mother, preceded the husband and father to the better world.

In his advanced years he was married to Mrs. Cornelia Bridges, who survives to mourn the loss of an affectionate husband.

Our departed brother provided well for his household, and was venerated and loved by all the members of that happy circle. There were features in his character and life that deserve to be held in remembrance. He was a man of industry and perseverance, and succeeded well in his worldly affairs. His strict integrity gave him the confidence of business men of his acquaintance. His strong convictions and moral courage made him positive and forceful in his character. He sometimes came in conflict with his brethren; but his heart was warm and generous, and he was always ready to make the "amende honorable" when he saw that he was in the wrong. While he may have seemed somewhat unyielding in his views, he held in his noble Christian heart no malice for those who differed with him. He was a friend of the widow and of the orphan, entered into the sympathies of those who were in sorrow, and extended a helping hand to those who were in need. As a steward of the manifold grace of God, he sought to use his Lord's money, placed in his hands, to do good, and to glorify his Master. He was zealous of good works. In the prayer meeting and in the Sunday-school he was an efficient laborer. He believed in protracted and camp meetings, and entered heartily into the revival enterprises of his church.

As one of the founders of the Hennington Camp Meeting, he freely expended brain, muscle and money upon the enterprise, and did more, perhaps, than any other man to establish it. His efficiency in maintaining perfect order on the campus, his unbounded hospitality in his tent, and his earnest labors around the altar among the penitents, are worthy of the imitation of the present generation. He had a Christian home. He carefully trained up his children in the way they should go. He endeavored to shield them from the corrupting influences of the world, and to gather about the family the hallowed influences of the Sabbath and of the sanctuary. The surviving children of that home rise up to call him blessed.

For several years before his death failing health put a stop to his active labors, but he had grace to suffer as well as to do the will of his God. The Captain of his salvation was made perfect through suffering, and he patiently accepted the discipline of affliction that he might be perfected for a habitation in heaven. He could not talk much during these weary months, but his face would often glow with the rapture that thrilled him under the inspiration of Christian conversation, a hymn, or a prayer. At last the weary wheels of life stood still, and his soul returned to God. We buried his body at Bethesda in hope of the resurrection of the just. W. B. LEWIS.

TAYLOR—Mrs. MARGARET EDNA TAYLOR (nee Melbourne) was born at Snowhill, Md., about eighty-one years ago. Her family were among the earliest families in that section, and her father was a staunch old Methodist of the early Wesleyan type.

Bro. Melbourne's home was always open to the Methodist preacher, and many a weary itinerant enjoyed the cheer and welcome of his fireside and board. Among his guests were many of the early worthies of the [illegible] Bishops Garretson and Lorenzo Dow were frequently at his home.

Bro. Melbourne was for many years a class leader, and fond of going to camp meetings. Amid such surroundings as these Sister Taylor was reared, and, as a consequence, she gave herself to God in early life. She became a member of the Methodist Church in 1830 at Snowhill, the appointment being in the bounds of the Philadelphia Conference.

She married Mr. Sewell Taylor in 1843 at Snowhill, and came to New Orleans to live the same year. On coming to New Orleans she united by letter with the Poydras Street Methodist Church, Rev. Mr. Nicholson being the pastor. At the burning of the Poydras Street Church she placed her membership at Carondelet Street, and afterwards, in the latter part of the fifties, she deposited it at the Felicity Street Church, where it remained until her death.

She knew many weeks, or we may say months, before her death that she was not to live very long, and proceeded to set her house in order. I saw her last some weeks before her death, and while conversing she told me that she knew she was not to live very much longer, and, consequently, had seen to having her tomb built. She seemed to have no fears of death, and was living much in the past. Her conversation was of her childhood and the gracious times she used to have at the camp meetings back in Maryland.

On the night of her death she was seized with one of the paroxysms attendant upon her trouble—angina pectoris—and as time was scarce, Rev. S. S. Keener was sent for, her pastor living at a greater distance. He not being at home, Rev. S. C. Byrd, of the Presbyterian Church, was called in. Mr. Byrd had prayer with Sister Taylor, which she seemed to enjoy. The services at her funeral were conducted by her pastor.

The above notice of Sister Taylor by Rev. Jno. F. Foster, her pastor, is all that need be said. I found her a member of Poydras Street Church in 1848, when I was stationed there. She was a very unobtrusive, firm Methodist, refined and gentle in all the relations of life. Mr. Taylor and wife kept an open house for the preachers, and greatly enjoyed their presence. They were warm, personal friends of my daughters and sons, and showed it by many delicate attentions. My family grew up to respect and love her. I doubt not she graces the court of God's elect in the realm above as she did the church below.

BLANKS—MARY LESTELLA BLANKS, daughter of C. D. and Olevia Blanks, and granddaughter of Rev. T. Z Blanks and Rev. Alfred Pace, died Sept. 8, 1897. Little Mary was born near Sunflower, Lauderdale county, Miss., July 1, 1889.

Mary will be greatly missed at Sabbath-school, where she was a regular attendant, always answering to roll-call by repeating some passage of Scripture; but while we miss her sweet voice here, we know that she has gone to join the redeemed saints of earth, who have gone before.

Grieve not, fond parents; your darling has gone from you, but you will some day meet her "over the river," where there are no more sad partings with loved ones.

M. W. ETHRIDGE.

Hookston, Miss.

WHITTINGTON—Little RUBIE, daughter of John E. and Minnie Whittington, of Zachary, La., was loaned to her parents by the Lord on the twenty-fourth of July, 1897, and called home to God, Sept. 16, 1897, aged one month and twenty-two days.

Her stay with her parents was short here, but if they are faithful, the association will be resumed in heaven and continued through eternity.

"Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God." THOS. J. UPTON.

FORSYTH—JOSIE FOUNTAIN, youngest son of Rev. W. G. Forsyth and Mary Zion Howell—his wife—died at the parsonage in Pearlington, Sept. 13, 1897, after a short, but fatal attack of cholera infantum. He had only been with us one year and nine months. He was a bright, interesting child, but the opening flower, now closed to mortal sight, blooms with amaranthine beauty and glory in the Eden above. His fond parents and grandparents miss him so much, but by God's grace we will meet him again in the sweet by-and-by. Until then, good-by.

HIS GRANDFATHER.

WILLIAMS—Resolutions of respect from Hester's Chapel Epworth League on the death of Mr. WILLIAM P. WILLIAMS, who departed this life Aug. 9, 1897:

Whereas, Our heavenly Father, in his wise providence, has seen fit to take from us our esteemed brother, William Williams; And, whereas, We deeply deplore his loss and lament his death; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Williams, Hester's Chapel Epworth League feel one of its most faithful members and active leaders.

Resolved, That our Sunday-school has been deprived of a punctual scholar and an interested worker.

Resolved, That the community has been bereaved of a noble young man whose pure and spotless character we commend.

Resolved, That it is to the great satisfaction of his relatives and many friends that he stated before death that he was going to heaven.

Resolved, That we tender the grief-stricken family and relatives our heartfelt sympathy and condolence.

Deafness Can Not Be Cured

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that can not be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

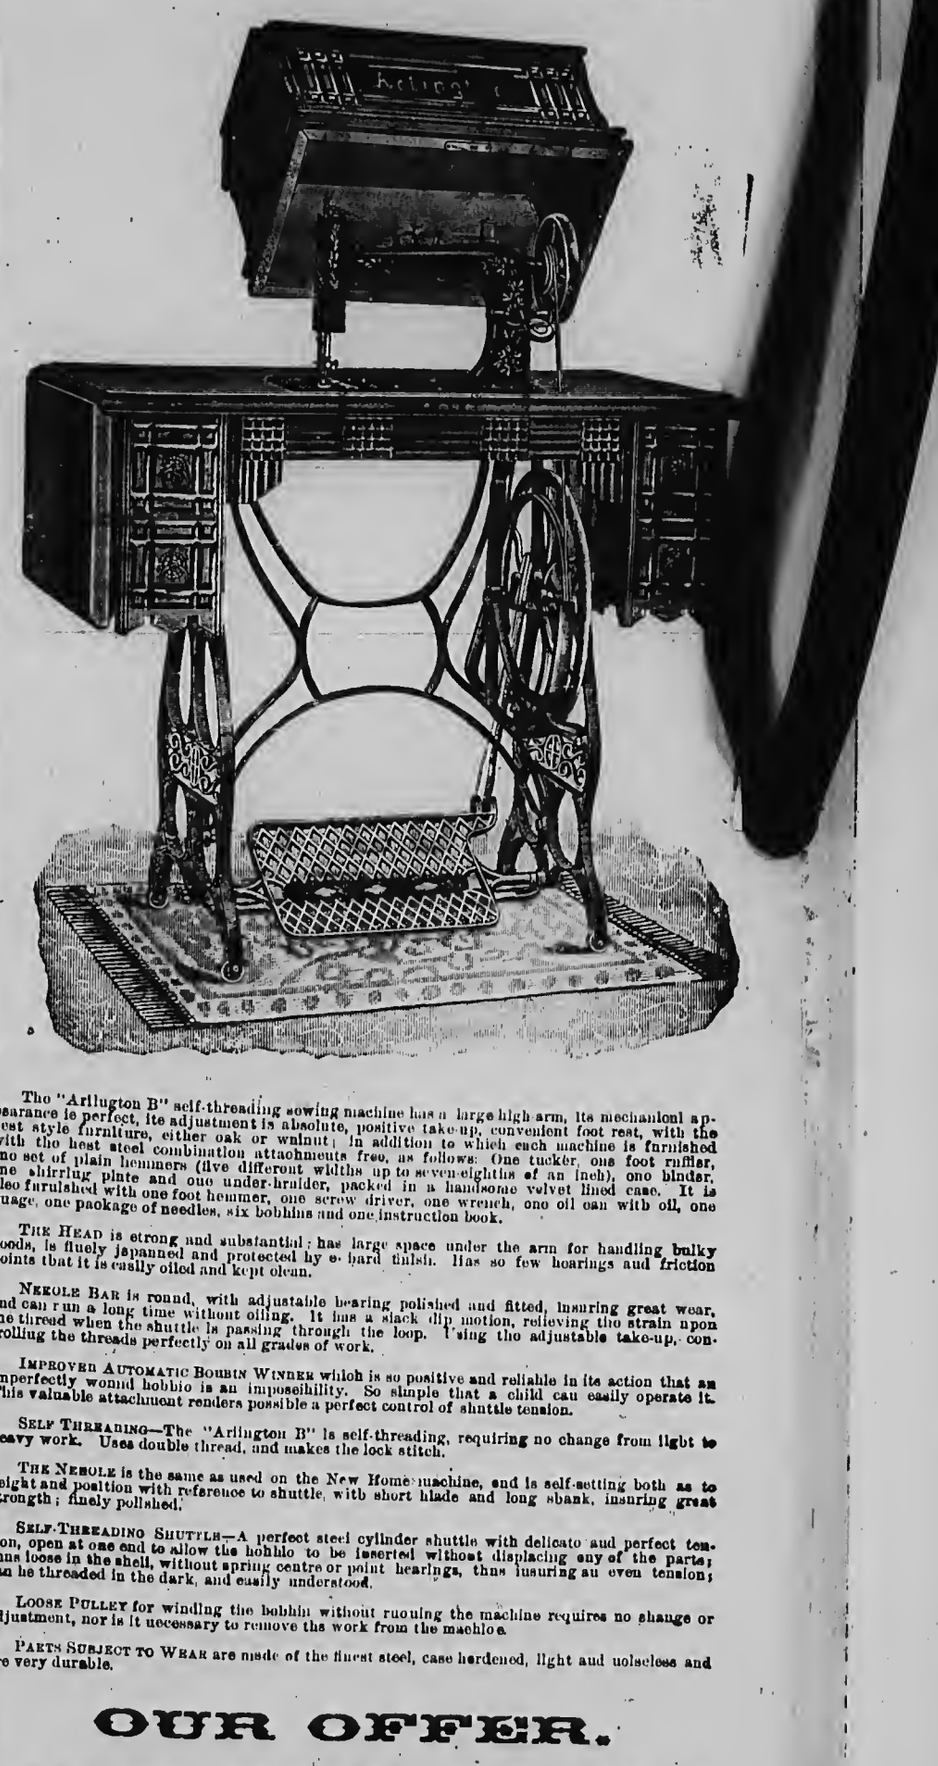
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.



The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take-up, convenient foot rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearing polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF THREADING—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell, without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

OUR OFFER.

To anyone, not now a subscriber to this paper, who will send us $19, we will send the machine and the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE one year. To old subscribers we make the following offer: Pay your subscription to April, '99, and send $17 additional, and we will send you the machine. This price does not include freight.

We allow purchaser to test the machine for ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

TO AGENTS:

We will send this machine free to any preacher or other person who will send us twenty new subscribers with the cash—$40. Address

Beauregard School, in this city, having been set apart by the authorities as a hospital for indigent yellow fever patients, has created a panic in the districts where the school is situated. When some officials and Sisters of Charity from the Charity Hospital went to the place to prepare it for sanitary uses, they were ordered away by a mob of citizens, who threatened to burn the structure before any sick could be placed in it. The hospital corps retired when the buildings were fired. The fire department responded to the call; but it is reported that the mob cut their hose and otherwise obstructed their efforts to extinguish the fire, which burned two outbuildings, although the main building remains unharmed.

According to the news received from Egypt, the British government will stop the advance for the present of the expedition into the Soudan for the purpose of reconquering the former provinces of Egypt. This halt in the forward movement is directly due to the revolt in India, which is proving so serious that Great Britain will have use for all surplus troops in that part of the world.

The Central American Republics, according to pan-American diplomats in Washington, are undoubtedly on the eve of a general political upheaval. The success of the revolution in Guatemala, entailing the downfall of Dictator Barrios and the elevation of Prospera Morales to the presidency, is believed to be inevitable, and is likely of itself to bring about a revolution in several of the sister Republics.

Unless people break off from work they will not think about God. Unless the day comes to remind them of their relation to one outside themselves they will fall into slavery to that present. VOL. 44.—NO. 40. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1897. WHOLE NO. 2146

TEARS FOR THE LOST.

BY REV. DR. HENRY C. M'COOK.

'Tis well to weep when wasted time has flown,
And bounteous years have left no worthy gain;
To mourn that Spring looked back on fields unsown,
Or Autumn on ungathered sheaves of grain,
And passing bells are healing on the ear
With only this refrain, "A lost, lost year!"

'Tis well to weep when fathers are no more;
When from the prophet's lips the prayer has died:
When, overcome at last, the chieftain yields,
And owns him victor whom his life defied;
When voiceless is the bard's enrapturing tongue,
And death has hushed the inspired poet's song.

But tears are vain, save as they wash away
The earthliness that our spirits stain,
The dust that blurs our vision of to-day
And duties that to-day brings in its train.
If at the old low level life remain,
Nor rise to loftier heights, our tears are vain!
Who mourns the fathers dead, the prophets slain,
Yet lives a fruitless life, he mourns in vain.

He weepeth well who learns from grief to live
As lived the saints who see the Savior's face.
The worthiest honors that the sons can give
Their hero fathers, is to fill their place.
The passing bell has ceased its mournful toll:
Hark! on the throbbing air rings loud and clear
A rising bell! Awaken, O my soul,
And occupy for God the new-born year.

Samuel Wesley.

BY REV. GEO. G. SMITH, D. D.

Samuel Wesley was born just as Puritanism received its death-blow, and he lived to see the first Methodist Society organized. He was the link which bound the two periods together, and his history well told is the history of that transition time. Few men ever had such an ancestry. His grandfather and father were scholars and Puritan ministers. His mother's father was Dr. John White, a Puritan minister who was a member of the Assembly of Divines. His father, after the Restoration, had been ejected from his small parish, and, driven from place to place by his persecutors, he was often imprisoned and always in peril. At last he found a home in an obscure section, where he had a small congregation of his own people, to whom he ministered secretly until he died at the early age of thirty-four. He left a dependent and almost friendless family of several children, of whom afterward we hear of two—Dr. Matthew Wesley, a physician of London, and Samuel. Samuel was born in a trying time for a Dissenter, just after his father's ejectment from his little church. His father was, however, not without friends, and one of them who had a vacant house in Preston gave him a home in it, and in this village Samuel spent his first fifteen years till the death of his young father. The persecution of the Dissenters made them cling all the more to each other, and free schools were provided by their county for the education of those who were dependent, and Samuel Wesley had good advantages in school during his boyhood. At fifteen he was sent to London to the academy of Mr. Veal, and afterward of Mr. Morton, where he was a schoolmate of Daniel De Foe. Young Wesley was very bright and sprightly, and always intense in his nature and impulsive in his temper. He was a good hater of the Church of England, which so dealt with all his kindred. By its cruel persecutions his venerable grandfather, John White, had been robbed and exiled from his parish. His grandfather and his father had both been ejected from their parishes, and his early childhood had been filled with remembrances of the cruel harassments and imprisonments of his good father. If ever a young fellow was justified in feelings of bitterness toward any people, he was for his feeling toward the Establishment. In this he found large sympathy. The academy of Mr. Morton, filled with young Dissenters, was evidently not the retreat of saints, and sainthood did not flourish in those degenerate days, among either Dissenters or Churchmen; and while the Churchmen repaid the Dissenters with heavy interests for all they had endured during the twenty years of Puritan rule, the Puritans paid them back in hate and vituperation. One of the favorite weapons of attack was the jingling lampoon, and young Wesley, who even then had a knack at rhyming, was employed by some of the older men of his party to assail the Churchmen with insulting and witty lampoons. John Wesley, his son, says that it was while he was engaged in this work that he became convinced that he was in the wrong company, and so changed his colors, Dr. Clarke and Mr. Tyerman following. Samuel Wesley's own statement said he became so disgusted with the bitterness and the licentiousness of his associates, who had a calf-head club, and whose politics had entirely swallowed up their piety, that he determined to break away and make a radical change; and, much to his brother's disgust, and the grief of his mother, and the anger of his deserted party, he broke away from Mr. Morton's school and made his way to the hostile camp at Oxford. He did what Robert South and Robert Leighton had done before him, and what Susannah Annesley did after him, and what many a man has done since his day. We become some time so well assured that things are wrong around us that we take it for granted that they must be better in the camp of our foes, and so desert our flag to fight under another. The motives which led a youth not twenty years old to take so radical a step, and a youth, it may be, whose piety was not of the deepest kind, we may not fully know; but whatever was the motive, the change was a complete one, and the English Church never had a son more loyal than was this Puritan renegade. He, of course, had nothing to look for from the Puritans, and had no prospect of help from the church to which he had gone; but the sturdy young man, with few shillings in his pocket, went to Oxford determined to make his way through the university, and he did it, and after having fairly won his degree and secured ordination, he left Oxford with more money in his pocket than he had when he reached there, and not only was he an ordained priest, but he had entered the field of authorship as a poet. His book of poems was called "Maggotta," and this uncanny name was, perhaps, as well suited as any other to title a very inferior lot of satires. They are only now valuable because they show the lively humorous side of young Wesley's disposition. The book, however, was coarse enough and humorous enough to sell; and, unlike most poets, Wesley made money out of it, so said his printer, which is more than can be said for his more ambitious works; but "Maggotts" deserve everlasting remembrance on the part of the Methodists, for it was through it that Samuel Wesley became acquainted with and finally married Susannah Annesley. Dunton, the printer and publisher of "Maggotts," had married her older sister, and Dunton introduced his customer to the young maiden. She was the daughter of a Dissenter as he was the son of one, and she had become as staunch a church woman as her affiancod was a church man; and when he was twenty-five years old, and had a chaplaincy which paid him $150 per year, he married. This was in the first days of William and Mary. His wife was of noble blood, had been brought up in the best society of London, and was remarkably handsome. The sprightly, poetic, somewhat easy-going young priest was devoted to his young bride; and while both were poor, there was a promise before them of success in life. Samuel Wesley was not exactly like the vicar of Bray, but he had the art of adapting himself to the powers that were; and though he had been an enthusiastic friend of James II., he soon was as much devoted to Mary, his daughter, who supplanted him, and to her great husband, William of Orange. The Marquis of Normandy gave him a little parish in Lincoln, in which county he spent most of his life, and it may be of some comfort to those Methodist preachers who have poor parsonages and small salaries to take a peep into the home of the highly educated, gifted Wesley and his no less highly endowed wife of two years. He says he lived "In a mean cot composed of reeds and clay,

Wasting in sighs the uncomfortable day.
Near where the inhospitable Humber roars."

Here, on a salary of $250 per annum, he lived until five children were born. There were only two hundred parishioners and no congenial surroundings, and the fair young wife, with five children to care for, had a weary time. There was much leisure for him, and he used it, and added to his scanty income, editing the Athenian Oracle. It was a production somewhat like Notes and Queries, and the erudite editor answered all kinds of questions, and gave his views on all kinds of subjects. Wesley had little work to do in his small parish, and gave himself to literary work almost entirely. He began life by writing jingling rhymes, and his hand did not lose its cunning amid all the unpoetic surroundings of Ormsby, and he found inspiration for a life of Christ in rhyme. This he dedicated to Queen Mary, and, perhaps, through the influence of his friend and patron, the Marquis of Normandy, it was presented to her, and she in turn gave Wesley the living of Epworth, which, however, he did not enter upon until she had been dead two years. The best friend of the young rector can not acquit him of being very much of a toady. His easy nature led him to pay high tribute to those who were in high place, and though the Marquis of Normandy was an agnostic and a libertine, he was Wesley's staunch friend until at last the self respect of the rector could no longer yield to the demands made upon it, and there was a breach. The free thinking and free-living nobleman lived in open sin with a mistress who was on his country place, while the marchioness was in London. This woman would seek the companionship of the rector's wife. The testy little clergyman, finding her in his wife's company, and knowing how distasteful it was to her, took the intruder by the hand and led her to the door, and out of it. This made her angry exceedingly, and led to Wesley's leaving Ormsby. It requires but little fancy to picture not "Sweet Auburn, loveliest village of the plain, and the village pastor with his forty pounds a year," but Ormsby, with its straggling hamlets in the fens of Lincoln, one hundred and fifty miles from London; the beautiful young wife, with her five living children; the straw-thatched cottage; the hustling, dreaming poet-priest; the rude parishioners; the lifeless, dreary, monotonous church services, and the weary life of these, perhaps the only cultivated people in all the section, will be well conjectured.

Correspondence.

Epworth League Echoes and Orphans' Home Notes.

BY REV. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD.

From report of the Salisbury (N. C.) District Conference we clip the following: "The growth of the Epworth League is especially noticeable. It has found its way into every charge, and the brethren are demonstrating its adaptability to the country as well as the town. The influence of our annual League gatherings is felt in every charge."

During a recent visit to Meridian we had the privilege of attending a devotional meeting of the "Central" League. Questions were propounded by the leader relative to the life and labors of the Apostle Paul, and readily did the Leaguers respond with the correct answers. The attendance was large, and all joined in singing the hymns selected. Two young ladies and two young gentlemen were called upon to offer prayer. We were impressed with the language and tone of their prayers. They evidently were acquainted with the Lord, and we felt that their desire was—to commune with God, and not simply to address the congregation.

While in Brookhaven on Orphans' Home business we received a cordial invitation from President Chambers to address the college League on Sunday afternoon. We appreciated the opportunity of looking into the faces of so many representative daughters of Mississippi and talking to them of the wonderful possibilities of the womanhood of to-day. At the close of the service many of the newly registered students gave their names for membership in the Whitworth Female College Epworth League. Miss Lolia Jones, the efficient president of the League, seems well fitted for the responsible position to which she has been elected, and we pray that grace and wisdom may be given to her and the other officers, that, together with the hearty co-operation of all the members, this college League may be one of the most efficient in all the land.

A preacher serving one of the poorest circuits in the State (speaking after the manner of men) has written, calling our attention to the fact that he will have a League rally in the bounds of his charge some time in October, and urges us to be present. He concludes by saying: "I want you to take a collection for the Orphans' Home; can give you a good collection." May God bless this faithful preacher who is so ready to co operate in all the work of the church! If we can possibly make arrangements to reach the section of country where he labors, we will count it a privilege to accept the extended invitation.

Since our last communication to the ADVOCATE anent the

we have visited

this prosperous little city being the scene of our labors on the first Sunday in September, where, morning and night, we endeavored to preach the gospel of the Son of God to large and intelligent congregations. The only thing that marred the pleasure of our visit was the ill health of the pastor, Rev. L. S. Jones. We were pained to see our friend and fellow-laborer so indisposed. His health record in the past is a good one. In thirteen years he only missed six appointments. For this reason his present sickness is doubly hard to bear. Let the brethren everywhere pray that he may soon be restored to a full measure of health. The claims of the orphanage were presented, and $150 in cash and good subscription was the ready response to our appeal. Bro. R. L. Bennett, cashier of the First National Bank, though a busy man, was not too busy to collect and hand us the following day more than $100 of the amount subscribed. Such efficient and consecrated laymen are an invaluable assistance to any preacher. Our home was with Dr. Blundell, whom we discovered to be of direct English descent, and it goes without saying that this knowledge increased our interest in each other, and added to the pleasure of our otherwise delightful sojourn in this hospitable Mississippi home.

Our plans and appointments for several weeks following this engagement were made to visit charges in Seashore district, but on reaching Meridian we found the so bad, consequent upon the development of certain suspicious cases at Ocean Springs, and necessarily our journey in that direction was stopped. The only course to pursue was to wait at Meridian until we could correspond with preachers in other parts. While tarrying in the Queen City we were royally entertained in the elegant home of our former friends, Bro. B. F. Ormond and family.

By return mail we received letters from Revs. B. F. Jones, of Brookhaven, and J. A. Leech, of Brooksville, each extending a most cordial invitation to visit their charges the second and third Sundays in September, respectively. Accordingly we left Meridian en route to Brookhaven, and found that at Jackson quarantine regulations had already been established. However, we reached safely Saturday eve, Sept. 11, and found Bro. Jones at the depot ready to escort us to his well-arranged parsonage. Here we lodged till Monday, and to this good brother and his estimable wife (nee Linfield) we are indebted for many courtesies and a delightful sojourn. Sunday morning your correspondent occupied the pulpit, and enjoyed the privilege of preaching to an attentive congregation, partly composed of the faculty and student body of Whitworth Female College. The Catholics are strong in Brookhaven. They have a church, chapel, and school.

The Methodists are moving up financially under the skillful leadership of Rev. B. Frank Jones, and are now planning to remodel their ante-bellum church building. Notwithstanding this fact, they pledged $55 to the Orphans' Home, most of this amount being paid the following day. Bro. Jones suggested that a committee be appointed to canvass the entire town, whereupon this thoughtful pastor announced the names of those who during the week following would solicit funds from the people of Brookhaven for the furnishing of our Home at Water Valley.

Monday morning we learned that the restrictions were becoming very rigid in some places, so that your agent deemed it advisable to go directly to Kosciusko (if he could get there) and remain with his family until the scare was over and the quarantine raised. On boarding the train we ascertained that the scarcity of passengers was partly due to the fact that at State Line all who had tickets for any points in Mississippi were compelled to get off and remain in the camp of detention for several days. At Jackson (or rather a mile this side) we stopped at the quarantine station. Here passengers and baggage were disposed of as though it were a regular station. Added to this, however, was the surveillance of police officers and physicians, who had been appointed to examine. At Canton we found many persons waiting to take the north bound train, though they held tickets for Southern points. No one was allowed to leave the train at Durant except to board the train on the branch road for Aberdeen, etc. As Kosciusko had not yet quarantined, we were allowed to get off. This is, however, the last train from the South since our arrival that has been allowed to land either express or passengers. Nearly all towns in Mississippi have quarantined against the trains, so that the agent of the Orphans' Home is now at Kosciusko with his family "waiting till the clouds roll by," having barely escaped from being withheld in some "camp of detention."

Kosciusko, Miss., Sept. 26, 1897.

Selections.

Superannuated.

No occupation, profession or pursuit rewards its aged and disabled members so meanly, and stingily, and heartlessly, as does the ministry in the church of God. It would be more correct to say that few employers reward their disabled servants so meagerly as the church of God rewards its faithful ministers who have grown gray and crippled in its service. The soldier of any civilized power goes forth to fight, knowing that if he falls in battle, his wife and little ones will receive needed succor from the government. Even he, himself, if he survives his ability to earn bread, may rely upon a sufficient pension to supply all his bodily needs. The seldiers of army and navy, and the members of our metropolitan police, look forward to the day when, after twenty or thirty years of hard service, they may retire on a pension or half pay. But no such haven of rest awaits the tired and battle-scarred soldier of Christ—none, at least, in this world. He no sooner spends his youthful force in preaching the gospel, sometimes against great obstacles and discouragements, when some day he sees the beginning of gray threads in his hair, and the merest trace of a furrow in his cheek or brow, and forthwith there begins to haunt him the suggestion of an awful fate. Like a fringe in a prairie where vegetation ceases and a desert begins, he sees the fatal "dead line" grow distinct and more distinct in the distance. "Superannuated!" That long, but sharp and stinging word begins to smite his ears, and henceforth he works on faithfully, but fearfully, lest some tyrannical and officious church member or committee may come to him and, with soft words of deceit, tell him that he is working too hard, that he is really too old, and that the interests of the church demand a change. Cruel and heartless is this conspiracy of church deacons, elders, stewards, or whatsoever "influential members" are responsible for such a scene. "Superannuated!" Strike that word from our sacred literature and speech, or else brand it deep into that remorseless system which grinds hope and life and manhood out of a faithful body of men who are constantly toiling underneath its ominous shadow.—Ram's Horn.

A Slender Dependence.

It is a serious fact that a pastor has to depend upon the pleasure of his people in order to retain his position with them any considerable length of time. He is greatly affected by the likes or dislikes of the members of his church. Just think of it! Is it not a humiliating, grovelling situation? But who can deny it? In the great majority of cases, when you ask why a certain pastor has left the church which he last served, you will be told that it was because he was not liked very well by a part of the church at least. In very many instances pastors have resigned because two or three "leading members" did not like them, and the dislike has not been based upon any vital defect in the pastor's character, nor on his preaching false doctrine, nor neglect of duty, but rather upon some incidental personalities. Sometimes a dislike is occasioned by the pastor's refusal to consult some of the "leading brethren" concerning all of the affairs of the church. This affronts their officious propensities, and they soon determine upon getting rid of the pastor and securing one who will pay due deference to their opinions and tastes. Again, many a pastor incurs the dislike of the influential members of the church because of his honest and plain preaching. He dares to proclaim the whole truth and spare no one. He does not abuse anyone, and yet the truth which he utters hurts the tender spots on some of the members—perhaps the official and officious ones—and then a disturbing dislike of the pastor gets under way. And very likely the dislike is shown in a refusal to pay anything more for the pastor's support. Is it not sad? Why, it is a fact that some pastors will sacrifice almost everything for the sake of pleasing their people and thus retaining their pastorates. This is a slender dependence, and it is a very frail thing to rely upon. Every member of a church ought to be governed by principle in relation to the pastor, and not by their likes or dislikes.—C. H. Wetherbo, in Western Advocate.

FLING OUT THE BANNER!

BY BISHOP DOANE.

Fling out the banner! Let it float
Skyward and seaward, high and wide;
The sun shall light its shining folds,
The cross on which the Savior died.

Fling out the banner! Angels bend
In anxious silence o'er the sign;
And vainly seek to comprehend
The wonder of the love divine.

Fling out the banner! Heathen lands
Shall see from far the glorious sight,
And nations crowding to be born,
Baptize their spirits in its light.

Fling out the banner! Sin-sick souls
That sink and perish in the strife
Shall touch in faith its radiant hem,
And spring immortal into life.

Fling out the banner! Let it float
Skyward and seaward, high and wide;
Our glory, only in the cross;
Our only hope, the Crucified!

Fling out the banner! Wide and high,
Seaward and skyward, let it shine;
Nor skill, nor might, nor merit ours;
We conquer only in that sign.

Confusion of Tongues.

It is a long time since the earth revolved, a single empire with a man at the head. Adam, in his incumbency of Eden, is the sole historical example of a single ruler over an universal empire. "Let him have dominion," has been spoken once only in the full sense. The fate of the first and some subsequent attempts at empire is the subject of this study, with the engine of destruction showing at each ruin. In Adam's case the sceptre was placed in his hand by his Maker. The cause of his ruin, a confusion of tongues, Satan and Eve in complicity.

At Babel, some while from the Deluge, a universal republic declared itself. "Let us build a city and a tower, and make us a name," said this ambitious community, with Shem among them to tell of the flood scarce dried. With these would-be founders of empire the sceptre was to be snatched by spirits defiant of God, proposing to build on brick and slime instead of on faith. Their work stopped, they were dispersed; not because the brick gave out, nor the hands lost skill, but because they did not understand each other. Their speech was confused; such interference was fatally sufficient.

After many happenings the Christian church, nourished in faith, from slender commencement grew and established its structure at Rome. Then, with more than a thousand years of life and success, there arose again the ambition of universal empire. "Let us create of the Church of Rome one perfect, comprehensive dominion, temporal and spiritual," in effect said the fathers, forgetting that they were merely sons. As with the blast of horns at the mouth Jericho's great walls shuddered and fell, so Rome shook at the sound from a mouth. Luther, Melancthon, in opposition, traversing ancient applications of doctrine—the great spiritual empire divided and went fragmentary.

To-day the observer, pessimist possibly, declares the tendency to be again towards universal empire. But into which of the great energetic divisions of men shall we look—the world or the church? Well, both, says the sober observer. At the world first—the world represented by Christian civilization. To get its classing as opposed with the church, the world must seem the beneficiary to a marvelous degree of Christian civilization, but it must omit the term "Christian." The world, then, represents a civilization, braced, buttressed powerfully with Christian safeguards, but rejecting the Christian—"having the power, but denying the form."

The service of the world is not in dispute. It is granted to be mammon. Universal empire under the rule of mammon. From the doorway of the striker, the deadly odors of the sweat-shop and crowded tenement, the fields of farmers suffering from mortgages and low prices, the pessimist sees mammon vigorously prosecuting empire. The shifting view shows assemblies, National and State, muzzling and subdued under selfish influences pressing from within and without. The great republican motto, "Greatest good to greatest number," is become a partial palimpsest, with "greatest" erased and "least" written over the erasure.

Another view exhibits the operators of mines and manufactories in conflict among themselves, forced by competition to save money by cheapening labor, since cheap materials can not be afforded. These views cover much ground, over which in growing disorder the world is running and fretting, with mammon witnessing and directing it all.

This aim must fail; no universal government grows, rock-like in soundness, forth on such foundation. But why? The minerals lie open in the mines to the miners, the oceans to the ships, the halls to the congresses; materials and handiwork are not disturbed. Confusion of tongues—these different people, subjects of mammon, do not understand one another.

And the other division—the church. Here, by the prophecies of God, is the kingdom for throne and sceptre. Here, "high over all," sits the "King in his glory." Saint and angeloi (messengers), ambassadors, heirs—rich terminology expressive of the church and her furnishings. "Shall become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ." "The earth shall be filled with the glory of God as the waters cover the sea." Richer promises than terminology. Yes; here is the ground for the universal empire. Is it here? What delays it? Are the bugles of the heralds, the trappings of the embassy, the skirmish-line of the army; are these alone to be seen and heard 3,000 years since the speech of the prophecies, 2,000 years since the King came and said, "Now are these words fulfilled in your ears?" If so, why? There are causes for effects, reasons for conclusions, grounds for doubts. Must "confusion of tongues," which overthrew Eden, discontinued Babel, reduced Rome from the whole to fragments, from empire to provinces, which checks the prosperity of the world under mammon—is this fatal engine to be turned against the church under God? Well, says the observer, look. Look over the church, not one now, but many. Look at each in turn.

No. 1.—Dogmas of extreme unction, immaculate conception, mediation with the Mediator, purgatories and phylacteries. Wonderful structure upon pillars remotely useful according to the great direction.

No. 2.—Dogma—hydrostatics, the only energy of value; dilution to weakness, yet standing sturdily.

No. 3.—Election, dogma of limitation, doing violence to the invitation, "Come unto Me, all."

No. 4.—Dogma—theory versus practice, schism begun, bigotry promising.

David's misfortunes attending the numbering of Israel appear a dimly conspicuous background. The present menace lies not alone in numbering the people. Such statistics result in tax and war levies of many qualities. In numbering the blessings of God technically, danger showed at once in the rift or cleft which is widening to the measure of a "great gulf," fixing, if not "fixed," between brethren.

Yet (the writer is Methodist) the beginnings of No. 4 are magnificent. The motto of Methodism, "The world is the field," claims universal empire as the terms, "Church of England," limited the energies of another church. Success sat at the prow of clearage into all waters. Faith, hope, love—the latter deeply emphasized according to direction—nourished the tree to wonderful fruitage. Dogmas for one and a half centuries seemed less, and divine inspiration more. Breadth, width, depth, height; where lie the boundaries about the kingdom as declared through John Wesley?

Alas for earth and for heaven! Confusion of tongues is checking the building and dispersing the people. We can not understand each other.

Paul's Thorn in the Flesh.

In a recent number of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, "Rex," in writing about the last Sam Jones Camp Meeting, remarks: "Later a brother spoiled an otherwise good sermon by calling for those addicted to alcoholism, the tobacco habit, etc., to come to the altar, promising them an entire salvation from the desire for these things—a promise frequently made, and always without the warrant of God's Word. God is not more considerate of the people in our day than he was to St. Paul, whom he refused to deliver from the 'thorn in the flesh,' assuring him that 'My grace shall be sufficient for you.'" Leaving us to infer that all the people are not dead who are silly enough, or wicked enough, to imagine that Paul's "thorn" was some miserable sin, or some abominable, filthy habit, from which he had not the fortitude and Christian grace to refrain; nor would God interpose to rescue him. Such an intimation is to miserably slander this noble, clean, pure servant of the Lord Jesus Christ. Hear him: "For God hath not called us unto uncleanness, but unto holiness." (I. Thess. iv, 7.) "And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus." (Col. iii, 17.) Imagine Paul smoking, chewing, drinking "in the name of the Lord Jesus!"

But what was "this "thorn"? Allow me to say emphatically: 1. It was no sin Paul was in the habit of committing. 2. It was no impurity, or moral or physical uncleanness, in which he indulged, or with which he was defiled. This much I insist on as true, and capable of abundant proof, perfectly satisfactory to any truly Christian and honest mind. Some references to his history, the persecutions he endured, and to his own writings, may help us in deciding as to what this thorn really was, and throw light both upon his own desire to be rid of it and the design of the Lord in permitting it to remain, while he furnished grace to enable Paul to bear it.

First, notice the date. (II. Cor. xii, 1–10.) Fourteen years carries us back to Paul and Barnabas' first missionary trip, and in Acts xiv, 19, we find Paul stoned, drawn, doubtless by the heels—like a dead dog—out of the city. Later certain disciples go out and gather round him, no doubt viewing the corpse, and lamenting his unfortunate death. God raises him up, and he goes on his way preaching the gospel.

Let us now fill in some certain accompaniments of such an occurrence. Bruised, battered, mangled, gait-shambling, unsteady, eyes nearly out, teeth gone, speech rendered difficult, and almost incomprehensible—what an object! How humiliating to a sensitive nature! The God that raised the dead Paul—sent his spirit back from the third heaven—could also remove these disagreeable reminders and these serious drawbacks. So Paul prays (who would not?) thrice, but the answer comes, "My grace shall be sufficient for thee, for my strength is made perfect in (your) weakness," not in sin nor impurity. "Most gladly (then says Paul) will I glory in my infirmities."

A few other references may make the matter still clearer. II. Cor. x, 10: "For his letters, say they, are weighty and powerful; but his bodily presence is weak, and his speech contemptible." Gal. iv, 13–15: "Ye know how through infirmity of the flesh I preached the gospel unto you. . . . And my temptation, which was in my flesh, ye despised not nor rejected. . . . I bear you record, that if it had been possible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them to me."

Certainly, with these plain Scriptures before us, it is unnecessary to cast such an imputation upon the character of this holy man of God as to insinuate that he was either a wine-bibber, a glutton, a tobacco-soaked devotee, or even a fit companion for such characters.

Pineville, La., Sept. 17, 1897.

WHO DIED A FEW MONTHS SINCE.

I was born in Cumberland county, Va., Aug. 20, 1818. When about 15 years of age my parents sent me to live with an elder brother, who was publishing a county paper in the village of Oxford, N. C., expecting me to learn the printer's trade. My school privileges had been few, and my education so imperfect that I could scarcely read. I remained in Oxford about eighteen months, when my brother sold his interest in that paper and moved to La Grange, Tenn., and I accompanied him. During this time my religious training was quite meagre; both of my parents being irreligious till I was twelve or fourteen years of age, when they united with the Baptist Church, and most of the family also. My brother with whom I lived was a Presbyterian. During my stay in Oxford I did not attend religious services at all. There was but one church—Presbyterian—there. Having been taught by my mother to avoid bad company and not indulge in flagrant acts of wickedness, I was not led away into such habits, although other apprentices in the same office were very profane and gambled to the extent of their means. I never indulged and led a moral life for a boy. My brother and I left Oxford, N. C., about the fifteenth of October, 1832 or 1833, and reached La Grange, Tenn., Dec. 25.

Soon afterward my brother began the publication of the Western Whig and La Grange Herald. I continued to work in the office and kept up my moral habits, having selected as a companion a young man who was a strict member of the Methodist Church; but I did not attend church. I made the acquaintance of an apprentice who lived with a pious member of the Methodist Church. He was expected by his "boss" to attend the services of the church, and through his influence I began attending the Methodist Church, with no particular object in view, except to be in company with my friend. Church-going soon became a habit, and instead of lounging around the office on Sunday, I made my way to the house of God. The station preacher, J. C. Parker, preached three times and held prayer every week. About this time a memorable prayer meeting was commenced, held at private residences, participated in by Baptists and Presbyterians, and well attended. Some time in February, 1836, a Quarterly Conference was held in the station; the presiding elder, G. W. D. Harris, and the station preacher of Memphis, W. D. F. Sanries, being present. Sanries and Parker continued the meeting for eighteen days, which resulted in about one hundred conversions. I attended regularly at night; became convicted, went to the altar several nights and was converted. I found a peace that quieted all my fears and filled me with love not only to the Giver of all good, but extended to all men, and I constantly rejoiced in a consciousness of my acceptance with the blessed Redeemer. After reflection I thought it my duty to unite with the church; but what church was not so easily decided. I had been baptized in infancy, but raised under Baptist influences. I consulted my brother, also leading members of the Methodist Church, and, having my doubts removed, I united with the Methodist Church, and have never regretted the choice.

Miss Sallie Smylie, Aug. 24: "I have just had a letter from Mrs. Trueheart giving some information, which I send you for the ADVOCATE: 'The local Board at Nashville was called together to consider the resignation of Miss Sallie Reynolds, of our China Mission, which was accepted with regret. Miss Reynolds will soon be married to Rev. Gilbert Reid, of the Northern Presbyterian Church, whose work is in Peking, China. Miss Reynolds will leave Shanghai, Sept. 6, and her marriage will take place at her own home. While we regret to give her up, our wishes for her happiness are sincere, and we hope she may do as good work for others as she has done for us. She has given five beautiful and successful years to our work in China.

"'Miss Rankin's friends are glad to know she is well, though she can not leave her work long enough to visit our home societies.

"'Miss Haygood is not so well, and is spending the month of August in Japan.

"'Miss Helen Richardson is on her way home for a much-needed rest. Rev. C. K. Marshall's daughter will accompany her. Her father, educated in this country, is sending her now to school.'

"Please insist on auxiliaries sending their quarterly reports to district secretaries as early as possible.

"Miss Norville spent two days with Mrs. Chatfield en route to Mexico. Our society (Meridian Central) gave her a very nice reception. She seemed to appreciate it very much, and we did so much enjoy having her in Meridian, if only a short time. Our society has not been very active during the Summer, but held regular meetings, and kept up the interest, and are now ready to get to hard work.

"Mrs. Watts, secretary of Meridian district, is doing good work; has accomplished much good since Conference. I have not heard from others, but hope they are doing the same."

Sept. 6, Miss Mary Andrews: "McNemar funds are coming in slowly. Miss Sallie Smylie is arranging for a 'spelling-bee' for this auxiliary."

Sept. 13, Miss Sallie Smylie: "I enclose a letter to your auxiliary, which you will please read to them at your next meeting. I am anxious to become identified with each auxiliary, and know of no better way than writing to them.

"Our societies here are doing very nicely. I had arranged to go down on N. O. R. R., but the yellow fever has caused me to delay my visit.

"The Shubuta society sent me a beautiful present for Leila McNemar—a case of knife, fork, tea and dessert spoons, napkin ring—all silver—and six napkins."

We are much pleased to see the improved and handsome appearance of our annual Minutes. Auxiliaries should have the Minutes read at the first meeting, with items from nineteenth Annual Report, and endeavor to have every member of the church read them, not forgetting to furnish pastors with a copy of each.

We enjoyed reading Mrs. Trueheart's complimentary notice, in Annual Report, of Mrs. R. R. Parker's "Juvenile Entertainment," "which has given satisfaction wherever read."

Burtonton Auxiliary has had each year $10 credited to it for the McNemar fund. The first of this month $5 was remitted to Conference treasurer for that fund. One new member past quarter.

Again the Burtonton Auxiliary of W. F. M. S. is called on to mourn the death of its members. God, in his divine providence, has taken from our midst our dear Sister Mary Greenlee, and we feel we should offer some tribute of respect to her precious memory; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we deplore the loss of our dear sister, but humbly bow in submission to our heavenly Father's will, knowing he doeth all things well, and our loss is her eternal gain.

Resolved, That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to her bereaved family in their irreparable loss, praying her children may emulate all that was good and noble in their dear mother; that her grandchildren be consecrated members of the church of which she was so long an honored member.

MRS. FANNIE JOHNSTON,
For Society.

Mrs. J. P. Drake, Bay St. Louis, Sept. 3: "The Bay St. Louis Auxiliary held a public meeting in the Main Street Methodist Church, Wednesday evening, Aug. 25. The pastor, Rev. J. P. Drake, delivered an address on the leavening power of the gospel, with special reference to woman's hand in the diffusion of the leaven, and closed by briefly naming the five weights and ten wings to modern missionary effort. The president, Mrs. A. P. Joyner, followed with one of her bright, characteristic speeches, intermixed with readings from the Annual Report of the Woman's Board, giving the present condition of our mission fields. A leaflet with the suggestive title, 'How Much?' was read by Mrs. L. B. Turner, and one on 'Individual Responsibility and its Rewards,' by Mrs. M. E. Joyce.

"An opportunity was then given the audience to make a free-will offering to our McNemar fund, which was promptly and liberally met.

"We adjourned, feeling much encouraged, and resolved to hold another and, we hope, even more interesting meeting in November.

"I have not had time to travel or organize on my district yet. I hope to do something the latter part of this month."

One of Mrs. R. R. Parker's plans is to appoint an agent in each auxiliary to report for our column on postal every quarter.

The Bible.

The Bible is for use, not for admiration. We do not save life by complimenting the cook, but by eating his bread—the best compliment we can give him. Every chapter, every verse, every word should be introduced by the question, What is this to me? What use can I make of it?

Make use of the Book. Don't study Abraham in order to stir up an admiration over Abraham's character, but to get more of Abraham's faith. Don't study Joseph that you may compare him with a modern grain speculator, but that you may know how to overcome as he overcame. The man who studies the gospels to admire the life of Christ does nothing more than half the infidels in all ages have done.

We can not lay too much stress on this point. The Bible is a personal message. It speaks to a congregation of one. It is not concerned about reaching the masses or the classes; it is after the individual. The right way to read the Bible is the selfish way. Some people shove Genesis off on the antediluvians, Exodus off on the Egyptians, Jonah off on the Ninevites, nine tenths of the remainder off on the Jews, retaining for their own portion the twenty-third Psalm and a few other passages that "never say a harm word about nobody."

There is hardly a chapter in the Book without its personal message to the reader. If Moses is talking to Pharaoh, there is plenty of Pharaoh-spirit in us to take every word to heart. If he is talking to the Israelites, he hits us so close that we almost expect to hear our names called. We can not put ourselves in the place of any man to whom God has spoken without having his words burn their way into our hearts.—Exchange.

Life's Little Days.

One secret of sweet and happy Christian life is learning to live by the day. It is the long stretches that tire us. We think of life as a whole, running on for us. We can not carry this load until we are threescore and ten. We can not fight this battle continually for half a century. But really there are no long stretches. Life does not come to us all at one time; it comes only a day at a time. Even to-morrow is never ours till it becomes to-day, and we have nothing whatever to do with it but to pass down to it a fair and good inheritance in to-day's work well done and to-day's life well lived.

It is a blessed secret, this of living by the day. Anyone can carry his burden, however heavy, till nightfall. Anyone can do his work, however hard, for one day. Anyone can live sweetly, patiently, lovingly and purely till the sun goes down. And this is all that life ever really means to us—just one little day. "Do to-day's duty; fight to-day's temptation, and do not weaken and distract yourself by looking forward to things you can not see, and could not understand if you saw them." God gives us nights to shut down the curtain of darkness on our little days. We can not see beyond. Short horizons make life easier, and gives us one of the blessed secrets of brave, true, holy living.—Golden Censer.

"Sing, sweet nightingale," said a shepherd to the silent songstress on a lovely evening in Spring. "Ah," replied the nightingale, "the frogs make such a noise that I have lost all pleasure in singing. Dost thou not hear them?" "I hear them, indeed," returned the shepherd; "but thy silence is the cause of my hearing them." What a lesson to Christians! Their silence too often allows the words of the unbeliever to be heard.—Exchange.

Praise takes in, in its wide range, enjoyment of present, remembrance of past, and anticipation of future blessings. Prayer points the only way to heaven; praise is already there.—H. More.

To Whom It May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mul-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of sores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. BLACK,

The Words of Jesus.

TO THE WOMAN OF SAMARIA.

BY REV. W. S. HARRISON.

It was about noon. All nature drooped in the heat of the Syrian sun. Jesus, with his five or six disciples, was returning to Galilee. Fatigued by his long walk, and oppressed by the heat, he sat thus, weary as he was, on the seat under the alcove by the famous well which Jacob gave to his son Joseph. The disciples had gone to the town to buy food. Jesus sat alone and mused

It was a sacred place. The landmarks were suggestive of incidents in the history of his race. In the beautiful valley spread out before him flowers filled every available space. The fields of wheat, "white unto the harvest," dotting hill and dale, stretched far in the distance, adding beauty to the landscape. Ebal and Gerizim, the renowned historic mountains, with their varying shades of gray rock and green foliage, invited the eye. Beyond us the clear blue sky, whose hallowed ministries have so often calmed the troubled soul and reassured the baffled mind when rudely shaken by the storms of earth. Imagination in lowly attitude would linger near to behold the Man in this hour of his wonted rest. He is evidently in thoughtful mood. Some gifted chisel, or inspired brush, has missed its supreme opportunity, else long ago the Teacher by the well had adorned a place high among the masterpieces of art.

Scarcely five months since his baptism; yet what a rush of experience since then! He had conquered the tempter in the wilderness. All Galilee had been astounded by his miracle at the wedding feast. Jerusalem had been shaken by his wonderful miracles, his authoritative teaching, and his bold, not to say rash, cleansing of the temple! The brief ministry in rural Judea had been such a phenomenal success as to arouse the Pharisees to more active hostility. John had been cast into prison, and Jesus himself found it prudent to leave Judea. His work had scarcely begun, yet portentious clouds were gathering round the horizon of his life. But on this day, by the well in Samaria, there is peace. The careless rest of the sandaled foot on the rocky floor; the relaxed fingers on the tunic as both lay on the knee; the smooth forehead; the restful mouth; the far-away look of the deep blue eyes; the unconscious pose of the majestic form—all show that body is resting and that the mind is thinking.

But the revery is broken. A woman of the town comes to draw water. This called the Master, now rested, back to natural wants. He said, "Give me to drink." She looked at him with surprise. Perhaps there was a slight resentment in her tone as she asked, "How is it that thou, a Jew, asketh drink of a Samaritan woman?" Here was an opportunity to sow the seeds of the kingdom. The woman was ready to receive instruction; he to give it. "If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink, thou wouldest have asked of him and he would have given thee living water." Something in his words or manner made a favorable impression. For she now used a title of respect, which she had failed to do at first: "Sir, thou hast nothing to draw with, and the well is deep; from whence then hast thou that living water? Art thou greater than our father Jacob, which gave us the well, and drank thereof, and his sons, and his cattle?" The reference here to the patriarch was no doubt prompted by the words, "living water," as implying something superior. Jesus so understood it: "Every one that drinketh of this water shall thirst again; but whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him, shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall become in him a well of water springing up unto eternal life."

All the promises of God imply the co-operation of the human will. As long as the Christian uses the means of grace the divine life is a well of water in him constantly springing up to refresh and fructify the soul. The woman was interested, but had only a vague conception of his meaning. She asked for the water of life, but coupled with it the childish reason: "That I come not hither to draw." Jesus said, "Go call thy husband, and come thither." She replied, "I have no husband." This brought the needed occasion for him to unveil her life of sin and sorrow. "Truly thou hast spoken. Thou hast had five husbands, and he whom thou now hast is not thy husband." She at once felt that she was in the presence of a prophet. This turned her mind towards religion. Like common, frail humanity, she began with the minor questions of difference between the Jews and Samaritans. Sectarian controversy is much prone to take the place of the deeper questions which affect heart and life. But Jesus replied with startling seriousness: "Woman, believe me, the hour cometh when neither in this mountain nor in Jerusalem shall ye worship the Father." Place adds nothing to worship; it is no more acceptable because offered in this place or in that.

"Ye worship that ye know not; we worship that we know: for salvation is from the Jews." Jerusalem was the nursery of true religion. Those who worship according to the intent of that establishment serve the Father according to wisdom. Salvation is from the Jews, but not for them exclusively. Salvation comes from that source for all the world.

"But the hour cometh, and now is when the true worshipers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth, for such doth the Father seek to be his worshipers. God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." Jesus tells the very nature, the substance of God: He is Spirit. We define words by their synonyms. The one word which best stands for "spirit" is "life." He who pervades and upholds all things is pre eminently the living God. He is Life—unlimited, pure, unmixed, self-sustained life—the efficient and all-sufficient source of all life. This asserts, in the natural order of things, a truth that is going to stand to the end of time. Life is antecedent to organization. It goes before and is the cause of organization. Never was there a living organism that was not made by life. The cell truly is the first form of life, but life was there before the form. Life makes the first and the last cell.

As to the nature of worship, nothing could be more explicit. It sets aside forever all claims of forms and ceremonies, of places and attitudes, as essential in the worship of God. The woman was profoundly moved. But one thing prevented acceptance of a truth so grand, confirmation by the Messiah, the Christ. She was loyal to the chief expectation of her race. Her difficulty was respected. "I that speak unto thee am He." She felt in her very soul it must be true.

The disciples, returning, were surprised to find him talking with the woman; but no one questioned him a word. There was visible in his countenance a fervor which awed them into silence. The woman was so impressed with his teaching that she left her water pot, and, going hurriedly to the city, she bore such earnest testimony that the men turned out even in the midday heat to see the wonderful Man. The disciples urged him to eat, but he said: "I have meat that ye know not of. My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me and to finish his work." Then came the tumultuous procession headed by the woman who had wakened their interest. There was no time to eat or drink—only time to preach the Word of Life. And so effectively was it proclaimed that at their earnest solicitation he tarried two days, and many believed.

As our Conferences will soon be held, and many of our preachers will be moved to new fields of labor and thrown among strangers, I have concluded that a letter on this subject would not be amiss. Very much depends on the reception of a pastor as to the good he may or may not do. Meet the new preacher with a cordial reception, make him feel that he is appreciated by providing him with a comfortable home, and seeing his larder well filled, and it will spring all his energies, and fill him with the earnest desire and determination to do the best work of his life. It relieves him of temporal care, and his time can be devoted to his entire work. The flock should, just as soon as possible, become acquainted with the new preacher, and let him know that he may depend on each one of them; not by so many words, but by acts, for actions speak louder than words. Show him you have an interest in his work and welfare. If this course is adopted and pursued to the end, success is almost a certainty.

Our preachers are sensible men, and men of experience with men and things of the world. Their calling and extensive acquaintance necessarily makes them so. Then don't meet the preacher with a forlorn face, dole out to him how poor you are; but, notwithstanding all your poverty, you have always given more than some other brother (mentioning his name) who never gives anything, while you, if you had it, would see all the demands of the church paid, yet you are not able to do much.

If you begin this, you greatly discourage the brother. Then he has met with so many like you that has never paid a cent, he can not help but look at you suspiciously and place you in the list of others who have doled him out the same sad affair in other places.

Again, do not hold up the lack of spirituality in the church and the shortcomings of different members. If you do, he is most assuredly going to watch you closely. He has had many experiences like this, and found the individual making the complaint about the only one on the work that was much out of the way.

Do not express the sad state of your feelings that he was so unfortunate as to be sent on your work, that everyone is poor, and for your part you can not see how he is to live. This writer was met once with the above lamentation, but with a tearful promise that they would do the best they could. They carried me to the grave of a former pastor to show me how much they cared for him. They had just promised to care for me the best they could. I could not help the feeling of horror that I might expect to be buried also.

When your pastor comes, as Aaron and Hur held up the hands of Moses, stand by him and hold up his hand. God will then be in your midst and bless you; and at the close of the year you will be conscious that you have done your duty. UNCLE JOHN.

Zeal should be guided by knowledge. Without wisdom the energy of life may be very easily wasted. Enthusiasts frequently do more harm than good. It is useless to hoist the flood gates of spiritual life and power unless there is a channel to give the stream direction. Preachers and teachers need to learn this lesson. Many a well meant sermon has proved unfruitful through lack of judicious presentation. Much teaching has become an unmitigated evil because of the absence of scientific methods. Zeal without knowledge incurs only reprobation.—Texas Advocate.

The man who is blown up by a hidden mine of explosives may have seen things that should have aroused his suspicions, but heedlessly put them aside as of no moment. It is the same with the sickness that ends in death. Insidious disorders of the digestion and bilious spells are passed by as of no moment. In themselves these complaints may not be dangerous, but if neglected their cumulative effect is terrible.

The man who neglects the little disorders that are the signs of approaching ill-health is walking over a hidden mine that may cause his death. The explosion will come in the guise of consumption or some other deadly disease. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures all disorders of the stomach and liver. It cures 98 per cent. of all cases of consumption, bronchitis, asthma, laryngitis, weak lungs, spitting of blood, lingering coughs, nasal catarrh and diseases of the air passages. It acts directly on the diseased tissues, driving out all impurities and disease-germs. It is the great flesh-builder, blood-maker and nerve-tonic. There is nothing in the medicine store "just as good."

"Have been in poor health for about seven years," writes Mrs. I. Albert Rakins, of No. 149 Main Street, Dallas, Texas. "Every summer I'd have a bilious attack lasting two weeks, besides headaches all my life, general debility and an inactive liver. I suffered with my bladder and kidneys for five years at least. I could not stand on my feet long at a time until I commenced your treatment. I took Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Pleasant Pellets.' They have helped me wonderfully. I had a disagreeable drain and irregular periods. I thought I should go insane sometime. I worried about everything; had the blues all the time and did not care to live. Now I am well."

Constipation is a little illness that if neglected builds a big one. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation. One little "Pellet" is a gentle laxative and two a mild cathartic. They never gripe.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1897.

We rise by the things that are under feet,
By what we have mastered of good and gain,
By the pride deposed and the passion slain,
And the vanquished ills that we hourly meet.
—J. G. Holland.

Of what value is a crowded church when there is no gospel in the pulpit?

The safest mode of acting is to employ ourselves with our nearest duty.—Goethe.

Some people seem to think that the only way to be happy is to make somebody miserable.

You needn't pack up any worries. You can get them anywhere as you go along.—A. D. T. Whitney.

The way to lay up treasure in heaven is to spend it for the glory of God and the benefit of humanity.

He is a wise man who takes advantage of every passing opportunity; but he is far wiser who makes opportunities.

The very best panacea for doubt and fear and sorrow of every description is a full realization of the truth that "God is love."

Some people are always finding fault with nature for putting thorns on roses; I always thank her for having put roses on thorns.—Alphonse Karr.

Before you complain that God has not answered your prayers, suppose you stop and inquire whether you have complied with the requisite conditions of successful prayer.

An ill-tempered man often has everything his own way, and seems very triumphant; but the demon he cherishes tears him as well as awes other people.—Arthur Helps.

Men of tender heart and loving sympathy and gentle touch are wanted to give comfort to the world's sorrow, to help other tempted men in their battles, to rescue the perishing out of their bondage.—J. R. Miller.

Petty vexations may at times be petty, but still they are vexations: The smallest and most inconsiderable annoyances are the most piercing. As small letters weary the eye most, so also the smallest affairs disturb us most.—Montaigne.

Reverence lies at the bottom of all moral excellence. Flippancy is a barrier to all spiritual progress. Seriousness is the fountain of penitence and reform. The fear of God is the fruitful soil of character and peace.—Texas Advocate.

Books are a guide to youth, and an entertainment for old age. They support us under solitude, and keep us from being a burden to ourselves. They help us to forget the crossness of men and things, compose our cares and our passions, and lay our disappointments asleep.—Jeremy Collier.

The Duty of Hopefulness.

The more hopeful we are the more diligent and courageous we will be. A hopeful man is irrepressible. Hope nerves the arm, quickens the step, and invigorates the soul as nothing else can. Faithful, vigorous service is out of the power of a discouraged man. No great victory was ever won by spiritless, disheartened soldiers. No great invention was ever achieved by an artificer lacking in hope and perseverance. At the very time when ridicule was loudest and failure seemed imminent, Robert Fulton, the inventor of the first steamboat, was undaunted in his hope of success. Though difficulties remain to be overcome, and triumph be yet in the future, the hopeful toiler may rejoice at his work.

"His joy is not that he has got the crown,
But that the power to win the crown is his."

No man has so great reason to be hopeful as has the Christian, because so long as he trusts in God, and continues in the path of duty, all things work together for his good. Christianity alone among the religions of the world offers that which is worthy of the highest hope. The practice it enjoins is "profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and also of that which is to come." In truth, it is impossible to be a true Christian without being hopeful, for the gospel is above all things a message of hope and gladness. However dark the night of sorrow, or severe the affliction, or grievous the distress, the Christian can be joyful and hopeful, for he knows that God orders all things aright, and that no good thing of all that he promises shall fail.

As Dr. Joseph Parker has well said: "The righteous man lives by hope, and his hope is already a realization of the soul. In the mere letter his hope may or may not have come to pass, but it brings with it the deep and serene assurance which no merely superficial circumstances can agitate or destroy. He knows that though sorrow may endure for the night, joy will come in the morning." An ever-increasing source of hope is the realization that God has never forsaken us or disappointed us. Those who have put him to the test know that his mercy is boundless and his grace is superabundant. The fact that God has led and sustained us through the sorrows and temptations of the past gives assurance that the same love and care will ever follow us. God's never-failing promises are the colors that compose the bright, unfading rainbow of hope in the Christian's sky.

"The hope of unjust men perisheth," because it is ill founded, being based upon the shifting sands of temporal good instead of upon eternal verities. Hope respects blessings to come, and brings distance and futurity into nearness. It is faith projected into the future. Faith, on the other hand, accepts and appropriates the good possible of present attainment, and makes the invisible and unrealized real. It furnishes the buoyant atmosphere upon whose bosom hope may wing her lofty flight.

When distress and danger are at hand as at present, many Christians talk and act as if God had resigned his throne, and committed everything into the hands of the prince of evil. The gospel of our Lord, however, gives no room for pessimism. Its leaven is to work until the whole world is leavened with its light and peace. Its glory is to cover the whole earth. Its power is great enough to transform and graciously renew every heart, and eradicate every evil from the world. Its grace can lighten every burden, sanctify every affliction to our good, bring joy out of pain, strength out of weakness, and victory out of defeat. Truthfully has it been said: "The peculiarity of the Christian religion is that it is most to us when we need it most. The night can not frighten it; the storm has no effect upon its courage; death owns its sovereignty, and retires before its approach." Christianity enkindles a hope that survives all losses and disappointments, that burns brightly when all other hopes have faded into nothingness, in that time of trial joyfully sees the coming of better things—a hope that pictures heaven and eternal life as glorious realities soon to be enjoyed. When darkness is deepest and misfortunes are sorest, the child of God can "rest in hope," knowing that in due time every one of his trials will pass away, and that better things are further on.

Just at this time when business is stagnated and great distress and anxiety prevail over a large portion of the South on account of the yellow fever pestilence, gloom being depicted on nearly every countenance, there is a splendid opportunity for the display of Christian hopefulness as well as helpfulness. The present evils will last but for a short while, and in the course of a few months they will be largely forgotten. However grievous our ills, in most instances they might be far worse. The fever now prevailing is the mildest ever known. If instead of counting up and dwelling upon the evils we have to suffer, we would number the blessings we enjoy and those we have a right to hope for, a gracious change would be wrought in our feelings. If our spirits are weighed down by sore troubles, let us remember that God will help us to bear them, and that they will soon pass away.

As Christians, we can not be hopeful unless we are in the path of duty. The man, however, who lives in close communion with God can not help being "strong in hope;" for God is the foundation and object of all hope, and gives assurance that "all things are for our sakes."

Yellow Fever.

The following table shows the yellow fever situation up to Tuesday morning at the principal points of infection:

	Cases.	Deaths.
Biloxi	243	10
Edwards	326	15
Scranton	56	6
Mobile	93	15
New Orleans	341	36

It will be seen from the above table that the fever is on the increase in this city. Yet we repeat what we have said before that, considering the vast number of people who came here from Ocean Springs after the fever broke out there, the number of cases is wonderfully small. Three hundred and forty one cases in a city of 270,000 inhabitants is really a very small percentage. It is, of course, possible that the fever may yet become epidemic here, but it is certainly not so now; and as cold weather may be expected within a few weeks, there is good reason to hope that it will not become so. The death rate continues remarkably low. Thirty-six deaths out of 341 cases makes a death rate of little more than ten per cent. The death rate in '78 was more than 29 per cent.

It has now been just about a month since the disease first made its appearance in this city. Thirty-six deaths in 30 days in a city of 270,000 inhabitants is insignificant. It is a simple fact that the number of deaths in this city from all causes, yellow fever included, was less in September, '97, than in September, '96, when there was no yellow fever. We firmly believe that the low death rate and the slow spread of the disease this year in comparison with former years is due not half so much to a milder type of the disease as to the system of quarantine and disinfection in use here. If anybody and everybody had been allowed to come and go at will into sick-rooms and to attend funerals, as in former years, the number of cases would have been many fold greater and the death rate also. This is the opinion of many leading lights in the medical world.

Population should always be taken into the account in estimating the spread as well as the virulence of the disease. For instance, many persons reading in the papers that New Orleans and Edwards have had about the same number of cases, seem to think that the fever is as bad in one place as in the other. A very little reflection will suffice to show that this is an egregious error. Edwards has a population of 600, and has had 326 cases—fifty-four per cent. New Orleans has a population of 270,000, and has had 341 cases, which is a little more than a tenth of one per cent. In order that New Orleans may equal Edwards, she must have more than 145,000 cases—a slight difference.

Magazines for October.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.

Harper's, for October, includes the following articles: "The Strategic Features of the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea," by Captain A. T. Mahan, U. S. N.; "The Golfer's Conquest of America," by Caspar Whitney, illustrated by A. B. Frost, E. C. Peixotto, and Henry McArthur; "Kilauea, the Home of Pele," by Professor William Libbey, illustrated from photographs taken by the author "The Century's Progress in Chemistry," by Henry Smith Williams, M.D.; and "The Future of Railroad Investments," by W. A. Crane.

ST. NICHOLAS MAGAZINE.

An account is given of a garden party at Shakspere's house, and "Rare Ben" Jonson is one of the guests. Aside from the serial features, there are many stories and sketches for the casual reader.

CENTURY MAGAZINE.

Hon. Theodore Roosevelt contributes a paper to the October Century on "The Roll of Honor of the New York Police," his article being one of the series in this magazine on "Heroes of Peace." A paper, by Miss Anna L. Bickneli, treats of "Marie-Antoinette as Danphine." Joseph Pennell writes appreciatively of "The Art of Charles Keene." Dr. Mitchell's novel, "Hugh Wynne," is concluded in this number.

New Orleans, Oct. 2, 1897.

In times of distress man's heart should warm toward his fellow-man. Nothing tends more to broaden one's sympathies and cause the growth of the nobler impulses than the doing of deeds of mercy and charity. Does not the present condition of many of our people warrant the suggestion that the lovers of their kind should take counsel together to devise some means of relief for the unfortunate poor who are suffering? Many families are quarantined by the presence of yellow fever in their homes, and the bread winners denied the opportunity of waging their daily battle for sustenance. Others have been deprived of situations on account of the paralysis which is threatening the commercial life of the city. Men with willing hands and nothing to do stand all the day idle. All this means sorrow and want in many a home, and the grim question of daily bread is pressing with startling force upon weary and heart-sick fellow-beings. Can we afford to stifle our better nature and turn a deaf ear to these eloquent appeals for help? 'Tis true every financial interest here is suffering as never before in years, but the loss of money should not imply the loss of that "pearl of great price" which St. Paul said was the greatest virtue. Will you not add the weight of your influence to this suggestion and concentrate the efforts of the few into a well-ordered and directed movement, which will enlist the active support of the big-hearted people of New Orleans, and, like a beneficent Nile, overflow the valleys of want and suffering?

F. A. DICKS.

The above is clipped from a recent issue of the Times Democrat. The writer, F. A. Dicks, is one of the leading business men of this city, being the president of the wholesale drug firm of Finlay, Dicks & Co. He is a prominent layman in our church, having served Jefferson Street, Natchez, in an official capacity for many years. We heartily commend his utterances to the public. There is already much destitution in the city, and will be a great deal more, brought about partly by the yellow fever, but chiefly by the quarantine regulations which have produced about such a stagnation of business as was never known here before.

What College?

That is now the urgent question in the homes of our people. It will be decided soon. Allow us to help to a right decision. The college to which you send your boy or girl should be:

1. A college where honest work is done. Education is a foundation business. If there be fault or flaw in it, the damaging result will appear in all after-life.

2. It should be a college where the teachers are men and women of highest character and unblemished life. A dissipated teacher is a dangerous teacher. He can not prevent the evil influence of his life.

3. It should be a college whose teachers are decided and devoted Christians. Our State has suffered too much from unchristian guides of the young. You can not afford to risk your child with any teacher who does not fully believe the truth as it is in Jesus, and who does not live a godly life. An unorthodox teacher will not settle the faith of your child, but may shake it most ruinously.

4. It should be a college where Christianity is definitely taught, where Christ's words and work determine all issues.

Is a single one of these points unnecessary? If one be omitted, the college is unsafe. Brother, sister, do not let any other consideration decide you. Send to Christian colleges—colleges true to God beyond the shadow of a doubt.—Southern Advocate.

The Real Status of the Morrison Case.

Bishop Wilson ruled that the conduct of H. C. Morrison had cut him off from the right of appeal to the Annual Conference. Charges of maladministration were preferred against Bro. Reeves, the presiding elder who presided in the trial before the Quarterly Conference at Lexington. The Minutes of said trial were found so defective as to vitiate the proceeding, and the case was, therefore, remanded for a new hearing. Meantime, Rev. H. C. Morrison was told by friends that if he would sign a statement to be laid before the Quarterly Conference such as they presented to him, the demands of law would be satisfied and the case settled without further trial, and for such settlement they procured his signature to the following:

"I did not believe I was violating law when I held the Dublin meeting. I did not intend contumacious conduct by continuing to preach after my suspension. I have never intended defiance to church law. If restored to its membership and ministry, I will remain loyal to the church and obedient to its discipline while I continue in its connection. I am willing to make this statement before the investigating committee."

The case thus falls back to the Quarterly Conference at Lexington, restoring Rev. H. C. Morrison his credentials, but leaving him still suspended under charges. It is reported that the statement of Bro. Morrison will be accepted by the Quarterly Conference and the charges withdrawn. If so, then the case will be ended.—Arkansas Methodist.

Belong to Your Own Church.

Other things being equal, the man who is loyal to his lodge is likely to be a more useful citizen than the indifferent church member. The trouble with some people is that they do not belong to anything. They have a temporary, uncertain association with some lodge, society or church, but they can get along without it, and it can get along without them. Intelligence seeks co-operation. Every sane person who believes in an unseen Power that "makes for righteousness," that would lift humanity to a higher plane, should seek the co-operation of others to make that power known in the world. And what a great privilege it is to belong to the world-wide movement that has for its object the spread of the Christian religion! The most healthful, happy social life is found in connection with this movement, and opportunities for the greatest personal power and usefulness. True, it is a way of self-denial, but there is no other so direct a road to true happiness.

Every church member should, at least, belong to his own church. He should be pulling somewhere, and be known as one to be depended upon. It is too late in the history of the world to discount the power of organization. If every loosely connected church member would in reality join his or her church, the Christian forces of the world would be more than doubled.—Methodist Herald.

In the course of his recent sermon at the close of fifty years' continuous ministry in one church, Dr. Richard S. Storrs said that if he were asked to describe the controlling aims of his ministry, he would answer: "My steadfast and controlling aim has been to bring an influence from the spheres celestial, declared to us through Christ, to act on the minds and hearts, on the spirit and conduct of those to whom my ministry has been rendered; so that life, by God's grace, should be ennobled in them and in myself, and souls made in his image be lifted to closer fellowship with him."

NOTES.

We are pleased to be able to report that Sister S. S. Keener is on the road to recovery.

Bro. H. H. Almons has recovered from his recent illness and is at his post in the pulpit and elsewhere.

Rev. J. L. Pierce occupied his pulpit last Sunday to the delight of his congregation. His family will remain in Kentucky a few weeks longer.

Rev. Sam Q. Bass has just closed a two weeks' meeting for Rev. C. P. Moss, the meeting resulting in nearly one hundred accessions to the different churches.

Although Dr. Sawyer is quarantined away from his country appointments, he has been kept quite busy looking after the vacant pulpits of brethren who were either sick or absent.

The most of the unkind criticisms which we utter against other people serve only to reveal the hardship and coarseness of our own natures. Censure is easy; epithets of abuse and denunciation are numerous in every language. It takes little effort to indulge in malignant thrusts.—Pittsburg Advocate.

The following dispatch was received too late for insertion in last week's issue. Our readers will be pleased to learn that Bros. Galloway and Emery and their families have passed safely through the pestilence. The Lord be praised!

Information gathered from the leading officials of forty-five railroads employing 200,000 men shows that, without exception, the companies regard habitual drinking as hurtful to the efficiency of the service, and that they forbid the use of intoxicants to employees while on duty. Fourteen of the roads require total abstinence from intoxicants for all men connected with train service.—Presbyterian.

Nothing could be better for raising the spiritual life of a congregation and leading it on to a higher life than the cultivation of the spirit of missions. The progress of the kingdom of God in the world is a study well calculated to enlarge the mind and soul, and rescue torpid congregations from their self-satisfied ease. What a power for good would be our home millions of Christians, if really alive to their privilege and duty in helping forward the work of God in all lands!—Mackay, of Uganda.

Contentions are easily started. Combustible materials are found on every side. In the church, in the home and in society the quick temper, the suspicious mind and the susceptibility to slights exist and take fire upon the slightest provocation. He who wishes to stir up strife has only to drop the irritating word, or revive the embers of old feuds, or provoke the sensitive, and he will have warring factions in a ferment to his heart's content. On the other hand, peace can only be maintained by proper self-control, a loving disposition and kindly offices.—Presbyterian.

We should studiously cultivate a contented frame of mind. Practice makes perfect here as well as elsewhere. To complain of the weather is to impeach the wisdom and benevolence of God. To rail at human life is to arraign the administration of the Most High. If we do not like our lot, let us make it better. If we can not make it better, let us submit to the inevitable. When we reflect how little we deserve and how much we have, we ought to cease our foolish and wicked repining. The grace which breathed a serene contentment into the heart of Paul can tranquillize our own.—Texas Advocate.

Did you ever think of this? Many heap roses upon a coffin when the form within is lifeless and knows nothing about it. Do you do this? If so, you doubtless think of the opportunities to show love and appreciation before death took your friend away. Pray do not again keep roses for the death, when it is best to give them to the living. Give roses to beautify homes, to beautify minds, to beautify hearts; roses of all colors, roses of knowledge, roses of sympathy, and roses of love. They gladden hearts. They lessen trials, increase happiness, and sweeten life in every way. They help those who receive them to grow purer, nobler and more heavenly minded. They benefit you more than words can tell. Blessed is the cheerful giver—he who gives time, money, instruction, kind words, sympathy, or anything else for the good and ennobling of others. Yes, strew roses of knowledge, roses of peace, roses of happiness, roses of love.—The Baptist Herald.

CURES PAIN

Some Reflections Suggested by "Rex."

In the ADVOCATE, of Sept. 16, "Rex," in writing up the Sam Jones Camp Meeting, says: "The choir....gave us excellent music, albeit we should have preferred more of the old fashioned Methodist revival hymns. But we do not blame them. I have met ministerial members of the Mississippi Conference who do not know 'When I can read my title clear,' who would be astonished to hear 'On Jordan's stormy banks I stand,' and never dreamed that 'Come, humble sinner, in whose breast a thousand thoughts revolve,' was in existence."

Now, Bro. "Rex" does not state the number of preachers in his Conference to whom this charge applies; therefore we do not know whether they are many or few; but we do know that there are some in other Conferences that may be included in that class. To what extent the allegation is applicable it is not our purpose to undertake to say, but it suggests some thoughts that we deem to be worthy of consideration at this time when singing has become more an act of entertainment than of worship, song making more a profession than an inspiration, and song-book vending more for pecuniary gain than for religious service.

In the multiplicity of songs that are being constantly put forth and soliciting favor, there is so much that is trashy and nonsensical—and some that is heretical—that it is needful for those who are set for the defense of the faith and the maintenance of a pure worship to be very careful as to what is used in their congregations.

Just at this point some of our pastors are too indifferent. They give but little attention to the matter, and seem unconcerned as to the appropriateness or matter of what is sung in their religious services. If "somebody" sings "something," it matters not who, nor what, nor where it comes from, it suffices. These things ought not so to be. There needs to be improvement in some places and by some people.

With our Church "Hymn and Tune Book" and "The Young People's Hymnal" we have a sufficiency and variety of the choicest songs and music of the day, both old and new, for all occasions and services, whether preaching, prayer meeting, Sunday-school, Epworth League, revival meeting, home worship or private devotion. These books have only to be properly studied and used by our preachers and people to be deservedly appreciated. "In all our congregations let the people learn to sing and use our own hymn and tune book." (See Discipline 1894, page 101, paragraph 226.)

The hymnody of our church should be carefully studied by all our preachers, until they are not only versed in the letter, but imbued also with the spirit of those blessed songs and melodies by which thousands of souls have been brought into the joy of salvation, sustained amid trials, comforted in afflictions and cheered in their heavenly pilgrimage.

It is the judgment of this writer that our Hymn Book should be replaced in the course of study for preachers on trial, where it was until a few years ago. Will Bro. "Rex" join us in a memorial to the College of Bishops for this purpose? This would be a step toward preventing the calamity which he forebodes when he says: "These inspired poetical renditions of the gospel of our Lord are rapidly following the class meeting and the spirituality of Methodism to the shades of the past." Let us think on these things.

Whitworth College!

GRAND CONCERT.

Once again has Whitworth College proven that she deserves the support of Mississippi and all our Southland.

Monday evening, Sept. 20, at 8:30, the faculty of Whitworth's Conservatory of Music gave a grand recital in Calisthenic Hall. Prof. Louis Décker, director, showed his powers as teacher of piano in the performances of his daughters. They played his own compositions, and they lost nothing in comparison with other numbers of famous old masters. When Prof. Decker himself sat at the piano the master shone forth in his brilliant execution of two of Chopin's productions. His interpretation, delicacy of touch, distinctness of tone, wonderful expression, called forth a response of what is highest and best in every lover of art. The applause was certainly very flattering and gratifying. Miss Furlow Anderson delighted her audience with her rich voice, exquisite modulation and clear enunciation. Her rendition of "Nymphs and Fauns" (Bemberg), "The Vainka's Song" and Mercadante's "Ah! S'estinto, ancor mi vnoi," drew forth storms of applause. This sweet Georgia singer has won for herself a splendid reputation. Miss Alice A. Hunt won the hearts of the people last year with the sweet strains of her violin. Her numbers at this recital—"Scenes de Ballet" (de Beriot) and Larghetto (Mozart)—were enjoyed more than ever. Her encores were still richer treats. Truly, Miss Hunt in the violin department is a grand success. In the absence of the teacher of the elocution Department, Miss Carrie Terry, graduate of elocution, Whitworth College, gave several numbers. This was her first appearance before a Brookhaven audience as a teacher. Miss Terry is one of Brookhaven's charming young ladies. Her work is thoroughly artistic, and her readings were a delight to her hearers. Especially did she excel in dialect—"Gets Dhore" (Dutch dialect), Adams; "She Liked Him Rale Weel" (Scotch), Wanless.

The audience, which was a highly cultivated one, showed intense appreciation of these artists. Should we attempt a criticism of the present faculty as compared with former years, we would say that the changes have all been for the better.

We are glad and rejoice that Whitworth, so long the pride of our Methodism, still holds rank with the foremost college of the country.

ONE OF THE AUDIENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to say to your readers that the delay of the opening of the college has been a blessing to us in that it gave us time to complete our new addition. We would certainly have been in a dilemma had school opened on time, having engaged many more pupils than the old buildings would hold. We are getting everything in fine shape for the opening, which will be as soon as the quarantine is raised.

The plasterers are now at work, and will soon have the building ready for occupancy. The new rooms will be delightful. The new furniture has arrived and is now being put up ready for use. The white enameled iron beds, with wire springs, new mattresses, etc., will make the best possible furniture from a sanitary standpoint, and at the same time will give everything a neat, attractive appearance.

We are glad the delay came before school opened. All pupils will have an equal showing. We will teach the full session. We ask every pupil to be ready to come immediately when notified. The outlook for the college is very bright indeed. We have applicants from ten States, attracted doubtless by the superior talent we are employing, and the fine religious record of last session.

TOPIC FOR OCTOBER.

ST. PAUL'S DOCTRINE OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

OCT. 10.—THE MIRACLE OF REGENERATION.

(1. Cor. vi, 11; Gal. iii, 14; v, 5.)

1. A miracle is something which happens within nature, not as the effect of some inherent cause, but as the result of a supernatural agency working through or by the subordination of nature's laws. There is no adequate cause for the divine life in human heart to be found in nature, which is presumptive proof of its supernatural origin. It is as much a miracle as raising the dead—indeed, it is a raising from spiritual death.

2. Even Mr. Huxley admits that the theory of "Spontaneous Generation" has been disproven by scientific experimentation, and to-day the law of Biogenesis (life comes from pre-existing life) is dominant. "Ye must be born from above," is but an individual expression of this law. We can not grow up into spiritual life, but must be lifted up.

3. Regeneration is the work of the Holy Spirit; but it does not follow that man is inert under the operation as the clay in the hands of the potter. While man is not the cause of regeneration, there is a definite work for him to do which is the essential condition of it. This work is "repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ." God is always ready to do his work. Are you ready to do yours? The responsibility for your condition rests upon you.

4. "Old things have been done away; behold all things have become new." The life of sin has been superseded by the life of righteousness, the unclean heart has been cleansed. The regenerate life, spiritual life, and eternal life are one and the same. At regeneration we begin to live a life the same in kind that we shall live after death. Its degrees are marked upon an infinite scale.

DOTS.

A very interesting business session of the Louisiana Avenue League was held last Friday night. Things are getting in shape for the fall campaign.

Tchonpitoulas Epworth League held their regular business meeting on Friday, Sept. 24. There was a very good attendance, and a keen interest in the work was manifested. Encouraging reports of work done were read from each department. This League—the youngest one in the "fold and fellowship"—is anxious to be taught, and have arranged for social gatherings, for the purpose of reading, and learning "what they believe and why," that they may "continue in the things which they have learned and have been assured of."

We clip the following account of a social given by Algiers League from the Times Democrat:

The Epworth League held their regular monthly meeting last Friday night at the Methodist Church. The following interesting programme was given: Opening address, Miss Ethel Rhodes; recitation, Miss Annie May Kern; dialogue (Maiden and Weathercock), Miss Callie Daniels and Homer Rhodes; recitation, Master Eddie Skelly; vocal solo (The Rainy Day), Miss G. Hutchinson; the Poet's Calendar, by twelve children; vocal solo (The Village Blacksmith), Miss Hulse; the Children's Hour, by nine children; song (The Arrow and Song), Rev. R. H. Wynn; recitation (Hiawatha's Famine), Miss D. Dowling; song (The Bridge), Mr. James Heap; reading, Miss A. Elwell; reading, Master Archie Skelly; vocal duet, Miss G. Hutchinson and Mr. Jas. Heap; song, Rev. Feitel. Four additional members were added to the already large membership of this prosperous League.

Delhi District.

This has been a very extraordinary year thus far on my district. We emerged from the last year in great poverty resulting from the drouth. Although the drouth in my district was reported far worse than it really was, still it left the people in unusual poverty. The dronth of last year was followed by the overflow of this year, which affected quite a large portion of our most fertile country. We, however, have in general fine crops of cotton, with excellent crops of corn, except in the overflowed portions, where there is literally no corn. We have begun to pick the cotton; a very few have sold a bale or two; and the yellow fever, with the quarantine, is upon us, and our farmers are shut out from the cotton markets. The result of the whole is: the people have had almost no money this year up to this time. Of course, the finances of the church have suffered very much. My preachers are and have been at their posts, but are now estopped from their work, as they are not allowed to pass from place to place, on account of fear of being exposed to the fever, and taking into the families of communities where the fever does not exist.

We are hoping that much of the rumor is unfounded, and that the necessity of quarantine will soon pass away. I think that most of my preachers have a large part of the general collections in subscription; and if a kind Providence gives us speedy relief from these difficulties, we will, at least, be able to make fair reports, financially, at Conference.

We are succeeding nicely in organizing Epworth Leagues on the district, and I have good reason to think we will report not only "one" League at Lake Providence, but more than "one" on some of the charges, and at least "one" on nearly every charge in the district. We are having very successful revivals on many of the charges; genuine, solid revivals in the church, and a moderate ingathering of new members. Our ingathering last year at some places simply left almost none to gather this year. One of our oldest and most successful pastors says: We succeeded on that line so well last year, that but little material was left to draw from this year. Our preaching generally has had for its object the building up of the membership in the knowledge of our doctrines, and the practice of Christian duty in the homes, in the social circles and in the public work of the church.

Let me say, in conclusion, we think our Discipline needs no change with regard to our pastoral relations to our dear local brethren. We are all evangelists, and, as such, are ready, by the grace of God, to help conquer the world for Christ.

The Central Methodist says:

Dr. W. A. Chandler closed a speech in connection with the laying of the corner-stone of the Library building of Emory College thus: "But they will bear me witness that the small gifts of the poor, especially the gifts of itinerant preachers, have been most constant and generous. A college sustained by such a constituency can never die. Emory College is made deathless because encompassed by arms of love. 'Many waters can not quench it, neither can the floods drown it.'"

This is not only true of the college, but of every other institution of the church. By the devotion and faith of our self-forgetting and self-sacrificing preachers, both local and itinerant, the enterprises of the church are carried forward. This is made possible by the fact that there is a vast multitude of true and loyal men and women who know their Lord and are ready for every good word and work. We know of a certain educational enterprise where $80,000 was raised, and the largest sum of this amount was $400, the balance being made up of sums from twenty-five cents up. Leadership, intelligence and devotion are the prerequisites to success on any line of church enterprise.—Nashville Advocate.

Little Things of Life.

Why is it that we so easily forget that the little things of life are what make it easy or hard? A few pleasant words, a warm handclasp, a cordial letter, are simple things; but they are mighty in their influence on the lives of those about us, adding a ray of hope to many disconsolate hearts, giving a bit of courage to disappointed, weary ones, and helping to make our own lives sweeter at the same time.

Few people seem to realize how much the little attentions of every-day life mean to their associates in the home, the church, the business place. It is generally a lack of consideration which makes one forget the small courtesies, but lack of consideration is really one form of selfishness, and selfishness is considered a desirable quality. Remember that the little things in life, whether good or bad, count for more with those we love than we ever know, and we should be watchful of our actions and our words.—Christian Observer.

There are several ways of numbering our days. One way is merely to count them off as we tear off the daily leaves of our calendar. Each evening a man has one day less to live. But that is not true numbering. Another way is merely to count the days into the aggregate of life. A man is one day older—but that is all. He is no better. He has left no worthy record on the day's page. The true numbering is that which fills the days as they pass with records of good and beautiful living, and with lines of growth in character.

There is little good in worrying over the failures of the year, but we ought to learn from our past. He is the wise man, not who makes no mistakes, but who does not repeat his mistakes.—J. R. Miller, D. D.

HOME.

BY JAS. MONTGOMERY.

There is a land of every land a pride,
Beloved by Heaven o'er all the world beside;
Where brighter suns dispense serener light,
And milder moons emparadise the night;
A land of beauty, virtue, valor, truth,
Time-tutored age, and love-exalted youth.

The wanderiog mariner, whose eye explores
The wealthiest isles, the most enchanting shores,
Views not a realm so beautiful and fair,
Nor breathes the spirit of a purer air;
In every clime the magnet of his soul,
Touched by remembrance, trembles to that pole;
For in this land of Heaven's peculiar grace,
The heritage of nature's noblest race,
There is a spot of earth supremely blest,
A dearer, sweeter spot than all the rest,
Where man, creation's tyrant, casts aside
His sword and sceptre, pageantry and pride,
While in his softened looks benignly blend
The sire, the son, the husband, brother, friend.

Here woman reigns: the mother, daughter, wife,
Strew with fresh flowers the narrow way of life!
In the clear heaven of her delightful eye
An angel-guard of loves and graces lie;
Around her knees domestic duties meet,
And fireside pleasures gambol at her feet.
Where shall that land, that spot of earth be found;
Art thou a man?—a patriot?—look around:
Oh, thou shalt find, howe'er thy footsteps roam,
That land thy country, and that spot thy home.

Be Slow to Judge.

Be not swift to judge others. Whenever the supposed errors or weakness of others are brought to our notice, let us hesitate—let us postpone reflecting upon them. Possibly some slight prejudice may mislead us, and thus innocent persons may suffer. Wait. In our cooler moments, when an opportunity is given us to know their early training, their present surroundings, and their secret motives, we may be constrained to modify our first unfavorable impressions. We all need just such leniency from others. Our best efforts, those that are most productive of good, are sometimes the occasion of present adverse criticism. If only hasty judgment is suspended for a season, time will cause such a reversal that our cause may be justified before all men. That which may have seemed positively wrong at the first, subsequently is acknowledged to be an evidence of our integrity? "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." To be kind to all men, considerate of them in their struggles, slow to convict them of wrong-doing, silent when the cause of righteousness will not suffer by delay—this is Christian nobility. Wait. Choose the more excellent way. If our charity for others "suffereth long," we shall be enriched by a divine reaction of love in our own hearts, a blessing that is beyond all price.

Mr. Gladstone in a New Light.

The Rev. Newman Hall tells in The New Age, recently, an interesting story of Mr. Gladstone, related to him by Sir Francis Crossley. When Mr. Gladstone was Chancellor of the Exchequer he used to go to the church of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, which, as many people know, overlooks Trafalgar Square. One day Sir Francis was dining with the vicar, who had recently been to see a sick crossing sweeper. The vicar asked the crossing sweeper if anyone had lately visited him.

"Yes, Mr. Gladstone," answered the invalid.

"But how came he to see you?" asked the vicar.

"Well," answered the crossing sweeper, "he had always a nice word for me when he passed my crossing, and when I was not there he missed me. He asked my mate, who had taken my place, where I was, and when he heard that I was ill he asked my address, and when he was told he put it down on paper. So he called to see me."

"And what did he do?" asked the vicar.

"Why, he read some Bible to me and prayed," was the answer.

What does it profit a man to be the landed proprietor of countless acres unless he can reap the harvest of delight that blooms from every root of God's earth for the seeing eye and loving heart? And who can reap that harvest so closely that there shall not be abundant gleaning left for all mankind? The most that a wide principality can yield to its legal owner is a living. But the real owner can gather from a field of golden-rod, shining in the August sunlight, an unearned increment of life. We measure success by accumulation. The measure is false. The true measure is appreciation. He who loves has most.—Henry Van Dyke, D. D.

The Pill that Will.

"The pill that will," implies the pills that won't. Their cure is legion. The name of "the pill that will" is Ayer's Cathartic Pill. It is a pill to rely on. Properly used it will cure constipation, biliousness, sick headache, and the other ills that result from torpid liver. Ayer's pills are not designed to spur the liver into a momentary activity, leaving it in yet more incapable condition after the immediate effect is past. They are compounded with the purpose of toning up the entire system, removing the obstructing conditions, and putting the liver into proper relations with the rest of the organs for natural co-operation. The record of Ayer's Pills during the half century they have been in public use establishes their great and permanent value in all liver affections.

Successful Office Boys.

An editor of a great city daily was speaking a few days ago about the service of his office boy. "I don't believe there is a person in the building who has anything against the boy," said he. "Arthur is always on time, always ready and quiet, and thoroughly reliable."

Some one who stood by took the occasion to ask a question: "Is it really true that a boy who is responsible and willing is always noticed?"

"O, yes," said the editor; "noticed almost at once, and all over the office."

"But what are his chances about being promoted? In a large office I should think there would be really little chance, yet one continually sees it stated that reliable boys are sure to be promoted."

The editor answered with decision: "The chances are almost certain. I should say they are certain. A boy who is reliable and willing to work, and who shows a disposition to do his best, is sure to be promoted as fast as he deserves to be. Of course, in our office we have all sorts of boys—boys who are shiftless and have no interest in their work, who stay a short time and drift away. That sort of a boy doesn't count. But now Arthur has been with us two years. In all that time he has been keen and business-like, ready to do anything, always pleasant and prompt and capable. The boy before Arthur was much the same sort of a boy. He grew interested in the typewriter. He stayed after hours and practiced on it till he became thoroughly skilful with it. That boy is now the business manager's stenographer. The two boys before him are clerks in the counting-room. Still others are at work in the building in good places. It is entirely true that a boy who means to make the most of himself can do it. We're looking for just those boys."—Exchange.

The Cost of a Boy.

It would be a good thing for all boys, and girls, too, to get some idea—in real figures of what their parents do for them. P. B. Fisk gives a lecture on the cost of a boy. He computes that at the age of fifteen a good boy, receiving the advantages of city life, will cost, counting compound interest on the sum invested, not less than $5,000. At twenty-one he will not cost any more unless he goes to college, when he will cost nearly twice as much. A bad boy costs about $10,000 at twenty-one, provided he does not go to college. If he does go, he costs as much more.

Mr. Fisk thinks that girls are nearly as expensive as boys. The computation, however, comprises only the pecuniary cost of raising a boy. The value of a mother's tears and the father's gray hairs are beyond the reach of figures to express. The money side is far the lesser of the two.

And when a man has put ten or twenty thousand dollars into a boy, what has he a right to expect of him? What is fair? Is it fair for the boy to work himself to death, to run, jump, play ball, or do anything in such a way as would disable him or break him down? Is it fair for him to despise his father and neglect his mother? Is it fair for him to ruin himself with drink, defile himself with tobacco, or stain himself with sin? Some of us have put about all our property into boys and girls; and if we lose them, we shall be poor indeed; while if they do well, we shall be repaid a hundredfold. Boys, what do you think about the matter?—Selected.

The Child Is Dead.

The child is dead. You may put away its playthings. Put them where they will be safe. I would not like to have them broken or lost; and you need not lend them to other children when they come to see us. It would pain me to see them in other hands, much as I love to see children happy with their toys. Its clothes you may lay aside; I shall often look them over, and each of the colors that he wore will remind me of him as he looked when he was here. I shall weep often when I think of him; but there is a luxury in thinking of the one that is gone, which I would not part with for the world. I think of that child now, a child always, though an angel among angels. The child is dead. The eye has lost its lustre. The hand is still and cold. Its little heart is not beating now. How pale it looks! Yet the very form is dear to me. Every lock of its hair, every feature of its face, is a treasure that I shall prize the more as the months of my sorrow come and go.—Rev. S. Irenæus Prime, D.D.

One of the sure ways of accomplishing too little is by expecting too much. To one who knows men no truth is more patent than the limitations of men of power. Some men are so profound that we despair of measuring their possibilities, but they are like the narrow vein of gold-bearing quartz—very deep down they go, but the line on each side of them is a hard, fast line of limitation. Other men cover vast fields and wide ranges of learning and power, so that, as we survey them, their capabilities outrun the horizon of our view. But only a few inches or yards below this promising surface is a definite line of limitation. They are only a thin stratum. Both sorts, and mixed sorts, and all sorts, must be viewed and estimated by their limitations as well as by their capabilities. No power, human or other, can be utilized to the best advantage, if we lose sight of the lines of limitation. Within those lines of limit any power can be developed to unlimited effectiveness and utility.—Sunday-School Times.

Ease of manner must be gained early in life if it is to be genuine and not an affection. Sensitive little ones readily become self-conscious and awkward if they are teased about their appearance and peculiarities. So we should be careful to avoid fixing their minds upon any defect, and not criticise them too much. Gracefulness is largely a matter of confidence, and to make a child timid and fearful of giving offense in whatever he says or does, is to place him at a disadvantage all his life.—Childhood.

The Bible has been too often treated as if it belonged to some other planet than this—separated from all the literature of the world and locked up with skull and crossbones in a closet of its own. I have no patience with this sort of thing. The figures and men of this book are the figures and men of to-day.—Rev. W. L. Wells.

Sorrow is our John the Baptist, clad in grim garments, with rough arms, a son of the wilderness, baptizing us in bitter tears, preaching repentance; and behind him comes the gracious, affectionate, healing Lord, gathering the wheat into the garner.—Bishop Huntingdon.

Advancing Views of Heaven.

When I was a boy I thought of heaven as a great, shining city, with vast walls and domes and spires, and with nobody in it except white angels, who were strangers to me. By and by my little brother died, and I thought of a great city, with walls and domes and spires, and a flock of cold, unknown angels, and one little fellow I was acquainted with. He was the only one I knew in that country. Then another brother died, and there were two whom I knew. Then my acquaintances began to die, and the number continually grew. But it was not until I had sent one of my little children back to God that I began to think I had a little interest there myself. A second, a third, and a fourth went; and by that time I had so many acquaintances in heaven that I did not see any more walls and domes and spires. I began to think of the residents of the Celestial City. And now so many acquaintances have gone there that it sometimes seems to me that I know more in heaven than I do on earth.—Selected.

Cheerful temper, joined with innocence, will make beauty attractive, knowledge delightful and wit good-natured. It will lighten sickness, poverty and affliction, convert ignorance into an amiable simplicity, and render deformity itself agreeable.—Addison.

Rest While You Rest.

Form develops first from rest and the strength that comes of rest. A tired, weakly figure will sag and bend and want elasticity. Overworked figures settle down and lose two inches of height by the pressing together of the parts of the body. That is why women seem and are shorter after middle age. On rest depends the length and suppleness of limb, and women should know how to take advantage to secure rest and conserve strength. Girls must be trained to take rest at proper seasons, whether they feel tired or not, and the woman must continue this exact and special care of herself as the foundation of her well-being. A day or two laying off at the right time, having her breakfast in bed and spending the day in the luxury of a wrapper and a lounge, will make the difference between a blithe, active creature the next few weeks, or one who goes about with a constant ache and fatigue.

Dr. Hosmer, the father of Harriet Hosmer, the sculptor, one of the acutest of New England physicians, used to drive around the circle of his practice in housekeeping seasons telling women to lie down and rest when tired, as half an hour at full length on a lounge would refresh the whole body more than three hours sitting in a chair. The periodical rest should be insisted on by every mother as long as she lives to watch over her daughter. Without it shoulders grow broad and the gait dragging. With rest the step is elastic, the form well upheld, the bust firm, the limbs retain elegance and shape. Work while you work and rest while you rest, should be the rule for every girl and woman.

After advising the duty of rest, it will sound strange to urge the value of hard work in keeping a good form, but the two supplement each other. Hard work is not overwork, but rapid, steady work that pulls muscle into play and sends the blood and sweat flowing finely. Perhaps you will bear better what that polished physician and man of the world, Dr. Weir Mitchell, says on the subject: "I think it fortunate when women are so situated as to have to do things about the household which exact vigorous use of the upper extremities. Nothing is a better allay against nervousness or irritability in anyone than outdoor exercise or pretty violent use of the muscles."—New York Journal.

Were the writer a professor of homiletics, he would certainly use Munsey's sermons as a text-book in his lectures. He has faults, painful ones; all the more so because of their collocation or occurrence with such great excellences. It is as though a most superb mosaic of rarest gems had one or more very common stones in it; or, for a better illustration, it reminds us of that gorgeous palace that Aladdin built of pearl and ruby, sapphire, diamond, and other gems, and left an unfinished window to illustrate the helplessness of his father-in-law (a king) to complete it in proper magnificence. It is a thankless, most distasteful task to say anything but in praise of Munsey. But he is so dangerous, from his greatness, that some of his faults ought to be noted.

As long as we speak our language, and books live, we will read Munsey. "Thither as to a fountain other sons will repair, and in their urns draw golden light." Particularly will students of divinity hang over his pages in rapture. This is why one ought to take up his sermons, one by one, comment upon their faults (a few have, perhaps, none), deeply engrave their merits, and discriminate their excellences with due emphasis. We can only glance at some of his defects and excellences, waiving, vindicating our praise or criticism by elaborate vindication. Munsey uses some words utterly not in the language! He has almost a pruriency for neology. He uses some that are obsolete, some that are rare, some that have a meaning that is secondary and remote in his application, and that jar you, nearly mislead, and mar the symmetry of his periods. He very often drives one to the dictionery to see his meaning. He has a taint of certain traits of Ossianism (Macpherson) in an occasional strain of tawdriness, flamboyancy and stridency, lumidity, inflation. He has a distressing propensity for grandiloquence, piling pleonasm upon pleonasm, sometimes, to achieve it. He is, now and then, grotesque. He occasionally mixes incongruously, gratingly upon the taste, the beings of heathen mythology and of Christianity. He is (rarely) incongruous in his figures of speech—mixed metaphors. He sometimes misuses words—misterms. His syntax—rarely—is at fault. He sometimes clogs the movement of his periods by secondary thoughts and too much detail. He is at times obscure, if not unintelligible, in his metaphysical abstruseness, and has too great a bent for metaphysical exegesis. His fonits of taste, ripening judgment and reading would have greatly improved, if not eradicated. There is most conclusive evidence of this where there is an elaborate description of the creation of man inserted by Bishop Keener, "against the taste and intention of its author," as the Bishop says in a foot note, page 118, series first. The intended omission contains some most gorgeous word-painting, its personalities fresh and beautiful as Venus rising from the sea, or like Burke's most lovely comparison of the Queen of France, Marie Antoinette: "Just above the horizon, glittering like the morning star, full of life and splendor and joy." But his taste told him it was not in keeping. Now, if one will notice the rhetorical progress his taste and judgment had made between the composition of that passage and the decision to eliminate it, he will have a criterion (vague in measure, but vast) to estimate potentialities of development in a chastity of style and taste by after years and culture.

Notwithstanding our criticism, it must be said that there must be accorded a great degree of liberty (or license) to the sallies of greatness to "brains entranc'd and full of ecstacies." We must not be captious at the irregularities or deviations from nice taste of some of his work. As to the vagaries of his wing, it should be remembered that he was often not "standing on the earth," but "rapt above the pole." And we will do well to remember such precepts as great men enunciate with reference to the high privileges of genius in certain moods. Emerson tells us "the vision of genius comes by renouncing the too officious activity of the understanding, and giving leave and amplest privilege to the spontaneous sentiment." And, in higher strain, in connection with, perhaps, the finest figure of speech in our language; in Erskine's speech in behalf of Stockdale: "It is the nature of everything that is great and useful, both in the animate and inanimate world, to be wild and irregular, and we must be contented to take them with the alloys which belong to them, or live without them. Genius breaks from the fetters of criticism, but its wanderings are sanctioned by its majesty.... Tempests occasionally shake our dwellings and dissipate our commerce, but they scourge before them the lazy elements, which, without them, would stagnate into pestilence."

Superannuates.

I saw in a church paper, a few days ago, that a Methodist Bishop said that a superannuated preacher was as much entitled to a support, under the law of the church, as he was, or any other preacher. It does seem that a preacher who entered the ministry when young, spent his life down to old age, decrepitude and affliction, poor, having to retire from the work, should be supported. I believe all good, right-minded persons will say so. Do they get a support? Let us see. One hundred and fifty dollars is about the avarage assessment in our Conference for the support of the superannuated preachers. Out of that they have to get themselves a home, furnish the same, pay the taxes, insurance, table expenses, clothing, medicine, doctor bills, dig wells, put up fences. They get no marriage fees, no poundings by the good people, no buying goods at cost. On the other hand, I believe the avarage assessment in our Conference for the support of our pastors ranges from six to sixteen hundred dollars. House furnished, no tax to pay, no insurance, no well to dig, no fence to put up. They get marriage fees and poundings, sometimes their larders filled, and other compliments, and yet at the end of the year they have little or no money. Then how is that poor old worn-out preacher going to live on one hundred and fifty dollars, provided he gets it? Well, it looks as if they ought to get one-fourth as much as the pastor, but they get taffy in abundance. A bag of potatoes will do them more good than the taffy. Taffy is sweet, but it don't put shoes on his old wife's feet. The church does not know how the old worn-out preacher lives—whether he is starving or not; neither does it care. We judge from action; but, glory to God! they are not lost sight of by angels and God.

Now, I ask the question again, Are they entitled to a support under the law, and do they get it? I would like if some one would not be afraid to answer it. A. B. Nicholson.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. M. E. Tamlin, Shuqualak, Miss., Sept. 25: "We have just closed an excellent meeting at Clearman Chapel, a new and elegant country church four and one-fourth miles west of Shuqualak. There were six accessions to the Methodist Church, and a general toning up of believers. Several said it was the best meeting they ever attended. We can't get help here now from abroad. The pastor did the preaching. The Lord filled the new temple, and we all rejoiced. 'Praise ye the Lord.'"

Rev. F. N. Sweeney, Pine Grove circuit, Baton Rouge district, Sept. 27: "I began a meeting at Pipkin's Chapel on Friday night of the seventeenth instant, and closed on Thursday, the twenty-third. I was assisted by Rev. W. H. Harvell, L. P., and Rev. J. J. Kelly, of Live Oak. These brethren did good and faithful work. There were several conversions and fourteen accessions to the church; raised sufficient means to repair the church-house, and two-thirds of my Conference claims subscribed, for which we give God the glory."

Rev. A. B. Nicholson: "Our last camp meeting at Crystal Springs was, in my judgment, the best we have had. There was not as great enthusiasm as I have seen there before. The preaching was not to that end. The main effort was to the unconverted, with fine success. There was supposed to be between seventy-five and one hundred conversions. Bro. Lowrey certainly is a great and useful minister of the gospel of Christ. He don't regard himself a boss, and try to drive the people. He is truly religious; full of faith and the Holy Ghost; without a hobby. The congregations were larger than ever before; most attentive, well behaved; more tenters, better accommodations, great improvements on the grounds. It was prophesied that the Chautauqua would kill off the camp meeting; but so far it appears to be a great advantage in improvements and accommodations. We have now the grandest camp ground in the South, with flattering prospects of still greater improvements in the future. I was told there were ninety-nine cottages; some of them large, roomy, good-looking buildings; better than many of us have to live in. There is an artificial lake, one steam barge, with a number of small row-boats; the lake full of young fish. They talk of building a large hotel by the next meeting. The Chautauqua was said by those that know to be quite a success. With the State Normal School attached, it will make Crystal Springs Camp Ground the great public resort in the State or in the South—that is, if there gets no fly in the lock. Put these three elements together, conserved and sanctified by the religious influence of the camp meeting, and what a grand enterprise it will be!"

Rev. Geo. W. Huff, Escatawpa, Miss., Sept. 29: "Yellow fever is making hard times for us in this part of the country. Shot-gun quarantine, yellow fever and no money is about all a fellow can bear. I am trying to work some for the Advocate. I send you a few names to-day; expect to send more next week. Our people are very nearly all in the woods. When I was a boy I use to hear people talk about the woods being full of run-away niggers; but the negroes are all at home now, and the white folks are trying the woods. A yellow-fever panic is in many respects the next thing to a civil war. It paralyzes business, stops the circulation of money, and demoralizes the people. Our dear, good people have provided provisions in abundance for me and family, but money is scarce. We closed a good meeting on our work just at the time the yellow fever broke out. Rev. I. W. Cooper, D. D., and W. T. Beall, M. D., did the most of the preaching. The straight, old-fashioned gospel of Jesus was preached to the people by these men of God, and it found its way to many a heart, and sixteen persons came forward and united with the church. I bless the Lord for such preachers as Cooper and Beall. I love our evangelists, our local preachers, and, above all, I love our pastors. I love our church. I believe it is the best church on earth. I love old-time religion that saves men from sin, and gives us the Spirit of Christ. The new 'patent' is all right for some people, but, like many other things, it makes some people cranky. But, with all of our cranky ways, and ups and downs in life, may we all meet in a better land!"

DOYLE—Essie Edwina Doyle was born in Centreville, Miss., April 9, 1835, and died at her father's home in Rosaum, Miss., July 24, 1897, aged twelve years three months and fifteen days.

Little Essie was taken violently ill with that most insidious disease, congestion; and though all was done that loving hearts, tender hands and skilled physicians could do, yet in a few short, but anxious and painful hours, the cruel monster, Death, claimed her as his victim.

She was bright and happy in disposition, of a precocious mind, attracting the attention, calling forth the admiration, and winning the love of all with whom she was associated; kind and gentle as a sister, loving and obedient as a daughter, faithful and true as a friend. Essie loved the church and Sabbath-school, and had been working for some time, with great prospects of success, for a Sunday-school prize; but God, in his infinite wisdom, said, "It is enough; come up higher." And instead of a prize of an earthly nature, which perisheth in a day, God has given her a crown of life, which fadeth not away.

Dear Essie is not dead. She has gone to be with Jesus in that land of the blest, "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary be at rest," and "where sin and sorrow are felt and feared no more."

May the Lord's sustaining grace and comforting spirit be given the loved ones in this hour of sorrow and bereavement!

Doing "stunts."

That seems to be the case with the women who are washing in the old way. You can stand on your head, for instance. Almost everyone could do it, if it were necessary or desirable. But standing on the feet is more natural and more sensible—and easier. So with soap and Pearline. Everyone can wash with soap—many do. But washing with Pearline is easier and more sensible. The hard work of soap is neither necessary nor desirable. Everyone should give up the use of soap and should use Pearline. 543

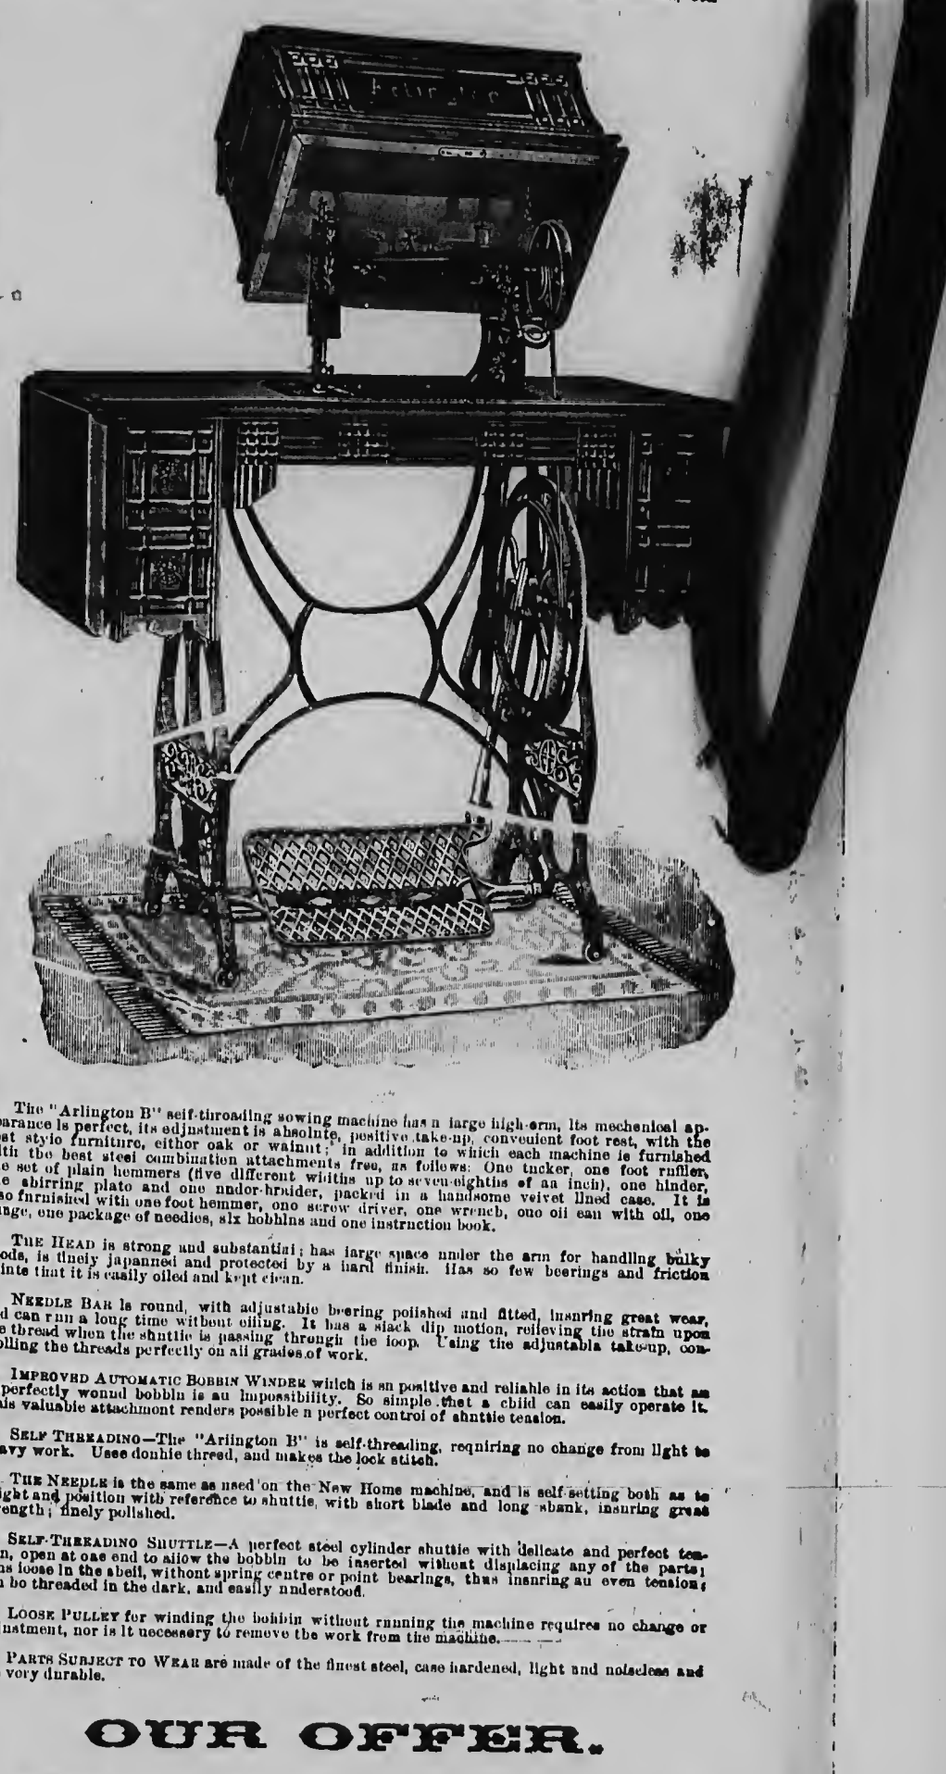
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.



The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take-up, convenient foot rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

The Head is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

Needle Bar is round, with adjustable bearing polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

Improved Automatic Bobbin Winder which is an positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

Self Threading—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

The Needle is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

Self-Threading Shuttle—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell, without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

Loose Pulley for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

Parts Subject to Wear are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

OUR OFFER.

To anyone, not now a subscriber to this paper, who will send us $19, we will send the machine and the New Orleans Advocate one year. To old subscribers we make the following offer: Pay your subscription to April, '99, and send $17 additional, and we will send you the machine. This price does not include freight.

We allow purchaser to test the machine for ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

TO AGENTS:

We will send this machine free to any preacher or other person who will send us twenty new subscribers with the cash—$10. Address

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The present Republican administration has given offices with a lavish hand to colored men in the South.

The superintendent of police of this city, who was requested by the mayor to resign the position, has sent in his resignation.

The American Geographical Society, like the Academy of Design and the Historical Society, is to have a home in New York. It has a fund of $400,000 already on hand, and a site will soon be selected.

The ninety-five millionaires who have purchased Jekyl Island, on the Georgia coast, and spent more than $1,000,000 in building a magnificent clubhouse, cottages, game preserves, etc., on it, are very much disturbed by the proposition of the State to purchase Sapello Island, which adjoins Jekyl, and making a penal colony of it.

An evening high school for women has been opened in New York. There are already many applications for admission, among them women whose ages range from 16 to 55, who are employed during the day.

The Knights of Pythias have raised $12,000 for a monument to John F. Rathborne, the founder of the order. It will be placed in New Forest Cemetery, in Utica, the owners of the cemetery having donated a plot of ground for the same.

Governor Ellerbe, of South Carolina, has signed proclamations doing away with liquor constables and spies in that State, and throwing the responsibility for the enforcement of the dispensary law on the municipal and county authorities; also removing the metropolitan police of Charleston, so as to place that city on an equality with the other cities of the State.

W. C. Brann, editor of the Brann's Iconoclast, was the victim of a mob of 200 students of Baylor University, a Baptist Institution in Texas, last week. Brann, under threats of death, was compelled to sign a statement declaring that an article appearing in the October number of the Iconoclast, and reflecting on Baylor University, was untrue, and promised that he would leave town.

About 400 Chinamen have been landed in San Francisco during the last five months, and have been given free entry in the guise of "merchants and students." They are now all working in various parts of California. These laborers have nearly all come in on certificates issued in Macao, a dependency of Portugal, and which, under an opinion of the attorney-general of the United States, delivered May 20, 1896, must be recognized as prima facie evidence of the right of their bearers to land.

DON'T be penny wise and pound foolish by buying the "just-as-good mixtures," "so called White Lead," or other substitutes for Pure White Lead.

In painting, the cost of labor so far exceeds the cost of material that the best only should be used. The best is Pure White Lead (see list of brands which are genuine) and Pure Linseed Oil.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application.

National Lead Co., 1 Broadway, New York.

The question of a supply of labor for the gathering of the sugar crop is an all-absorbing one now. Every town, railway station and crossroads settlement in every parish of the State is surrounded by a shotgun cordon, each local quarantine being operated on its own account and against every other, so that it is absolutely impossible to move laborers from one place to any other place on any account.

Hon. James Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture, visits the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute, Tuskegee, Ala., of which Booker T. Washington is founder and principal, Wednesday, Nov. 17, 1897, for the purpose of delivering an address at the formal opening of a new building to be devoted to training in agriculture, horticulture, dairying, etc. This is the first building in the negro schools to be devoted to agricultural purposes.

During this week there will meet in Davenport, Iowa, one of the most important interstate bodies in which this State is interested, namely, the Western Waterways Convention. The object of this organization is to bind together the States of the Mississippi Valley in the work of securing the improvement of waterways and harbors by bringing such pressure to bear upon Congress and the National Government as will best insure prompt attention to such matters and liberal appropriations therefor.

FOREIGN.

The much-coveted music prize known as the Mendelssohn stipendium, has been won in Berlin by Miss Leonora Jackson, an American competitor.

It is said that Captain-General Weyler has been recalled from Cuba. His successor has not yet been officially announced.

The horses of the German cavalry regiments are to be entirely shod with paper shoes, recent experiments as to their durability having proved very satisfactory.

Six villages near Tung Chow, China, containing over 80,000 inhabitants, have been destroyed by floods. The number of drowned is estimated by Chinese authorities at 15,000 to 20,000.

The outcry against the new naval bill, which contemplates an appropriation of 410,000,000 marks, to be distributed over seven years, and the construction of a score of vessels, of which ten are to be large ships, appears to have caused the German government to pause.

JUST FOR TO-DAY.

BY CANON WILBERFORCE.

Lord, for to-morrow and its needs
I do not pray;
Keep me, my God, from stain of sin,
Just for to-day.

Let me both diligently work,
And daily pray;
Let me be kind in words and deed,
Just for to-day.

Let me be slow to do my will,
Prompt to obey;
Help me to overcome my flesh,
Just for to-day.

Let me no wrong or idle word
Unthinking say;
Set thou a seal upon my lips,
Just for to-day.

Let me in season, Lord, be grave;
In season gay;
Let me be faithful to thy grace,
Just for to-day.

So for to-morrow and its needs
I do not pray;
But keep me, guide me, love me, Lord,
Just for to-day.

Samuel Wesley.

BY REV. GEO. G. SMITH, D. D.

SECOND PAPER.

The free thinking, dissolute marquis did not allow his displeasure at the treatment of his mistress to rob her of his regard for his chaplain, who probably held the place in the London house, where things were a matter of prayer. The wife and four little children were, perhaps, not unwilling to leave the straw-thatched cottage of Epworth for London, in which the literary rector drove his busy pen. The marquis somewhat penitent marqnis sent him twenty guineas, and the countess gave him five, and in 1697 he was inducted into the living of Epworth, in Lincoln also. The journey to Epworth, to which he next went, was not a change to the best, but to the better. On a fertile, but glorious flat reclaimed from the sea stood the church and glebe were located. The rector was now about forty years old, and though the good wife had had seven children, she carried with her only four—three bright little girls and one sturdy little boy, Samuel—to her new home. The house they lived in was what we of to-day would have called a hewed, double-storied log cabin. It was built of heavy oaken timbers, and covered with thatch. There was a glebe, and there was all the ontcome needed. The income was largely from the glebe and from the living. Adam Clarke's father, who had come to cultivate the hills of northern Ireland according to the directions of Virgil's "Georgics," was a better farmer, it may be, than Samuel Wesley; but the glebe must be made productive, or the household would suffer. Susannah Wesley, well-bred and brought up in the hall, had little skill, it may be, in managing maids. Mr. Payser would have taught her many a homely lesson about management, but there was no Mr. Payser. The children were to be educated, little Samuel was now old enough to begin Latin, and Patty was showing promise of what she would be, and the good rector was in his study getting out another book of poems; so his wife had little time to see after the cows. She had little sunshine in this dreary life. The brusque, bustling, High Church rector, with his testy ways and his quick temper, had little attraction for his parishioners, and they disliked him cordially. They burned the house, and then accused him of burning it himself. There came regularly, and with fearful frequency, children to the home, until there were born in all nineteen of them.

It is a sad fact that men least fitted to do some things are the men most prone to attempt them, and Samuel Wesley, while he, no doubt, thought himself a poet of moderate gifts, and, perhaps, not a learned theologian, although he was a farmer of remarkable ability, he borrowed money, and died deeply in debt at a time when an unpaid debt meant a prison. His mother was living, and he had to aid her. His wife was not able to do anything but nurse her children, and he knew nothing of how to manage these difficulties, and so he became more and more involved. His aristocratic friends came to his rescue, and sent him help time and again; but he was not a thrifty nor a shifty man, and his struggle with debt was a life long one. He wrote severely against his old friends, the Dissenters. They had educated him in his youth and fed his poor old mother, and of their party his father and grandfather and great-grandfather had belonged; but the impulsive little man, anxious to please those with whom he was allied, attacked his early friends in no gentle way, for he revealed in a letter some family secrets better not told.

The great revival of religion in the early and middle parts of the seventeenth century was at an end, and the beginning of the eighteenth was a time of fearful religious deadness. The domination of the High Church party in the days of Anne was to succeed the more conservative rule of Tillottson, and the Low Churchmen of the days of William and Mary. Politically, Samuel Wesley was allied with the High Church party; religiously, he seems to have held the moderate view of Tillottson and Burnell. The Dissenters were his creditors, and he so involved himself in trouble by intermeddling with an election, and at last he was thrown where he had feared for some years he would at last land—in a prison. He had a sad time while he was there. A miscreant stabbed his cows, his brave house-dog was mutilated, his flax was burned, his chaplaincy was taken away, but his friends rallied to him, and $750 was collected to pay him out of prison, and in four months he was home again. In his distress his gentle wife sent him her rings (it was all she had), but he sent them back, and thanked God for other ways of deliverance. Sturdy Samuel, his oldest boy, was now at Westminster, and surely it proves the absurdity of the cry against free education by the church as robbing men of manhood to know that Samuel Wesley, John and Charles, would never have secured an education at all unless it had been given them.

The home at Epworth, with the good Susannah and her ten loving children, gives a picture of the best type of an English rectory. We see that, as Isaac Taylor said, that there was a condition of things in England in the homes of even the Churchmen who were classed as High, which the Evangelicals are not willing to recognize.

After the second fire Samuel Wesley built his new parsonage. It was a really commodious and comfortable home. Not long after the new rectory was built it had a strange visitor, whom the family called "Old Jeffrey." They thought he was a ghost. All kinds of absurd and unaccountable things were done by him. He moved furniture, he made the trenches dance on the table, he pulled the coverlets off of the beds. Robin, the servant man, concluded he would see if the dog could not detect him; but when Old Jeffrey began his tricks the mastiff whiningly crept into Robin's bed. Old Jeffrey turned the corn-mill, but, to Robin's disgust, there was no corn in it. Who was he? John Wesley, Adam Clarke, Robert Southey, Luke Tyerman and Isaac Taylor have failed to tell, and I am sure I can not say who he was.

The little rector, I have said, was a testy man, as was his sons, John and Charles, and the good wife was a woman of her own head, and there can be little doubt of the fact that she was in her sympathies a Jacobite. William was joint ruler with Mary, but he was king because she was queen; but Mary was now dead, and the form of prayer was changed, and when the rector prayed for "our king," the rector's wife did not say "Amen." Her silence, whenever the petition was made, was noticeable, and the testy husband said, "I notice you did not say 'Amen' when I prayed for the king." "No," she said. "And why?" said he. "Because he is not my king." "Well," said the indignant spouse, "if we are to have two kings, we will have two beds," and he mounted his pony and rode off to London to convocation. He was, it may be, thoroughly penitent before he reached the metropolis, and he came back a gentler man. That she yielded, no one can suppose; that he did, no one can doubt. Dr. Clarke says the vexed Samuel remained away a twelve-month; but the Doctor, as Mr. Tyerman shows, was evidently mistaken. I think Mr. Tyerman is disposed to reject the whole story of the good old Doctor; but it is likely it was true in part. "Your father and I," said the good Susannah, "can hardly ever see things in the same light," and the good Samuel never had a doubt that in all these questions he was always right. He was not able to furnish his house but scantily; and, despite the help of his friends, his debts crept steadily upward. The story of his life is the story of an impulsive, warm-hearted, guileless child of nature struggling with disaster; but Samuel was educated, and was making his way and helping Charles. The poetic, beautiful, gifted girls married always beneath them, and always unhappily—all save the gentle cripple, who married John Whitelamb, and died at the birth of her first child, and one who married a Quaker. We can get a view of the great rectory just after it was built in 1709. The poorly clad, poorly fed girls—all of them intellectual, and all of them educated, and some of them beautiful; of the saintly wife, worn with care; of the two bright boys, John and Charles, and, last of all, of the rector, smoking his pipe, delving in old volumes for his notes on Job, soliciting subscribers for his magnum opus, dictating to his amanuensis, planning for the copper plates which were to illustrate his great book, smiling broadly over some merry freak of little Charles, or answering some question for little John, so dear because so nearly lost in the fire. There are no companions for the rector's family in these fens; no congenial associates for his children, and in their books they find all their friends. Thus the life moves on. Now and then he goes to a convocation, and now and then a Bishop makes him a visitation, and now and then some neighboring rector crosses his threshold; and once snarling, snappish brother Mathew, who had little use for High Church parsons, especially when they were as thriftless as his brother Sam, came to see him. As he grew older he softened in spirit. He asked the Dissenters to forgive, and meekly said he had been too tart. He heard good news from John at Oxford, and Charles, his poetic boy, who was there, too. Samuel was doing well teaching. The girls had not done well, but girls were not matters of much concern in those days; and now John comes as his curate, while Charles was at college. Epworth and Wroote were not pleasant charges, but these are better than most clergymen had, and, perhaps, John can get the rectory when his father must leave it. He has his fellowship, but the rectorship is worth a great deal more.

For twenty-five years the good Samuel was at work on Job. His friends were aiding him to get a good list of subscribers for the great Latin dissertation. He kept his family on scant supplies that he might make this dissertation his monument. He employed learned scholars to help; he bought costly books; he hired costly engravers; he worked on until gout came, and then palsy followed, and at last he finished it, and with his three hundred subscribers to supply, he sent the great folio to the press, and then died. John was going to sail for Georgia. When he was on the eve of his visit he gave the presentation copy, with its dedication, to Her Majesty the Queen. She was Caroline, wife of George II. Mary and Anne, and now Caroline, had each received now evidences of the good rector's regard for queens.

The parishes of Wroote and Epworth, where Samuel Wesley preached for forty years, seem to have been but little affected by the leaven of Puritanism, and were certainly not much affected by the labors of the church parsons, if we are to judge from what John Wesley says. The people came to the parish church on Sunday morning and heard the brainless Ingham declaim on paying debts, or heard a learned dissertation from the rector, and that was all. John Wesley, shut out from his father's pulpit, preached from his father's tombstone, and did more good in one sermon than the old rector had seemed to do in a life-time.

Samuel Wesley was always religious in his way, and while genial in spirit and somewhat latitudinarian in his views, and, perhaps, too tolerant of lax livers, if they were noblemen, he was anxious to know the truth, and anxious to do what he thought God demanded of him. He would, but for his sons, have been forgotten long ago with the men of his kind; but they have kept his memory green. They knew him, and revered him, and all Methodists feel a kindly glow when they think of the old rector of Epworth and Wroote, because he was the father of John and Charles Wesley.

Correspondence.

Letter from West Virginia.

MR. EDITOR: Have wanted to write a few lines to the ADVOCATE for quite a while, but have postponed the pleasure until I am about ready to start back to the dear home in Mississippi. While I have not written the ADVOCATE one word since here, I have read it carefully, and with pleasure, week after week.

Last Spring I noted with much sorrow the distresses of the brethren in the Delta district; have watched the progress of things during Summer, and am now in deep sympathy with you all in the excitement and danger you suffer by reason of the fever. Have been grieved to know of the serious illness of many of the brethren of the North Mississippi Conference during the year, and am more than grieved at the decease of Bros. Lyter and Howell. They were good men, and death to them was no more than a promotion to better things. I believe that at a distance we can enter into closer sympathy with our friends in their affliction than when near to them.

I have been in West Virginia nearly eight months. These months have been pleasantly and profitably spent. My work has been very agreeable to me by reason of many existing conveniences here, and the warm friendship and love of the people. Never before have people treated pastor more courteously. My heart is sad at the thought of saying farewell.

Bluefield is quite a picturesque place of 7,000 people, situated at the base of the East River Mountains. It has many of the conveniences of a great city, such as telephone, telegraph, waterworks, street cars, daily paper, and a mayor and town council. With the last enumerated I have become very intimately, if not pleasantly, acquainted. "Blood has been on the moon," and more than once have I heard their war whoop. To what will men not resort sometimes to put saloons on a town. Thanks to Him who giveth us the victory, we are still dry.

There are ten white churches in town, and they are alive in advancing the morals of the community and in checking every movement calculated to work harm to the people. The M. E. Church, South, is strongest, having two places of worship and numbering a membership of more than 700. The town is full of Methodists. They swarm on the streets and crowd the churches—theaters and circuses, too, often. A moment here: It almost "runs the life out of a fellow" to keep abreast of this "crooked and perverse generation." Have used the Discipline—other things, too—since here trying to get men to respect the church and their obligations to it.

Bluefield is a great railroad center. The Norfolk and Western Railway Company has over forty miles of track within the corporate limits of the city. This is the weighing place of the thousands of tons of coal and coke taken weekly from the mines of the celebrated "Flat-Top Coal Regions." Round-house, power-house and repair shops here. In them hundreds of men find employment daily. Oh, the ceaseless din and quarrel of these mogul giants! How this thunder pulse-beat of Vulcan, this continuous puffing and blowing, how it grates upon the weary ear! Once more to lie down in the green pastures and to be led by the still waters of my native State—once more, and I shall be satisfied.

This country is proverbially healthy. Above the sea 2,500 feet, no miasmatic breath poisons our atmosphere, not a malarial germ, not a gnat, not a mosquito, not a "jack-o-me-lantern" in a hundred miles of here, I dare say. Among us the chill is a stranger, "without influence and hope in the world." But we are not exempt from all the ills of life. We have earthquakes to scare, engines to explode, and slow fever to kill. Withal, things are nearly evenly balanced in this world, so far as climatic conditions and natural advantages are concerned. The sweet English tongue at home, in contrast to the painful jargon which one often hears in this mixed populace, will atone for any lack which the people of the South may suffer in other respects.

A word about this Conference. It is long, broad, and tall—on the tops of these great mountains. The preachers here—those I have met—are a princely set, broad-minded and good-hearted. They are up to date in church work and in the affairs of the world. Their eyes are wide open, and never a danger signal floats the air without their notice, e'en though it be one which warns of transfers to come. They have been courteous and generous to me, and as I take my leave for a fairer clime I extend the parting regrets, "Here's a sigh for those who love me."

Bro. Long—our own man—is presiding elder of the Radford district. Into this position he was placed last Conference. I mean it when I use this new expression (?) concerning him, "He is the right man in the right place." Six years ago he came to this Conference. In this time joy and sorrow have blended in the picture of his life. Last Spring his wife was called home, and for the past two months his little James has been very low with "the fever." Though occupied by such sorrows, he has gone bravely on "doing the work of the church." In saying good-by to this dear friend, "I kiss his hand and drop a tear."

Would like to write about the resources and climate of this great country, but your space and patience forbid.

I start home Tuesday, three days from now. No sea-sick Irishman was ever more anxious to set foot on the Emerald Isle than I am to mingle again with friends in Mississippi. Glorious parallels!

Grenada Collegiate Institute.

NEW OPENING, OCTOBER 13.

As the yellow fever scare came up in the first weeks of our opening, making it impossible to get in all our pupils, and as the excitement was so intense that it was impossible to keep all those we had, I deemed it best to suspend the school until the alarm should in a measure pass off. Everything is now quiet throughout the northern part of the State, and absolutely no travel from infected districts. The lateness of the season and the successful confinement of the disease to the points first exposed render it perfectly safe to begin our school work at Grenada.

Please notice the following particulars:

1. The same excellent faculty will be retained.

2. The full course will be taught and all lost time will be made up by running later in June.

3. There is almost no sickness in Grenada—none at all of a serious nature—and the sanitary conditions is as nearly perfect as it can be made anywhere.

4. Grenada now has an abundant supply of excellent artesian water and a complete system of waterworks, sewerage and electric lights in full operation.

All pupils are requested to come Tuesday, October 12, armed with a health certificate. I will in person meet all the trains and see that they have no trouble in getting off. Special classes will be organized for those who can not come till a later date. All I ask is that the friends and patrons of the college stand by us in this time of emergency.

J. W. MALONE, President

The undersigned cheerfully testify that the city of Grenada is absolutely free from any serious sickness, and little or none of any kind, and that the sanitary condition is most excellent.

We now have an abundance of excellent artesian water, and the waterworks and sewerage system is in full operation, thereby making assurance doubly sure on the question of health. There is no healthier town in the State than Grenada.

Letter from a Prisoner.

It is quite a novelty, as well as an inconvenience, to be imprisoned in one's own home, with no communication with the outside except through guards and the welcome visits of the ADVOCATE.

I am glad to see the pastors of the several denominations are at their post of duty, and that some of these, especially of our own church, have returned from their Summer's vacation to be with their afflicted people. It requires a little grit, as well as grace, to return thus when friends and congregations urge one to remain away. It is far better, however, for the end to find one at the post of duty. Elijah, the "rough and ready" of the Old Testament, did not run from yellow fever, but he did run from an angry woman. He must have felt somewhat humiliated when the Lord found him in the mountains far from the field of duty, and said, "What doeth thou here, Elijah?"

This epidemic, and its many evils, like many things we dread, is worse in anticipation than realization. I hope our people, wise and otherwise, will well agree to disagree and work together until science or frost settles the matter. H. R. SINGLETON.

A PRAYER 230 YEARS OLD.

O! that mine eyes might closed be
To what concerns me not to see;
That deafness might possess mine ear
To what concerns me not to hear;
That truth my tongue might always tie
From ever speaking foolishly;
That no vain thought might ever rest,
Or be conceived in my breast.
That by each deed and word and thought,
[illegible] brought.
But what are wishes? Lord, mine eye
On thee is fixed; to thee I cry:
Wash, Lord, and purify my heart,
And make it clean in every part;
And, when 'tis clean, Lord, keep it, too,
For that is more than I can do.

Tempted.

BY MRS. C. H. ELLIS.

"There hath no temptation taken you, but such as is common to man; but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will, with the temptation, also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it."

"Our High Priest" is touched with a sense of our infirmities, for he was in all respects tempted like as we are; therefore, the more accessible to our complaints. In the days of Romish inquisition, when a victim was on the rack, a physician was appointed, continually, to examine his pulse, that the sufferer's powers of endurance might not be exceeded; and when Satan stretches us upon the rack of temptation, the Great Physician, self-appointed, stands with reviving cordial near, and watches every pang, carefully examining our condition, strengthening us to endure by supporting grace, that through the trial of our patience, faith, we may become perfect. And when the death dew breaks upon the pallid brow, the spirits droop, the strong tension of the pain-wrung muscles relaxes, and grim despair, at the bidding of his master, proceeds to clutch his victim, the heavenly Physician whispers, "It is enough," draws back the curtain that conceals the way of escape, and, folding his precious arms of love about the sufferer, bears him to relief. "Jesus is touched with the feeling of our infirmities." He hears those earnest cries, he sees that agony of spirit, and he feels for the soul rent by Satan's malice. That mother bending anxiously above the couch of her fever-stricken one, bathing tenderly the purpled cheeks, hushing the fretful moans with loving assiduities, is not more compassionate than our Savior.

Think not, strong man, that the wrestling agony of your spirit, when you cast yourself in all the abandonment of grief upon the clay-cold corpse of thy loved one, is unnoticed or unfelt by Jesus. He who shed the tear of sympathy at Lazarus' grave knows what you feel, and holds the supporting cordial for your affliction.

Think not, sorely tempted believer, that "God hath forgotten to be gracious," and the waves of sorrow must surely close above your head. When the hour seems darkest, the case most hopeless, God interferes, and the unexpected way opens to our astonished view.

Think not, weary, drooping man of God, because the church is cold and growing worldly, sinners impenitent, and the Conference year wearing into eternity, opportunity slipping from your grasp, and the burden of souls weighing heavily, that the midnight wrestling is unnoticed; the faithful hedging of the spiritual enclosure, lest its boundary be overstepped, forgotten. The exceeding wickedness of the Israelites greatly afflicted Elijah, and he mourned over it. In vain he preached; in vain withheld the rain, and threatened the rebellious people with all the horrors of famine. Blindly they continued the worship of Baal, and Jezebel slew the prophets of the Lord and sought Elijah's life. Sin sat in high places. But was it all in vain? Had God forgotten his people? The faith that waked the ripples of repentance in Elijah's day shall roll its waves of increasing volume to the farthest shore of time. But Satan did not show the prophet this. "Where is now thy God?" he tempted. "Where are all the promises to Israel? The prophets are slain. You, alone, of all that serve your God, are left. Think you he will smile upon a wicked and rebellious race who trample on his mercies and make his forbearance a license for their iniquities? If the interposition of Moses scarcely restrained him from destroying them, can you prevail when they are sinning against greater light and knowledge? Wedge not such a feeble shield between God's vengeance and its objects. Stand out of the way! Let Ahab enjoy Naboth's vineyard and Jezebel reap the fruits of her blood-thirsty vengeance. Let God's judgment fall! Quit vexing your righteous soul from day to day with the sight of enormities you can [illegible] prevail against. There is a dronth, even, of God's mercies; an end of infinity's patience."

And poor, troubled, vexed human Elijah drew his mantle about him, fled to the forest, and threw his quaking, doubting, fearing self beneath a juniper; but God, pitying, forbearing, tender God, who gave his only begotten Son to die for them, did not forsake them. Wise devil!

Conceal that knowledge from the fainting, despairing prophet; buried in the forest's depths, hungry, worn, tempted beside the brook, the devil hard after him.

"Away from Jezebel's emissaries, eh? How much safer are you here?" suggests satanic malice. "Hear you the fierce roaring of that lion for his prey? The forest is alive with beasts athirst for blood. You can't rest here; needn't seek it. You are weary; God gives you the cold earth for a couch. Baal's priests have luxurious cushions. You are hungry; how will you satisfy your appetite? A sumptuous feast of sacrifices regales the priests of Baal. Give up the struggle, unite with them. The devil cares for his own. Do not try to do better than the world you live in. Seems to me the yoke you bear is iron clad. Why are none of your neighbors called to such self-sacrifice?"

Ah, the policy of satanic wisdom! It lets us see but one side of the shield. "Is not your master a little hard? The prince of this world aids his subjects all he can, but your God withdraws even the comforting assurance of his presence when your afflictions seem heaviest, your temptations hardest to endure. 'If I only had the cordial of his sustaining smiles,' say you, 'I could bear this;' but when you pray, the heavens are as brass. Your petitions mount no higher than your head. He veils himself from your longing vision. Is not this a little hard? You have not sinned. Like Job, you hug the consolation of your integrity. You are in the path of duty, and see no reason for the withdrawal of his presence. You arrayed the sacrifice upon the altar, and God sent down the consuming fire, and all Israel were in wild acclaim: 'The Lord, he is God! The Lord, he is God!' and Baal's prophets were slain. You, seemingly, crowned with a mighty triumph, were master of the situation. Where is now your God? Vanquished by a woman, you lie here forsaken."

But Jesus, mighty Conqueror, standing at the right hand of the Father, receiving good gifts for man, ordered out the royal coach of heaven, and its fiery steeds, to honor his faithful follower, and with a powerful baptism of the Holy Ghost and fire summoned triumphing Elijah to the marriage supper of the Lamb.

The devil practices the same old method of siege and assault that tested Elijah's strength. "There hath no temptation taken you, but such as is common to man." He practiced the same arts upon our Savior when he told him to cast himself from the rock to prove his divinity, and command the stones to be made bread to satisfy his hunger. Nothing new in the "fiery trial" which almost crushes your mortal frame and bows your spirit down; nothing new, although the prince of darkness suggests that it is a little hard that it should come in this peculiar form and with such attendant circumstances. Surely no other mortal ever did have just such a trial. You could have borne a little less, or a little different, and you could bear this if you could see any good to arise from it. If it made you more patient, more humble, there would be some reason for it; but, on the contrary, you grow worse beneath the stroke, rebellious. It creates a murmuring, peevish spirit. Does it, thou subtle tempter? Nay! The evil is there, and God shakes the vessel that you may perceive the lees at the bottom. Beware of saying to the potter, "What makest thou?" lest presumptuous questioning mar the clay in the moulder's hand.

There is no misfortune comparable to a youth without a sense of nobility. Better be born blind than not to see the glory of life.—Theodore Munger.

Our Sunday-School and Colportage Work in North Mississippi Conference.

Never was there greater need than now of thorough religious teaching and a liberal distribution of religious reading matter in order to the leading of our people, old and young, to an intelligent Christian faith and life.

For these purposes we have two wisely planned and effective agencies at work in the church—to wit: the Sunday-school and colportage. These interests are so nearly related in design that they may very consistently be correlated in operation. Together, as well as separately, they should by all possible means be promoted in every pastoral charge and community. The success attained in our Conference, in each of these lines of work, is quite gratifying, but there remains much to be accomplished; yet nothing but what may be done by proper diligence and concert of action. No part of our church work can be made a success by the action of one person alone, however faithful and energetic he may be. There must be responsiveness and co-operation, else the results aimed at will not be achieved.

We expect to be able to report progress in each department of our work for this year. To this end we most earnestly invoke the concurrence and aid of all our fellow-laborers during this last quarter of the Conference year. If all concerned will act well their part, we shall come together at Oxford "rejoicing and bringing in the sheaves" of inspiring results. As to our Sunday-school work, there needs to be extension until we have, at least, one perennial school in operation at every church within our bounds. According to reports, last year, as published in the Minutes, there were, at least, 99 churches in 50 charges without Sunday-schools, by districts, as follows: Sardis, 3; Winona, 1; Grenada, 17; Durant, 10; Columbus, 15; Aberdeen, 13; Corinth, 19; Holly Springs, 11; Greenville, 10. We note with pleasure that there were reported in 21 charges 32 more schools than churches. In this report the Greenville, Winona and Durant districts rank foremost. These estimates are made from reports by pastoral charges; not the totals, as in the Minutes.

It is in order for the presiding elders and pastors to use all endeavors to be able to report this year a school at every church. Let this question be emphasized in the Quarterly Conferences, and see if some means can not be employed to establish schools in the delinquent churches. It may be that some schools that run during the Summer, but had suspended, were not reported. This should not so be. Let all schools that have existed for any length of time during the year be reported in the annual statistics. Let pastors and superintendents see to it that no schools hibernate. Before going to Conference see that arrangements are perfected for continuance through the Winter, and that the literature for the first quarter, at least, of next year is ordered. If this is left for the new pastor, the probabilities are that it will not be attended to in time, because of his moving and being unacquainted with the details of the work. The continuance of the Sunday-schools in the country through the Winter lingers on the interest maintained or generated during the months of October and November. And let it be borne in mind that their perpetuity is necessary in order to their greatest efficiency. How important, therefore, that all means be used in due time to this end! More anon.

A Remarkable Traveler.

MR. EDITOR: On the evening of the sixth of July, in company with my mother and son—Mrs. Wm. Finn and Bennie B. Parker—I left our home in Jackson, Miss., for a visit of some length to Nashville, Tenn., the home of my daughter, Mrs. Wilbur F. Ford, and incidentally to visit the Tennessee Centennial and other places of interest in and around the far-famed "Mecca" of Southern Methodism.

The writer does not for a moment suppose that anyone outside of her own family circle can be specially interested in an account of her Summer wanderings; but the many friends of my mother in Mississippi and Louisiana may be pleased to hear of what must be regarded as a remarkable Summer's experience for one now in her eighty-second year. You, Mr. Editor, may remember "Aunt Finn" as the friend of the boy-preacher, "Warren."

During [illegible] my mother was our almost constant companion in rides and drives about the city, visiting Vanderbilt University, Belmont College, the Publishing House; dear, lovely Mt. Olivet, where repose the ashes of our dead, besides attending the different churches, visiting friends and relatives, and more than once taking a jaunt into the country. She spent several whole days at the Centennial, studying with discrimination its marvelous array of exhibits. The Tennessee Centennial is second only to the World's Fair in Chicago, and that merely with respect to the extent of the grounds and number of its buildings.

Nashville is now the second city of the South, claiming a population of 115,000. I was informed that there are no less than seventy-five institutions of learning, so that Nashville may well be called the Athens of the South.

The latter part of August we bade a regretful adieu to loved ones, and turned our faces toward the far South. From the mountains to the coast, from Nashville to Mississippi City, via Chattanooga, Meridian, Hattiesburg, and thence down the Gulf and Ship Island railroad, is a long run—thirty-six hours, including a detention of several hours at Hattiesburg, where we were the grateful recipients of delightful courtesies at the hands of Bro. and Sister Peebles, the occupants of the parsonage, and other friends. Almost phenomenal has been the growth of this ambitious little city, now claiming, I believe, a population of 5,000. So numerous were the new and substantial-looking brick buildings, and so attractive the handsome residences which have sprung up on every hand, that at first we felt a little bewildered and not quite sure of our bearings. We had the pleasure of a few minutes' chat with Bro. C. A. Powell, the popular presiding elder of the Seashore district. Our thanks are due him for appreciated courtesies.

If there is a lonelier country than that through which the Gulf and Ship Island railroad passes, I have not found it. Pine forests stretch away endlessly on every side, in striking contrast with the magnificent mountain scenery and fertile valleys through which we had just passed. However, the future may hold vast possibilities for this as yet undeveloped section. Towns are springing up along the route, and much money has been invested in the lumber business.

Our first visit was at a point eighteen miles above the coast, where my daughter, Mrs. David B. Hover, was temporarily sojourning. A delightful "outing" to the coast in company with my mother and Mrs. Hover, and a visit to friends in Mississippi City, formed a fitting finale to a Summer of unalloyed enjoyment. The drives down the beach behind "Dan," the faithful family horse, who carried us swiftly, but safely for miles and miles on the shell road, with other pleasant incidents of the trip, were enjoyed by my mother with all the zest of a much younger person.

On the ninth of September we again said a tearful "good-bye" to dear ones, and turned our faces homeward, reaching Jackson just in time to avoid being shut out by the restrictions of quarantine, and in time to nurse our youngest son, the Benjamin of our home, through a critical illness.

During an absence of more than two months we were on a dozen or more different trains, traveling sometimes all night. My mother rarely complained of weariness or fatigue, notwithstanding the fact that she could never be induced to take a "sleeper," declaring them her pet aversion, but would, with her traveling shawl for a pillow, repose comfortably on her seat, declaring herself next morning as quite rested and refreshed. I scarcely remember to have heard her complain of fatigue, not even after spending a day at the Centennial grounds, when, of course, we were most of the time "moving on." Is not this a remarkable record for one of her advanced age? Thanks to a kind Providence for bringing her home, seemingly, in perfect health, and for all our "journeying mercies."

The point of interest in all this for those who are growing old, and wish to do so gracefully, is this: My mother has not drunk at the fountain of perpetual youth, only in the sense that she has never outgrown the enthusiasm of earlier life; has never lost her interest in passing events, nor in the notable characters of her day; but, by constant reading, has kept in touch with the world around her. Her thoughts and affections have centered not in herself, but in those about her; consequently, her mental faculties are unimpaired, her affections fresh, and her "memory green." MRS. J. S. PARKER.

Why Should the Pastor's Aid Be Embraced in the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society?

For the same reason that the greater should include the less, or that a whole is made up of all its parts. In any church where there is a live, active Parsonage and Home Mission Society, with the pastor and members heartily in sympathy and co-operation, the pastor has more aid in a moneyed way and in numberless other ways than in any other church in the country, where there is merely a Pastor's Aid Society. The very prime function of the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society is to aid the pastors and to build up the church of which it is the auxiliary, spiritually and every other way. It is most astonishing that all our pastors in the M. E. Church, South, do not see and realize this. It is solely because they do not investigate the workings of the society, and give to it its proper place in the church as has been done by the General Conference.

Our Bishops, without an exception, all recognize its worth and recommend it to the preachers by repeated articles in the church papers, etc. Yet, strange to say, some of our preachers do not yet think it of sufficient importance to encourage the women of their churches to organize and work in it; and some go even further and oppose the work. We hope and pray that these men will have their eyes opened to the responsibility resting upon them in so doing, for there has been no movement undertaken in the M. E. Church, South, for the last twelve years that God has more signally blessed in all of its departments. It has not been but a short time since two of our largest societies in one of our Conferences have been obliged to disband and send word to the General Secretary's office that they did so because their pastor encouraged them to believe that a Pastor's Aid Society was sufficient. If any person will read the Constitution and By-laws in this booklet and the "Hints to Presidents of Auxiliaries," they will see that the Pastor's Aid is included under "Local Church Work," which means that committees are appointed by the auxiliaries in any church to assist the pastor in visiting the sick and strangers and new members, distributing from the church collections and their own private collections to the wants of these persons. They also carry books, papers, leaflets, pamphlets, etc., to persons who need them. Moreover, they raise money by various means to furnish churches, pay on church debts, furnish parsonages, and one-half of the dues of each member ($1.20 a year) is retained in the home Conferences for the building of parsonages in the home Conferences. Are not these specific works aids to pastors in just the same way and to the same extent as those furnished by the Aid Society proper? One small auxiliary we know of contributed in a year and a half more than $400 for various purposes, one item being $40 to pay on their church debt.

Now, while the Parsonage and Home Mission Society does all the local work done by the private little church societies, it also has a broader scope, and brings the members of each auxiliary in touch with the whole great cause of home missions now being carried on in the M. E. Church, South, at large.

Those women who can not afford to the pay dues, nor contribute toward any part of the work except their private church claims, can be local members of the Parsonage and Home Mission Society, and have the advantages of hearing and learning about our connectional work, and the advantages of having all their church work reported, which gives inspiration and encouragement in Christian work, as well as in all other kinds of work. There are very few of us who can not afford to pay $1.20 dues each year. (Lay aside two pennies a week, and you will have about that amount.) And by thus becoming a connectional member, you lend a helping hand to one of the grandest works in which you were ever engaged. It was only last Fall that one of our worthy ministers was sent to a little place where there was no parsonage and no place to take his wife, and they wrote to the headquarters of our society (not to the M. E. Church, South) that he and his wife were literally living in an old buggy in the day-time, taking their meals wherever they could, and sleeping in anybody's house that would let them in. This was not from the far West, but right in one of our largest Southern States. Can we sit up in our comfortable homes and believe that God's ministers by the hundred are thus homeless, and yet refuse to join this society and say that we are content to have merely our own Pastor's Aid Society? May God grant to broaden our views, deepen our sympathies, and give us greater zeal in his cause!

We copy the above from the little booklet, "Helps." It is better than anything we can say on this subject.

Again, we would urge the pastors on Oct. 17, to preach a sermon on "Home Missions," and instruct the people of the needs and importance of this branch of our work.

Let Pastor's Aids, or Ladies' Aid Societies take this occasion to fall into line and become connectional. "And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive." CLARA H. COPE,
Conf. Cor. Sec.

Selections.

There is nothing which will give a chance for rest to the overtired nerves so surely as a simple religious faith in the overruling, wise, and tender Providence which has us in its keeping. It is in chafing against the conditions of our lives that we tire ourselves immeasurably. It is in being anxious about things which we can not help that we often do the most of our spending. A simple faith in God, which practically and every moment, and not only theoretically and on Sundays, rests on the knowledge that he cares for us at least as much as we care for those who are the dearest to us, will do much to give the tired nerves the feeling of the bird in its nest. Do not spend what strength you have like the clematis, in climbing for yourself, but lay hold on things which are eternal, and the peace of them will pass into your soul like a healing balm. Put yourself in the great, everlasting currents, and then you can rest on your oars, and let those currents bear you on their strength.—Anna C. Brackett, Harper's Magazine.

A man crossed the Mississippi on the ice; and, fearing it was too thin, began to crawl over on his hands and knees in great terror; but before he gained the opposite shore, all would front, another man drove past him gaily, sitting upon a sled loaded with pig iron. And that is just the way most of us go up to the heavenly Canaan; trembling at every step lest the promises shall break under our feet, when really they are secure enough for us to hold up our heads and sing with confidence as we march to the better land.—New York Advocate.

Love is like the diamond—pure white. Other graces shine like precious stones of nature, each with its own hue of brilliance; the diamond uniting all colors with the beautiful and simple white. Love, uniting all graces, is "the fulfilling of the law," the beauty of holiness, "the image of God."—The Standard.

The Bible has ever been and is a power in the world. It has determined the course of history. It has overthrown false religion wherever it is known. It is the parent of modern civilization. It is the only guarantee of social order, of virtue, of human rights and liberty.—Charles Hodge.

Columbia Annual Conference.

The thirty-second session of the Columbia Annnal Conference, M. E. Chnrch, Sonth, convened at Roseburg, Oregon, Sept. 9, 1897. Bishop R. K. Hargrove was present, and presided throughont the session to the eminent satisfaction of all concerned. The Bishop is a great favorite ont here on the coast with both preachers and laymen. The Conference adopted a strong resolution requesting his return to preside over this Conference again next year.

After the various committees had been appointed, Question 20 was called, and the preachers began to give in their reports. The year had been one of toil, suffering and privation; but many of the reports indicated progress along all lines of church work.

The citizens of Roseburg took quite an interest in the Conference proceedings, which was attested by the large andiences that attended not only the religions services at night, but also the business sessions during the day.

Resolntions were adopted by the Conference thanking the citizens of Roseburg for the kind manner in which they had entertained the preachers and lay delegates.

With the exception of one or two trivial incidents, the session was pleasant and harmonions throughont, the Bishop presiding with ease and dignity, while brotherly love, grace and peace abounded.

The presence of Dr. E. E. Hoss, editor of our great connectional organ, was an inspiration to the Conference. His sermons, lectures and wise counsel on the Conference floor will be long remembered by the preachers, laymen, and the citizens of Roseburg, who were fortunate enough to hear him. One evening he lectured on "The Forces of Power in Methodism," which was a masterpiece of logic and pure English. He captnred the hearts as well as the ears of his auditors

The Conference emphasized the importance of extending the circulation of our own Conference organ, "The P. M. Advocate," and also our great Nashville Advocate. Every Methodist shonld subscribe for and read both of these papers.

On Sunday morning we had a delightful love-feast, in which many testimonies of love for the Master were given, after which Bishop Hargrove preached a grand sermon.

At this Conference prominence was given to the interests of missions and the W. P. and H. M. Society. On Friday evening Mrs. Hargrove addressed the Conference npon the subject which lies so close upon her heart, the question of aiding and building homes out in this Western conntry for the preachers to live in. Doubtless many of the preachers, especially those who have families, feel interested in this snbject.

On Saturday evening the missionary anniversary was held, and Rev. C. B. Mosely, of Kobe, Jepan, delighted the audience with a capital address on mission work in Japan.

When the time came for the election of delegates to the General Conference, Rev. H. S. Shangle and Prof. W. A. McGhee were chosen. Two better selections could not have been made.

C. W. Huff and J. T. Cotton were admitted on trial into the traveling connection.

Rev. R. C Oglesby having died during the year, a suitable memorial service was held Sunday evening, and several of the brethren spoke of the worth and character of the deceased.

At the conclnsion of this service, Question 41 was called, and after some brief remarks Bishop Hargrove read out the following

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. N. J. Roberts, P. C., Franklinton circuit, Sept. 29, 1897: "We have jnst closed onr round of protracted meetings, by which there was much good done. There were many conversions, reclamations, reconciliations, and fifty-five accessions to the church. We were assisted in three of these meetings by Bros. G. D. Anders, C. W. Crisler, H. B. Trevilion. These brethren did us faithful and efficient service. Their preaching was of the right type and of a high order. They greatly endeared themselves to us all. The meeting at Mt. Hermon was held by the pastor. We began Sunday and closed Friday, preaching two sermons each day. I never witnessed a more gracious meeting. I never saw the work of the Holy Spirit so manifest. The church wonderfnlly revived, many souls saved, and twenty-seven accessions to the church. Of this nnmber are persons from fifteen to sixty years of age. To God be all the glory."

Rev. C. C. Grisham, Toccopola, Miss., Sept. 28, 1897: "This is my third year on this work—my old home. The Lord has been good to us. We have a good people, a good home. This has been one of the best years with us on the work. We are on rising gronnd. We have on the work six churches, five prayer meetings, five Sunday schools, two missionary societies. One Epworth League at Toccopola in fine condition. They (the Leaguers) aim to paint onr church here soon; have the money subscribed. We have had glorious revivals this year; have had about 140 conversions, 90 additions by letter and on profession, baptized 42 adults, 14 infants, a good many family altars erected. A great many young people are working in the church as they never have before. To God we give all the praise. We have two more meetings to hold. We expect Bro. H. C. Morehead, onr faithful presiding elder, with us in one of them. Onr collections are behind. We hope to see you, Doctor, at Oxford in November at onr Conference."

Rev. B. P. Fnllilove, P. C., Corinth circuit, North Mississippi Conference, Oct. 5, 1897: "I have closed out my ronnd of protracted meetings—seven in number. I was ably assisted in my two first meetings by Bro. S. B. Cox, of Jonesborough circuit. Bro. Cox is one of onr very best young preachers. He is very plain and pointed. Any preacher desiring help will do well to get Bro. Cox. My next three meetings I held myself, with some local help, which was good. Bro. M. H. Honnoll held my next meeting. Wife and babe were sick at the time and prevented my being with him in bnt one service. Had a good meeting; several conversions and accessions. If any preacher wants some one to defend the doctrines of Methodism, get Bro. Honnoll. He is a power. My last meeting at Marvin Bros. Smith and Babb, both local, assisted me in that meeting, which resnlted in 24 conversions and 19 accessions to our church. We have had in all between 50 and 60 conversions and 40 accessions to our church. Many new family altars have been erected, and some prayer meetings organized. May the good Lord continue his blessings upon us! To God be all the glory. May the Lord bless the ADVOCATE!"

C. H. McMinn, Terza, Miss., Sept. 29, 1897: "I am glad to announce the good work done by Evangelist Sam Q. Bass on the Eureka circuit, of which Rev. C P. Moss is pastor in charge. I have lived on the work twenty-three years, and can safely say that there were never before as many conversions on the entire work—to say nothing of individual work, healing bad feelings, etc.—as has been done by this wonderful man at these two places. I have been directing the music for Bro. Bass since he came to Panola county, and shall continue to do so for some time to come. Since the very good, harmonions, and Christianizing meeting at Mt. Olivet has closed, and in which nearly one hundred souls found Christ, the mighty work of God has been working aronnd the hearts of the people at Mt. Terza under the same direction, and is accomplishing some fine results. Mr. Bass seems to be one of God's special agents. We came to Mt. Terza Monday night, Sept. 20. The organ was ont of repair. The people were divided into two classes, and neither could sing. Could not get bnt four or five in the choir, and they were old folks. Religion was at a low ebb. The first sermon that came from the blazing lips of this God-called man were as throwing red-hot coals of fire on a block of chilly ice. Thank God the pictnre is changed now. The church has awaked, the organ has a more melodious tone, the choir has grown larger and proclaim the glad tidings of God in a brighter and in a more intelligent way. A large number of these people have been heated to a red heat by taking God's sunshine in their souls, and look as if they were God-called and heavenward bonnd."

Rev. Robt. H. Barr, P. C., Vinville, Miss., Oct. 5, 1897: "I have just closed my fonrth and last protracted meeting on Vinville charge. The first was held in Angnst (second Sabbath) at Pleasant Hill, six miles south of Meridian. I was assisted by Bros. R. F. Witt, of Brandon, Miss., and H. G. Hawkins, of South Side, Meridian, who preached with power and spiritual life that swept the congregations into a spirit of ecstasy and trinmph. It is said that it was one of the most spiritual meetings ever held at that place. The second was held at Curtis' Chapel the first Sabbath in September. I was assisted by Bro. F. M. Parker, of Jackson, Miss., who preached strong sermons. Bro. Parker is good help, and any man would do well to get him to help in his meetings. The meeting at the above place mentioned was not what we hoped to see. The third was held at Coker Chapel the second Sabbath in September. I was assisted by Bro. D. G. W. Ellis, who preached some of the most wonderful sermons that I have ever listened to from any man. I unhesitatingly claim that he is one of the strongest preachers in the Mississippi Conference. This meeting resulted in spiritual good. The fonrth was held at Woy Not the fourth Sabbath in September. I was assisted at this place by Bros. G. H. Galloway and D. G. W. Ellis, of Meridian. The preaching was first class from the toginning to the end I can truthfully say that it was the most spiritual meeting that I have attended this year. Men and women were stirred to the depths of their souls. There were many who promised to seek a higher life in the spiritual world. Many thanks to these dear brethren for their services in these meetings. To God be all the glory!"

Behind every great man you will find a great mother. Behind every great man you will find a healthy mother. A child's physical and mental welfare depend to a tremendous degree upon the mother's condition during the period of gestation. If, during these critical months, the mother suffers from weakness and disease of the delicate and important organs that bear the burdens of maternity, the chances are that her child will be weak, puny and sickly, with the seeds of serious disease already implanted in its little body at birth. If the mother, during the interesting period, suffers from the abnormal mental states which recur periodically with women who are weak in a womanly way, these conditions will impress themselves upon the mind of the child.

Every woman wants children who are both physically and mentally healthy. Every woman may have that kind of children if she will take proper care of herself in a womanly way. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best of all medicines for prospective mothers. It acts directly on the delicate and important organs that bear the brunt of maternity. It makes them strong, healthy, vigorous, virile and elastic. It allays inflammation, heals ulceration, soothes pain and tones and builds up the shattered nerves. It banishes the usual discomforts of the critical period, and makes baby's introduction to the world easy and almost painless. It insures the little new comer's health and a bountiful supply of nourishment.

The highest duties oft are found
Lying on the lowest ground.
In hidden and unnoticed ways,
In household works, on common days.

Idle men tempt the devil to tempt them.—C. H. Spurgeon.

When both parties to a contest are wrong it is right for outsiders to be neutral.

The highest success is a failure if it is not in accordance with God's plans.

The Bible is a letter from God, and every soul that loves the Lord delights to read it.—Selected.

Treat your enemies as the Bible directs, and they will become your friends—i. e., if their friendship is worth having.

One point in the devil's favor is, that theaters are generally better ventilated than churches.—Ram's Horn.

As soon as a man is down there are plenty to triumph over him. A hare can sport with the beard of a dead lion.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Happy is he who has laid up in youth, and held fast in all fortune, a genuine and passionate love of reading.—Rufus Choate.

Cross-bearing is not some great achievement performed once in a life-time. It is the continual discharge of duties that are distasteful.

That man deceives himself who pleads want of opportunity as an excuse for neglect of duty. Where there is no opportunity there can be no duty.

Some people regard the Bible as a very fine mirror for other people. It would be vastly profitable for all such to make the same use of it themselves.

No sin is small. It is a sin against an infinite God, and may have consequences immeasurable. No grain of sand is small in the mechanism of a watch.—Jeremy Taylor.

While high thinking does not always prevent low living, it is also true that there can be no high and holy living without high and holy thinking.—Rev. James McLeod.

People generally go in the direction they look. If they look upward, they are moving higher. If they continually see the lower and baser things of life, they are traveling in that direction.—Richmond Advocate.

Consider what you have in the smallest chosen library. A company of the wisest and wittiest men that could be picked out of all civil countries, in a thousand years, have set in best order the results of their learning and wisdom.—R. W. Emerson.

Working In Faith.

Work of faith and faithful work go hand in hand. Diligent, painstaking service depends in large degree upon two things, namely: a clear appreciation of the importance and usefulness of the work or duty in hand, and a reasonable hope of success therein. Men are not usually willing to give substantial aid to any project that seems useless or trifling. The realization that the cause for which we labor is both worthy and certain of triumph imparts tireless vigor and determination to the pursuit.

Plans and expectations as regards temporal things, however, are constantly being disappointed. How often men find themselves deceived as to the profitableness of ventures that promise much. They make heavy expenditures of time and money in the hope of great results, but fail to realize them because of misdirected energy and unforeseen difficulties. Many an ardent gold-hunter who sets out for Klondike confident of coming back laden with riches will return empty-handed and in rags. Every man who ever invested a dollar in the Louisiana Lottery flattered himself that he might draw the capital prize, or at least a lesser one. People who emigrate to new countries in the hope of bettering themselves often find that they have exchanged prosperity for penury. If a man has strong faith, however, in the success and profit of any enterprise or form of endeavor, though to others it may appear most impractical and unprofitable, he will labor enthusiastically in its promotion. It is truly astonishing that chimerical schemes find so many and so ready promoters. The repeated attempts to discover the North Pole, while they speak much for the daring and curiosity of men, do not speak well for their judgment. Such zeal is worthy of a better cause.

Though men are continually spending time, energy and money in the pursuit of bootless schemes, though flattering prospects and brilliant hopes of temporal success are frequently dashed to the ground, there is one line of endeavor in which faith and toil are never misdirected, in which success is never uncertain nor disappointing. In laboring for the Lord we can be sure of triumph and of a glorious harvest by and by; for God is not unfaithful to forget our work and labor of love. In no line of work can we be so certain of accomplishing something, of reaping fruit from toil, as in serving the Lord. God himself works in us and with us, and nothing of all that he has promised shall fail.

In spite of the promises of God and the miraculous progress of his kingdom, however, some Christians talk in a disconsolate way about wastage of energy and the failure of prayer and gospel ministration, because perhaps the efforts of God's people and the agencies of grace do not accomplish as speedy, as wonderful, or as clearly manifest results as they had expected. Christians ought to pray and plan and look for large results, but, having done their duty, they ought not to feel discouraged and distrustful when their labor for God seems to accomplish but little. While it is difficult to keep up courage and faith when failure seems to attend our efforts, yet we have great reason to be confident and hopeful at all times; for if God's Word be true, we can not toil in vain. We believe that the law of the conservation of energy holds good in the spiritual world as well as in the physical. Has not God declared that, "His word shall not return unto him void, but shall accomplish that which he pleases, and that it shall prosper in the thing whereto he sends it?" The Scriptures clearly authorize the belief that nothing we do for the honor of God is lost. The exhortation is: "Cast thy bread upon the waters; for thou shalt find it after many days." "Even a cup of cold water given in the name of a disciple shall not lose its reward."

No matter how fruitless apparently labor for God may be, it is inspiring to know that God co-operates with us, and that no effort made in behalf of his kingdom shall fall to the ground. "We shall reap in due season," says the Apostle Paul, "if we faint not." But the harvest will be a hundredfold, yea, a thousandfold greater than the seed-sowing. Everything we do for the glory of God and the good of humanity, whether it be as beneficial as we had hoped or not, is surely honored by the Blessed Spirit and noted by the recording angel.

In estimating the results of Christian work we too often judge by appearances and regard the time element too little. Facts and figures fail to measure the regenerative power of God's kingdom, which "comes not with observation," and works as silently as leaven. Eternity alone can reveal the good done by any agency of grace. The life, the effort, or the movement that we suppose was fruitless, may in the end prove of measureless value and influence. When Christ was crucified on Calvary, looking at it from a human standpoint, it seemed as if his life had been a meaningless sacrifice, his mission a stupendous failure. But now, though nearly nineteen centuries have rolled away, his kingdom stretches from shore to shore, and "is the joy of the whole earth."

In performing the Lord's work let us not think we have failed because visible results fall short of our expectations, or because wondrous changes do not take place at once. "A thousand years are with the Lord as one day." We can not look into men's hearts and see how deep are the impressions made by the truth upon them. Truly "the Lord seeth not as man seeth."

Every time a religious meeting or a religious movement seems to fail, it will not do to grow impatient and charge God's people with unfaithfulness or with sin. There may be hindrances and difficulties for which the workers are not responsible. There may be such perversity and hardness of heart among the sinners that the preaching of a Paul or an Apollos would have no effect. We never know the extent of our influence or the efficacy of our service. A word or a look has sometimes sufficed to change a whole life. Now we "see through a glass darkly;" "we know but in part."

Says Bishop Galloway: "It is a strange coincidence that it was seven years before Carey in India, Judson in Burmah, Morrison in China, Moffat in Africa, or Henry Richardson on the Congo, each baptized his first convert. How severely their faith must have been tested!" Though during those long years of waiting many thought their labor wasted, and their zeal misdirected, yet at last there was an abundant harvest, and a signal vindication of their faith. Though God's servants may be beset with difficulties and limitations, yet "the Word of the Lord is not bound."

Because wicked men will not repent after having been faithfully warned, we are not called upon to mourn over the supposed failure of our prayers and preaching. Some would not repent though one were sent unto them from the dead. Neither should we doubt the efficiency of our service because we do not produce the results just at the time or in the way we look for them. Labor for our own advantage may be thrown away, but labor for the Lord—never. If we do our duty, God will take care of the results.

While labor for the good of others may not produce the intended effect, the benefactor is himself blessed in the doing. Every good deed reacts beneficially upon the performer, whether the beneficiary received it in the proper spirit or not. What an incentive to Christian activity there is in the assurance that not one effort for the Master will be futile, or will fail of reward. "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord; for as much as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

"Thou know'st not which shall thrive,
The late or early sown;
Grace keeps the precious germ alive,
When and wherever strown.

"Thou canst not toil in vain:
Cold, heat, and moist, and dry,
Shall foster and mature the grain
For garners in the sky."

Yellow Fever.

The following is a summary of the yellow fever situation at the principal points of infection up to Tuesday morning:

	Cases.	Deaths.
Edwards	420	24
Biloxi	314	14
Scranton	123	6

At Edwards the disease is rapidly dying out for want of material, almost everybody having had the fever. Dr. Guiteras, the famous government expert, has found a few cases at Galveston and Houston. In this city the death rate continues low—a little over ten per cent. Of the 616 cases in this city, 257 have entirely recovered, leaving 294 cases now under treatment.

While we would like to believe otherwise, we anticipate an increase in the number of cases within the next few days, owing to a modification of the quarantine regulations. Heretofore the quarantine against infected houses has been continued for five days after the patient was discharged. Hereafter the quarantine will be raised simultaneously with the discharge of the patient, no matter how many persons there may be in the family that are not immune. In our judgment this will largely increase the number of cases. We do not censure the Board of Health, however, for the reason that it is unable, financially, to perpetuate the former policy, its expenses being more than $1,000 a day. Still we have not the remotest idea that the fever will become epidemic. Six hundred and sixteen cases in thirty-seven days in a city of 270,000 inhabitants does not look like an epidemic. During the corresponding period in '78 there were more than 2,000 cases and about 600 deaths.

At Covington.

We spent last Sabbath at Covington, La. Leaving the city at four o'clock on Saturday evening, we reached our destination at half-past six. By invitation of the pastor, Rev. J. B. Kent, we occupied his pulpit on Sunday morning. He sought to lay hands upon us for the night service also, but we preferred to hear him, and were glad that we did so, as he gave us a very unique and striking discourse.

Covington and its neighboring town, Abita Springs, four miles distant, are, so far as we know, the only places within 500 miles of New Orleans that have no quarantine. A considerable section of St. Tammany parish, including these two places, is said to be the healthiest spot in the United States. As we have seen no statistics on the subject, we are not prepared either to affirm or deny this statement. But it is believed in New Orleans not only by the people, but by many physicians of high standing. It is needless to say that this region is now overpopulated with New Orleans refugees. It is said that there are about 1,200 refugees in Covington, 300 in Abita and several hundred more in the country round about. The first New Orleans refugees, several hundred in number, tried very hard to induce the authorities at Covington to quarantine against the Crescent City; but the Covingtonians said, "No, we have taken you in, and we will take in your neighbors as long as there is room." And this they have done. Every hotel and boarding-house is crowded and many private residences as well. There are absolutely no quarantine restrictions. No health certificates are required and there is no fumigation of baggage. In this way these people prove their faith in the salubrity of their climate. They believe that if a few cases were carried there from New Orleans, the disease would not spread. Up to this time there has not been a single case imported—a very remarkable fact.

Monday morning, at nine o'clock, we were in our office in the city, somewhat refreshed by a whiff of country air.

Magnifying the Presiding Eldership.

The presiding eldership is essential to the efficient working of Episcopal Methodism. It is second only in importance to the episcopacy itself. Under a congregational form of government it would be useless. Even under diocesan episcopacy, with life-tenure Bishops holding jurisdiction over one or more Conferences, it would be unnecessary. But neither one nor the other of these forms of government is thought of as a substitute for the form we have. It is sometimes said that "our government must be modified," but no modification yet proposed has commanded general respect. It is certain that the present polity of our church will be maintained for a long time to come. Minor questions may be discussed and change in policy ensue, but the presiding eldership and other things vital in their nature will remain.

The man who fills the office of presiding elder, fit or unfit though he may be, is no unimportant personage, and must be respected for his "work's sake." He is the chosen representative of the episcopacy, appointed to oversee the spiritual and temporal interests of the church, and, "in the absence of the Bishop, to take charge of all the preachers in his district." He exercises executive and judicial functions and ministers to the churches in spiritual things. He ranks the preachers of his district in office, but he is their fellow-laborer, not their master. As he is the Bishop's representative in the field, so he is the representative of the people and the preachers in the Bishop's cabinet where the most important of all our church work is done. Here his voice is heard, his influence felt.

With a limited number of general superintendents, whose business it is to care for all the churches and fix the appointments of the preachers, involving the questions of convenience and fitness, it is easy to see that without intelligent, well-informed, and impartial presiding elders, representing the people on the one hand and the preachers on the other, the work of satisfactorily caring for the church could never be accomplished. An officer so important, and on whom so much depends, deserves everything at the hands of those whom he serves. His work should be magnified.

This subject was forcibly impressed on our mind recently by one of our most popular and successful preachers. We beg our brother's pardon for thus making use of his thoughts, but they are worthy of widest circulation. His idea was that the presiding elder's success depended much on the preacher in charge, and he did not hesitate to say that one reason why presiding elders do not succeed in some charges is because of the indifference of the pastors—not to the man, for "glorying in men" does not enter into his creed, but to his office and work. He thought preachers ought to magnify quarterly meeting occasions: keep the Friday fast, and hold special services in advance of the presiding elder's coming, and thus prepare the way. With such preparation the presiding elder's preaching is always acceptable and profitable. A warm reception by the pastor, and hearty co-operation, together with cordial hospitality and prayerful hearing on the part of the people, will stimulate any godly presiding elder. His whole being, mental and spiritual, will be sprung, and he will do his best; and as long as such treatment is kept up he will continue to improve.

The treatment of the presiding elder thus recommended can be accorded by any preacher in charge, no matter what he may think of the ability and fitness of the person for the office. He can afford for his own sake, and for the sake of his church, to hold up the hands of the man who is "over him in the Lord." Success is desired above everything. If the presiding elder and preacher in charge are appointed to labor together for the common good, it is certain the highest degree of success can not be achieved unless they are one in spirit and one in aim. The strongest presiding elder will be largely shorn of his might and weakened in his influence among good and loyal Methodists if the pastor fails in his duty.

Were we disposed to appeal to a lower motive for magnifying the presiding eldership than that of the spiritual good of the people, we would say that, as the presiding elder oversees the temporal interests of the church, he can largely influence the people in the matter of the pastor's support, both in fixing and raising the amount of the salary. If so, it must be that the more the office is magnified the greater must be the influence of the man who fills it, and the more he can help the preacher under his charge. But if only such selfish motives lead to co-operation, the work of both presiding elder and pastor as ministers will fail. Let there be co-operation for the good of all concerned, but mainly for the good of the church.

Magnify the presiding eldership. Let the pastors give the man who fills the office their prayers, sympathy, and earnest co-operation, and exhort the people to be like-minded; and whether we have large districts or small ones, his support will come so easily and cheerfully, and his work will be so successful and gratifying, that we will cease to hear of friction or the burden of support.—Nashville Advocate.

Mississippi Conference Postponed.

MR. EDITOR: Please publish the enclosed telegram from Bishop Wilson postponing the session of the Mississippi Conference, and oblige all concerned. Truly yours,

C. G. ANDREWS.

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 7, 1897.

Rev. C. G. Andrews, D. D.:

Time of Mississippi Conference is changed to Dec. 30.

A. W. WILSON.

This action is eminently wise. We do not doubt that the time of holding the North Mississippi Conference will also be postponed. Quarantine regulations will no doubt be removed before the last of November; but finances will be fearfully behind.

NOTES.

Rev. James Healy, of the Los Angeles Conference, has been appointed to San Bernadino, Cal.

Rev. T. H. B. Anderson, of the Pacific Conference, has been transferred to Missouri, and stationed at Richmond.

Mrs. Jennie Mayson, sister of Rev. J. F. Foster, is very seriously ill of a chronic disease from which she has been suffering for some time.

Rev. J. F. Foster, pastor of Felicity Street Church, is in bed with the prevailing fever. We are pleased to learn, however, that his attack bids fair to be a mild one.

We are pleased to be able to state that Sister S. S. Keener is convalescent. Before the close of the present week Bro. Keener will doubtless be released from his quarantine prison and will resume the duties of his pastorate.

At the late session of the St. Louis Conference Rev. Hampton R. Singleton was removed from Washington, Mo., to Malden, Mo. He was married Oct. 6, to Miss Hattie Thena, of Arcadia, La., Rev. J. A. Mills officiating. May Heaven's richest blessings attend them through life.

Miss Ruth Singleton, daughter of Rev. H. R. Singleton, was stricken with the prevailing fever several days since. For a time she was very dangerously ill, but is now convalescent. She will probably be up in a few days. Bro. and Sister Singleton, though exposed by constant nursing, are quite well.

We are glad to be able to report that Dr. M. J. Magruder, a prominent young physician of this city, and one of the leading officials of Louisiana Avenue Church, has recovered from his attack of yellow fever. Dr. Magruder caught the disease by visiting patients who were unable to pay anything for his services.

Miss Belle Kearney recently gave several lectures in Salt Lake City, one of them being delivered in the Mormon Tabernacle. Tremendous audiences greeted her on every occasion, and she was shown distinguished attention by the most prominent citizens. We congratulate our readers on the prospect of receiving another of her delightful letters soon.

Under the wise and aggressive leadership of Rev. W. M. Williams, Gallman circuit, Mississippi Conference, is decidedly prospering. Successful revival meetings have been held all around the circuit. About fifty members have been added to the church. The assessments for missions have been paid in full, and it is expected that all claims will be met before Conference. Improvements have been put upon the parsonage to the amount of about $300.

The Chinese company controlling the launches now running on the Foochow river now offers free passage to all missionaries traveling on its boats. As this was done without any solicitation on the part of the missionaries, it may be accepted as indicative of appreciation of their work on the part of the directors of the company. The family are the principal share-holders and to this family special thanks are due. One fact like this should outweigh whole volumes of ignorant criticism from ungodly globe trotters who are as cynical and as inquisitorious about the triumphs of the gospel at home as in China.—Exchange.

Our Sunday-School and Colportage Work in the North Mississippi Conference.

The importance of enlarging our Sunday-school work, to the extent of at least one all-year-round school for each church, having been set forth, we proceed to consider the necessity of proper organization in order to efficiency. "Organization is not a thing to admire, but to work. And yet a well-organized and well-managed Sunday-school, like a well-constructed machine, is the only one that can do the best work." (See "The Model Sunday-School," by Geo. M. Boynton—page 48.)

It is not the much, but the wise, organization that achieves the best results; therefore, great care should be exercised in the selection of officers and teachers, that the most capable and faithful persons available be chosen.

"The organization here considered develops teaching power in the church, and gives it proper application in the school-room. The great majority of schools have enough of piety, intelligence and zeal at hand to achieve reasonable success; and yet how many of them live at a poor dying rate! how many die outright for want of organization! There is a loss of vital power for want of a wise adjustment of the various working parts." (See "The Sunday-School and Its Methods," by Dr. Lyon—page 131.)

"The fourth Quarterly Conference of each year" is charged with the responsibility of electing superintendents "on nomination of the preacher in charge." The nomination thus made is usually confirmed; hence the greater responsibility devolving on the pastor in selecting "the man who to day stands next to him by virtue of official relation, in point of influence." "The superintendent of a church school is the pastor's first assistant." (Dr. Lyon.) The superintendent should be a devout, studious, broad-minded and aggressive man—one imbued with the spirit of Christ and love of souls.

Likewise should there be much discretion in the selection of teachers for their important work. "They should not be taken at hap-hazard, nor merely as they proffer their services, but selected with care by the church or its duly appointed representative." (Dr. Trumbull, in "Yale Lectures"—page 239.)

The great need in many of our Sunday-schools is men and women of sound piety and consecrated lives, who are well informed in the Word of God and skillful in leading others to study and understand it. There should be constant prayer by the church to the Lord of the harvest for the supply of this want in every place.

We would next call attention to some of the equipments or requisites needed in our Sunday-schools. Of course, every well-regulated school is amply furnished with our current lesson quarterlies and papers, record books, etc.; but this is not enough. Every Sunday-school room should be provided with maps, charts, teachers' libraries and libraries of books for general circulation among the pupils. Every teacher should be provided with our Sunday-School Magazine, and every scholar with the Sunday-School Visitor, and there should be a sufficient supply of song books for all to sing.

We commend for consideration the following paragraph from the last annual report of our Conference Sunday-school Board: "We urge upon our superintendents the purchase for the use of the teachers of some of the many excellent books on Sunday-school methods and history now issuing from our own and other religious presses of the country, as well as technical treatises on pedagogy in general. Our schools are not so well supplied with maps, charts and teaching apparatus as they should be. While all can not be done at once, a general awakening along the lines indicated is desirable in many places." The following books are specially valuable, viz.: "The Sunday-School and Its Methods," $1; "History of Sunday-Schools," 50 cents; Trumbull's "Yale Lectures," $1.50; "Teachers and Teaching," $1; "The Model Sunday-School," 50 cents; "The Teacher and Class," 50 cents.

As to the colportage work we report fair success to date and the outlook propitious for the remainder of the year, until the quarantine shut us in and paralyzed all business.

During the year many new fields have been worked both in the interest of colportage and Sunday-schools, with gratifying results in most places. Altogether we have visited 56 churches in 45 pastoral charges; have attended 5 District Conferences and some preachers' meetings, Sunday-school and Epworth League Conferences, etc., and disposed of innumerable books, tracts and papers, besides preaching and speaking and otherwise aiding in meetings of various kinds. We thank God for his blessings, and all the brethren and sisters who have helped us in the work for their friendly aid.

Notwithstanding the quarantine environments, we hope to accomplish much more before Conference meets. To this end let us hear from the brethren. Send us your orders for books, papers, Sunday-school and Epworth League supplies. By thus doing our colportage work will be advanced, and that in accordance with the will of the general Book Agents.

G. W. BACHMAN,
Colporter and Sunday-school Agent.
Kosciusko, Miss.

A Common Experience.

Scene I.—Mr. Johnson is obliged to give up work, remain in the house and take care of himself on account of a dreadful scrofula sore on one of his limbs.

Scene II.—Mr. Johnson reads a testimonial which tells of scrofulous troubles cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. He resolves to try it, sends for a bottle and begins taking it.

Scene III.—Mr. Johnson has taken six bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla. His scrofula sore is cured. He is feeling stronger, has a good appetite and is able to attend to his work. He writes a testimonial telling of his experience with Hood's Sarsaparilla, and recommends it to others.

At Home.

I am now at home resting, nursing a sick child, and watching the yellow fever and quarantine epidemics. I was in Holiandale when the fever broke out and I started for home on first train, and I tell you I had a hard time getting here and a much harder time in staying after I did arrive. I have had experience with both yellow fever and quarantine, and I am not sure just which is the worse. It seems to me that people get crazy at such times. I believe in a reasonable quarantine, but I like common sense in all things. Whisky is killing more people in this land than all the yellow fever, and yet if one raises the yellow flag against it, many are ready to cry out that he is a crank. The Legislature of Mississippi is bound to change her quarantine laws at her next session, for this sort of business is so demoralizing to all lines of work and trade. So far as I am concerned, I have tried to make the best of it. I have read several good books and have enjoyed a much-needed rest. The book I have enjoyed reading most is, "The Family, A Necessity of Civilization," by Dr. Robins. It is a great book, though there are some things in it that I can not indorse. When I read it then I was not surprised that Dr. Smith, of Georgia, charged the author with heterodoxy. It would do me good to see "Gildoroy" get hold of it. Some things written there would make his blood boil. The author teaches that a child born of pious parents belongs to the "godly seed," and is an heir of the kingdom and, therefore, needs no conversion or regeneration. (How is that, Bro. "Gilderoy"?)

We have been thinking a great deal of late about our year's work. We have had some great meetings; but in many places we have found it hard to lead sinners into the kingdom of God. They seemed deeply convicted and would come to the altar for prayer, but we would not be able to lead them into the light. We have usually found where this was the case that either the church was in a cold state or some form of infidelity existed. It is hard to make one feel his need of a Christ when he does not believe in eternal punishment. Then, too, we have sometimes found seekers at the altar and there would not be enough power in the church to bring them into the kingdom. There is no doubt that the church can assist the Holy Spirit in the regeneration of a soul. O that God's people would learn that fact!

Bro. Lewis is hard at work getting ready for Conference. He told us last Sunday that it was only two months till Conference, and we surmised the rest. Bro. Lewis is a fine preacher and a good pastor. We are all pleased with him and hope to get him back another year.

Bro. Malone dismissed his school, and is now patiently waiting on "this here quarantine." The doctor has gone to great expense in getting ready for this term, and it will be a shame if the preachers don't specially, under the circumstances, rally to him. The prospects for the college are fine if the yellow fever don't hold on too long. Bro. Malone will open just as soon as possible.

TOPIC FOR OCTOBER.

ST. PAUL'S DOCTRINE OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

OCT. 17.—THE WITNESS OF THE SPIRIT. (Rom. viii, 1-4, 15, 16; v, 1, 2; i, 14, 17; xv, 13.)

1. The witness of the Spirit is one of the distinctive doctrines of Methodism. It is God's testimony to the fact that we are his children—that we are saved. Others may hope they are saved. Methodists know of their salvation by this witness. That God should keep his children in suspense concerning their relationship to him is a thought that dishonors him.

2. The Christian life grows out of a personal relationship to Christ. We trust and love Christ, and, therefore, we live the Christ-life. And this relation is not a one-sided affair. Communion with God involves a reciprocity. Our love to God is answered by his love to us. If God hears us, then we may hear God. If we drop all other considerations, and view this relationship between God and man as that of Father and child, then the witness of the Spirit becomes simple and natural. Mutual love necessitates mutual obligations, and God will surely perform his.

3. Mr. Wesley says: "By the testimony of the Spirit, I mean an inward impression on the soul, whereby the Spirit of God immediately and directly witnesses with my spirit that I am a child of God; that 'Jesus Christ hath loved me and given himself for me'; that all my sins are blotted out, and I, even I, am reconciled to God." The ages intervening have not produced a better statement.

4. There is no other way by which our pardon may be communicated to us than by this "witness of the Spirit." A prisoner may be loosed from confinement, and this may be presumptive proof of the governor's pardon, but he can have no certain knowledge of this fact except as the governor communicates it. God alone pardons, and unless he tells us, we can not know of the fact. Have you the witness of the Spirit?

The Holman Self-Pronouncing S. S. Teacher's Bible.

Divinity Circuit, Round Corners, etc.

Concordance, with Contexts, over 40,000 References; Index to Persons, Places and Subjects, 16,000 References; Scripture Atlas, with Index; Glossary of Bible Words; Bible Calendar; Summary and Analyses of the Old and New Testaments.

A Self-Pronouncing Dictionary of Proper Names and Foreign Words contained in the Bible, comprising about 3,500 words, giving the pronunciation, the meaning, and the location of the text where the word occurs for the first time.

Exhaustive Articles on Biblical History, Geography, Topography, Natural History, Ethnology, Botany, Chronology, Music and Poetry; a Complete Harmony of the Gospels, Tables of Parables, Miracles, Prophecies, Prayers, Money, Weights and Measures, Jewish Sects and Orders, etc.

TWELVE FULL-PAGE MAPS IN COLORS.

Every proper name in the text is syllabified and accented, and has the vowels marked according to the most authoritative modern standards of pronunciation. The text is in exact conformity with that of the world-famous Oxford S. S. Teacher's Bible. All the valuable "Helps to the Study of the Bible" contained in the Oxford Bible are retained.

The only Teacher's Bible with a self-pronouncing text. No similar Bible was ever obtainable heretofore; in fact, no publishers ever attempted its publication.

"The essence of fifty expensive volumes, by men of sacred learning, is condensed in these 'Helps.'"

The large-type (Bourgeois) edition sells to persons who are not subscriber for $3.75. Our subscribers get this conditions specified below, for $2.35. The same Bible in Minion type, which is somewhat smaller than Bourg we offer to our subscribers, on conditions named below, for $1.55. To those who are not subscribers we s at $2.75. We also handle an edition in still smaller type (Emerald). Our subscribers get this for $1.00.

In order to get anyone of these at these rates it is necessary to pay your subscription one year in ad viz., to September, '98. (A little later it will be October, '98.)

For twenty cents we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside of the book.

"Presiding Elders and Districts—Some More."

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of the thirtieth ultimo "Beloved" calls for "Presiding Elders and Districts—Some More," which is a little amusing. Having (as we suppose) "fought, bled and died" in the war of 1896, he now pulls himself up out of the grave and gets off at a safe distance, and is laughing to himself how funny it would be to see that fray and not be tangled up in it.

He reminds me of the little boy whose father and mother were quarreling. The little fellow sat crouched off in a corner, and when the man told his wife, if she said a certain thing again, he would slap her jaws, the boy piped out: "Say it agin, mammy; say it agin, mammy. I do glory in a fuss." "Beloved," like the little boy, glories in a fuss, and he wants some one else to do the fighting—at least for this once.

True, there was a good deal of ink spilled over "Presiding Elders and Districts" last year, but the more conservative held the balance of power, and no wreck befell the old ship. She seems staunch enough on that side. "Beloved" will have to try his gun somewhere else.

It is too bad to spend half of a short life distressed with neuralgia, when a 25-cent bottle of Salvation Oil will cure it quickly.

Over eighteen hundred years ago a poor widow cast two mites into the Lord's treasury. She lives to-day in the larger benefactions which her deed and memory have inspired. A humble disciple poured a vase of precious ointment on her Savior's head. Centuries have elapsed since then, yet many a disciple to-day is stimulated to good deeds for Jesus by the immortal record, "She hath done what she could."—Christian Intelligencer.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. To Whom It May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mni-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of sores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. BLACK,
Editor Christian Advocate.

Had catarrh ever since I can remember, often avoided company on account of it; throat was dry and sore, the least change in the weather gave me cold: dull pain over my eyes caused a stupid and drowsy feeling; ears began to ring, in a short time my hearing failed, became so deaf could not hear one talk unless they were close to me, and spoke very loud. Used Aerial Medication eight weeks, hearing was fully restored, roaring and pain stopped, and was entirely cured of Catarrh. I do not see why anyone should suffer from Catarrh or deafness when there is such a good cure as this.—MISS CARRIE BOWERS, Rouseville, Pa.

Am 72 years old, suffered from Catarrh over 25 years, was almost entirely deaf. Four years ago used Aerial Medication, which I regard one of the most useful discoveries of this age. Since have suffered but little. My hearing was and is still restored, can hear ordinary conversation and preaching. Rev. Dr. Potter, of this city, has been signally blessed by this treatment in the cure of throat affection.—REV. C. R. PATTISON, Enstis, Fla.

He Threw His Slate Away.

In 1869 I had typhoid fever which left me with Catarrh and totally destroyed my hearing; for 25 years I could not understand a word, or hear a steam whistle, and had to carry a slate so that people could talk to me. In '94 I obtained Aerial Medication and in a week surprised my friends by throwing my slate away, could begin to hear in two weeks could hear loud conversation, in three months could sit by the church door and fully understand every word that was spoken. The wonderful cure astonished my friends as well as myself, for three years my hearing has been perfect and I am entirely free from Catarrh. —EDWARD E. WILLIAMS, Lead, S. D.

Aerial Medication has triumphed and I am cured. One thousand dollars would be nothing compared to this. I have had bitter suffering from Catarrh. Since I had La grippe the disease settled in the back of my head and the pain was almost unbearable, now I am cured, and thank God I heard of this treatment, which has no equal. —Miss E. S. ORR, E. Harpswell, Maine.

THE OLD FOOT-PATH.

BY MARY D. BRINE.

Oh, dear old foot-path! day by day
You lie 'neath skies of blue or grey;
Across the meadow 'neath the hill,
Where shadows come and go at will.
Safe home from distant lands once more,
My busy memory travels o'er
Long years of mingled joy and pain,
And takes me back to youth again.

Just there beneath yon linden tree
My little sweetheart watched for me,
To greet me with her tell-tale face,
Where love had marked its own sweet trace.
I wonder where that dainty maid
Thro' all these years gone by has strayed;
Or did some new swain's eager feet
A pathway make o'er grasses sweet,

And bend the nodding daisies low,
Whilst two walked slowly to and fro?
Ah, oh, old path, none ever knew
The lovers' secrets trusted you.
Well, Time has many changes rung
Since my young lips its praises sung:
But all unchanged, old friend, are you
To whom my memory still is true.

Your rugged breast is scarred each day
By careless feet which o'er you stray,
And many a hidden foot-path lies
Unnoticed 'neath the changing skies.
Feet that once trod you, now at last
Forever rest—their journey past.
And who may know, old path, if e'er
My feet again shall tread you here?

The Front and Side Door.

Every person's feelings have a front door and side door by which they may be entered. The front door is on the street. Some keep it always open; some keep it latched; some, locked; some, bolted with a chain that will let you peep in, but not get in; and some nail it up, so that nothing can pass its threshold. This front door leads into a passage which opens into an ante-room, and this into the interior apartments. The side door opens at once into the sacred chambers. There is almost always at least one key to this side door. This is carried for years hidden in a mother's bosom. Fathers, brothers, sisters, and friends, often, but by no means so universally, have duplicates of it. The wedding ring conveys a right to one; alas, if none is given with it!

Be very careful to whom you trust one of these keys of the side door. The fact of possessing one renders those even who are dear to you very terrible at times. You can keep the world out from your front door, or receive visitors only when you are ready for them; but those of your own flesh and blood, or of certain grades of intimacy, can come in at the side door, if they will, at any hour and in any mood. Some of them have a scale of your whole nervous system, and can play all the gamut of your sensibilities in semi-tones—touching the naked nerve-pulps as the pianist strikes the key of his instrument. I am satisfied that there are as great masters of this nerve-playing as Vieuxtemps or Thalberg in their lines of performance. Married life is the school in which the most accomplished artists in this department are found. A delicate woman is the best instrument; she has such a magnificent compass of sensibilities! From the deep inward moan which follows pressure on the great nerves of right, to the sharp cry as the filaments of the taste are struck with a crushing sweep, is a range which no other instrument possesses. A few exercises on it daily at home fit a man wonderfully for his habitual labors and refresh him immensely as he returns from them. No stranger can get a great many notes of torture out of a human soul; it takes one that knows it well—parent, child, brother, sister, intimate. Be very careful to whom you give a side-door key; too many have them already.—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

"A Word Fitly Spoken"—Versus Silence.

A man who recently passed through a sorrow which had fallen suddenly with crushing force upon him and his household, said to a friend some weeks after the event:

"In this trouble I have learned one lesson that I shall never forget. When I was in the midst of my sorrow some of my best friends failed to make any expression to me of their sympathy. They met and passed me in silence. I suppose my trouble was so terrible, and they were so shocked, that they hardly knew what to say; afraid of blundering and hurting me by any clumsy attempt to say some comforting word, they did not say anything. I seemed left alone in the world. At the very time when I needed at least a kind and helpful word, or a grasp of the hand, or at least a look of commiseration, I was left in utter desolation to bear my burden alone. The lesson I have learned is this: I have resolved never to omit some expression of sympathy with my friends in affliction. Perhaps I may falter, and hesitate, and blunder, but I will at least try to show that I am carrying in my heart a sense of the loss and pain which my friends have incurred. I would rather blunder than remain silent and allow my silence to be mistaken for apathy."

does for the hair just what its name says it does—it renews it. Fading, falling, thin locks are stimulated to look fresh and new by its use; nature does the rest.

This bit of homely testimony is worth studying. Many people make a similar error, failing to proffer help and sympathy to people in trouble from the fear that what they say may prove incongruous, or dreading lest their conduct may seem forward and inconsiderate. Their caution is to be respected, but it should not be perverted into a rule of action which ties the tongue and chokes the impulse to speak. It is indeed true that help and consolation proffered in time of trouble need to be administered with tact and delicacy; but the instinct which prompts an act of courtesy and a word of cheer in affliction may ordinarily be trusted to its own instinctive expression. It is better to run the risk of blundering rather than to stand off from our fellow-beings in distress, mute, inert, and seemingly indifferent to their needs. An honest word of kindness spoken to a troubled soul hardly ever proves misplaced. —Exchange.

Growing Old Gracefully.

In a recent Conference love-feast we heard a venerable minister of the gospel say, "It is easy to work for the Master, but it is hard to quit." This witness is true. The activities of the religious life generate a sort of enthusiasm. There is a deep satisfaction in bringing things to pass. We find a sense of power and of delight in the exercise of our faculties. But as the years go by, weakness and relative inefficiency come on with infallible certainty. It is a rare thing for a man of seventy to be able to work with the same vigor and energy that he possessed when he was thirty years younger. Some elderly men can not grasp this fact. Nor should they be seriously censured for their inability to do so. It argues a high spirit in them, that when the trumpet sounds they should wish to go forth to battle, even if they find some difficulty in girding themselves as of yore. We like the veteran whose spirit rises in him when he hears the distant sound of the conflict. But for all this, the time comes when even the strongest must learn to decrease. If they do it gracefully and in good spirit, they will not only conciliate the esteem of all those with whom they are associated, but will also honor their Lord and Master. A sweet-tempered old age is one of the most beautiful things in this world. Patience has its perfect work in the venerable saints, who are suffering the will of the Lord and waiting for their crown. We know many such. To come into contact with them is an inestimable blessing. They make us feel as if heaven were not a far-away place, but a country close at hand. Their unselfishness, their modesty, their gentleness, all these are a revelation of the mind that was in Christ. Blessings on the dear old saints! Long may they linger among us. Let us strive to make their closing days as bright and happy as we can. They have earned the right to claim our esteem and love.—Nashville Advocate.

"I Believe In My Mother."

Such was the language of the old commoner, Hon. Thaddeus Stevens, when in 1868 he was visited by a clergyman, who said to him:

"It is no idle curiosity that has induced me to call on you, but a desire to know your sentiments on the subject of religion. Should you die in this attack, what shall we say about your faith in the Bible?"

Raising himself in bed, adjusting his gown and cap, he said: "The Bible, the Bible—take that away, and there is nothing left."

Pressed with the question as to a personal interest and experience, he said, "I do not profess to have religion in that way, but my old Baptist mother had it, and I believe in my mother." Think of it, mothers: this statesman now nearing the close of life, as he contemplates the future, goes back to his early training and says, "I believe in my mother."

The quaint John Randolph said: "When I try to make myself an infidel, I fancy I feel the hand of my mother on my head and her voice sounding in my ear, as she taught me to say, 'Our Father who art in heaven.'"—Lutheran Observer.

Living by the Day.

My friend, learn to take short views. If you have money enough to-day for your daily wants and something over for Christ's treasury, do not torment yourself with the idea that you will yet fetch up in an almshouse. If your children cluster around your table to-day, enjoy the music of their voices, train them for God, and trust them to God, without racking yourself with a dread that the little ones may be carried off by scarlet fever or the older ones may fall into bad marriages or some other disaster. Faith carries present loads, meets present assaults, feeds on present promises, and commits the future to a faithful God. Its daily song is:

"Keep thou my feet! I do not ask to see

So we exhort you again most earnestly to take short views. Let us not climb the high wall till we get to it, nor fight the battle till it opens, nor shed tears over sorrows which never come, nor lose the joys and blessings we have by the sinful fear that God may take them away from us. We need all the grace he can give us for to-day's burdens and to-day's battles. I would not penetrate into the secrets which to-morrow hides if I could. It is far better to know whom we trust, and that he is able to keep all that we commit to him until the last great day.

"Why forecast the trials of life
With such sad and grave persistence,
And look and watch for a brood of ills
That as yet have no existence?

"Strength for to-day is all we need,
For we never will see to-morrow.
When it comes the morrow will be a to-day,
With its measure of joy or sorrow."

—Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler.

How to Prevent Shipwreck.

A certain young woman, told about in the Chicago Times-Herald, teaches a class in a mission Sunday-school. She has a difficult task imparting scraps of religious instruction to her young charges, and often amusing answers are unconsciously returned to questions which she asks. On one occasion she asked her pupils:

"What do the high priests do?"

And received the reply:

"They burned insects before the people," by which the youngster, of course, meant incense.

But one of the funniest experiences, which well shows the queer ideas which the children receive in their lessons, was given when, after a discussion of shipwreck which followed a lesson three or four weeks previously on the well-known story of Jonah and the whale, she happened to ask:

"Suppose a big storm arose at sea and it looked as though you were going to be drowned, what would you do?"

"I would throw a man overboard for a whale to swallow," was the reply.

For Over Fifty Years

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for Diarrhœa Twenty-five cents a bottle.

In that moment when, as to most at some time or other, a kind of despairing feeling comes to you: when energy lags and the heart, bitten by the chill of some disappointment, sinks far below the zero point, then the safety for you, and the sure path into more genial, spiritual weather, is the duty next you. Do that anyway. Even with failing feeling and nerveless hands, compel yourself to do it. Do not put it off. Do not allow yourself bewailingly to wait for better mood. Do the duty next you; or, anyway, try at it. At least a fine sense of accomplishment will come stealing in, a very real consciousness of personal heroism. It is wonderful what strength the duty next one, bravely done or anyway bravely attempted, breeds in one.—Wayland Hoyt, D. D.

At ten years of age a certain boy began to work in a cotton factory. His hours were from six in the morning to six at night. Out of his first week's wages he bought the "Rudiments of Latin." At sixteen he could read Virgil and Horace. Then he went to the university. He died in Africa. He was buried in Westminster Abbey. His name was David Livingstone.

Kidney and Bladder Troubles Quickly Cured.

People doctor their troubles and try different medicines so often without benefit, that they get discouraged and skeptical. In most such cases serious mistakes are made in doctoring and not knowing what our trouble is or what makes us sick. The unmistakable evidences of kidney trouble are pain or dull ache in the back, too frequent desire to pass water, scanty supply, scalding irritation. As kidney disease advances the face looks sallow or pale, eyes puffy, the feet swell and sometimes the heart acts badly. Should further evidence be needed to find out the cause of sickness, then set urine aside for twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling is also convincing proof that our kidneys and bladder need doctoring.

The mild and extraordinary effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures. Sold by druggists, price fifty cents and one dollar. So universally successful has Swamp-Root been in quickly curing even the most distressing cases, that if you wish to Prove its wonderful merit you may have a sample bottle and a book, both sent absolutely free by mail. Mention CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The proprietors of this paper guarantee the genuineness of this offer.

Hygiene.

They Hurt the Nerves.

Boys, do you desire to have always good, strong nerves? Then don't use cigarettes. You think they are harmless? They certainly look very innocent—only a roll of white paper with a bit of doctored tobacco inside. But they do weaken the nerves; and, in fact, they have kept many a man from securing a good position on a certain railroad in the West. Read what Mr. George Bannholf, superintendent of the Lindell railway, of St. Louis, says about their use:

"Under no circumstances will I hire a man who smokes cigarettes. He is as dangerous on the front end of a motor as a man that drinks: in fact, he is more dangerous. His nerves are bound to give way at a critical moment. A motorman needs all his nerve all the time, and a cigarette smoker can't stand the strain. It is a pretty tough job for men in good condition, and even they sometimes get flurried. If I find a car beginning to run badly and getting irregular for any time, I immediately begin to investigate the man to find out if he smokes cigarettes. Nine times out of ten he does, and then he goes for good."—Baltimore Advocate.

Diet as an Aid towards Perfection.

Let us suppose that a man chooses that he will have a pure body, and that if he takes advantage of the fact that his body is constantly undergoing changes, what will he do? He will begin to select the materials from which the new body is to be built, and the question of diet will present itself as one of the first subjects for consideration. He will begin to exclude from his food all kinds of food which will build into his body particles which are impure and polluting. He will strike off alcohol, and every liquor which contains it, because it brings into his physical body poisons which deteriorate the tissues, especially the brain, and other impure and disgusting products of decomposition. . . . And so with other articles of diet unfit for human consumption. True, no amount of attention paid to the physical body of the man will of itself give him spiritual life, but why should he hamper himself with an impure body?—Journal of Hygiene.

The Little Late Supper.

Some physicians have declared that a good deal of the prevalent insomnia is the result of an unconscious craving of the stomach for food in persons who have been unduly frightened by the opinion that they must not eat before going to bed, or who have, like many nervous women, been keeping themselves in a state of semi-starvation. Nothing is more agreeable on retiring for the night than to take a bowl of hot broth, like oatmeal gruel or clam soup. This is especially the case on cold Winter nights. Even a glass of hot milk is grateful to the palate on such occasions.—Home Doctor.

HILLIARD—Died on the morning of Sept. 2, at the residence of Mrs. Campbell, in New Iberia, La., Mrs. Mary Walker Hilliard, wife of the late Dr. Robert C. Hilliard, aged seventy-seven years and nine months.

Mrs. Hilliard was one of those rare characters who, if such were possible, might be properly termed a natural-born Christian. Reared by Christian parents, her life was a striking illustration of the promise held forth in the Book of books, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

When a girl, and at the age of fourteen, she joined the Methodist Church, and for nearly sixty-four years was an ardent and zealous member; but she was no sectarian. Devoted, as she undoubtedly was, both to her church and its teaching, the life and example of Christ were her guide, and her great charitable heart readily embraced all of his followers, of whatever sect or creed.

In the early Spring of 1847 the Doctor and Mrs. Hilliard, in the morning of their youth, bade farewell to relatives and friends in Virginia, and wended their way to the classic fields of the Teche. Arriving at St Martinsville—at that time the Petit Paris of America—they located; he to practice his profession to which he was devoted, and to which he offered up his life, and she to act as wife and helpmeet. And here, and at that time, commenced that life which made so deep an impression in this community. Here, and at that time, was made manifest by that character and life the great similarity of some of the characteristics of the Creole and the Virginian, for, although a stranger, she was welcomed and received as one of their own.

Throughout this long and terrible period of warfare there was no service or sacrifice, however great, she did not readily respond. With only one child of suitable age, her first-born, this Spartan mother buckled on him his sword, and sent him forth—her offering upon her country's altar. Capt. Jno. T. Hilliard fell while leading his company in the great and bloody battle of Shiloh.

Again in 1867, during that terrible epidemic of yellow fever, when death was abroad in our midst, reaping to the right and the left, sparing neither age nor sex; when brave soldiers, who had time and again faced him on the battle-field, were appalled and wavered, this brave little woman, with her husband, at all hours, by night and by day, were ever to be seen at their post ministering to the needs of all, without regard to caste or creed; and when he, her only stay and support, was stricken and fell by her side, did she falter? No. Pointing to the cross of her Redeemer, receiving from him the assurance that all was well, she commended his spirit to God, who gave it, and repaired to the post of duty, and there remained until God, in his mercy, calmed the troubled waters.

O ye who erect monuments of stone and brass to commemorate the virtues of our illustrious dead, pause for one moment and join me in admiration of this beautiful Christian life spent in our midst. Another ancient landmark has been removed, but her example will remain a pinnacle of rectitude and Christian charity, and will be so revered by generations to come. A Friend.

THRELKELD.—The subject of this sketch, Henry Threlkeld, was born in Pontotoc county, State of Mississippi, Nov. 3, 1854. When three years old his parents moved to Lafayette Springs. He was married to Miss Jennie, daughter of Dr. A. L. and Susan Fortune, with whom he lived happily until separated by death, Sept. 19, 1897, in Lafayette Springs, where he spent his life.

Bro. Henry was received into the M. E. Church, South, with his wife, by the writer, in 1888, the church which he loved and honored as none but a true and genuine Christian could. He, like many of us, had his besetments and imperfections. He had a large and kind heart, and to love him was but to know him. He was a friend to all, and all seemed to be a friend to him. He had few enemies, if any; had been a merchant all his business life, and to all his customers was kind and honest in all his dealings. His was the home of the weary itinerant. He talked satisfactory to me about his future state. We believe he has gone to rest. Bro. Henry, farewell till we meet again.

His remains were laid to rest in Shiloh Cemetery, with Masonic honors, in the presence of a large concourse of friends, Sept. 20, 1897, to await the resurrection morn.

Though the church has lost a true member, the fraternity a kind brother, his dear wife a loving and devoted husband, Susie (the only little daughter living) an affectionate father, the community an honorable citizen; but we believe heaven has gained a precious jewel. Then we weep not as we would for those who have no hope. And now may the great Head of the church comfort and console the bereaved ones till we all meet again in the sweet by-and-by! is the prayer of one who loved him. C. C. Grisham.

FRANCIS—Mary Roberta, daughter of J. S. and Laura Francis, was born near Mt. Pleasant Church, east of Crystal Springs, July 18, 1887, and died near the same place, Sept. 14, 1897.

She was sick only three days. Her death was caused by congestion. She was unusually bright and womanly for one of her age. She was very fond of singing religious songs. The evening before she was taken ill she sat on the gallery and sang many songs to the younger children. She loved to read her Bible and pray. She marked in her Bible many passages that were especially striking to her, some of which were Psalms xxiii and xxvii, Isa. xxvi. She was also very domestic for a girl of ten. She seemed to realize that her mother had many labors to perform and many burdens to bear. She was as thoughtful, sympathetic and helpful as a grown person, and seemed it a pleasure to help mother bear her burdens. She was indeed a most remarkable child in many respects. It is indeed hard to give up such a child, but God is our Father, and he knows how to make this affliction a blessing. May she draw all her loved ones heavenward! W. M. Williams, P. C.

RAYNER—September 17, 1896, there came into the home of Bro. and Sister M. L. Rayner, near Hickory, Newton county, Miss., two sweet little buds of promise. The older children seemed almost to idolize the sweet little ones. They had reached the age where they were growing more and more interesting when the Lord came for little Ruth, and, unconscious of the flood of tears that surrounded her, her sweet spirit took its flight, Aug. 23, 1897, to the arms of Him who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God."
D. P. Bradford.

TODD—The home of Bro. and Sister J. H. Todd, near Hickory, Newton county, Miss., has been saddened by the death of their bright little boy, Ira Lamar. He was born July 23, 1893; dedicated to God by baptism, Nov. 22, 1896, and died Sunday evening, Sept. 26, 1897.

This bright little flower was only allowed to gladden this home a little over four years. Only one year and ten days before they had buried a sweet little girl. Their hearts are bleeding with sorrow, but they are trusting the God of all comfort. D. P. Bradford.

ROBBINS—Little Frennie May, son of R. R. and Julia V. Robbins, was born March 18, 1897, at which time the mother was taken from this world of sorrow to her home in heaven, there to await the arrival of her little babe, who came to her on the morning of June 16, 1897. Little Freddie was tenderly cared for by his grandparents during his short life.
B. W. Lewis.

MONZINGO—On Sept. 16, 1897, the death angel flew solemnly over the membership of Cotton Valley M. E. Church, South, and peacefully bore away one of its devout and time-honored members, Aunt Patie Monzingo.

At the time of her death, and for some time previous, she was with her daughter, Mrs. Rosa Martin, of Waco, Texas. After the lapse of a few days she intended to return to Louisiana, to her old home, now the home of her son, Mr. E. H. Monzingo; but instead she has gone to a heavenly home, a mansion bright and fair, a haven of rest for the weary saints, where sorrow nor weeping never come; where there is no sin, no parting, no death. Thank God for such a home!

Resolved, That in the death of Sister Monzingo, Cotton Valley Church has lost one of her valiant soldiers of the cross; but our loss is her eternal gain.
Resolved, That while we deeply mourn her loss, we are happy in the thought that she is safe in the arms of Jesus.
Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication; also to each of our parish papers. S. L. Cole, for Com.

What Miss Frances E. Willard says below about alcohol is simply an admirable restatement of well-known facts. They are facts, however, of such momentous import, that they will bear frequent repetition, like many in the Scriptures. Miss Willard says:

"First, modern science proves that alcohol is not helpful to any vital process. It is the enemy of vitality. It overworks the organs with which it comes in contact, including needless friction.

"Second, the appetite for alcoholic drinks is cumulative. It has no power of self-restriction. It grows by what it feeds on. One glass calls for two, two for three, and so on in dangerous ratio.

"Third, the life of a drinking man is apt to be divided into two chapters of a very tragical aerial, in the first of which he could have left off if he would, and in the second he would have left off if he could.

"Fourth, the power of habit is practically omnipotent. The power of will to cope with it has been proved insufficient. The grooves of action are quickly worn. No harm results from doing without alcohol, but absolute good has been known to result from such abstinence."

We often live under a cloud, and it is well for us that we should do so. Uninterrupted sunshine would parch our hearts; we want shade and rain to cool and refresh them. Only it behooves us to take care that, whatever cloud may be spread over us, it should be a cloud of witnesses. And every cloud may be such, if we can only look through to the sunshine that broods behind it.—Hare.

The single glass of wine or beer per day, which sufficed at the beginning, will soon be enlarged or repeated. It was enough to start the blood into a gallop yesterday, but fails short to-day, and will not begin to do to-morrow.—Horace Greeley.

Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.

The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm. Its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take-up, convenient foot rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker; one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

The Head is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

Needle Bar is round, with adjustable bearing polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

Improved Automatic Bobbin Winder which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

Self Threading—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

The Needle is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

Self-Threading Shuttle—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell, without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

Loose Pulley for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

Parts Subject to Wear are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

Vicksburg District.

The trials of the people and their pastors in this district this year have not been few, and have been severe. In the early Spring the overflow submerged three charges and parts of two others. This was followed by fevers, sufferings and death. Then came the yellow fever, and is now in Edwards, Clinton and Nitta Yuma. The three places are in three different pastoral charges, and threaten every other point in the district. The effects of this fever upon the people of Edwards, and especially in our church, have been most distressing. The faithful pastor, Rev. J. G. Galloway, and his wife remained at their post, visiting the sick, ministering to the dying and comforting the sorrowing, until they both took the fever. But, thanks to "Our Father," they are now up, but as yet unable to do much for their people. How sad it will be when this dark cloud is lifted and the roll of the church at Edwards is called! Of not a few of the best, the long-tried and the always faithful, it will be announced, They "rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." Among these are relatives of this writer, others who have been the closest of friends from childhood, and still others whom I learned to love as their pastor long years ago.

How long this battle against suffering and death must continue none can tell. But until it is over all business and church work must stand suspended by order of the "powers that be." So great is the excitement caused by actual facts and of rumors of danger that it is impossible for me to meet my appointments. We are now in correspondence with Bishop Wilson, and hope he will postpone the time of holding our Annual Conference to a late date in December. The brethren will, therefore, please consider all appointments of Quarterly Conferences canceled until further notice.

BY MAY KINGSLEY BRADLEY.

Could we lift the veil of the future,
Would visions fair we see,
Or a picture of anguish, of sorrow,
That, mayhap, we thought never might be?

In our blind and heedless fashion
We stumble and fall and rise;
Would our pathway be any smoother
Did we know what before us lies?

God leads. Though we stumble and falter,
Rough paths give but strength to our feet.
In his infinite wisdom the Master
Tempers the storm, the cold and the heat.

Trust him? Yes. Though the way may be dreary,
Though weary and faint we oft roam,
His way is our way, if we love him,
His way will at last bring us home.

Letter from "Gilderoy."

Where is Rev. R. M. Davis at? What does he hold and teach on the subjects of original sin and the moral status of infants? He is the most logical and metaphysical man I know, and perfectly independent in his thinking, preaching, and writing.

In the ADVOCATE, of Sept. 30, he replies to "Gilderoy," and to Dr. Miley, and to the standard authors of our Methodism for the past one hundred years. He undertakes to show that they have been "absurd" in their teaching on the "guiltless, but depraved state of human nature." This is a grave charge at a late day against a long line of great and good men.

"Gilderoy" had expressed the consensus of Methodist and Arminian opinion in this statement, "Man is a depraved being in a guiltless or justified state." Bro. Davis says, "As well as I now remember, this expresses the true views of the authors named"—the standard authors of the church. As quoted by Bro. Davis, Dr. Miley reaches identically the same conclusion, with this additional statement, "Depravity is moral ruin." Bro. Davis holds that the terms of this statement of the condition of the race are "incongruous and absurd." He then proceeds to show the "incongruity and absurdity" of this proposition or statement. Bro. Davis makes out his case to his own satisfaction, and demonstrates that our Methodist authors have been guilty of an "absurdity" all these years of our history. I looked, but looked in vain, for some statement of the question by Bro. Davis that would be neither "incongruous nor absurd." It is high time in our history that we had a statement above the suspicion of "absurdity." I know of no man more competent, or under greater obligation to give us such a form of words, than Bro. Davis. His criticism so far is destructive. It destroys a phrase that has served to express our faith for more than a century. It is time now for Bro. Davis to give us something constructive—something proof against logic.

In all matters of logic and on all questions of metaphysics I sit at the feet of Bro. Davis to learn. If I am not mistaken in the terms used, Bro. Davis is guilty of precisely the same "incongruity and absurdity" that he charges home and logically proves on "Gilderoy," Dr. Miley and the standard authorities of our church. If I can make out my case as well as Bro. Davis made out his, then his own arguments will upset his own statement and show him to have been guilty of an "incongruous and absurd" utterance. This will be an awkward predicament for a profound logician and metaphysician to be in, but it will be fair—fair to stand him up in the same corner where he placed others. If I am not mistaken, Bro. Davis has sawed off the limb on which he himself stood.

Let us see. "Gilderoy" says, "Man is a depraved being in a guiltless or justified state." "This is the true view of the standard authors of our Methodism." Dr. Miley says, "Infants under the gospel dispensation are guiltless, and so in a state of justification, though in a condition of depravity, which is moral ruin." R. M. Davis says, "While it is true depravity is not sin, yet it is a sequence of sinning, and is the sure and certain evidence of an antecedent unlawful act, as well as a present ruined condition."

In this Bro. Davis states identically the proposition he so logically combats. He is as deep in the mud as Dr. Miley is in the mire—"ruined condition," "guiltless depravity," and the rest. Dr. Miley calls it "moral ruin," and R. M. Davis a "ruined condition."

Notwithstanding Bro. Davis' skill in logic and his large information in metaphysics, I am glad to see that what he does remember of the old books of theology saves him from blundering when he comes to make a constructive statement of some theological question. So much for the old books, even when they are not well remembered.

In this round, and by methods intensely logical, Bro. Davis has proved too much. He has proved his own statement to be "incongruous and absurd." When he gets himself untangled from the toils of his own net I will see what I can do for the release of "Gilderoy," Dr. Miley, and the standard authors of our church.

In conclusion, I would like to ask Bro. Davis a few questions suggested by his statement of this subject. What Methodist author or preacher ever said that depravity is sin in the sense of an act, or sinning? What one ever denied that it was a sequence of sinning? Do they not all hold that depravity is sure and certain evidence of an antecedent unlawful act? Do they not all hold that depravity is a present ruined condition? What are you fighting about anyhow? Have you gotten crossways with yourself?

GILDEROY.

The Siege of Vicksburg.

Vicksburg has renewed the experiences of thirty-five years ago, and is again in a state of siege. Just north of the national cemetery, where the encircling hills touch the lake, at every hour of the day and night may be heard the notes of a bugle, and the call passes from post to post until the word has circled the city to the river front below. Near the point where the Federal lines were driven back in the Chickasaw Bayou fight camp-fires are gleaming. Not far from the old "rock-house," on the Jackson road, where war held high carnival in the long ago, soldiers walk their beats or stand watchful at their posts. Within a stone's throw of the ruins of that massive fort on the railroad, which Stephen D. Lee held with such persistent courage, sentries keep their watch. Along the river front, beneath the hills that once bristled with Confederate cannon, pickets pace to and fro, and challenge each other with the passing hours. A white tent, marking the location of "Post No. 31," is standing near where "Whistling Dick" thundered his red-mouthed welcome to the Federal gun-boats, and not far away another post stands in the shadow of the hill, from which the siege gun, "Lady Davis," fired the shot that sunk the ram "Cincinnati."

Within the city there is excitement intense, but quiet, and the pressure of suspense, so trying to the souls of men. Business activity has almost ceased, many of our non-combatants have fled to places of safety, while the citizens who have remained talk only of the dreaded enemy and the chances of escape. There is no suggestion of surrender, and every day of safety adds to the spirit of hopeful courage that marks the people. But "Vigilance" is the watchword, and the foe whose presence is reported north, south, east and west of us will find no entrance into our city if the watchful efforts of our people can prevent it. Such is Vicksburg's condition to day—surrounded by the enemy, but watchful, trustful, hopeful, and, up to this time, free. Our enemy is not an army of "blue-coats," but the dreaded plague whose terrible visitation in 1878 we remember, and of whose return we are afraid. The lateness of the season and the apparent efficiency of our quarantine regulations justify the hope of escape; but what a day may bring forth no one can tell. But if this city and other localities, up to this time uninfected, should continue so, what desolation and loss have already befallen our people! Not to speak of the loss of life, and considering the question only as seen in an uninfected town, the cost is incalculable. Traffic is suspended, the boats and trains are tied up, business is paralyzed, the work of the church is hindered, moral restraints are weakened, time, money and energy are expended in flight or in methods of protection, many of the humbler classes are reduced to want, and general demoralization is superinduced.

The position of Vicksburg, while one of peculiar peril, has not been without its compensating blessing, in that it has given the people an opportunity to minister to the stricken communities around us; and, be it said to their credit, every call has been answered in a way worthy of a people who, having themselves been sufferers, remember now those who are in distress. The quarantine laws have been enforced to the hardship of some of our people, but in no case has selfish timidity been allowed to obstruct the exercise of generous sympathy.

Our pastors have all remained at their posts, and our day services have been remarkably well attended. Our night meetings, at the suggestion of the health authorities, have been discontinued for the present.

A. F. WATKINS.

Selections.

Will We Heed the Lesson?

It was a wise man who said, "In the day of adversity, consider." If God be good, why are we so afflicted? is a question which now presses itself upon every thoughtful believer in Divine Providence.

Admitting that our ignorance or our carelessness has brought this pestilence upon us, did not God create the germs and endow them with power to harm us? There is no dodging of this argument except by stark atheism. If there is a living God, he is supreme in every sphere. The only Book in the world which gives us any intelligible idea of God assures us that the "curse causeless shall not come." If there is one doctrine in the Old Testament Scriptures which is clearer and stronger than any other, it is the doctrine that every blessing follows upon obedience to God; that every form of calamity, affliction and curse is the inevitable consequence of disobedience, and that all these are sent by the direct will and purpose of God for the discipline of his people in righteousness. A hundred passages of Scripture might easily be adduced wherein it is explicitly affirmed that God is the author of the afflictions as well as of the blessings which come upon men. We cite a few only: "Behold, I set before you a blessing and a curse: . . . a blessing if ye obey, . . . and a curse if you will not obey." (Deut. xi, 26–28) "He made a way to His anger; He spared not their soul from death, but gave their life over to the pestilence." (Ps. lxxviii, 50.) Here it is positively said that God uses pestilence to punish those who disobey him.

Does it not behoove us, then, at this time to inquire wherein our sins have provoked the displeasure of God? Have we not been given to covetousness, which is as the sin of idolatry before God? Have not many been over-reaching their neighbors in trade and oppressing the hireling in his wages? Have not the poor been envious of the rich? Have we not withheld what we owed for the support of God's cause and for the extension of his kingdom? Have we not all professed belief in God with our tongues, while our actions belied the utterances of our lips? Have we not all loved the world unduly and forgotten God? Have we not shown our low and selfish conceptions of all higher and eternal things by desecrating the day which God requires us to keep holy? In keeping the Sabbath, in its highest sense, every man is in large degree a law unto himself. Merely not working is but half, and the lower half, of the heavenly task. Our Sabbath keeping is at once the manifestation and the measure of our sense of God. Every man's Sabbath is his present heaven—type of what he may expect hereafter. Few of us reach the delectable height of "not doing our own ways, nor finding our own pleasure, nor speaking our own words," on the Lord's day—"making the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable."

On the other hand, behold everywhere the profanation of the Sabbath. Shops are open, goods are sold, wicked indulgences are encouraged, men are travelling for business or for pleasure, and in a thousand ways manifesting their disregard for God's laws. Mails and freights are transmitted and handled; steamboats and railway trains, the people's great agents and servants, rush on regardless of the day, working thousands of poor laborers to death. Now, on this point two things are clear: first, that God places special emphasis on the law of the Sabbath, punishing signally his people for its violation; and, second, that physical science and experience have demonstrated that the Sabbath rest is necessary to the highest welfare of man. Sabbath labor wears out the body and starves the soul, and is a sin against God and man. The holy day furnishes the only time space for a church on earth. Without it God would cease to be worshiped. No Sabbath, no church; no church, no Bible; no Bible, no God; no God, no religion, but rank heathenism and free diabolism. All of God's commandments are "for our good always."

Are not the comparatively light afflictions now upon us a warning to us all to cease from our sins? Does not this widespread quarantine say to us from God, "Be still, and know that I am God"? We have said we have not time to keep the Sabbath; business requires all our time. But now God makes man's laws to enforce his own, and say to every man: "You shall be still. Be still! lest you carry evil to your neighbor." What a lesson, suggesting to every man the danger of communicating moral as well as physical evil to his neighbor!

Happy shall we be if we can take a hint. Let us stop and turn away from our sins, and learn that fires and floods, droughts, strikes and pestilences are but expressions of God's wise and just displeasure at our wickedness. Let us learn that our work could be better done in six days than in seven, and that we are losing more money—all of us—by this quarantine than we have gained by working on Sabbaths in twenty years. Let us learn that all our disregard of God's laws tends perpetually to weaken his authority among men, and to drive all sense of him from the earth; and that if we will repent and amend our ways, his truth and power are pledged to give us temporal and spiritual prosperity.

Quarantine against It.

We recently passed through a town which was quarantined against the world. We saw the guards with their shotguns on the roadside, and it recalled old times when pickets and scouts met you on every highway. We had clean health papers, and were allowed to pass through, but not to stop off. It was all right. We did not blame the people. The terrible results of a yellow fever epidemic some years ago justify such stringent measures to keep it out. But what struck us as a gross inconsistency was that, while guarding the roads with shotguns to keep out the yellow fever, this particular town let the saloon have right of way, and licensed the liquor traffic, which is infinitely more deadly than the yellow fever. No sane man, who reflects on the subject, if compelled to choose between the yellow fever and the liquor traffic, could hesitate to choose the fever. One saloon is a greater curse to a community than a center of infection. It means more coffins, more tears, more poverty, more ruin than the scourge of yellow fever. Yet we shoot the one if it tries to enter, and license the other. There is, perhaps, nothing in all the range of human inconsistencies greater than the stupendous folly that tolerates—yea, encourages—the saloon by granting it the protection of law. Let the energies of the young manhood and womanhood of the land be directed to the extirpation of this evil, and let us not rest until we have rooted it out of our fair land. Let there be no compromise with it. Oppose it always, and with all the earnestness of the life. Put your whole soul into an inflexible purpose to destroy the saloon. It is blighting the country with a terrible curse, and we are responsible for it to the extent that we fail to exert ourselves to exterminate it. Treat it as we do the yellow fever. Quarantine against it. We do not say use the shotgun on it, but we do say use the ballot, and agitate until public sentiment will rise in solid mass to put it down forever.—Epworth Era.

For the Pessimist.

I was talking with a business man within the last week, a man in the prime of life, who has been connected with the financial side of a business life for twenty years. It is a business that involves the management of twelve great stores in and out of Boston. And he said to me in this conversation: "Why is it that good conduct is never mentioned as a matter of news? Let a man default or go wrong somewhere, and it is blazoned all over the land, and people get the notion that everybody is doing it." He said concerning his own business that, during the last twenty years, in the management of these twelve large stores, they had not lost, on an average, one per cent. a year through dishonesty or carelessness, and the loss has been generally less than one-half of one per cent. That is, after you had taken out all the carelessness and dishonesty, almost one hundred per cent. of honesty and good judgment remain. And he expressed it as his opinion that this would be found to be equally true in other businesses as well as his own. But the man who thinks he has a knowledge of the world, and who finds out that somebody has cheated him, and so believes that all the world is cheating, is simply cheating himself; and the illusion is in supposing that people are not, in the main, honest.—M. J. Savage on "Disillusions."

Preparing the Sermon.

Justice Brewer, of the Supreme Court, recently addressed the students of the Yale Theological School, emphasizing the point that ministers should not write their sermons. If he would advise them not to read their sermons, he would come nearer the mark. But the most careful writing is almost essential to good preaching. It leads the preacher to verify his Scripture references, so that he shall quote his Bible correctly; it gives him opportunity to select illustrations that are apt, and to consider carefully the dress or aspect under which they shall be presented; it enables him to arrange his thoughts in such a way as to be remembered both by himself and the hearers. Then let him make himself master of the line of his argument, and preach without notes.

Does he complain that he can not remember his sermon unless he has notes? If not, is there not something faulty in the sermon itself? If he can not retain it one day, how will he expect his hearers to remember it?

We have known of several ministers who have lost their charges because of their neglect of careful preparation. Friends saw the restlessness of their congregations under unstudied discourses, and foresaw the necessity of an early resignation of the pastorate, mainly on this account. In these days of increasing intelligence in the pew, the greatest care in preparing sermons is a necessity.—Christian Observer.

One of the most useful and praiseworthy members of society is the man who laughs at other people's jokes. The fellow that is all the time laughing at his own witticisms is an intolerable nuisance, but the gentleman who can appreciate another person's humor, particularly our own, is entitled to our highest consideration and respect. When we have brought forth the very finest specimen from our repertory of old jokes, and there is a look of blank amazement on the faces of the crowd, it is as refreshing as a morning breeze, as soothing as the balm of Gilead, to have some keen-witted friend burst out with a hearty ha! ha! As the contagious smile weaves itself around the other's faces, and as they begin to look upon us not as a fool, but as a fountain of entenesa which they were unable to comprehend, we feel like throwing our arms around our generous assistant and hugging him as his mother used to do. I move we organize a public society with a badge something like the cross of the Legion of Honor, for the express purpose of appropriately rewarding those public benefactors who are sharp enough and unselfish enough to see and enjoy another man's jokes.—Methodist Herald.

Mr. Moody is so far right when he says that it is the sins and errors of the church which are hindering the conversion of the world. Some of them are indicated by the events which broke up Paul's work and sent him to Jerusalem. Others exist now, and it is our duty to find out what they are; but it is as true now as it was then, that the chief causes of delay are to be found in the church itself and not in the world of unbelief. But with all the hindrances of sin and schism, the kingdom of God moves on. As never before, the church is fairly, if not magnificently, awake to its duties. The thousands of Achans, and of disciples neither hot nor cold, and of disciples divergent and quarrelsome, can not annul the power of the promise of Christ, which accompanied his last command, that he would be with the scores of true apostles who go out into all the world. The kingdom of God hastens on by virtue of the faithfulness and in spite of the hindrances of the church.—Independent.

Lord, preserve me calm in my spirit, gentle in my commands, and watchful that I speak not unadvisedly with my lips; moderate in my purposes, yielding in my temper, and at the same time steadfast in my principles.

WHY IS IT?

BY FATHER RYAN.

Some find work where some find rest,
And so the weary world goes on;
I sometimes wonder which is best,
The answer comes when life is gone.

Some eyes sleep when some eyes wake,
And so the dreary night hours go;
Some hearts beat where some hearts break.
I often wonder why 'tis so.

Some will faint where some will fight;
Some love the tent and some the field;
I often wonder who are right—
The ones who strive or those who yield.

Some hands fold where other hands
Are lifted bravely in the strife;
And so through ages and through lands
Move on the two extremes of life.

Some feet halt where some feet tread
In tireless march a thorny way;
Some struggle on where some have fled;
Some seek when others shun the fray.

Some swords rust where others clash;
Some fall back where some move on;
Some flags furl where others flash
Until the battle has been won.

Some sleep on, while others keep
The vigils of the true and brave;
They will not rest till roses creep
Around their names above a grave.

Panic—Fevers and Else.

Our Southland is under one of the hardest ordeals ever endured—specially the territory of our ADVOCATE. In last analysis it is due to causes set forth in an able article lately contributed by our philosophic and saintly Dr. Hunnicutt to the Times-Democrat, "It is the Lord's doing, and marvelous in our eyes." But there are scriptural and scientific reasons leading to it. We doubtless need chastisement. That it comes through our own folly, carelessness or cowardice should only make it strike home more forcibly on our consciences. That a highly contagious fever was allowed to sweep through one of our "coast resorts" for months, with no warning to adjacent towns and country, suggests the thought that our public servants chiefly on guard at that point have been remiss in some way. We give them all the benefit of the doubt, and set it down to a lack of understanding. The science of diagnosis does not seem to have progressed as far as we had hoped. Covetousness or self indulgence must have broken through quarantine regulations, and brought the seed of all this woful harvest to our shores. Then the inveterate tendency to look only at immediate profit and pleasure kept back a full report of what should have come abroad weeks earlier than it did. Since the first declaration of "experts" that the disease is "yellow fever," what a mighty—nay, awful—change! Extremes have met, and our poor human nature has made a sad exhibition of its fallibility. No war or pestilence heretofore known has produced a wider or wilder panic. A thousand or twelve hundred people crowding on one train, Sept. 6, was but the opening symptom of a fever twofold more destructive than that which is now recognized as a mild form of yellow fever. Its mildness was already well known when the panic began, and during its continuance. For a smaller percentage of deaths to "cases" has seldom been recorded in any contagious disease. Still, towns have been nearly depopulated and business paralyzed.

As a Mississippian, I am ashamed to rewrite what has been reported as occurring in and about our capital city. We must make allowance for exaggeration. Yet enough is true to make us who love our State to blush. Men who were greatly needed in such exigencies abandoning home and business and fellow citizens as if pursued by giant hobgoblins. But, worst of all, was "man's inhumanity to man" in forbidding trains freighted with help for a deeply stricken community from passing through their limits. You might suppose that men in high official position believed a freight train to be loaded down with fever germs when it had not passed within one hundred miles of an infected district.

But I turn from contemplating such conduct to bespeak the further sympathy and aid of the generous and true—and many such we have among us—toward a place which has suffered far more severely than any other. My recent delightful home, Edwards, has been sorely stricken. Like a thief in the night the fever finds its way simultaneously to every quarter of the town. The gifted, the wealthy, the strong and the good have been the sufferers in large measure. You, Mr. Editor, have known and loved most of those whose taking away has brought such a void into our lives. Our tears mingle with those of other denominations whose brotherly love was precious to us. But 'tis only natural we should feel most keenly the losses within our own fold. There is special pathos in the removal of the Noblin brothers, "R. H." and "C. H."—so long associated in close residence, nearness (or oneness) of business relationship, unity of purpose in building up the moral and material interests of their loved church; alike faithful in advancing all that really helped the community. Their present pastor will, no doubt, furnish a worthy obituary of each of those whom we shall not see again this side of heaven. But I must lay this little chaplet on that new-made double grave: Two more faithful stewards and kindly thoughtful friends have never blessed my ministry or sweetened social life than these two men of God. Several others dear to our hearts and useful in their generation have been called away. May God stay his afflicting hand, and send consolations of his grace to all the sorrowing in that sorely smitten community! And may all the living lay to heart the lessons God would thus teach! Yours in sorrow,

J. P. DRAKE.

Growth Again.

It seems to me that it should be clear enough to everyone who has given the subject of growth any thought whatever, that in animate growth there is an increasement of the tissues in the embryo, and in all organisms there is an increasement of cells, etc., and that this increasement, or growth, is from within outward, and not by accretions from without inward, or to, as some have supposed. Growth by accretions is peculiar to inanimate matter, such as crystals, etc., for each inanimate substance is increased by an addition of homogeneous particles which are held together by the law of molecular attraction, while animate bodies are increased, or grow, from within by the life with which they are invested. There is, it is true, such a growth in animate nature as that of accretions, but it is not the norm of animate increasement. In other words, when two or more animate bodies grow together in the sense of an interweaving of their tissues one with another, then there is growth by accretions. This finds illustration in the growing together of two or more fingers and toes. Perhaps every reader of this remembers to have met with some one who had two fingers or two toes grown together; such a growth is a growth by accretion. Feeling satisfied that my thoughts on physical growth are clear enough, I shall proceed to show at once what Mr. Wesley, Clarke, Watson, and our blessed Savior taught the new birth, or regeneration, to be. In other words, did they teach that a person is holy when born again? Let us see: Mr. Wesley said, "To be born again is to be inwardly changed from all sinfulness to all holiness." (Notes on New Testament—page 218.) Again, Mr. Wesley says, in speaking of the new birth, "It is the change wrought in the whole soul by the almighty Spirit of God, when it is created anew in Christ Jesus, when it is renewed after the image of God, in righteousness and true holiness." (Wesley's sermons, vol. — —page 405.)

Clarke says: "The new birth, which is here spoken of, comprehends, not only what is termed justification or pardon, but also sanctification or holiness. As this new birth implies the renewing of the whole soul in righteousness and true holiness, it is not a matter that may be dispensed with. Heaven is a place of holiness, and nothing but what is like itself can enter into it." (Clarke's Com.—pages 530 and 531.)

Watson says, in speaking of the new birth: "It is a moral, and not a physical, change which is spoken of, both by our Lord and by the apostle; and if a moral change from sin to holiness, then is the natural state of man from his birth, and in consequence of his (natural) birth, sinful and corrupt." (Watson's Inst. —page 400.)

Our Savior said, "Except a man be born again (from above), he can not see the kingdom of God." (John iii, 3.) Wesley and Clarke, as we have already shown, understood our Savior to mean, except a man became holy; and to be sure that they were right in understanding the new birth means holiness, we have only to refer to Paul, who said, "Holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." (Heb. xii, 14.) So we see that everyone who has been regenerated, or born again, is holy according to Wesley, Clarke, Watson, and our Savior. When made holy by the new birth, our Lord wants us to grow in the grace and knowledge of Christ, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.

Now, let everyone prove by their writings and life that they have been born again before they claim a higher state.

Correspondence.

Letter from California.

MR. EDITOR: Conference is over. The session was held in Oakland, San Francisco's Brooklyn, as last year. In fact, it seems to be settled that we are to have a fixed place of meeting. The plan has some advantages. At least twice as many of our friends from the interior were in attendance as last year, and the attendance will doubtless grow. It looked for a time as if the newspapers would run us out. Somebody seems to have given some newspaper man (or woman) to understand that there were some differences among us, and in proof of the fact placed Dr. Steel's letters in his hands. A reporter was sent to scent a sensation, and a sensation it must be, whether or no. Flaring headlines announcing "Elders at War," "A Methodist Row," and such like, were placed above what was claimed to be our proceedings, but what was in reality statements of what never took place. We read the newspapers for the news. How are we to know when we get them? We did have a little breeze, but the session was more harmonious than was expected, and the brethren kept their tempers. The friction grew out of an attempt upon the part of the presiding elders to suppress evangelists. As the names of each of four of these officers were called, their official character was challenged, and questions put to the Bishop, such as: "Is it lawful for a presiding elder to issue a circular letter to the preachers of his district, forbidding them to employ in revival meetings local preachers of good standing in our own church, though they live without the district?" "Has a presiding elder a right to direct the services of a church when he is personally absent?" etc. The answers are understood to justify the presiding elders. Some among us who endorse the episcopal decisions believe, nevertheless, that some of the presiding elders made too free use of their prerogatives. The laity are well-nigh unanimous in this opinion. The clerical members were about equally divided. I am persuaded that the crisis has passed, and henceforth we will have peace. Both sides will modify, and extremes will meet. So mote it be.

Our reports showed a small loss in membership. This was expected. Preachers' salaries and collections all short. The revival in finances came too late to enable us to come up to former figures. The W. P. and H. M. and W. F. M. Societies had made progress. The missions among Chinese and Japanese residents of the State, inaugurated at our last Conference at the instance of Mrs. Hargrove, are succeeding beyond our most sanguine expectations. Bro. McKnight, the superintendent, had his Japanese class out one evening, and they sang, read, prayed and spoke before the audience. The Chinese Mission at Salinas is even more advanced. These object-lessons are the very best missionary sermons. This work should have been begun years ago, but "better late than never." Is there a better way to reach China and Japan?

We received several transfers, and several went from us. T. H. B. Anderson, D. D., went to the Missouri Conference; H. C. Christian, C. W. Hoag, and C. L. McClenland were transferred to the Los Angeles Conference, and D. M. Edwards to North Georgia. Los Angeles gives us W. E. Vaughn and J. F. G. Finley. Christopher C. Black comes from Kentucky. Several other brethren were introduced who had come since our last session. Two were received on trial—one a graduate of Randolph-Macon and Vanderbilt. T. A. Atkinson had gone to the M. E. Church, but to counterbalance the loss, we received C. W. Archer from the Baptist Church. Four had died: S. Brown, B. H. Russell, E. H. Robertson, and J. G. Shelton. I have written before of all save Bro. Shelton. Like the others, too much can hardly be said in his favor. He was superannuated at our last session. B. F. Burris superannuated. He has been for years one of our most successful pastors, and we can ill afford to spare him.

Bishop Hargrove is one of the best-natured presiding officers I know of. If he was ever harsh, he is mellowing wonderfully. Mrs. Hargrove and Miss Bennett accompanied the Bishop in the interest of the work of the women, but the latter was called home by sickness in her family before Conference. Mrs. Hargrove helped us not a little.

Preachers and laymen left for their respective homes and fields of labor full of hope. This scribe returns to Hollister to finish up his quadrennium. He could not have been better pleased.

Our delegates to the General Conference are: Clerical—W. F. Coffin and J. C. Simmons, with John Hannon for alternate. Lay—J. P. Strother and L. P. Farmer, with B. Campbell and G. V. Northup for alternates. Good men, all.

We are praying that Mississippi and Louisiana may be saved from the yellow fever scourge. God forbid that the experiences of '78 should be repeated! I was in Mississippi then.

My little book, "Two Epistles," is being kindly received by my brethren. It is endorsed by both "second-blessing" advocates (extremists excepted, of course) and their opponents as "providentially adapted to the wants of our time." It was written out of the fullness of my heart, which was earnestly longing for the unity of the spirit among the preachers and members of our church. I am sure I will be pardoned for quoting from a letter from "Gilderoy": "Your pamphlet, 'Two Epistles—I. To Professors of Perfect Love; II. To Opposers of the Second Blessing,' with compliments of the author, came to hand the night before last, and I have read every word of it with a glowing heart and with great personal profit. I believe this is the most opportune and calmly considered utterance we have had on this great and important subject. I could heartily wish that a copy of this pamphlet were put into the hands of every man, woman and child in all the churches and in all the land who has interest enough in the subject of holiness to read anything at all on the subject. It need not matter whether they have the interest of interest or the interest of opposition. I congratulate you on having made your meaning clear, on having maintained a Christian spirit, and on not having taken sides. It is evident that you are not a partisan. . . . Your book stirred me, drew me to you, made me feel like we were kinfolks, and so I have opened my heart and poured it out as I rarely do."

An edition of 5,000 copies has been printed. I wish every layman who reads this would send thirty cents, and every preacher twenty-five cents, to Messrs. Barbee & Smith, and get a sample copy. Then, if you think it worth circulating, ten or more copies will be sent, carriage prepaid, for 22½ cents per copy.

Interesting Items from the Foreign Secretary.

The extension of work in the foreign field by the Woman's Board, at the last annual session, gives general satisfaction. Korea is a most inviting, promising field, and already located there are some true and faithful workers from China, who feel a sincere interest in the welfare of our Board, and have given much of thought and time and skill to its advancement.

Mrs. J. P. Campbell will sail, Aug. 14, for Korea, and will have charge of our opening work. Mrs. Campbell's record in China as our missionary insures success in the new field. Her extensive tour among the home societies greatly endeared her to our hearts, and recommended her to our respect. Last year she traveled many miles, organizing societies, putting life into dead ones, and animating the dying. Thousands will follow her with their prayers, as she again bids adieu to home, and crosses the ocean with the gospel message to our Korean sisters. She leaves early in August, that she may visit her former field of labor, pack up her things, preparatory to moving to Korea, and attend the annual meeting in Shanghai in October.

The lot purchased by the Board is in Seoul, the capital of the little kingdom, the seat of the recently opened mission of our General Board.

Miss Waters, who has been at home for some months recruiting, will sail about the twenty-sixth of August. Miss Williams, recently appointed to China, will go out at the same time.

It was thought best that Miss Helen Richardson, who has been in China seven years, should come home for rest. When she returns to China her sister, appointed at the last meeting of the Board, will go with her.

Miss L. V. Wright will take her place at Laredo Seminary in a few weeks, where her work lies for the present.

Miss Norville is still at home, resting after some years of service, but as soon as possible she will take charge of the new school in the City of Mexico.

Miss Churchill is already at her post in Saltillo, Mexico. Miss Leonora Smith is in Brazil, giving fine promise of being one of our most valuable missionaries. Miss Lulie Ross has returned to Juiz de Brazil. She went out in company with Bro. Wolling and family and Bishop Galloway. During the past year, under the charge of Miss Perkinson, our Juiz de Fora school has had its most successful session. A larger music class, a larger number of pupils in the various departments quite encourages the Board to believe that this school may after all be a power for good, and its returns justify the expenditures. An effort has been inaugurated at Piracicaba in our seminary there to make the income meet the current expenses. This is a move in the right direction, and if successful, the Board may move forward more rapidly in extending the work and enlarging its borders.

Cheerful notes from our China work compensate for all we expend upon it in sacrifices or self-denial. The conversions, the increase of scholarships and Bible women, the multiplication of schools, the hopeful, happy testimonies of our missionaries there, all give cause of rejoicing, and make the faithful women at home, who are striving to sustain the various stations, more anxious to do more in their societies. Is it too much to say that the night of discouragement, so long resting like a pall upon our China Mission, is being lifted, and the day-star is far above the horizon?

Miss Martin, as well as others in China, declares: "I am so happy in my work. I would not be anywhere else in the world. It is such a sweet privilege to tell these souls of Jesus. I long to have full command of the language, that I may be more efficient."

Christ and Character.

When Jesus grounds his religion on character he gives a radiant proof of his sanity and wins at once the suffrages of reasonable men. There is nothing on which we differ so hopelessly as creed; nothing on which we agree so utterly as character. Impanel twelve men of clean conscience and average intelligence and ask them to try some person by his opinions, and they may as well be discharged at once. They will not agree till the Greek Kalends. Ask them to take the standard of conduct, and they will bring in a verdict in five minutes. They have agreed in anticipation. Just as he approximates to the beatitudes they will pronounce the many good; just as he diverges will they declare him less than good. Were anyone to insinuate a reference to his opinions, it would be instantly dismissed as an irrelevance, and worse, an immorality, an attempt to confuse the issues of justice. According to the consistent teaching of Jesus, a Christian is one of the same likeness as himself, and nothing will more certainly debauch the religious sense than any shifting of labels, so that one who keeps Jesus' commandments is denied his name, and one in whom there is no resemblance to Jesus receives it on grounds of correct opinion. One can not imagine our Master requiring the world to accept a disciple on the ground of the man's declaration of faith; he would offer to the world the test of the man's life. When one puts in his faith as evidence he is giving a cheque on a bank beyond reach; when he puts in his character he pays in gold. The reasonableness of Jesus carries everything before it. "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit, but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit." "Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them."—Intelligencer.

The Bible.

Don't confine yourself to one part of the Bible. We may have our favorite chapter as we have our favorite chair, but we ought not to tie ourselves to either. All Scripture is profitable, but all Scripture is not equally profitable under all circumstances. We may read Ecclesiastes until life becomes a groan; or Leviticus until everything smells of blood; or Proverbs until religion seems only a system of morality; or Revelation until Christ seems divested of his humanity. The Bible is not many books, but one Book, and it must be read in all its parts if it is to provide complete nourishment and all-sufficient light.

Don't forget the context. Some texts are little Bibles and can be detached without injury. But others are like eyes—symmetrical and seemingly complete in themselves, but when you take them out of their sockets the light is gone.

Don't symbolize. The thing was done to death by our fathers and should never be resurrected.

Don't run warm metaphors into cast iron molds. Don't clothe the Jew in American garb. Don't take the warm figurative language of the East for cold, scientific Darwinian statement. You must put yourself in the place of an oriental if you would understand the hard sayings of Jesus. "If any man come unto me and hate not his father" never sounds in cold English as it does in a warm Eastern language.

Don't try to explain away the supernatural. When you explain that away you will have nothing left but the two lids of the Book.

We sometimes hear references to the "highest New Testament standard" of experience and life. We question the propriety of the expression. It seems to imply that a variety of standards are recognized by Christ as legitimate. We do not so read his words. Thorough-going loyalty is fundamental to the New Testament conception of a follower of Jesus. No one can be his disciple without forsaking all. And this same attitude must be steadily, consistently maintained. The amount covered by the word "all" will continually enlarge as the disciple goes forward, and this will necessitate a constant deepening of the consecration; but he may and should be equally loyal from beginning to end. If he is, then under the ever-advancing light the self-life will perpetually diminish and the Christ-life perpetually develop, Christ being from year to year more and more fully formed within. Thus while each moment all our conscious needs are met in Jesus, our unconscious selfishness is increasingly being shined upon and so purged away.—Zion's Herald.

Many things happen which we can not understand, but if we love God, we have a right to believe that he is in all of them; and just as surely as we have that belief, it will give us constant and perfect peace. Not a trouble can come to us in this life while we are trusting in God that we will not thank him for when we get to heaven.—Churchman.

A blade is a small thing. At first it grows very near the earth. It is often soiled and crushed and downtrodden. But it is a living thing. The great dead stone beside it is more imposing; only it will never be anything else than a stone. But this small blade—it doth not yet appear what it shall be.—Drummond.

We can never see this world in its true light unless we consider our life in it as a state of discipline—a condition through which we are passing to prepare us for another state beyond.—J. W. Alexander.

An Explanation.

I desire to say a word explanatory of my being away from my work three weeks. The impression is that I was a refugee from the fever. That is positively a mistake. I was out of the city before hearing of the yellow fever at any point Notwithstanding the outbreak of it in the city, at the appointed time I left home against the wish, will and protest of friends and relatives. But, as the brethren know, I was taken sick, and at the suggestion of a physician I remained out of the yellow fever district till I had entirely recovered.

I could have returned one week earlier, with prudence, but I was informed (wrongly, however) that Gretna and Gouldsboro had quarantined against the city and that all public gatherings were forbidden. I wrote to three responsible men concerned in my work to ascertain if these circumstances existed. Some of them replied urging me to come back to the work, but did not give me the desired information about the condition of my work. But as soon as I was informed by my presiding elder that I could go on with the work as usual, I boarded the "cannon ball" and was soon back at my post of duty.

It takes more grace and grit to come back into a thing of this character than to stay when you are caught in it, especially when you hear exaggerated reports. "Distance lends enchantment to the view," ordinarily, but the yellow fever is not very enchanting a hundred miles off

J. M. ALFORD, P. C.,

New Orleans, La., October 13, 1897.

Recently we heard a very sensible preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church, in Ohio, relate this incident, and it was so novel we allow our readers to see it. On Sunday morning a girl, about twelve years of age, approached him and wished to know if he could baptize her that day, stating that her mother had sent her to find out. He asked her several questions, among others if she was converted. To this she replied, "No, I am not converted, but when you hold your revival next Fall I am going to be then." That struck us as an original idea. She wanted to be baptized at once, and to postpone the giving of her heart and life to Christ and his service, the very thing which baptism represents, until the meeting next Fall. But the preacher wisely refused to accede to her request.—Central Methodist.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. M. L. Aldridge, Havre, Miss., Oct. 14, 1897: "Bro. Sam Q. Bass closed Sunday in a blaze a great meeting in our community, held for all the pastors of the denominations represented therein, which was a success in every particular. He is a wonderful and powerful man, possessing many requisite gifts in the pulpit and in the altar. I have been a Methodist for fifty years, and a Methodist preacher for thirty-six years, watching closely preachers and the effects of their preaching, and I don't remember to have met such a man in many respects—a man of sound doctrine, full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, earnestly contending for righteousness in all departments of life. Praise God for having permitted me to meet him. Please publish this in your bright paper."

Rev. B S. Rayner, P. C, Fayette, Miss, Oct. 6, 1897: "The Lord is greatly prospering us in Fayette charge. Congregations continue good and appreciative. Nearly every week since June we have had accessions to the church. Total accessions to date, sixty-seven; others pending. Children baptized, thirty-eight; 'more to follow.' Sunday-schools, prayer meetings, missionary societies and Ladies' Aid all doing well. Family altars multiplied four fold, church interest greatly intensified along all lines, morals generally much toned up. We will have a new parsonage soon. Peace and harmony, good-will and brotherly love prevail. We have never before in one year enjoyed so many 'big dinners.' How glad we are for the ability to survive them! Our people generally, with members of other denominations and outsiders, are delightfully appreciative. The pastor is rendering them the best service possible, and he and his family vie with them in appreciation. 'Rejoice evermore!'"

Mrs. L. Crary Sadler, Pearl River, La., Oct. 5, 1897: "In last week's ADVOCATE you have complimented Covington for not having a quarantine in this time that tries men's, women's, and children's souls. The little village station of Pearl River held the key that opened the doors of Covington The East Louisiana train must needs pass through our town to reach Covington, and our town said, 'Pass on.' There is a sort of quarantine regulation to keep out from infected places all visitors; yet the engine and force of the East Louisiana trains—five in number—go to the city every day and back, and remain here at the hotel all night, which is the same as if we had no quarantine at all. There is no excitement here per consequence, and no one has left the place. Some Northerners sojourning here do not seem to be afraid, nor do they have any idea of leaving. We are only twenty eight miles from the city, and with this every-day communication, will it not be the tenth wonder of the world if we escape having the much dreaded fever? While the whole country, and nearly all the cities, are in a frenzy of excitement about the spread of the yellow fever, we have serenely 'possessed our souls in patience,' putting our trust in a higher power than the quarantine. We miss the visit of our beloved pastor, Bro. Reed, but are glad to know he is almost well again. God bless you and the ADVOCATE"

Rev. P. H Howse, P. C., Walnut Grove, Miss., Oct. 6, 1897: "We have held four protracted meetings on this charge this year. Our first was held at Pine Grove. The preaching was done by Bros. H P. Lewis, M. A. Thurman, M. J. McDonald, and J. H Hays. A glorious revival and 11 accessions. Our second meeting was held at Walnut Grove, embracing the second Sunday in August. Bro. D. P. Bradford did the preaching. We had a good meeting; 10 accessions. Our third meeting was held at Beech Springs, fourth Sunday in August. Bro. W. M. Sullivan did the preaching after his arrival Sunday evening, and to the great delight of the people. He dealt some faithful blows. Results: 39 accessions to our church, and some few joined the Baptist Church. At the last service we took a collection for our Conference collections, and secured our claims for that church. Then Bro. James Hays and Bro. Sullivan together raised $25 in cash for the pastor, and this was augmented to about $40 before we left the community. Brethren, if you need help, you need not send for those poor, tramping evangelists Sullivan will beat two of them in his shirt sleeves. Our fourth and last meeting was protracted from our Quarterly Conference. In the absence of our presiding elder the preaching was done by Bros. McBride, M. J. McDonald, and this scribe. It was a union meeting. Bro. McBride is the Cumberland Presbyterian pastor. The people said it was a good meeting. We had no accessions. I think that there are possibilities greater yet to be developed on this charge. Pray for our success in the name of the Master."

FROM REV. C. H ELLIS

September 13 found your correspondent at Meadville, county site of Franklin county. The meeting published for Nebo Church had been removed to this place by the pastor, Rev R. S Gale. The meeting had been well advertised and a large attendance was confidently expected. But the report of yellow fever was sounding a note of alarm, and news of quarantine here and there, with reports of fever at new points, caused such alarm as resulted in a local quarantine at Meadville against all outside of its own limits This was effected on Sept. 17, the day our meeting was to open. I need not write the result.

Oak Grove is about four and one half miles out in the country, and friends there interested in the meeting sent word to Bro. Gale to come there with his workers and to hold the meeting with them. The invitation was accepted, and on Saturday, Sept. 18, the meeting began. For nine days and nights the meeting continued with no little discouragements arising from the fever panic, added to the fact that only a few weeks before Bro Gale, aided by Bro. E. B. Baker, had held a series of meetings in the community, and now farmers were in special press to gather their cotton crops. Many came to Meadville and were turned back by quarantine. God never intends his servants to suffer defeat, so on the meeting went, for victory came the first service and continued to the last. The pastor estimated the number reclaimed, converted or sanctified to be not less than forty.

Following this, at Mount Pleasant, a deserted Baptist Church in an adjoining neighborhood, services were held from Wednesday night to the following Sunday afternoon, resulting in about the same number either saved or sanctified, giving a total of about eighty.

Under most discouraging circumstances services have been held in Meadville the past week. The Word was faithfully preached, and in eternity it may be great fruit will be gathered, though but one definite experience of sanctification was reported and no conversions. Evidence of the good done in the meeting was seen in the prompt payment of the full claim against the charge for various collections ordered by the Annual Conference. A like result was realized at Oak Grove.

In connection with Bro Gale, a special service was held with the Colored M E Church at Meadville. At the close many presented themselves as seekers of entire sanctification and pardon. Their pastor, Rev. H. Roundtree, had been clearly sanctified through hearing the Word at Oak Grove meeting. He pressed the subject on his people in a remarkably clear way. It was a time of heart searching, and some five or six said they would from henceforth be all the Lord's. The next morning a colored sister called at the parsonage and said much in praise of the meeting. She expressed surprise that some of "de white folks could not understand what sanctification is, when it is just clean hands, pure heart, and doing right." How true it still remains: "These things are hid from the wise and prudent, and is revealed unto babes." "Having, therefore, these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." (II. Cor. vii, 1) "Clean hands and a pure heart" are indispensable to those who would "ascend into the hill of the Lord or stand in his holy place." (Ps. xxiv, 3, 4)

Here we are held by quarantine regulations from other engagements. Loved ones in New Orleans still safe from the prevailing infection. Praise God for this. Am booked for East End, Meridian, next Sunday, but am advised that I can not go by rail, and the distance is too great to reach there in time by private conveyance. Isaiah xxx, 15, may now be appropriate: "In returning and rest shall ye be saved; in quietness and in confidence shall be your strength."

God bless Bro. Gale and his people for many kindnesses. If the whole church would humble themselves before God in prayer, the scourge would be stayed and a great revival would sweep through city and country

Notice.

There is no sense in trying to dodge any sort of trouble around a tree. The only way is to come squarely out and face the difficulty and fight it. If you are sick or half sick, the best course is not to neglect or ignore it, or pretend that it doesn't exist, but to find the proper remedy and use it.

A bilious, dyspeptic condition of the system not only makes life miserable, but it is sure to lead to something worse, unless promptly taken in hand and corrected. It is foolish to attempt to dodge such troubles by any mere temporary expedient. The only sensible way is to get rid of them for good and all by a thoroughly rational, scientific medicine like Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

It cures all disordered, debilitated conditions by its direct action upon the liver and digestive organs; it gives them power to make fresh, healthy blood free from bilious impurities; it drives all disease-germs out of the circulation; it creates solid, muscular flesh and constitutional power.

Lung and throat affections, which are often simply the result of impaired nutrition, are reached and cured by this wonderful "Discovery" in cases where cod liver oil emulsions are useless, because the "Discovery" is readily assimilated by delicate stomachs. It is far superior to malt extracts, because its beneficial effects are permanent.

"Dr. Pierce, I am one of your most grateful patients," writes Mrs. Annie M. Norman, of Equinunk, Wayne Co., Pa. "I have taken 'Golden Medical Discovery,' also 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Pellets' with wonderful results. I am, as many of my friends tell me, like the dead brought to life. The doctors said I had consumption and death was only a matter of time. That was six years ago. I concluded to try your medicine. I continued until I had taken nine bottles of 'Discovery' and several bottles of 'Pellets.' I got well and have done a great deal of hard work since."

When the liver and bowels don't work, the body and brain won't. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are a sure, safe, speedy and permanent cure for constipation, and a torpid liver. One "Pellet" is a gentle laxative and two a mild cathartic.

Every proper name in the text is syllabified and accented, and has the vowels marked according to the most authoritative modern standards of pronunciation. The text is in exact conformity with that of the world-famous Oxford S. S Teacher's Bible. All the valuable "Helps to the Study of the Bible" contained in the Oxford Bible are retained.

The only Teacher's Bible with a self-pronouncing text. No similar Bible was ever obtainable heretofore; in fact, no publishers ever attempted its publication.

"The essence of fifty expensive volumes, by men of sacred learning, is condensed in these 'Helps.'"

The large-type (Bourgeois) edition sells to persons who are not subscriber for $3.75. Our subscribers get it, on conditions specified below, for $2.35. The same Bible in Minion type, which is somewhat smaller than Bourgeois, we offer to our subscribers, on conditions named below, for $1.55. To those who are not subscribers we sell it at $2.75. We also handle an edition in still smaller type (Emerald). Our subscribers get this for $1.00.

In order to get anyone of these at these rates it is necessary to pay your subscription one year in advance, viz., to October, '98. (A little later it will be November, '98.)

For twenty cents we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside of the book.

Life means—learning to abhor
The false, and love the true.
—Robert Browning.

Every Christian life should be a perpetual song of praise to God.

Every fact that is learned becomes a key to other facts.—E. L. Youmans.

The greater your real strength and power, the quieter it will be exercised.—J. R. Lowell.

Knowledge in itself may be worth very little; but knowledge guided by wisdom is a priceless treasure.

The very best cure for melancholy or despondency is diligent work to make some one else happy.

It is not always cowardly to run. It is the best thing to do when the devil assails you with an overpowering temptation.

It is not the people who are helping the world who are pessimistic over the condition of things; it is the idle on-lookers.—M. J. Savage.

The Bible is an exhaustless treasury of infinite riches, but these riches are accessible only to those who have the key of faith.

Words are good, but there is something better. The best can not be explained by words. The spirit on which we act is the chief matter.—Goethe.

All the possible charities of life ought to be cultivated, and when we can neither be brethren nor friends, let us be kind neighbors and pleasant acquaintances.—Edmund Burke.

No man or woman of the humblest sort can really be strong, pure and good, without the world being better for it; without somebody being helped and comforted by the very existence of this goodness.—Phillips Brooks.

The conscience requires to be enlightened. God's law is written upon it; but the lettering is like that of an old inscription, where the words are filled up with moss and mould, so that they are apt to be misread and require to be recut.—James Stalker.

A house without books is like a room without windows. No man has a right to bring up his children without surrounding them with books, if he has the means of buying them. A library is not a luxury, but one of the necessaries of life. A book is better for weariness than sleep; better for cheerfulness than wine; it is often a better physician than the doctor, a better preacher than the minister, a better sanctuary than a drowsy church.—H. W. Beecher.

Fail Not in Thine Offerings.

People of all classes, church members included, are nearly always ready to find an excuse for not contributing to the Lord's cause. Every other claim is given the right of way before the just demands of the gospel upon our hearts and purses. In times of depression the minister and the missionary are the first and the surest to suffer a shortage in their salaries, which at best are barely sufficient, and are the last to profit by a return to prosperity. The instant people feel the pressure of misfortune or decry the coming of hard times, they begin to practice a niggardly economy in their contributions to the church, or, perhaps, leave them off altogether.

One of the most regrettable things connected with the present distress produced by the yellow fever panic and the rigid quarantines is that the contributions to the church for all its sacred purposes are almost sure to be largely diminished That this is a time of more than ordinary hardship and distress for the people in many sections is clear to everyone. We fear, however, that the falling off in church receipts will be out of all proportion to the evils and losses suffered. There is danger that the people in districts little affected by the evils now being endured will contract the contagion of non-giving, and delude themselves into believing that they can not respond to the claims of religion as at other times. Those who have met with troubles and losses are apt also to magnify their misfortunes, making themselves out greater sufferers than they really are. In fact, there are a great many communities where the so-called losses amount to nothing more than a temporary suspension of business. There will be the same volume of business in the end.

In view of all these things, there is unusual need of liberality and self-denial on the part of Christians everywhere. Money ought not to be spent foolishly or extravagantly at any time, but for Christians to spend it thus at this time is grievously wrong. In many sections fine crops have been raised, and these localities will be prosperous as soon as the abolition of quarantine regulations gives the wheels of commerce a chance to move. Where such is the case, people ought to be profoundly thankful and profusely liberal in their offerings to the Lord. Though a good many will, perhaps, necessarily fall short in their contributions, let not any whom misfortune has overtaken fail to give something to the Lord's cause. Few are so destitute as not to be able to make an offering of some kind. It is a mistake to suppose that because a man is in a tight place, financially, he ought not to give anything to the support and furtherance of the gospel. No man owns all that he makes. No matter how rich or how poor, a part of his income belongs to God, and it is robbing God to use it for any other purpose. We must be just in our dealings with God as well as with our fellow-men. Can we believe that the claims of God, our Creator, Preserver and Benefactor, upon our time, our affections and our possessions are inferior to the claims of our fellow-creatures? Is it possible that our obligation to honor God with our substance is less important than our obligation to render to our fellow-men what is due them? Can we expect God to tide us through financial straits when we let his ministers suffer, and heed not the cry of the widow and the orphan?

All over the country there is urgent need for Christians to consider and practice the duty of systematic benevolence, of giving their best to the Lord, despite reverses and disappointments. The offerings required of the Jews under the Mosaic law were of the first-fruits; of sheep and oxen without blemish, even the poorest of the people being expected to bring the best that he had. Nor have we the slightest reason for believing that the Lord requires any the less of us. If Christians, as nations and as individuals, were more faithful in giving of their substance to the Lord, they would be more prosperous, and would be saved from many dire calamities. It is written: "Honor the Lord with thy substance and with the first-fruits of all thine increase; so shall thy barns be filled with plenty and thy presses shall burst out with new wine."

While so many professed Christians hardly know the meaning of self-denial, and give not their best, but a mere remnant to the Lord, no wonder they receive not his blessing. How pitiably small is the number who act as if they believe that "it is more blessed to give than to receive!" The man who habitually robs God in the matter of tithes and offerings will in the end find that he has gained nothing by it. Are we stronger than God? Are we foolish enough to suppose that if we defraud the Maker of heaven and earth, we shall go unpunished; that we shall be permitted to enjoy in peace that which we withhold from him?

Even in stringent times people have money for things they like, such as wines, tobacco, theatres, circuses, confectionery, chewing gum, etc.; but when it comes to helping the church, one would judge from their talk that they are in grave danger of becoming objects of charity. O, Economy, how much stinginess is practiced in thy name!

One of the best tests of the loyalty and love of a disciple is his readiness to give to the cause of Christ at all times. The more sorely we are pressed, the more our offerings represent, the more highly does our Lord esteem it, and the greater is the blessing upon our own souls. Well has it been said: "Only he gives who smarts, who feels, who gives out of his poverty, and beyond his poverty." "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that ye, through his poverty, might be rich."

It is a blessed truth that what we give to the Lord is ours forever. It is treasure laid up above that can never be lost, or stolen. How often do Christians who are bent on accumulating property, and who desire to enjoy it as long as possible before doing good with it, see it swept away by fire, flood, or fraud, and lament their folly when it is too late!

If the church and the ministry had to depend upon the contributions of the well-to-do alone, the wheels of Zion would soon come to a standstill. The bulk of the money raised for religious purposes is made up of small offerings. The mites of the poor, the children and the widows, though insignificant by themselves, in the aggregate make a sum of large proportions. Let us, then, not despise the day of small things.

If every Christian would regularly, say every week or every month, lay aside a certain portion of his income to be used for the Lord, he would find it easy to give, and would always have wherewith to contribute.

Let each pastoral charge see to it that there be no shortage in the pastor's salary, or in the other assessments, by reason of negligence, timidity, or stinginess. The cry of "hard times," alas! furnishes not a few ungenerous souls a pretext for not doing their best. Let preachers and stewards made a determined effort to bring up the collections in full. Every claim is worthy, and should be faithfully presented.

A Brutal Exhibition.

Just as we were getting ready to write an article concerning the prize fight given in this city last week, the Daily States came to hand with the following editorial, which expresses our views so thoroughly that we adopt it as our own:

"Tuesday night New Orleans was the scene of another one of those brutal exhibitions termed prize fights, and one of the fighters finally received a blow from which he died before daylight Wednesday morning.

"In an enlightened and Christian age it is a disgrace to our laws that such exhibitions are permitted. They have not a single redeeming feature. Their whole influence is brutal and degrading. We are told indeed by the champions of Fistiana that these contests encourage the 'noble art of self-defense.' They do nothing of the sort. They simply encourage the ignoble art of ruffianism. What protection would a nation or State possess were its citizens a race of prize fighters? Its schools would be soon closed up; its libraries and galleries of art would become musty and worm-eaten; its chivalry turned into the prowess of the tough and its legislation into a code of Queensbury rules. Everything that is noble and beautiful and true and good would sink into decay and contempt in such a nation of bruisers.

"It is a fact recorded by historians that the prize fighters and trained athletes were the poorest and least heroic of the soldiers of Greece and Rome. They had not the courage to face death, and, though highly trained in muscular developments, they were speedily enfeebled by the exposures and privations of the camp and the field.

"There is positively not a thing about a prize fight that should excite the emulation of a boy, or that a good father and Christian mother can commend to their children as examples of courage and virtue.

"These fighters are generally the emanations of the slums, yet grow themselves disgusted with their brutal and vulgar trade. And after every prize fight we have protestations from the brutes that they will never enter the ring again.

"Of course, somebody ought to be prosecuted criminally for the killing of Jack Cummings, but that body should not be the young bruiser who delivered the fatal blow. These creatures are the creations of the community. If there were no respectable demand for these exhibitions, they would not be given. The patrons of the arena are responsible for the murder. But as they all can not be criminally held, the managers of the fight ought to be indicted, tried and punished for murder.

"The parties most responsible for this brutality are the respectable class of patrons, and the more respectable the more responsible.

"It is true, this fight, in the language of the ring, was pulled off for a charitable purpose. But the sweetness and beauty, the loving tenderness of the cause in which it purports to have been given only serves to emphasize the ferocity and brutality of the occasion. When the devil becomes the champion of the Lord, prize fighters may become the almoners of the poor, the destitute and the suffering."

Yellow Fever.

The yellow fever has recently made its appearance at a number of new places—Galveston and Houston, Texas; Bay St. Louis and Cayuga, Miss.; Flomaton, Fla.; Montgomery and Wagar, Ala.; Franklin, Patterson and Baton Rouge, La. The number of cases at these new points of infection is, of course, small, as there has not been a sufficient lapse of time for the disease to spread. Into these places the insidious foe has crept in spite of the most rigid quarantine regulations ever known on the American continent. The how of its introduction into most of these places is a problem which baffles the skill of the medical fraternity as well as the rest of mankind. The first victims in many of these places had not been to any infected point, and had had no contact with infected persons.

	Cases.	Deaths.
Biloxi	411	15
Scranton	103	8
Edwards	463	30
New Orleans	865	100

Contrary to our prediction in last week's issue, there has been a decrease in the number of new cases in this city, although there has been a slight increase in the death rate. The number of new cases between Oct. 5 and Oct. 12 was 275. The number from Oct. 12 to Oct. 19 is only 249—a decrease of 26. In view of the unfavorable weather and the modification of house-quarantine regulations, this is a remarkable showing. Of the 865 cases in this city, 443 are entirely well, leaving only 322 now under treatment.

Want in This City.

Several of the labor organizations of this city have made an appeal to the United States government, through the proper channels, for pecuniary aid for the suffering poor of this city. This call is timely. Persons at a distance can have but a faint conception of the destitution that has been created in this city by the quarantine regulations now in force throughout the Southwest. Business is completely paralyzed. Wholesale merchants, manufacturing establishments and business firms of almost all sorts, as they are doing nothing, have been obliged to discharge a large percentage of their employees. In this way many thousands of worthy people who are both able and willing to work for their daily bread see starvation staring them in the face unless relief comes from some source very soon. If help comes from Washington, it will not come immediately. We, therefore, urge those who are charitably inclined to send their contributions at once to the Organized Charities, Room 701, Liverpool, London and Globe Building, corner Carondelet and Common. The officers of this organization are: W. W. Carre, president; Clarence F. Lowe, vice-president; Herman Meader, treasurer.

Better Service. How Obtained.

The church needs educated preachers. It has some. The churches which pay best get them. Four years in school at $200 a year is moderate education and wondrous cheap. But do we require young men to make this preparation for their work to serve the church for $300 a year? They can get $800 in the store. They can turn to professions that will even give them a good home and money in the bank. A coal digger makes $600 a year on an average, and the coal miners are on a strike, and the poor people everywhere are in sympathy with them. You want an educated man to serve you for half that is paid the coal digger. Only pay your preacher as much as is paid a coal digger and this great need of better service on your charge, brother, will be secured.—Arkansas Methodist.

NOTES.

Rev. L. A. Reed has recovered and resumed the duties of his pastorate.

Rev. D. I. Purser, pastor of Valence Street Baptist Church in this city, is down with the prevailing fever.

By a letter from Rev. T. W. Lewis, we learn that the time of holding the North Mississippi Conference has been postponed to Dec. 8.

Rev. J. F. Foster had a more severe attack than was at first anticipated. We are glad, however, to be able to state that he is now convalescent.

As a great preacher came out of the church on a drizzly day his wife said, "Burn that sermon." Some time after, on a beautiful Spring morning, he used it again, and she said, "Mark that sermon as one of your best."

Rev. J. H. Shumaker, the popular pastor of Iuka station, has recently reopened and is now occupying one of the most beautiful church buildings in North Mississippi. He has a consecrated membership who deserve great credit in pushing this enterprise to success.

The man who is everlastingly finding fault with his church, local or general, is no friend of the church, however loud may be his professions of love and loyalty. He who ceases to be a helper and becomes a fault finder not only hinders to the extent of his own influence, but he turns others into hindering mote magnifiers.—Selected.

Notwithstanding the killing of Cummings at the prize fight on Tuesday night, the twelfth, the Tulane Athletic Club had arranged to give another of these brutal exhibitions on Monday night, the eighteenth. The fight did not come off on account of the sickness of one of the pugilists. It is said that the attorney general of the State will take legal steps to prevent another contest of this sort. All good citizens will hail the day when prize fighting in Louisiana is ended forever.

One thing which Justice Brewer said is worthy the attention of ministers. He told them to aim at directness. They should be direct both in the form and in the matter of their preaching. Sermons should not be read, but spoken. "If you want to write, reach the people through the paper. Imitate the lawyer here; be an advocate." Theology is to be preached, but chiefly "those doctrines that control actions," not mediæval speculations or metaphysical abstractions. The average man is growing more and more impatient of the whims and tricks and subtleties of the minister who ignores the facts of human nature. What is demanded is that the minister shall tell what he knows, in the briefest and plainest way he can, and then stop.—Standard.

Bishop Galloway arrived in New York on the fourteenth. When he will arrive at the deserted village on the Pearl, where his home is, we are not prepared to say.

What society needs just now is to be pianed down a little with some old-fashioned preaching on the general judgment. We would not find so much fun in playing judge over our neighbors if somebody would remind us now and then of the time when we will have to lay aside our mock robes, and come down from the bench, to be judged along with those we have been judging without authority.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

On the twenty-seventh of October, at 4 o'clock P. M., in Carondelet Street Church, Rev. Robert H. Wynn, of the Louisiana Conference, will be married to Miss Alma M. Sawtelle, of this city, Rev. J. L. Pierce officiating. The numerous friends of the bride and groom are cordially invited to attend. No cards will be issued. We extend our heartiest congratulations in advance. May health, happiness and ever-abounding usefulness be their portion through life!

Warning the preachers against sensationalism, and pleading for expository preaching, Dr. McLaren, of Manchester, England, deemed by many good judges the greatest preacher of Christianity, recently said: "You may placard the walls upon a Saturday with outrageous titles drawn from the police court reports of last week, or take to other expedients, and you will get a congregation for a while. So you would if you were going to preach a sermon standing on your head. As Dr. Johnson said, long ago, 'Nothing odd lasts.' You stick to expounding the Word of God, and you will find in it a perennial source of freshness."—Zion's Herald.

Serious reflection starts the question, Will I be missed when I am gone? Will the home miss me? Will society? Will the church of God? Am I a necessity in the lot where God has placed me, and am I discharging my duties in my proper sphere so well that there will be a real vacancy when death calls me hence? Am I a living tree, shooting out branches for comfort and refreshment to those about me, or bearing fruit for human well-being and God's glory; or am I a worthless, sapless vine, which, when plucked up, will be soon forgotten and treated as of no account? Live to some noble purpose, and be an influential force that can not be spared from the world without a felt loss.—Presbyterian.

We sometimes wonder whether the world begins to realize the debt of gratitude it owes to the faithful band of men and women who compose the great army of Sunday-school workers. Out of genuine love for Christ and those whom he died to save, they go forth, oftentimes amid discouragements and always without the hope or expectation of worldly compensation, to sow the seed of the kingdom of God. Largely as a result of their earnest toil, thousands of individual lives are saved from wreckage and final ruin, while whole families and communities and states and countries are saved from those excesses and vices which drown men in destruction. We say all honor to them, and would grasp the hand of each, and bid him go forth to yet larger conquests in the name of our common Lord.—Intermediate Quarterly.

He who rightly divides the Word of God must of necessity often utter plain warnings to the wicked—terrible warnings. The Bible abounds with such. But beneath them all there is a vein of tenderness and pity. Jesus denounced Jerusalem in scathing words for its sins, but wept at the thought of the punishment which was to overtake it. If his heart had not been pained by the truth he uttered, his lips would not have been fit to speak it. We who preach have no business to hurl God's awful warnings and denunciations against sinners unless we can feel a tender pity for the impenitent. A preacher who can preach a sermon on the love of Christ without manifesting tender emotion is out of harmony with his theme, but not more so than one who can preach on the everlasting punishment.—J. R. Miller.

MUL-EN-OL is the most modern remedy for pain, and is free from all objectionable features of the old-time remedies. MUL-EN-OL tastes good, smells good, and does good. It soothes and cools, instead of irritating. It instantly quiets the pain, and effects a permanent cure.

MUL-EN-OL

"Presiding Elders and Districts."

We have just read "Beloved's" piece in the ADVOCATE, of Sept. 30, in which he rather twits us for our writing last year about "Presiding Elders and Districts." Evidently the said "Beloved" did not relish that discussion, and yet he calls for more. He appears to think we got such a drubbing that we fear to tackle the question again. True, oh "Beloved!" But the fear does not arise because Conference came and passed and nothing was done. But when one who has spent years in serving the church ventures to offer some suggestions for the good of the work, and suggestions, too, that find favor among many preachers and laymen, it is not pleasant to have one's character assailed and motives impugned as was done last year.

That "the presiding eldership is organic in Southern Methodism; that the great body of our people are slow to make radical change; that they love the church and are loyal to its institutions," we will not deny. But we fail to see how the fact that the preachers in a Beloved's district gave him "a handsome Conference suit" establishes all three of the above propositions.

However, as "Beloved" seems to think the views brought out in that discussion are confined to a few persons in one Conference, please publish the inclosed letter which appeared in the St. Louis Advocate, giving the views of a Missouri presiding elder. By the way, Bro. Cooper's Conference recently elected him a delegate to the General Conference.

TRAY, BLANCHE AND SWEETHEART.

THE PRESIDING ELDERSHIP.

BY R. H. COOPER, P. E.

It is strange, indeed, that the church has been so slow to change the office or work of the presiding elder. From time to time a murmur of discontent is heard throughout our ranks. The papers teem with articles proposing to eliminate him from our economy altogether, or else to so modify his duties that he will appear in a new role. Many good and wise men have declared him a fifth wheel, or at best, a burden that is very grievous to be borne. Quite often the office is made the subject of jest and the butt of ridicule.

At one of our Annual Conferences a preacher who was being urged to locate, arose and told an anecdote that put the eldership in a most ridiculous light. The Conference cheered him with continued applause and uproaring laughter, and when the Bishop pronounced the benediction, took the old brother out and bought him the best overcoat in town. He was the hero of the occasion.

Last year, in my district, was an old negro man who has been a time-honored member of our church. One Sabbath evening, while the congregation was gathering, this old brother was approached by the janitor of the church, who was also a son of Ham, but a member of the African Methodist, with the statement: "We'll have to go to Conference next week to get our preacher changed, for he's broken up our church entirely."

"That's too bad," responded our brother, in a sympathetic tone.

"Yes," said the janitor, "and if you'll hear me, he broke up five or six churches, root and branch, befo' comin' to this town."

"I'll declah," said our brother in black, "befo' de Lord, I think it's time they was makin' a presiding elder out of him."

But in all seriousness, what adjustment ought to be made of this office? The murmur and discontent arise at two points: (1) The service performed, and (2) the remuneration demanded for it. Many persons are slow to understand why the presiding elder should come to them sixteen times in succession, at short intervals, and conduct all the services, while the pastor sits by in idleness. Sometimes the pastor is bright, sparkling, up-to-date, and in great favor with the public; and sometimes it has been intimated that the elder is dull, tedious, with a wonderful fondness for antiquated subjects that the people manifest about as much interest in as in a last year's bird nest.

These services are not thronged by the multitudes, neither are they numbered as times of refreshing. Empty pews and absent chairs mortify the pastor and the true and faithful who are always there. They will be there when the last roll is called. They sing on these occasions an old hymn that is very appropriate—

"How tedious and tasteless these hours,
That have all lost their sweetness to me."

Then this man of long sermons and small audiences preaches on a cash basis. He has in his very appearance the look of a pious dun. He speaks of money, in private and in public, with the ease of a revenue collector. The exchequer of the church is completely depleted to meet his claim, and he departs to soon return again.

There are two things that, if done, would adjust this office to the changed condition of the church and the country, and would restore it to its former dignity and usefulness.

First. Let the size of the districts be greatly enlarged. Instead of a dozen charges, let it embrace fifty. Why not? This would not cover half the territory of one of the original districts. Then think of the improved facilities of travel and communication. I can go to the telephone and call up every pastor and Official Board and have a conversation with them in a few minutes. The elder could travel throughout these charges and direct and superintend them, and represent them just as intelligently to the Bishop and his council as with the present plan. This would save, in the Missouri Conference, five men to the pastorate and as many thousand dollars to be turned into other channels of church work.

Second. Then let it be understood that none but men of first-class ability can be appointed to this place. A district of fifty pastoral charges would challenge the brains and eloquence of an intellectual giant. He ought to be a general that could marshal armies and inaugurate campaigns. Revival enthusiasm, missionary zeal, educational interests and all the great departments of church work would tax his energies to their utmost.

This work is being done to day by just such men and with marvelous success. I am personally acquainted with one who turned over two districts at the end of the time limit, with all the financial claims paid in full and the entire membership paying $1 per capita for missions.

We are praying that our next General Conference may have grace and wisdom to adjust this part of our machinery to the changed condition of things.

In the meantime, let no uncircumcised Philistine imagine that the elders are sinners above all others in Jerusalem. We have not a monopoly of poor preaching, neither are we responsible for all the complaints that go up to heaven.

Opportunities.

I was one of a disappointed party of twenty-five leaguers who were returning home on last Tuesday night, after having stood in front of a closed and darkened church till we were weary and heart sick, whence we had been called and had gone to meet in the Master's name, to talk about the Master's work, and to plan for more and better work for the Master. In that disappointed group was some of the best spiritual material to be found among our consecrated young people. They had gone there with hearts filled with Christ's constraining love. Some of them—most of them—were bread-winners, and I so well knew just what they suffered from tired and aching limbs. But they had come home from the day's toil, hurried through the evening meal, and made hasty preparation to go. It was quite an event to this little band, this going to a sister church to meet and consult with other workers, and it was a real pleasure to lead this willing little flock; but how sad to see their disappointed faces, their looks of inquiry; how difficult to explain; how hard for them to understand?

On our way home the thought came to me that never was it so important, never so essential, that our Leagues meet as at the present time; never can there be more golden opportunity for our young people to work as now; to be "all for Christ." There is a gloom over the city; there are so many aching hearts, so many hungry ones; so much need and distress. The very reason that our city is filled with sickness, with privation seems to be the more reason for open places of worship; more preaching, more praying, more working, more interest in League work. Must we remain in our homes, in comfort, while the Master's work lies neglected all around us?—while we so plainly hear him calling, "Who will go and work to-day?" He is calling loud and long. Never were the fields so white—a great harvest just now. There is a manifest "turning to the Lord" just now; no better time for a revival in all our churches than this. Blessed Savior, lay the burden of these souls on our hearts. Oh, may the story of Calvary be understood as never before! How the precious time is rushing by! God bless our dear young people in their part of this work. Let us do more than ever. Visit the homes of the poor and needy. Solicit help from those able to help; go in the footsteps of Jesus, who died for you—for these; go with a small package of groceries in one hand and your Bible in the other; brighten these lonely homes; "be all things to these." Read the blessed Word, so full of promise of salvation; kneel and pray with them—they are starving for love and sympathy as well as for bread. You will find no work so compensating as this in the joy and peace in your heart; and when at last we reach the land "where tired feet, with sandals loosed, may rest," with the "multitude which no man could number," our "robes washed in the blood of the Lamb"—if, as we look around, we shall see some of those we have led there, what a joy will be ours, and then to hear: "Ye did it unto me."

Look out for cheap substitutes! Beware of new remedies. Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup has stood the test for nearly fifty years.

The people in all lines of duty who do the most work are the calmest, most unhurried people in the community. Duties never wildly chase each other in their lives. One task never turns another out, nor ever compels hurried, and, therefore, imperfect, doing. The calm spirit works methodically, doing one thing at a time and doing it well, and it, therefore, works swiftly, though never appearing to be in haste.—Rev. Dr. J. R. Miller.

TOPIC FOR OCTOBER.

ST. PAUL'S DOCTRINE OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

OCT. 24.—THE HOLY SPIRIT THE SANCTIFIER. (Rom. viii, 4-14; Gal. v, 22-26; Eph. v, 2.)

1. The word "sanctify" in the Bible is used very frequently with the meaning "to set apart." Christ "sanctified himself"—that is, set himself apart to the work of human redemption. The Holy Spirit is not the sanctifier in this sense of the word, for we set ourselves apart to God's service.

2. Mr. Wesley says that regeneration is sanctification begun. "Regeneration is not only a cleansing from sin, but is the introduction of a new life—the divine life—into the human heart. Sanctification is not only a purification from sin, but includes the coincident development of this divine life. As regeneration is the work of the Holy Spirit, so is sanctification. But as the work of the Holy Spirit in regeneration is dependent upon conditions which we supply, so is it in sanctification. The conditions requisite to sanctification are involved in the term "consecration." God will attend to the sanctification, we must attend to the consecration. Every man may be as good as he wants to be. His consecration is the measure of this desire and at the same time the measure of his sanctification. Entire consecration is the condition upon which God will entirely sanctify. Let us not worry about God's work, but present our bodies a living sacrifice unto him.

DOTS.

Louisiana Avenue League took a collection last Sunday evening at their devotional meeting for the Charity and Help Department, and realized $2.50. A good example to follow.

The appearance of a yellow fever germ in Patterson, La., was the cause of a remarkable burst of enthusiasm on the part of the League.

The "American Federation of Labor" has taken the right ground on the Sabbath question, though it does not do it from religious considerations. It is thinking of "Labor" all the time. It says rightly that "there is no necessity for Sunday work." The labor people demand, not as a privilege, but as a right, that they should have the Sabbath for their own use. It was made for man.—Presbyterian.

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL.

"Inside of a Hundred Homes," the first of a succession of articles picturing interiors of the most artistically-furnished houses in America, is one of the notable features of the October Ladies' Home Journal. Another of special interest introduces "The New Tenants of the White House" through photographs of the McKinley household. Lilian Bell's chat—bright and witty, it is needless to state—of her preparations and departure for Europe is also an interesting feature. Edward W. Bok points out to young men where the best chances of success awaits them, and counsels young women who object to the word "obey" in the marriage ceremony.

AMERICAN REVIEW OF REVIEWS.

The American Monthly Review of Reviews, for October, has several articles of unusual interest to women readers. Miss Frances Willard tells the story of the World's W. C. T. U. movement; Mrs. Elien M. To Whom It May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mul-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of sores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. BLACK,

AT THE DOOR.

BY EUGENE FIELD.

I thought myself indeed secure.
So fast the door, so firm the lock;
But, lo! he toddling comes to lure
My parent ear with timorous knock.

My heart were stone could it withstand
The sweetness of my baby's plea—
That timorous, baby knocking, and
"Please let me in—it's only me."

I threw aside the unfinished book.
Regardless of its tempting charms,
And, opening wide the door, I took
My laughing darling in my arms.

Who knows but in eternity,
I, like a truant child, shall wait
The glories of a life to be.
Beyond the heavenly Father's gate?

And will that heavenly Father heed
The truant's supplicating cry,
As at the outer door I plead,
"'Tis I, O Father! only I?"

A Young Man's Success.

"The appearance is that only a comparatively small number of people ever quite realize what an easy thing success would be if only they made effective the means to which they have already in hand," writes Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D. D., in an article on "The Young Man on the Fence," in the Ladies' Home Journal. "Differences among people in respect to efficiency are far less an affair of resources than they are a matter of getting those resources trained upon a particular point, and of getting that point so close to the eye and the heart that it shall be able to draw those energies along convergent lines, like a sun-glass that will convert ordinary temperature into heat by contracting solar lines to a focus. It is worth a whole fortune to get well stirred up, to get all the energies of one's being drawn out in warm intensity upon a single object. A good deal of the success of even a man like St. Paul is due to that posture of mind and of life which he expressed when he said, 'This one thing I do.' He was wholly drawn in under the power of a single purpose. He was aglow with that purpose. Everything within him was combustible material, which he laid upon the crackling bonfire of that purpose. Success was, therefore, easy to him."

He believes that "when all has been said that admits of being said in regard to a young man's equipment for life, and in regard to what he ought to do and what he ought to eschew, it still remains a fact that his acquisitions and his achievements will depend principally on his way of looking at life, and on the spirit with which he takes hold of life. He can deal with it at arm's length, or he can grip it at short range. He can treat the world as an article of virtu to be elegantly inspected, or he can handle it as a practical commodity to thrust his hands into. He can approach it with an eye of half-supercilious interrogation, or he can come down upon it with a plump bound that means respect, confidence, and the will to have frank commerce with it. There is enough in almost any young fellow to get a great deal into life if he has the disposition to construe things with a degree of seriousness, and by seriousness I do not mean sorriness, but practical earnestness—the spirit, namely, that will prevent his looking upon the world as being little better than an ill-timed joke, awkward enough to make the whole thing uncomfortable, and ludicrous enough to excuse any sophisticated person from concerning himself much with it."—Selected.

Make Yourself Agreeable.

It is the "first duty of man" and woman at a dinner table to make themselves agreeable. This includes not only the effort to be entertaining, but to be an appreciative listener, as well, to what others may have to contribute. It excludes the introduction of all subjects that are likely to excite heated argument, or that may be in the slightest degree obnoxious to any person present. Conscience, as well as "good form," forbids adverse criticism of the absent, or gossip in any of its unworthy forms. It is nothing less than rude to try to monopolize the conversation, and seek to concentrate general attention upon one's self.

Each guest should try to contribute to the cheerful atmosphere of the scene, bringing whatever news of a pleasant nature one has heard for the general benefit. Good stories, bits of information, etc., should be treasured for such occasions, and the briefer these stories are, the better will it be for all concerned. Fault-finding about the weather, teasing and personalities of whatever kind, are not calculated to produce harmony, and should be rigidly excluded from dinner-table conversation. Good digestion will wait on appetite the more surely if these rules be observed.

The A, B, C of table etiquette requires that one shall not attempt to talk while masticating. If addressed unexpectedly, one need be under no embarrassment to dispose of the food in his mouth, if the quantity taken has not been unduly large. If anything has been taken into the mouth which is unpleasant to swallow, it may be disposed of in the napkin without remark, while ostensibly wiping one's mouth. If one desires a second helping of anything, or to have one's cup refilled, it is more courteous to address those at the ends of the table who are serving, than to mention the wish to the person in attendance.—Selected.

How Old are You?

You need not answer the question, madam, for in your case age is not counted by years. It will always be true that "a woman is as old as she looks." Nothing sets the seal of age so deeply upon woman's beauty as gray hair. It is natural, therefore, that every woman is anxious to preserve her hair in all its original abundance and beauty; or, that being denied the crowning gift of beautiful hair, she longs to possess it. Nothing is easier than to attain to this gift or to preserve it, if already possessed. Ayer's Hair Vigor restores gray or faded hair to its original color. It does this by simply aiding nature, by supplying the nutrition necessary to health and growth. There is no better preparation for the hair than

AYER'S HAIR VIGOR.

Rosa Bonheur's Daily Life.

"My life is that of a peasant," writes Rosa Bonheur in a story of her life in the Ladies' Home Journal. "I wake with the day and lie down to sleep almost at nightfall. Early in the morning I stroll in the garden with my dogs or drive my pony cart through the forest of Fontainebleau [in the midst of which is her estate, By]. Toward nine o'clock I take my seat before the easel and work until half-past eleven. Then I breakfast quite simply, and afterward smoke my cigarette, as I run through the daily papers. I resume my work at one o'clock, and at five I go out for a walk. I love to see the sun sink behind the trees of the forest. My dinner is as simple as my breakfast. I finish the day by reading. The books I prefer are those of travel, hunting or historical works. Often I read the Bible.

"Before commencing a picture I study my subject exhaustively, prefacing this work with conscientious studies from nature. I look for the exact sky and the exact ground that will suitably frame the subject, and not until then do I commence work on the canvas. The ever present desire to bring myself nearer to truth, and an incessant research after simplicity are my two guides. I have never grown tired of study. It is to-day, and it has been during my whole life, a happiness to me, for it is with persistent work alone that we can approach the unsolvable problem of ever-changing nature, the problem which more than any other elevates our soul and entertains in us thoughts of justice, of goodness, of charity."

This Is How They Rise.

A young woman recently found employment in a queensware store. She immediately began a course of study, in her leisure moments, upon glassware and china. Then she read some recent works upon the appointments of the table, and in a short time, by applying herself to her business, became the most valuable employee in a large store.

In a millinery establishment the young woman who found time for reading a book or two on colors and their harmonious combination found her own taste greatly improved and her ability to please patrons much greater. She was soon a favorite with the employers and customers.

The young woman who, to earn an honorable living, went into a lady's kitchen, and instead of gossiping every evening, found time to read a few good books and household papers, was soon too valuable a housekeeper to be kept in a subordinate position in the kitchen. She knew how a table should look for a formal dinner; she knew what dishes were in season; she knew how to serve a meal in its proper courses; and, more than that, she knew something about the food value of different dishes.

Of course, this sounds like an old-fashioned Sunday-school book, but the fact remains that there is always "room at the top," and that no unusual amount of intelligence is needed to reach the top. A fair average of good sense and a proper amount of application will accomplish everything.—Womankind.

"Her Touch."

A sailor who met with a serious accident was carried to a London hospital. His poor mother hurried to the building to see her son. She was met with a kind, but firm refusal from the house physician; but, nothing daunted, she pleaded for admission to the poor fellow's bedside. Who could resist a mother's entreaties? The safety of the patient lay in his being kept absolutely quiet; but the physician consented to her admission on condition that she did not speak a word. She stole softly to his bedside, and gazed, as only a mother can, at her unconscious boy. She dare not speak, but a mother's love was not to be denied all expression, and gently laying her hand on his fevered brow, she let it rest there a moment, and then noiselessly crept from the room. The watchful nurse heard the comatose sleeper murmur the words, "Her touch!" and rousing himself, he added: "Surely my mother has been here; I knew her touch!" Ah, there was an electric thrill of sympathy in that touch, which told its own tale to the dying man.—Rev. A. Finlayson, in the Advocate.

For Over Fifty Years

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for Diarrhœa. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

Dean Stanley used to relate that a gentleman once called to tell him that he had been into the abbey and knelt down to pray, when the verger had come up to him and told him he must not kneel there. On asking why not the verger had said: "Why, sir, if I was once to allow it we should have them praying all over the place." This recalls the gentleman visiting a church and asking the sexton whether people ever used it for private prayer, to which he replied: "I ketch'd two of 'em at it once."—New York Observer.

"Take the lowest seat and work your way up. Let a man be called up always. Do your work wherever you are, and do it faithfully and so contentedly that they will want you still higher. The more you do your work well, the more they will want you still higher and higher. Be drawn up. Do not force yourself up. That leads to chicanery, to pretense, to mistakes, and even temptations and crimes. —Henry Ward Beecher.

When going through a coal mine it is necessary to carry a safety-lamp, in order to throw a light across the path. The light prevents many a stumble over the uneven ground. This world is full of the darkness of sin; snares and temptations lie in the Christian's path; but if he carries with him the lamp of God's Word, it will show him where the danger lies, and so keep him from falling. —E. A. Smith.

Hygiene.

Mental Health.

The person with ideal mental health will be able to throw off his cares at the end of the day, dismiss them from his mind, until they are taken up again on the following day. They will not obtrude themselves into his hours of recreation or his hours for sleep, or if they do, it will be only temporarily and on rare occasions, when emergencies arise, as may often be the case. His ability to sleep will be great and he will not destroy it unnecessarily. If he is obliged at any time to encroach upon his sleeping hours, he will atone for it by an extra allowance at another time. One of the surest signs of mental health is the ability to sleep after mental or physical strain, be refreshed by it and made over anew.

"Once in bed," writes his daughter, Mrs. Mary Drew, "he never allows his mind to be charged with business of any kind, in consequence of which he sleeps the sound and healthy sleep of a child, from the moment his head is on the pillow until he is called next morning. This absolute power over his thoughts, won by long and strict habits of self-control, must be one of the principal causes of his freshness and youth. As an instance, he went home in the early morning after the defeat of his Home Rule Bill of 1886, and slept, as usual, his eight hours.

It is true as yet we know little of the nature of the state called sleep, nor how it makes us over anew. We call it a temporary interruption of our relation to the external world, a repose of the intellectual functions and of voluntary motion, and so far so good, but this is not all. It is quite possible there is another self in each individual which in sleep, not only repairs the injury done to the body during its daily activities, but, perhaps, in addition to this, has its own activities in an unseen universe.

The person with the ideal mental health of which we are writing, will have a stable nervous system. By stable I mean not easily overthrown or shaken from its firm base. If any reader will study the characters of those about him, he will see a great difference in the stability of their nerves. Some are not easily upset by anything that happens. If the house takes fire, they know just what it is best for them to do. They estimate quickly the condition of things, and are able to act wisely and without delay; the emergencies must be great which find them taken by surprise. The great generals in any important battle whose nervous systems are most stable, are, in the end, other things being equal, most successful. Washington was a good example of a man with a stable nervous system, though it is said he did sometimes become enraged and very angry, when the causes were especially provoking. Gen. Grant was another remarkable example. The use of tobacco, of stimulants and even the fatal disease which ended his life, all combined, were not enough to altogether destroy this stability. Witness his writing during his painful illness and near his death the history of his life and campaigns; read of his coolness and imperturbability in all engagements in the war. Such cases are happily not rare; they may be seen in every walk of life.

On the other hand, examples of unstable nervous systems are also abundant. They are easily upset; they lose their balance on slight provocation, they are excited over trifles and magnify little things. Such persons, in addition to submitting the conduct of their lives to rational mental hygiene, need to discipline themselves by reason and self-control. The improvement of the general health by self-discipline are the only permanent cures. This becomes most easy when there is a sufficient occupation to satisfy all the functions of life and healthy companionship, to help to steady the nerves until they become strong.—The Journal of Hygiene.

Ministerial Remuneration.

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE, of Sept. 30, "L." writes some good things "For Young Preachers;" but it will be a sad day for the church of God when men follow the work of the ministry as a profession. Under "ministerial remuneration" "L." conveys that idea. He says: "The preachers in charge depend upon their own people for a living; but when they go out and help in another charge it is reasonable and right that they should be remunerated for their services."

When a Methodist preacher's living is already provided for in his own charge, is it unreasonable that he should go out and assist his neighbor pastor without remuneration, especially if his neighbor is serving a poor charge with meagre support? "L." makes no exceptions. Would it not be Christ-like, and in the true spirit of the Christian ministry, to give him a lift, expecting nothing but souls for his hire? The time has come when we need a better understanding among ourselves in matters of this kind. Some time ago my presiding elder kindly came to my assistance in the midst of a meeting and labored to the close faithfully and efficiently. After he had gone a brother came to me and expressed great astonishment that I had not taken a special collection for him. I simply replied that the presiding elder was a pastor of the church, and that he would be satisfied if they would pay him what they had already promised. Did I commit a blunder? Were these special services for which he should have received special pay? I would like to get right in these matters. When a neighbor pastor comes to assist me, I tell a few brethren, privately, "You must see that the brother's expenses are paid, at least!" not thinking of his coming as a professional man to be paid for his services. But "L." asks, "Why is it that my people are not willing to give as much to a neighbor pastor who comes and works as they give to an evangelist?" Clear of the professional idea, he certainly would have seen that the answer would be, that the neighbor pastor's support is already provided for in his own charge, while the evangelist depends upon the people who invite him to hold meetings for his living. One objection to the work of the evangelist is that the collections are too much stressed in their work for the good of the cause; and on account of their necessity, some of us can not have the benefit of their services. But if we have to pay the neighbor pastor as much, the sooner we begin as pastors and people to do our own work, the better for the cause of our Master. Let every brother give the helping preacher just as much as he feels inclined—it will be a means of grace to his soul; but pressing collections in all our revivals to pay men for their services who are already provided for by the church will do us no good. Alone with God.

Church statistics reveal the advance of Zion along the lines of added members, finances, conversions, sanctifications, and missionary zeal. At times we honestly congratulate ourselves upon our loyalty and zeal for the cause of King Immanuel. There is an important item, vital to Zion's welfare, that, if kept at all, finds record only in the angel's book: The member who practice and enjoy closet religion. If some zealous pastor would inquire of congregations, in planning your home residences, how many have provided a suitable room, where the inmates of the home could at will retire in order to obey Matt. vi, 6, "How many, without such provision, have improvised some place in which to hold personal communion with God?" no doubt a sad discovery would appear that would justify the appointment of a day of fasting and prayer. Personal communion with God is essential to Christian life and final reward. Much help is derived from worship in the public congregation, the prayer meeting and love-feast; but sturdy Christians are the product of the closet. "Enter into thy closet and shut the door." The soul disappears from all the claims of a material earthly character, and for a space of time rises superior to all bodily demands. It is conscious of a craving desire for help that the Holy Ghost only can supply. There may be great ability in the prayer meeting to gratify the listening ears of auditors with rounded periods, charming word-pictures, and display of Bible lore; but in the closet it is, "Search me, O God, and try my heart, and see if there be any wicked way in me."

Alone with God, the soul dare not claim a love not real. In that holy place, surrounded by transfiguration light, soul-blotches, invisible in sunlight, appear. It is there that the Holy Ghost burdens the saved soul with an agonized desire for the spiritual indument of the Holy Ghost upon the pastor and church membership. There it is where the missionary zeal is fanned to a white heat. There it is where it is possible for God to charge, fill and make ready for conflict the victorious soldiers of the cross.

Happy is the pastor, strong is the church, that has closets of prayer equal to membership. When you plan your new parsonage see to it that it lacks not the special room for the secret communion of God. When you remodel or build the new home, provide for this soul need. Let every camp ground provide a separate building from all others, where God's minister may be alone with God awhile before entering the pulpit.

ROBT. B. DOWNER.
Vossburg, Miss.

It would almost seem as if some women had forgotten to be wives in their zeal to show themselves devoted mothers. In an age when children's rights are so strenuously insisted on, is there not danger that the "little dears" may monopolize the rights of the "big dears"—the husbands and fathers who are toiling in this world of fierce competition and wearing anxiety? Life was never harder for the average business man than now. He never needed more the steadying, soothing influence of a restful home. But in many cases women are too much absorbed with their children to minister as they ought to the head of the household. Hard-working men need and appreciate sympathy, not of the obtrusive, fussy sort, but the quiet, pervasive sort which anticipates small wants, keeps petty worries out of sight, and radiates cheer as a flower exhales its perfume.—Congregationalist.

WESCOTT—WILLIAM FRANKLIN WESCOTT was born Dec. 4, 1851, near Franklinton, Va.; came to Issaquena county, Miss., in 1872; was married to Miss Carrie E. Grace, at Rising Sun, Ind., Aug. 21, 1879; died at Duncansby, Miss., July 8, 1897.

Bro. Wescott had a kind and gentle disposition, a generous nature, with a kind word for all, and was loved and respected by all who knew him. A man of integrity, acting justly in every relation of life, he was called upon often as an arbitrator, a man of fine discrimination and strong convictions, acting well his part in the battles of life. Self-sacrificing, affectionate, tender, a gentleman of first water. He was partially paralyzed in 1890, and never regained robust health. For the last two years he was a great sufferer, but bore his afflictions with much fortitude. He professed faith in Christ, was baptized and received into the church a short while before his death. He repeatedly told his pastor he was only trusting in the Savior for salvation. His death was easy; his end was peace. He leaves a devoted wife and one son to mourn their loss. May they die the death of the righteous, and their end be like his!

W. T. GRIFFIN.

CLITE—JOHN CLITE was born in Caldwell county, Texas, Jan. 1, 1874, and died in Sunflower county, Miss., Sept. 28, 1897.

His father having died, his mother brought him and his only sister to Mississippi, where his mother married one Mr. Coleman. Before the subject of this memoir was ten years old mother and stepfather had both died, and he was left to the care of Mr. G. W. Shivers, who reared him with as much care as if he had been his own son.

Johnnie, as he was usually called, joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1886, under the ministry of Rev. Joseph Harris. For a time he was a devoted Christian, and felt called to the ministry. He entered upon this work, but soon allowed his license to expire, and ceased from active work in the church.

He spent about two terms at Iuka Normal Institute, then came home and was engaged in the timber trade. On Sept. 18, 1897, he was caught under a log falling off a wagon, and horribly bruised. He at once pledged God to do his work if only permitted to recover; but was ready to die if the Lord so willed. After ten days of suffering he closed his life in peace to enter his eternal reward.

JNO. R. COUNTISS.

WILLIAMSON—WILLIAM H. WILLIAMSON was born in Taylor county, Ga., Sept. 4, 1830; was married to Miss Elizabeth A. Heys in January, 1853. They had nine children born to them, all living and grown. Bro. Williamson moved to Mississippi in 1855. He joined the M. E. Church, South, about fifty years ago, and was a devoutly faithful servant of Christ and his church. He said he had been ready to answer to the heavenly roll-call for fifty years. He lived to that end. He was palsied for several years before his death; yet he was faithful to the church and its interest to his last days. He was living with his son Dock when Christ came with a heavenly host to see Uncle Billie, and carry him home with him, Sept. 27, 1897.

Bro. Williamson has been a subscriber for the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE from its first issue. In an experience meeting last August he arose and said, "I can't talk;" but the great tears that chased down his cheeks spoke the truth of his former life, that his soul was safely anchored in the Christ. His body sleeps, yet he lives. May God bless and save his bereft children! We bid him good-by now, but will meet him by and by.

WOMACK—Mrs. ANNIE WOMACK (nee Fletcher) was born June 10, 1836, and died at her home in Livingston parish, Aug. 22, 1897.

She was a consistent member of the M. E. Church, South. She possessed many womanly graces that attracted to her everyone who knew her. Her gentle Christian life made a deep and abiding impression on those who knew her best. Amid all her sickness she demonstrated the saving power of the blood of Jesus. A meek and quiet spirit was hers at all times and under all circumstances. Loving friends did all in their power to restore her, but He who doeth all things well called her to himself in the bloom of her womanhood. She leaves a husband, father and brothers and sisters to mourn her loss. May they follow her as she followed Christ!

J. J. KELLY.

GOODRICH—Whereas, It has pleased God to remove from us one of our beloved members, Miss MATTIE GOODRICH, who was a willing worker, and although living too far from the church-house to attend all the meetings, yet she was often among us, and we are sure that she now rests in the arms of her Savior, our belief being sustained by her consecrated life and earnest desire for higher Christian experiences. We bow to the divine will, feeling our great loss.

Resolved, That we express our sincere regret by giving a copy of these resolutions for publication to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. P. H. FONTAINE, for Com.

CARRUTH—The following resolutions in memory of our deceased brother, Rev. R. M. CARRUTH, JR., were adopted by the fourth Quarterly Conference of Adams charge, Brookhaven district, Mississippi Conference, on Oct. 9, 1897:

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God to remove from among us our beloved brother, Rev. R. M. Carruth, Jr.; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we lament the untimely death of our brother taken away in his youth, and in the beginning of a career which promised great usefulness and blessing both to the church and to the world. We bear witness to the integrity of his character, the purity of his life, and his devotion to the service of God and his fellow-men. We rejoice in the fact that from a boy he has lived among us a Christian and a servant of God, performing with fidelity all the duties that came upon him.

Resolved, While with inexpressible sadness we contemplate his sudden and tragic death, we know which way his life tended: toward the blessed home above: and we will always cherish the memory of our young brother, whose pleasant face and noble form we will not see again in this world. Our deepest sympathies are with the afflicted ones of his own home, and we pray that they may have the consoling grace of our heavenly Father in their great sorrow. S. ENGLE CARRUTH,
Sec. of Conference.

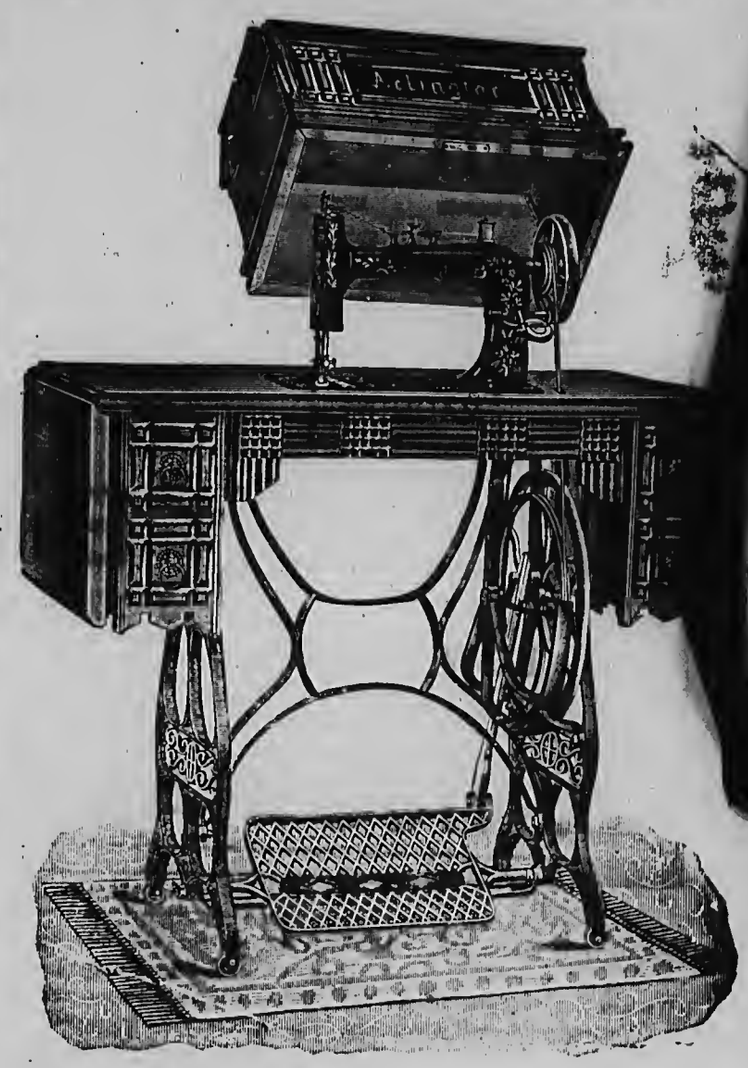
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.



The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take-up, convenient foot rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gunge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearing polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF THREADING—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell, without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

THERE is a right way to paint and a wrong way. The right way is to have the best paint—Pure White Lead (see list of genuine brands) and Linseed Oil—applied by a practical painter. The wrong way is to get some mixture about which you know nothing and apply it yourself or have some inexperienced, irresponsible person do it.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application.

The Drunkard's Will.

Let the youth of Mississippi—aye, let the middle-aged and the aged—read the following, "The Drunkard's Will," which is clipped from a Mississippi paper, credited to exchange:

"Know all men by these presents that I, ——, of the county of ——, State of Mississippi, being of sonnd and deposing memory, in view of the uncertainty of life and the certainty of death, do make this my last will and testament, to-wit: I die a wretched sinner, and I leave to the world a worthless reputation, a wicked example, and a memory that is fit to perish.

"I leave to my parents sorrow and bitterness of soul all the days of their lives.

"I leave to brothers and sisters shame and grief and the reproach of their acquaintances.

"I leave to my widow and broken-hearted wife a life of lonely struggles with want and suffering.

"I leave my children a tainted name, a reviled position, a pitiful ignorance, and a mortifying recollection of a father who, by his life, disgraced humanity, and at his premature death joined the great company of those who are never to enter the kingdom of God. Pray God that those who are yet living may take warning and profit by the above."

Thirty Days in Jail.

We are not "in prison," as one brother wrote in the last ADVOCATE. [illegible] but are the next thing to it, as we can go only two or three miles south of our little town and one mile north, and that is a narrow limit to a Methodist preacher to whom "the world is the field." We are deprived of one privilege which Paul even had while a prisoner, for he did preach, and all religions gatherings are now forbidden in Sharkey county under penalty of $50 fine and 30 days in jail. I am not going to make any complaint at our Board of Supervisors, for if we escape this yellow plague, it will be a wonder, as it is already in three miles of us—namely, at Nitta Yuma. Chances are for it to spread if weather continues warm, as many have been exposed.

Truly, this has been a year of visitations upon the two pastoral charges in Sharkey county, viz.—Rolling Fork and Anguilla. First the overflow, which left little but wreck and ruin in its track. Shortly following the flood, when double duty was necessary, Bro. Penn, Rolling Fork's efficient and godly pastor, sickened and was called from his flock. The writer also lost six weeks in Summer from sickness, making a narrow escape. All that Bro. Weems' article contained—and more, too—is true of the Vicksburg district.

We have had two meetings on Anguilla circuit—namely, at Bethel and Sunflower Chapel, resulting in much good in the way of conversions and reclamations and a few additions to the church. Our meeting at Anguilla has been twice postponed: first by illness of pastor, and then by yellow fever; but we expect to have it as soon as the Great Physician disinfects these parts with frost.

Hoping to send something more encouraging next time, I am,

Fraternally,

E. E. LANGFORD.

Both to Blame.

It is time that some one should point out that if there is a widening chasm between the rich and the poor, the feelings of the poor have quite as much to do with it as the habits of the rich. Most ministers who have the rich and the poor in their congregations will, we think, bear out the statement that Christian men of wealth show quite as much disposition to fellowship and sympathize with the poor, and act the brotherly part toward them, as the poor do to show these qualities toward the rich. The suspicion or aversion is by no means all on one side. In one of our churches a rich member lost his son. He had shown himself a true friend to the less fortunate members of that church, but with a single exception only one working man in that church and he a journeyman carpenter, expressed a word of sympathy for the heart-stricken father. The duties are not all on one side, and one great lesson that the poor need to learn is, not to let the thought of another man's possessions dry up the milk of human kindness.—The Advance.

FORM IN RELIGION.

There is a great outcry in this day and generation against forms in religion. Some are for the doing away with all conventionalities in this behalf, and snbstitnting therefor the absolute freedom of individual license. And these same parties are greatly opposed to all creeds. Whilst we think that each man shonld be snffered to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, yet religion and the church, as pnblic institntions, must be snstained by the public; and for the publio dispensing of the Word forms and ordinances are necessary, else confnsion and disorganization wonld result. And it is equally essential that the chnrch, as a public religions body, should give to tho world a statement of the fundamental articles of its faith; and to talk of a chnrch without a creed is the same thing as a church without a faith. For the practical administration and dispensation of the gospel money, men and means are required, and these thinga can not be obtained without organized co operative effort; and practical experience has demonstrated that this organized, co-operative effort is best accomplished through the instrnmentality of the church; and even with the strong and powerfnl religious organizations now in existence, and with perfect unity of action, their very best efforts and utmost resonrces are taxed in spreading and maintaining the dispensation of the gospel. But thore are a great many persons among us who are "cupide rerum." They are constantly seeking out after something new. They lack that essential element of good character—stability. Any change in religion, in the religion of a people, is a thing of such stupondous import that it shonld only be brought abont after the ablest and wisest men in the church have spent days and months in prayerful consideration of the subject; yet some people are ready and liable to be led off, following the religious phantasmagoria of some neophyte hardly out of his swaddling-clothes; and however chimerical, and without reason, his doctrines may be, yet if, for the public good, you attempt to restrain him, he cries, "Persecution," and numbers flock to his support. In such cases these men are best left severely alone, and being without merit, their doctrines will die, and their anthors pass out of notice. But these innovators say: Is there no improvement possible in religions thought? Mnst we ever remain where we were two thousand years ago? We say: God is eternal; his attribntes are nnchangeable; he is the same to-day, yesterday, and forever. The faith that caused Abraham to be called the friend of God is the same faith this day as it was when that grand old patriarch stood on that lonely mountain in the land of Moriah and there gave to mankind the sublimest proof of human faith this earth has ever witnessed. And here we would remark: How powerfully the great principles of religion become fixed in the mind when exemplified and applied in hnman conduct! Faith in God, as exemplified by Abraham's condnct in offering up his son Isaac—the child of promise—is doubtless worth more than all the abstract dissertations on faith that were ever written. And I have observed that those sermons which find or take their illnstrations from the lives of the great and good men of the Bible are by far the most impressive.

True and undefiled religion is unchangeable. Men may change, but the great doctrines of faith and salvation are the same that they were when the morning stars first sang together, and a new creation reflected back the glory of its Creator. When the clouds gathered around the summit of Monnt Sinai, and the lnrid lightnings flashed athwart its cragged peaks, and the awful voice of the thnnder spoke, a law was given, and that law declared that, "I, the Lord thy God, am a jealons God, visiting the iniquities of the fathers upon the children to the third and fourth generation." The great God is a jealous God. He will not snffer the inventions and doctrines of men to be set up in the room of his holy law; yet, nevertheless, we find men, actnated by ambition, or with a snperficial knowledge of the Bible, starting new isms, or seeking to change those which are already in existence.

Everything that has a tendency to impress more strongly on the mind the truths of revelation are both nsefnl and necessary; and this is where forms and ceremonies find their greatest nsefulness. The great issues of life and death are solemn things, and their contemplation and exercises in reference thereto should be with that degree of reverence which is their due; and this is why nnbecoming language or deportment in the pnlpit is so repulsive to all well-raised people. No well-raised man, to say nothing of piety, ever makes use of indecorons language or deportment in the pnlpit. It is to the interest of the commonwealth that the people shall reverence and respect religion and religious things. Whenever the people get so that they will act in a chnrch as they would in a court-honse or other pnblic place, then the very fonndations of society are being loosed, and bloody revolution is not far ahead. A people who have ever once been Christianized must continne a religious and Christian people, or else be blotted from the face of the earth. Look at France, a Christian people who rejected Christianity, drove ont and imprisoned the ministers of Christ, and set up Reason. What was the result? They had to construct sewers to carry off the blood of the victims gnillotined, and the blood continued to flow until the nation recalled the ministers of Christ, opened the chnrches, and restored the worship of God. Then blood ceased to flow.

Not long since a Southern man was in New York City on the Sabbath, and noticing that nothing was said about attending divine service, he asked the wife of his host—a prominent and leading man of this great city—if they wonld not attend chnrch that day. She replied: "Why, no; the leading society people do not attend church here. That is all old fogyism. Only the laboring classes and common people attend church. We have societies which meet every Sabbath evening, and we enjoy ourselves intellectnally by reading one of Shakespeare's plays or some other good book."

Alas! alas! for such intellectualism. We are drifting away from the faith of our fathers. Everything is changing. We no longer have morning, evening, and night, but in lieu thereof forenoon, afternoon, evening, and just before day. The good old Methodist songs, "How firm a fonndation!" "Show pity, Lord," "Rock of ages," and "The old ship of Zion," have been displaced by words sung to the tune of "The Suwanee river," and other social and non-religious songs. Formerly, on revival occasions, when penitents were called for, they went, knelt at the altar, and the people of God knelt about them, and prayed for and with them. Now they simply hold up the hand, or give the hand, and return to their seats. Formerly the leading male members of the church sat in the men's amen corner on one side of the pnlpit, and the leading, or old, ladies of the church on the other side. They all now sit in the body of the church, and the amen corner is not occupied nnless the church is very much crowded. Our Southern people have always been a religious people, but they are drifting away.

There is a spirit of so-called liberalism in the land; a spirit that makes a man too broad for creeds and dogmas, that he will investigate, decide for himself, and live on a broad, high plane. Now, a man may get so broad that he will have nothing but breadth; he will have no solidity or firmness.

What the people need is to stand in the old ways—"super antiquam viam;" keep to old landmarks, sing the old songs, and "we are traveling home to God in the way our fathers trod." Traveling in the way our fathers trod, we, as a people, have come to be the first among the nations of the earth. The spires and minarets of our national edifice point high in the heaven, and our star-spangled flag kisses with its silken folds the genial breezes of our favored clime; and God grant that we may be still further high advanced until the light of our civilization shall rest as a benediction on the nations of the earth.

LAYMAN OR SEXTUS.

FINE INSTITUTION.

THE WORK OF THE CONVALESCENT HOME.

BY A FRIEND OF THE INSTITUTION.

A pretty good showing at 943 Howard avenue, New Orleans, La.

Well, what about it?

Much, much that is unknown to the community of New Orleans, and likewise to the many thousands living in adjacent towns. The writer presumes that out of the vast popnlation of New Orleans alone there are bnt a comparative few who know or have even heard of the noble work carried on at the above number. Month by month, and year by year, the good work goes on. There is an old and quaint saying, namely, "Speak well of the bridge that carries you safe over." It is nothing but right that we should do this. I know of nothing so utterly mean and contemptible as ingratitude. Hence, moved by a spirit of duty, as well as gratitnde for benefits conferred upon myself at this Home, I will endeavor to perform that which has been upon my heart to do for some time, namely: Give to the public a truthful account of the grand institution located at 943 Howard avenue, New Orleans, La. Not grand from an architectural standpoint, but simply grand as God looks upon grandeur, namely: from the noble works wronght therein. Captain R. Parker is the founder and superintendent of this institution known as the "Convalescent Home." Too much can not be said in praise of this gentleman. A true Christian, hence a true philanthropist; one who is, and has been for many years, spending his life in the interest of poor convalescent men. As I have heard him say: "I live only to perform my Father's will, which will has been clearly made known to me for years. I am to labor in aiding mankind, to smooth their rugged pathway, and to help them in both temporal and spiritnal well being. My efforts have been for the last eighteen years helping my fellowmen."

Captain R. Parker has a large heart and sympathetic natnre. It is very pleasing to the observer and enconraging to the convalescent to see him walk in and out among them with a cheering word: "Well, boys, how are yon feeling to-day?" and, according to their necessities, ever ready to minister, if fever, quinine, or other antidotes, as the case may require.

This inatitntion, or the good it has and is doing, will only be known in reallty in the annals of eternlty. It will be, donbtless, of intereat to the reader to know something as to how this Home is conducted. I will briefly note some of the more particular points which enter into its management. Breakfast at 8 A. M., when a liberal snpply of bread, meat and coffee is served; dinner at 12 o'clock—sonp, bread and meat, with rice and beans, or rice and potatoes; supper at 4 P. M., which consists of bread, bntter, and tea, after which (if no light duties to perform) they are at liberty to walk ont, sit in a comfortable parlor, converse, read, or play checkers nntil 8 P. M., when the gong strikes, and that calls to retire for the night. Any outside after this honr remain ont, and their privileges to the Home, so kindly furnished, are forfeited. They no longer are accorded its protection. The hour to rise is 6 A. M. The dining-room is in charge of Mr. John Cox, who is very proficient in his duties, always willing to minister to the convalescent's comfort. Mr. Charles Fainar has charge of the upper portion of the building, where comfortable beds, with mosqnito bars, are provided. The bed-rooms are scrubbed weekly; disinfectants are nsed, Mr. Fainar being strictly particnlar as to having each inmate keep his apartment in good order. Each inmate is allowed to have washed weekly one suit underwear, and one outer shirt. The bed linen is also washed weekly, thus admirably providing for personal cleanliness. As the reader peruses this article, it may be noticed that no female help is named. There is such help. Woman's help can not be dispensed with in this institution. The cooking is efficiently done by Mrs. A. Conrad; likewise numberless other duties reqnire female help in this Home, while Mrs. Parker, wife of the founder, is ever busy from early morn till ove. Many honrs she spends, and steps she takes, directing the help and prosecuting her own domestic affairs; going about with cheerful, rapid tread, cheerily singing the while, "Come to the Savior, make no delay," etc.; offering, as she passes along, words of connsel and cheer to all around. The Home is supplied with a quantity of literature and a daily paper for the nse of the inmates. Mr. W. Tuttle has charge of this department, as also the office and reception-room. Credit is due Mr. Tuttle for the manner he conducts things in his department, being one of those kind of men who can turn his hand to most things usefnl and ornamental. His hands are willingly full. Friday night of the week is set apart for a song and exhortation service, which is beneficial and much enjoyed. I might state in this connection that for years the founder of this institntion has held a Sunday afternoon service at the Charity Hospital with marked success. This Christian gentleman tells me that thousands have been cared for in this Home, and thus aided to health and strength, to go forth and do battle with the stern realities of life.

Having given my readers a general account of the appointments of this Home, I now reach the hall of the building. At the entrance upon the left hand side may be seen the word (nicely lettered by Mr. Tuttle), "Office." This is a spacions apartment, which answers the threefold purpose of reception-room, parlor, and office, tastefully fitted np as such. As a reception-room, parties having business with the Home enter; as parlor, the speakers, or those condnoting the Friday night service, are seated, a nice organ occupying one corner—the folding doors of the adjoining room being thrown open, serves as an audience-room; as office, the correspondence, orders from benefactors, accounts and general office matter are attended to. A convaloscent, when making application to this Home, enters the office, where he is asked whether he has a certificate from his attending physician. If not, he is at once informed that such is requisite to enter this Home; hence applicants mnst be furnished with a certificate of convalescence, pnrporting, under physician's signature, that applicant is eligible. Thus admitted, name, age, duration of sickness, etc., being ascertained, applicant is informed that he is accepted for five days, must conform to the rnles of the Home, and that he can go out each day in search of employment. Mr. Fainar then shows him the bed he is to occupy. These preliminaries gone throngh, they become inmates for five days. If at the end of such time the convalescent is not sufficiently strong to be discharged, and conduct has been good, he is kindly given other ten days. The varied (as will be seen) duties pertaining to the office are regularly and satisfactorily attended to by an estimable Christian lady, Miss M. L. Walker.

By my reader's permission, I will now refer them back a little to a statement previously made, namely: that thonsands have been fed and cared for in this "Convalescent Home." Doubtless the question will arise in the reader's mind: "How is this all accomplished? It must take an enormous amount of food and general supplies to carry on this praiseworthy institution. For instance: rent, help, food, utensils, fnel, and a hundred and one things which are necessary even in an ordinary home. I'd like to know how it's done."

Your question is fully answered in the following conversation between the founder of this Home and a worthy citizen of New Orleans:

Citizen—"Well, Friend Parker, how are you getting on? How is your health?"

Founder—"Thank yon, my health is moderately well, and other matters are running abont the same as they have for these many years."

Citizen—"Say, Friend Parker, let me know how yon manage to keep this institntion rnnning. You must have considerable means at your disposal."

Founder—"Why, my dear sir, I have no personal means at my disposal with which to carry on this philanthropic institution."

Citizen—"How do you do it, then?"

The worthy fonndor, casting his eyes upwards, remarked: "My Father is rich. He provides for this Home, using me as his steward. I am only the dispenser of his riches."

The gentleman, thinking the founder had reference to an earthly father, went on to say: "Your father? Have you a father? I have not seen him. Does he live on the second floor?"

The founder then informed the gentleman that he did not refer to an earthly father. "This Home is maintained," he added, "by faith in my heavenly Father, who is rich in honses and lands. He holds the wealth of the world in his hands, and has promised to hear and answer the prayer of faith."

The conversation ending, the gentleman withdrew, not a forgetful hearer, bnt a doer, as the seqnel will show. In the course of a few mails the founder received a note from said gentleman, with an enclosnre of check—twenty-five dollars. I believe none are doing nobler work for good to-day than our large-brained bnsiness men and noble-hearted women, who are using their mind and their money to make as many people as possible happier and better.

Reader, will yon not keep in mind, and evince by act, that this Home needs your help? The writer remembers to have read (ere he left his native land) an account of A. H. Miller, of Bristol, England, who was a man of strong faith in God. He, by faith, commenced an orphanage (without personal means) for a few children. As time rolled on, he had not only provided a large orphanage, but also a large academy for students. This vast concern was daily supplied by this rich Father the fonnder of this Home has referred to. But there was a wide difference between these two men of God as touching the means supplied to carry on their philanthropic works. The work of A. H. Miller was taken up by the press and heralded from one side of the British dominions to the other, and the supposition is that papers of other nations would copy, people of other nations read, admire and aid; hence vehicles of different kinds might be seen rolling up to the building with snpplies, and the mails would bring funds from all quarters. Not so, alas! with the hard-working, self-sacrificing Christian philanthropist, Captain Robert Parker; he who has (so to speak) for so many years lost sight of self, subjugating his will to that of his Father's, and heroically carried on this grand work. No congenial, courteous editors to write up this work, to make known the doings of this gentleman, and thus, through their masterly pen and widespread pages, herald abroad the Convalescent Home of New Orleans and its noble work; hence only a few to whom God has given means and sympathizing hearts have tendered aid to the continuance of this Home. The founder is now advanced in years, having reached the threescore and ten allotted to man on earth; hence he is not so able to battle with the great responsibilities of this institution as he was. In this connection I feel constrained to say that I believe, as long as reason maintains its throne, I shall remember both what I saw and heard at one of the Friday night meetings, namely: the tear-bedimmed eye and the feeble voice as in his exhortation he plaintively said, "My dear men, oh, what will become of such as you when I am gone?" I felt like asking the question, "Gone, captain, gone where?" and then answering my own question as I believe it would be correct, namely: "Gone where faith is changed to sight, and glory crowns in heaven what grace commences upon earth." Forever with the Lord! Amen! So let it be.

There are from time to time verified nationalities cared for in this Home. I have at one time counted six Germans, three French, five Irish, beside Swede and American. I am sanguine to believe that when this article is intelligently read and duly considered, there will be quite a rally of English, Irish, German, French, and other peoples, who will come around the founder and help to hold up his hands in this work with their God-given means, of which means they are only stewards, and for such must account.

Lest any question might arise in the mind of my readers as to whether or not any particular creed or doctrinal teaching is imposed upon the minds of the inmates, I emphatically say, No. While all are expected to attend the Friday night meeting, they hear nothing but song and the old, old story of Jesus and his love. Upon Sunday morning, or at any other time (not conflicting with the hours of the Home), each one is at liberty to attend service anywhere he may choose. No questions asked.

I think I have in this article plainly and correctly presented to the public a synopsis of the "Convalescent Home," 943 Howard avenue, New Orleans, La. I close, feeling that I have discharged a duty incumbent upon me. I must leave the matter in the hands of God and the proverbial generous citizens of New Orleans and vicinity. I am sincerely thankful to the editor of this paper for thus aiding me in my purpose, coupled with his courtesy and well-wishes for the Home. W. G.

P. S.—Anyone feeling in their heart to help forward this noble work by cash, provisions, clothing, etc., will kindly send word by postal, or otherwise, to the Home. If postal, 'tis only necessary to state thereon, "Call at so-and-so at such and such a time," when this favor will at once be attended to by the founder, or a responsible person by him deputed. Cash can be remitted by check or postoffice order, made payable to Robert Parker, fonnder Convalescent Home.

TEMPTED.

Satan desires us, great and small,
As wheat, to sift us, and we all
Are tempted.

No one, however, rich or great,
Is by his station or estate
Exempted.

No house so safely guarded is
But he, by some device of his,
Can enter.

No heart hath armor so complete
But he can pierce with arrows fleet
Its centre.

LETTER FROM "GILDEROY."

"Two Epistles: I. To Professors of Perfect Love, and II. To Opposers of the 'Second Blessing,'" by Rev. W. P. Andrews, of the Pacific Conference, is a timely and well-considered production. Both parties, or some of each party, need epistles in the spirit and after the order of the Epistles of St. John. This pamphlet strikes me as the best thing I have seen along this line. The author has the gift of clear statement. He is easily understood. This is commendable. He manifests an amiable spirit and seems to be fair-minded.

I do not know whether he is for or against the "second-blessing" theory. He does not take sides—does not in these epistles. This is unusual on this subject and in writing of this kind. Most men take sides very positively and, sometimes, not very pleasantly. I suppose Bro. Andrews has very decided views on this much controverted question, and, I am sure, he could express them strongly and clearly. Some men seem most unholy when writing or speaking on holiness. This is true of both professors and opposers. Friction generates heat, whether it be the friction of matter or of mind. Some professors of perfect love are not loveable or lovely. They do not commend what they profess. Such need the epistle Bro. Andrews has addressed to them. Some opposers of the "second blessing" go so far and write and speak so strongly that they seem to oppose holiness "per se." I do not know but that I have sinned, or blundered, right along here myself. It is just like me to do that way. I have opinions, and I am fond of argument, and when I go in I go in to win. Often I am not as considerate of the other fellow as I ought to be. I indulge in wit, and, sometimes, it is wanting in the quality of wisdom. I write sarcasm, and this seldom tends to the increase of piety. Sometimes I am humorous where I ought to be serious.

The epistle to opposers of the "second blessing" cut me to the red. I needed it. I deserved all I got. I have not changed my views, but I mean to change my methods.

I am not opposed to holiness, sanctification, Christian perfection, perfect love, nor to the same thing by any other name, and I never was. My mother taught me this from the time I could first remember. It is clearly set forth in the Lord's Word. I have been groaning to be made perfect in love, and I have been expecting it in this life ever since I was eight years old. This is the aspiration of my life. When I relate my experience some who seem to know tell me I got the "second blessing" full twenty-five years ago. I do not call it by that name, nor by any name. I just state the facts of experience and leave others to name it if they wish. My aspiration is still above me. I do not suppose that any other human being ever trod exactly the path of experience along which I came, and, likely, no other ever will. Other experiences help me, comfort me, cheer me and encourage me; but at the last my experiences are my experiences—angular, unique, solitary and alone, just as if I were the only mortal that had gone along this road. None that I ever heard fit me in every particular, and at every point. In my mind and to my way of thinking, from my standpoint, some things are logically bound up with the "second blessing" theory of sanctification that will make it impossible for me to believe in it. Other people may not see this question as I do. What is impossible for me may be easy and reasonable to them. They have not had the mental vexation and agony over some questions connected with this subject that has come to me. I shy at a stump that they never see, and some of them never heard of it. Fact is, I might explain till doomsday, and then they would not, could not, see it. Well, I must be more patient and gentle with them, and I do hope they will forgive me and pity my blindness in matters as clear as day to them. We are both after the same thing, and often both have similar experiences, but we call them by different names. It is not the name, but the thing we are after.

So here now, let's shake hands, rub out the past, begin over again, and love each other just as hard as ever we can. "Love is the fulfilling of the law." Read "Two Epistles."

GILDEROY.

THE BETTER WAY.

The opportunity to do some conspicuously noble act, by which the qualities of the hero are at once displayed to an admiring world, rarely ever comes. Many a dreamer has sighed for such a chance for honorable recognition. Perhaps if such a crisis had come, he would have seen only its retreating form after it had passed. But opportunities to do small self-denying acts to make somebody better and happier are always here. Such little acts of kindness and considerate helpfulness filled in every day into the web of common life make a noble character.

The great army of silent workers who are everywhere making life easier and brighter are, after all, the world's greatest benefactors. They are the mighty hosts of peace-makers, and the triumphs of peace are theirs. In this discipline of self, in this work for others' weal, in this great and noble throng, exemplifying the brotherhood of man, each can find a place. It is the aggregate of character thus working for human good which gives to the world its greatest worth and sweetest joys.

INTERESTING ITEMS FROM THE FOREIGN SECRETARY.

This year must be one of ceaseless activity if our appropriations are to be met in full. Starting out with very little in the treasury, every quarter's remittance should be in full, or the first of next March will find us behind. The receipts for the first quarter of the year cause some apprehension, but sounding the alarm in good time will, I trust, quicken the zeal of every auxiliary. The children now under the special oversight of the Conference secretaries have their hearts and hopes on Korea, and Korea in the "great day" will arise and call them "blessed of the Lord."

The Little Worker should be in the hands of every child in the church. The election of the editor for one year only was to make the election of our editors and general officers and managers come at the same time. Formerly our editors were elected annually, but a motion prevailed a few years ago to make the elections quadrennial, as the others, but the motion prevailed three years after the other election, hence the change.

Nearly all the Conference societies have held their annual meetings and mapped out the present year's work. One Conference secretary writes as follows: "We had a good attendance at our last annual meeting and good results. I am planning to attend some of my district meetings, and help our district secretaries to organize auxiliaries in every charge." What a revival of our foreign work would follow if every Conference secretary could or would not only resolve, but carry out such a plan! A new life member in each society, in addition to what was done last year, a new member by each of the old members, and an auxiliary at every preaching place in our church should be the prayerful, sincere determination of the membership of the organization.

Money for the Training-School should be sent to Miss E. Billingsley, Scarritt Bible and Training School, Kansas City, not to our general treasurer; indeed, such money should go, in every case, from the individual or church to Miss Billingsley. Such amounts can not be reported with other funds of the societies because such can not be used by the Board, and is not reported by Mrs. McTyeire, but by Miss Billingsley.

Conference expense fund, or what is known as contingent fund, should be collected and in part held in the treasuries of auxiliaries for meeting such expenses as sending delegates to annual or district meetings, paying traveling expenses, postage, etc., of district secretaries, or those whom she selects to take her place. Some societies numbering one hundred or more members collect ten cents a year from each, keeping five cents of each in the auxiliary and sending five cents to the Conference contingent fund. Others assess each member twenty-five cents a year, keeping fifteen cents of each in the auxiliary treasury and sending ten cents to the Conference treasury. Twenty-five cents is not too much, but such matters are left to the decision of the Conference societies.

SOME SCRAPS OF MISSIONARY NEWS.

Our Conference treasurer writes: "I am glad to tell you our report is better than the one for second quarter last year. The entire amount contributed was $944.98. To Mrs. McTyeire, $757.50. The balance was on partly paid specials that had to be held over."

Sisters, this is encouraging; yet, if we don't look well to our work, the next quarter will suffer on account of the fever panic. While the scourge has not touched North Mississippi, we should be profoundly thankful and give doubly for all church purposes, because we have not had to break up and leave our homes. Let us make a thank-offering to the Lord for missions, while we remember the suffering ones of our State in earnest prayer and substantial aid.

I am glad to report seven new organizations for second quarter, and an increase of 188 members. The reports of two other organizations came just too late for my report.

One district secretary writes: "I find that personal efforts and information are all that's necessary to organize in most places."

Another secretary writes: "It is easy to organize, but hard to keep organized."

Special care should be given new societies. District secretaries should make them two visits a year, if possible.

I quote the following from a private letter: "Mrs. Hargrove, our Bible teacher, has won the hearts of all the students."

The first member of our church in Korea is named Laura Haygood Yun.

"Rev. C. T. Collyer writes from Seoul, Korea: 'Last week the M. E. Church, South, was formally organized by Dr. Rhea admitting twenty-four into membership by baptism. On every side we find that the Holy Ghost is at work. Everywhere there is a desire for Christian teaching. The people are coming into the church not by ones, but by the score. We are much encouraged and full of faith. Our shout and our prayer is: Ride on gloriously, Lord Jesus, conquering and to conquer.'" —The Review of Missions.

Who shall name the Korea building? North Georgia is working hard. Lady managers, look to our laurels.

Yours for service,

Mrs. H. W. Foote, of North Miss. Conference
Mrs. M. R. Parker, of Mississippi Conference
Mrs E. R. Kennedy, of Louisiana Conference

Our work in Louisiana was never more prosperous than during the present year. We have now 36 auxiliaries, 724 members, 168 subscribers to Our Homes, 34 names on the Baby Roll, besides 17 patrons to our Preachers' Wives' Loan Fund, and two members for our Angel Band Loan Fund. Quite a number have adopted the reading course, among them our society at Lafayette.

The general reports from the various auxiliaries and distributions of literature to the different societies have been seriously interrupted during the second quarter by the prevalence of yellow fever and consequent mail restrictions. As soon, however, as the quarantine regulations permit this literature, together with the Minutes of our Annual Conference, will be forwarded to any auxiliary desiring same by our Conference corresponding secretary, Mrs. Florence E. Ruse, 3502 Camp street, New Orleans.

Since our annual meeting in March thirteen new auxiliaries have been organized, adding to our roll about 278 members.

In Lafayette our workers are greatly encouraged by seeing a new parsonage rapidly nearing completion, not on the same narrow site of the old one, but on a new lot beautifully situated, donated by one of our own members—Mrs. M.E. Girard. Our pastor, Rev. I. T. Reames, not only gives us the benefit of his presence and prayers at the meetings of our society, but the labor of his hands as well. Thanks are due also the local Executive Committee at New Orleans for the appropriation of one hundred dollars to this work, which, added to the liberality of our citizens and the always ready help of our ladies, has provided a comfortable and pleasant home for our preachers and their wives. Our pastor, as he goes hence to other fields of labor, will leave behind him not only a united congregation and a host of warm personal friends, but a new church and parsonage as monuments of his faithful ministry.

There is only one drawback to the rapidly advancing prosperity of our town, and I may add to that of towns and villages all over this State and country, and that is the open saloon and gambling hells. When pestilence stalks abroad over the land, men tremble and turn pale, sacrifice time and comfort and money, and consider them well spent; but when their brothers and sons walk boldly into these pits of destruction, these foul dens of gilded iniquity which destroy both body and soul, they smile and wonder why some people are such fanatics on the subject of a little amusement.

"All men are free to do as they please, and no one has a right to interfere." What matters it to the saloon keeper if blasted prospects, disappointed ambitions and shattered hopes reel out of his door from the gambling table? He makes money by it, and must live. May God grant such power to the prayers and labors of his people that these snares of Satan may go down before them as dry leaves before the autumn wind!

"Our Land for Christ," the motto of our organization, means that every woman and child who names the name of this society should become a tributary to swell the mighty current that shall sweep before it these bulwarks of sin from our midst.

God's blessing is resting upon our work, for the seed planted ten years ago has flourished and grown into a great tree, which is now spreading its branches abroad over the land. There is something in the character of this work that instinctively appeals to every heart, because its foundation is love and its superstructure the happiness of humanity. Heroes of old were celebrated in song and story for their valor on the field of battle, their matchless victories and glorious achievements, placing their names in the loftiest niches of the temple of fame; but the lustre was dimmed by the tears of suffering thousands.

Our Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society counts within its ranks no martial hosts, nor heralds of victory, but we do count among our numbers names most glorious and of matchless valor on the field of Christian warfare, because, protected by the shield of faith, and armed with the sword of prayer, they have penetrated into the mountain fastnesses, into the homes of densest ignorance and let in the sunshine of God's love and bounteous goodness upon their wretched inmates; they have placed within their reach a means of escape in the establishment of schools. These women have provided homes for God's ministers. They have stood by the bedside of the dying and pointed the poor, weary sufferer to the "Lamb that was slain" for the salvation of the world. They have clothed the naked, fed the hungry, raised up the fallen and whispered words of comfort to the broken-hearted. To and fro on their missions of mercy, humbly striving to follow in the footsteps of their Master, counting themselves as nothing, so they may win precious souls for their hero. Think you, my friend, that all the honors of earth could compensate for the glory that shall be revealed to these, his servants?

The latest statistics of our W. P. and H. M. Society show a membership of more than 17,000, and, with God's blessing, we may "stretch our hand into the future and mold the destinies of unborn millions." The grand possibilities of this work may be summed up in the words of our president, Miss Bennett: "If everyone of the 800,000 women of Southern Methodism were an active, intelligent member of this Home Mission Society, not only America, but the uttermost parts of the earth, would see a great light in darkness, and we might well look for the speedy coming of a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."

THE MORRISON CASE.

Warranted by the best of evidence we present the following condensed statement of the facts in the Morrison appeal case:

First of all, Bishop Wilson ruled the appeal out. Morrison's conduct, both before and after his trial and condemnation, was such as to forfeit all the rights and privileges accruing to a preacher under the law of appeal. This would have ended the matter, leaving Morrison expelled, but for the fact that a charge of maladministration was brought against the presiding elder who conducted the trial in the Quarterly Conference. This brought the record of the trial before the Bishop, who decided that said record was vitally defective. Thus Morrison was left under suspension, and the case was remanded for a new trial. At this juncture friends intervened. Morrison signed a paper declaring that he did not intend to violate church law by preaching in Dublin over the protest of the preacher in charge, and that he did not intend contumacious conduct by continuing to preach after formal expulsion. Moreover, he promised not to repeat the offense. On account of this statement and promise, the Committee of Investigation withdrew the charges against Morrison, and the prosecution ceased.

We append the following comments:

Morrison escaped upon a bare technicality. It so happened that the Minutes of the trial were not read and signed immediately after the conclusion of the trial. The stenographer's hand gave out and he was compelled to leave, taking his notes with him. A brother was appointed to take down the proceedings in his stead. He went off with a part of the Minutes in his pocket. In this way some ten days elapsed before the trial record was perfected and signed. This was a failure to comply with the letter of the Discipline. Hence the Bishop's ruling and Morrison's escape. But for the neglect of this little piece of red tape Morrison's expulsion would have been confirmed.

Again, the Bishop declared that the invasion of a preacher's territory over his protest was a violation of church law. He said, moreover, that the Bishops were a unit in this construction of the law. He told Morrison to his face that he had done wrong in going to Dublin, and that the episcopal college were unanimous in this view. So, then, the Dublin brethren have been vindicated, the Lexington Quarterly Conference justified, and the prosecution set right. The church gained everything for which she contended. From now on every preacher has adequate legal protection against the invasion of his territory. Any preacher, whether traveling or local, who enters a pastoral charge over the protest of the regular incumbent violates church law, and is responsible and liable accordingly.

Again, when Morrison made his statement and promise, he virtually conceded all for which the church contended. When he solemnly promised, in writing, "to obey the Discipline," it was understood by all concerned that he accepted the Bishop's construction of the law, and that he would not repeat the offense. Morrison accepts, not his, but the prosecution's construction of the law. It seems to us a complete victory for the church. The law has been expounded and vindicated. Even after the remanding of the case upon a technicality, nothing saved Morrison from further prosecution but his statement and promise before the Investigating Committee. We are glad that the matter has been pressed, and that the preachers have found at last such an indisputable remedy against the incursions of roving and mischievous intermeddlers.—Texas Advocate.

CHANGE YOUR BAIT.

One of the rules of the successful fisherman is to use a variety of devices in order to insure success. He depends not on one appliance, but uses many. If he goes after trout, his "book" of flies may contain fifty alluring varieties, and his fishing tackle a dozen other sorts of artificial bait. If the trout will not snap at one of these, another is used, and another, till something that will catch fish is found. A grasshopper, a minnow, a fly, a worm—these are used in succession until some successful device is secured.

To the ministry, to whom Jesus Christ says, "I will make you fishers of men," this principle is suggestive. They may wisely apply it in the effort to vary their old methods and invent new ones whereby to secure converts. If they have, during a considerable period, failed to achieve that form of success which registers itself in conversions, perhaps some other method may help to accomplish victory. A change of bait may be serviceable.

Let the argumentative preacher use more illustrations, and the man who has depended chiefly upon picturesque material employ his reasoning faculties to an extent untried before. It may expedite success in the case of the precise, methodical plodder, if he will cultivate spontaneity, and, in the language of the elder Beecher, "let nature caper" at times. Perhaps the man who has become a slave to his manuscript may secure larger liberty and better results by using occasionally extempore methods of speech; and once in a while it will surely be of service to the man of oratorical temper if he will descend from his stilted attitude and simply talk to the people.

In like manner, if the preacher who has been occupying his time almost wholly in his study, with the view of making the pulpit his throne, will cultivate his pastoral instincts, and sympathies, and habits, he may be able to get hold of men who at long range are beyond reach. Those who have built all their hopes and aims upon the single ambition of having every Fall "a rousing revival" may find it helpful to plan the "one-at-a-time" method, trying to reach people in private interviews, individually, and bring them to Christ.

These are but hints and suggestions which illustrate the principle in view. A pastor in our age ought to be alert, ingenious, and inventive; fertile in expedients, full of resources. Like a great general, he ought to be able, in the face of emergencies and in the midst of the battle, to change his plans to meet the new developments of the hour. It is a waste of time, strength, labor and life for a man to keep pottering away at methods and plans which, after a fair trial, do not succeed in winning souls. Let him use enterprise and ingenuity, and thus become a successful fisher of men.—Central Christian Advocate.

TRUE PREACHING.

The late Dr. A. J. Gordon often told of a Sabbath on which he went in the morning to hear a distinguished preacher who was celebrated for his biblical knowledge. He came home delighted with the clear and brilliant expositions of the truth that he heard, but chilled with the icy coldness of the message. It was true, clear, scriptural truth, but as cold as an iceberg.

He went in the afternoon to hear another preacher distinguished for his fervor, and he came back delighted with the earnestness and unction of the preacher, but it was a fire of shavings, and there was not truth enough in it to make it lasting.

He went again at night and heard a third preacher, and he came away not only instructed, but thrilled, because this sermon had been not only an exposition of scriptural truth, but it had also been alive with the power of God and full of the fire of the Holy Ghost. It was not a fire of shavings, but of substantial fuel, and it left not only a memory of truth, but a glow of warmth that filled his heart with joy and love. This is the power of the Holy Ghost speaking in truth and love, the Bible ablaze with holy fire, the Word of God dissolved in unction and love, until it can be observed in every fibre of our being and become the nutriment of our life.—Watchword.

BELIEVE GOD.

How sweet to have a friend in whom we can fully confide! How glorious to have a friend whom we can fully trust, with no clouds of doubt to roll between and darken our way! And how grand to have a friend who is able and willing to help us out of every difficulty and trouble! Our God is just such a friend to all his obedient children. Why can we not confide in him, why can we not trust him? He has said—and his word can not fail—"If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." This is a sweet promise. And why should we not choose to walk daily by his side, abiding in him, and letting his pure and beautiful words in us abide? If we would do this, what a field of glorious possibilities would lie out before us! What a happy and blessed existence ours might become! What a fair and charming pattern our lives might disclose when unfolded before God and the heavenly host in the clear, faultless light of eternity! For if hindrances come before us, in our struggles to accomplish good for him, we would only have to ask him to remove them, and, in his own best way, they would be removed. In the same good way might every cloud of annoyance, pain, or sorrow, be melted, brightened or lifted.

It might not be that he would remove them in the exact time, and way, that we would think best; but should our faith stagger on that account? We are poor, weak, blind creatures. We can not see ahead and know the certain result of this or that. But God is not weak, God is not blind. He knows all things, and all creatures perfectly; and has the good of all at heart. And in the time, and way, that would be best for ourselves, and every other human being who would be influenced by our prayer's answer, it would be granted.

May we all be enabled to believe God, and live accordingly!

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. Geo. W. Huff, Escatawpa circuit, Mississippi Conference, Oct 18, 1897: "Yellow fever still prevails in many places. We are in four or five miles of Scranton, and the fever is doing great damage there. The quarantine between Moss Point, Escatawpa and East Side has saved us from the plague so far. But for the quarantine these towns would have been swept down by the ravaging hand of this dreadful disease. This has been a year of gloom and sadness to many a home and heart. But a brighter day will dawn upon us after a while. Sorrows and troubles will soon be o'er with many of us. But for the abiding presence of Jesus we would faint by the wayside. Our Lord is in the ship with us, and we dread not the storm. We will anchor in the haven of rest by and by. I was sick during the first part of this year, and was unable to attend to my pastoral duties; but God in mercy restored me to health after four months of continued sickness. I bless God for a kind people and a kind, loving and sympathetic presiding elder. I shall ever remember his kindness, visits and prayers in my home, at my bedside during my illness. God bless you, Bro. Powell. Your pure consecrated life, chaste language, upright life and walk and congeniality of heart and soul have been a blessing to my life during these three years in your district. I am preaching regularly at three of my appointments. I went to one of my appointments second Sunday in this month and preached and continued the meeting four nights; preached four sermons; and an old-time revival broke out in the church, and the good people shouted and prayed and sang until peace like a river rushed into every heart and beamed forth like glorious sunlight from every face, and twenty-one persons were swept into the church. We all got a fresh start toward the eternal hills."

Rev. W. A. Terry, P. C., Tranquil charge, Oct. 13, 1897: "I have recently closed my last meeting on this work. The Lord was with us in great power during every meeting. Bro. W. J. O'Bryant, of the North Mississippi Conference, assisted me at Locust Grove. He did some very earnest preaching. There was but one accession to the church; but the meeting did a great deal of good. Bro. O'Bryant is a consecrated man and a good preacher. We have had over fifty accessions on the work this year. I find that the brethren of the Conference are very willing to assist me in revivals, and that they are splendid help, too. There has not been a better meeting held in Yazoo county this year than the one we held at Tranquil Church, conducted by Dr. I W. Cooper, of Moss Point. Bro. Cooper showed his willingness to assist me in coming so far. I am very grateful to the brethren for the faithful service rendered. May God bless the itinerant preachers! Brethren, let us ever be ready to assist each other with our prayers, commendations and preaching."

Rev. W. A. Bowlin, P. C., Nettleton charge, Aberdeen district, Oct. 14, 1897: "We have finished our new church at Pisgah, and had a fine meeting in it, resulting in 30 conversions. Was assisted by Rev. W. W. Davis, of Tupelo, Miss. I have had 116 conversions and 90 accessions up to date, and one other meeting to hold. I expect to make a full report at Conference. Praise God for his love."

ON TRUE ELOQUENCE.

When public bodies are to be addressed on momentous occasions; when great interests are at stake, and strong passions excited, nothing is valuable in speech farther than it is connected with high intellectual and moral endowments. Clearness, force and earnestness are the qualities which produce conviction. True eloquence, indeed, does not consist in speech. It can not be brought from afar. Labor and learning may toil for it, but they will toil in vain. Words and phrases may be marshalled in every way, but they can not compass it. It must exist in the man, in the subject, and in the occasion. Affected passion, intense expression, the pomp of declamation, all may aspire after it—they can not reach it. It comes, if it come at all, like the outbreaking of a fountain from the earth, or the bursting forth of volcanic fires, with spontaneous, original, native force. The graces taught in the schools, the costly ornaments and studied contrivances of speech, shock and disgust men when their own lives and the fate of their wives, their children, and their country hang on the decision of the hour. Then, words have lost their power, rhetoric is vain, all elaborate oratory contemptible. Even genius itself then feels rebuked and subdued, as in the presence of higher qualities. Then patriotism is eloquent; then self-devotion is eloquent. The clear conception, outrunning the deductions of logic, the high purpose, the firm resolve, the dauntless spirit, speaking on the tongue, beaming from the eye, informing every feature, and urging the whole man onward, right onward to his object—this, this is eloquence; or, rather, it is something greater and higher than all eloquence—it is action; noble, sublime, God like action.—Lovell.

A prominent man said to us the other day: "We don't believe in gush down here. If a preacher does his best, it is no more than his duty, and we let him come and go without saying anything about it." An hour afterwards we met the pastor. "There are no better people in the world than my people," he said; "they are just as kind and hospitable as they can be, and take the deepest interest in my welfare, but they seem to think it a sin to say an encouraging word to anyone who is working for the Lord." And he confessed that there was nothing he was so hungry for as a warm handshake after a sermon, and a whispered assurance from somebody that he was doing some good. "If we would only use our spare eye to look at things from another standpoint than our own! —Richmond Advocate.

HOW TO WELCOME THE STRANGER.

It would be interesting to know just how many thousands of people who are now earnest Christians have been made so by a hearty handshake and a sincere welcome with voice and eye. We believe that if the truth were known, at least seventy-five per cent. of Christ's followers could trace their initial introduction to the Savior to the handshake of some open-hearted Christian man or woman. If you can not speak much; if you are not able to combat skeptical arguments; if you don't feel able to visit the people at their homes and invite them to your church, you can all welcome the stranger when he does come, and you can do it in such a way that your hand and voice and eye will tell forth in undying notes the blessed gospel of the kingdom.—Temple Magazine.

We have multitudes of people in secluded mountain hollows and out on the broad prairies who have no church edifice of any Christian denomination, or other place of stated religious worship, within twenty or thirty miles of their homes. They are practically without the opportunity of hearing the gospel or of being taught the way of life. We have in all our great cities communities of the under classes of society, congregated by thousands in attics, basements, tenement-houses, and flats, who are within five minutes' walk of churches and mission chapels whose doors are freely open to them, in which they are invited to seats without cost, in halls lighted, warmed, and supplied with the best services of ministry and choir; and yet who, from long-cherished prejudices and misconceptions, from a social ostracism, real or imagined, refuse all invitations to enter, and live and die within sound of church bells, "so near and yet so far."—F. J. Witherspoon, D. D.

I am not going to underrate the value and importance of mental schooling for the children, but it needs to be said that unless a man has a pure and honest heart, the less he knows the better it will be for him and for all concerned. And it needs also to be said that even trustworthiness of intellectual action waits on personal soundness. Sound brain and unsound life are incompatible. Even if our object were only to secure the finest and fullest intellectual development, we should still aim, first of all, to secure a foundation of personal integrity for the scions of wisdom to root and vegetate in. It is something as it is with the planting of an astronomical observatory; however fine its equipment, and whatever the power of its lenses, we depend, first of all, upon the solidity with which the observatory is planted.—C H. Parkhurst.

While vast continents are shrouded in almost utter darkness, and hundreds of millions suffer the horrors of heathenism or of Islam, the burden of proof lies upon you to show that the circumstances in which God has placed you were meant by him to keep you out of the foreign mission field.—Ion Keith Falconer.

Alphabetical appendages attached to our names will not draw mankind to God. But common sense religion, backed by power from on high, a sweet, pure, flowing stream of God's love shed abroad in our hearts, overflowing, reaching out in the low lands of sin and degradation. —Rev. T. H. Hall

God's way of forgiving is thorough and hearty, both to forgive and to forget. And if thine be not so thou hast no portion of his.—Archbishop Leighton.

THE HURRYING FEET OF WOMEN
at the new-born infant's cry, tells the story of woman's sympathy for her sister-woman. If women would only spread the medical gospel, that a woman is unfitted for wifehood and motherhood as long as she suffers from weakness or disease of the distinctly womanly organism, there would be less necessity for the sisterly sympathy that a woman receives when she is in the throes of child-bearing.
A woman who is thoroughly strong and healthy in a womanly way has to suffer comparatively little pain and sickness when she becomes a mother. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription acts directly on the delicate and important organs that bear the burdens of maternity and gives them health, strength and elasticity. It allays inflammation, heals ulceration and soothes pain. It banishes the discomforts of the faint-hearted period and makes baby's advent easy and almost painless. It insures the newcomer's health. Over 90,000 women have testified to its marvelous merits and many of them have permitted their experiences, names, addresses and photographs to be printed in Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, so that other women may learn of this wonderful medicine. Good medicine dealers sell it.
"I am now real well," writes Mrs. Lillie Hibbard, of Merrill, Lincoln Co., Wis. "I have been doing my own housework, including washing and ironing. I hardly ever feel the pain in my side unless I lift hard. I took four bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, one of 'Golden Medical Discovery' and two bottles of 'Pleasant Pellets.' I have not been taking any medicine for over two months. This is the first time I have been well enough to do my work for over three years. Your medicine is all that helped me."
Send 21 one-cent stamps, to cover cost of mailing only, for a paper-covered copy of Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. Cloth binding, 10 cents extra. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y. It is the most popular medical work in the English language; it contains a thousand and eight pages, and over three hundred illustrations. It is a great storehouse of valuable information—a veritable medical library in one volume.

All things that are on earth
Shall wholly pass away,
Except the love of God,
Which shall live and last for aye.
—William Cullen Bryant.

The reason for loving must be in the one loved.

Forethought (fore-planning) is as essential in Christian work as in the realm of secniar life.

Christ's power can not be exhausted, no matter what the demands npon it may be.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Die where you may, in the wilderness, or garret, or cell, one love shines ont like a star—God's.

Lose no opportunity to lend a helping hand to some one who is laboriously toiling upward.

When the forenoons of life are wasted, there is not much hope of a peaceful and fruitful evening.

We must know before we can love. In order to know God we must often think of him.—Brother Lawrence.

Leave the mists and fogs of the valley of doubt and walk in the golden sunlight that floods the mountain top of faith.

Don't waste your energies in fruitless groans after freedom from conflict, but expend them in a life-long effort to win every fight.

There are two things in which we should thoroughly train ourselves—to be slow in taking offense, and to be slower in giving it.—Lutheran.

Patience among the virtues is like the pearl among the gems, and by its quiet radiance it heightens every human grace.—Rev. Robert Ailyn, LL.D.

Let our Lord's sweet hand square us and hammer us, and strike off all kinds of pride, self-love, world-worship and infidelity, so that he makes us stones and pillars in his Father's house.—Rutherford.

In the sight of God the spirit of our service is of much more value than the form of it. What men deem the loftiest service may be of little or no value in the sight of our Father in heaven, while, on the other hand, the most menial service may be a delight unto him. All may serve acceptably if they will.

Deal tenderly with the erring. You do not know their temptations, you can not measure their weakness, you do not know the struggle that may be going on in their mind. A kind, sympathetic word, a friendly visit, confidence, will do more than discipline. Love will do more to win and save than authority.—Selected.

SUBSTITUTES FOR PIETY.

Every good thing has its counterfeit. Substitutes have been devised for almost every article of great worth or usefulness. Glass and paste jewelry are now manufactured to rival diamonds. Cement is made to imitate marble. Stained woods of ordinary grade are made to do service in place of walnut and mahogany, while among food products the adulterations and substitutions are almost endless.

Since genuine piety is a thing that the devil hates, it is not strange that he should strive mightily to palm off substitutes for it upon men, for he knows full well that the progress of vital godliness means the decline and fall of his empire. Knowing human nature thoroughly, he understands that about the best bait with which to catch a large number of men is sham religion.

In secular affairs we often see the tendency to palm off inferior goods or work in place of the best, the excuse being that there is no need of being so particular. Just so in the realm of religion. Alas! that it should be so. In religion more than anywhere else the highest attainments should be sought.

Formalism and mere profession are by no means an infrequent substitute for true religion. A large percentage of the people who attend church and observe the externals of religion are strangers to regeneration and the love of God. They neither know their sins forgiven nor experience the abiding peace vouchsafed to the fully consecrated believer. Their trust is not in God, but in the fact that they use the means of grace, and are no worse than other men. But, alas! they worship God with their lips, while their hearts are far from him. In works they often deny him, being lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. Many people covet the name and reward of Christians, and fancy there is virtue and merit in contact with righteousness; but they are far from being willing to render perfect obedience.

Another class of persons look upon honesty and minding one's own affairs as the essence of religion. They know little and care less about purity of heart, lowering Christianity to the mere practice of morality and worldly prudence. An astonishingly large number believe, or profess to do so, that if a man pays his just debts, provides well for his own, and conducts himself with propriety, he is reasonably sure of salvation. Reason and common prudence, to say nothing of revelation, would teach men to do this much. Piety that goes no further than debt-paying, industry and sobriety is little better than paganism. It is but an attempt of sinners to justify themselves before God, to substitute their own works for the atonement made by Christ. The gospel of common honesty is excellent as far as it goes, but it can not "... give the guilty conscience peace,

Or wash away the stain."

Perhaps a still larger number count much upon their harmlessness. Violence, flagrant wickedness and disreputable deeds they are careful to refrain from, and in a sense they are models of decorum and goodness. But, though inoffensive, they are far from being blameless, for their hearts are full of selfishness, pride, envy, and impure affections. He who fancies that freedom from outward wickedness is the principal part of religion has read to little purpose our Lord's description of the final judgment. Many who are inoffensive and eminently respectable in the eyes of the world care nothing for the extension of Christ's kingdom, or for their own spiritual progress. "The unprofitable servant," we are told, "shall be cast into outer darkness."

There are those who expect their works of mercy and gifts to charity to atone for their sins. They make little pretension to piety, and do right only so far as it suits their convenience or their interest, but pride themselves upon being charitable and liberal, upon their readiness to help every good cause, supposing that generosity is a passport into heaven. Benevolence is an essential part of Christianity, but it is by no means the whole of it. The gift of eternal life is not purchasable with money, or with anything else in the possession of man. Let no man think, because he does good with his money, or by his personal ministrations, that he can continue in sin and be saved. "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." Our Lord demands the heart, the life, the all.

Membership in a particular church, supposed by those init to be the only true Apostolic Church, outside of which there is no salvation, suffices with a multitude for experiential faith and piety. Many a zealous churchman is a very poor Christian. While denominational loyalty is commendable, it is not an infallible sign of conversion. Not every man who pays the preacher and works for the church is genuinely pious.

Again, with some there is a tendency to substitute belief in a particular doctrine or dogma for that holiness of heart and life which is the fruit of a living faith. Immersion, unconditional election, and many other ecclesiastical dogmas, we fear, count for more with many than present righteousness and "the faith that works by love."

The things we have mentioned and many others that might be included are insufficient of themselves to secure salvation. Nothing short of entire self-surrender and trust in God will bring peace to the soul and grace for holy living. A half-consecrated believer neither has power over sin nor enjoys peace with God. Let us beware, then, of fashioning our religion to suit our notions and inclinations, lest we be overtaken with swift destruction.

A LITTLE TRIP.

Last Saturday afternoon we went to Covington via the East Louisiana railroad. By invitation of the pastor, Rev. J. B. Kent, we occupied his pulpit Sunday morning. We were pleased to see in the congregation our friend and brother, Rev. H. C. Brown, of the Mississippi Conference, who for sanitary reasons has been making his headquarters for the last three months with his father-in-law, Bro. Clarke, at Madisonville. Bro. Brown has an affection of the vocal organs which deprives him of the power of public speech. Otherwise he is in vigorous health. It is hardly probable that he will be on the effective list next year. He would have returned to his charge before this to do such work as is possible to a voiceless man, but for the prevailing quarantine regulations.

In the afternoon we had a delightful drive with Bro. Brown to his home at Madisonville, where we spent the night. We much enjoyed the cordial hospitalities and genial companionship of Bros. Brown and Clarke and their families. We also had the pleasure of administering the ordinance of baptism to Bro. Brown's youthful daughter, who bears the name of an elect Christian woman in Jackson, Miss.—Sarah Lincoln Brown. Next morning, like a true Wesleyan, we were up at four o'clock, and were driven by Bro. Brown to the landing, where we boarded the steamer "New Camelia." A little before five she moved out for the Crescent City, touching at two points en route, Lonisburg and Mandeville. On this trip for the first time we had the experience of being out of sight of land. We have often been on the briny deep, but always near the shore. For an hour or more there was naught to be seen in any direction but "water, water everywhere." We also witnessed a sunrise on the water. Owing to a slight fogginess in the eastern sky, Old Sol did not seem himself. As he lifted himself above the waters and for some time afterwards he might easily have been mistaken for the full moon, reminding us of Milton's simile:

"As when the sun, new-risen,
Looks through the horizontal, misty air,
Shorn of his beams."

The trip was a most enjoyable one. Nine o'clock found us at the editorial desk.

It is a great deal better to live a holy life than to talk about it. We are told to let our light shine, and if it does, we won't need to tell anybody it does. The light will be its own witness. Lighthouses don't ring bells and fire cannon to call attention to their shining—they just shine.—D. L. Moody.

"If goodness were only catching—like measles—we would all be good." Don't believe it. There are people who would go into a life-time quarantine against it, and spend all their earnings on disinfectants.—Baltimore Advocate.

YELLOW FEVER.

The following is a summary of the yellow fever situation up to Tuesday morning at the principal points of infection:

	Cases.	Deaths.
Biloxi	526	24
Scranton	285	10
[illegible]	30	2
McHenry	35	6
Bay St. Louis	183	4
Edwards	513	80
Clinton	27	1
Nittayuma	20	2
Cayuga	29	1

The above places are all in Mississippi. The fever has also been reported at New Albany, Pineville and Raymond (convict farm), but has not spread to any extent.

In Louisiana the infection has reached only three places outside this city, viz.: Franklin, Patterson, and Baton Rouge. In these the statistics are as follows:

	Cases.	Deaths.
Franklin	5	3
Patterson	2	1
Baton Rouge	3	1

In this city the number of cases to date is 1,211; deaths, 138. Six hundred and twenty-two cases have recovered, leaving 451 now under treatment. The number of cases during the week ending Tuesday morning, Oct. 26, exceeds the number for the week previous by 97. The increase in the number of deaths over the week previous is only 2.

In Alabama the situation is as follows:

	Cases.	Deaths.
Mobile	218	28
Montgomery	59	6

One or two cases have been reported at other places. The fever has made its appearance in Memphis, but the number of cases is only eight, with two deaths. There has been no spread of the disease in Texas.

DEATH OF DR. PURSER.

Rev. David Ingraham Purser, D. D., pastor of Valence Street Baptist Church in this city, died of the prevailing fever last week—the first ministerial victim in this city. He was taking a vacation in Alabama when the fever broke out. He came home and began at once visiting those who were stricken with the pestilence. Dr. Purser stood very high in his church. He was a decided success in every sphere of ministerial activity into which he entered. In this city, where he has labored for the last five years; in Birmingham, Ala., where he exercised his ministry for several years, and in other pastorates, he was remarkably successful. As agent of Howard College in Alabama, he raised in a short time $100,000 for the founding and equipping of that institution. For three years he labored in Mississippi as State evangelist with marked success. For the last four years he has been annually elected president of the Louisiana State Baptist Convention. We have known Dr. Purser ever since we were boys together in Copiah county, Miss. During all the intervening years we have been close friends. He was a man of ability and force of character, and decidedly tactful and resourceful. Though as fearless as a lion in the discharge of duty, he was nevertheless gentle, tender, sympathetic and lovable. Take him all in all, he was a noble specimen of manhood.

REV. W. P. ANDREWS—HIS BOOK.

I would call the attention of the church to "Two Epistles"—a pamphlet written by Rev. W. P. Andrews, of Pacific Conference. The epistles are to "Professors of Perfect Love" and to "Opposers of the Second Blessing." The writer avoids the spirit of the controversialist, maintains the spirit of Christ, and the reader catches the same inspiration.

The treatise is clear, considerate, charitable, conciliatory. Whatever your view on this question, the book will catch you, hold you, strengthen you and leave you closer to your brethren. It should be read throughout the church. The church is debtor to the author. J. C. PARK.

Kosciusko, Miss., Oct. 10, 1897.

We most heartily endorse every word of the above notice. There is not a single word in the book from beginning to end that can give offense to any person, whatever may be his views concerning the second blessing. It is a genuine irenicon. As such we heartily commend it to Methodists everywhere. It would be a boon to our church if this book could find its way into all our homes. Bro. Andrews deserves the thanks of the church for this admirable work.

NOTABLE CONFERENCE ACTION.

The Wisconsin Annual Conference expressly declared last week that official lay members of the church in that Conference are under obligations to read a church paper. The body voted almost unanimously to press The Northwestern upon the attention of official laymen, for the very sake alone of more intelligent and efficient church work. That declaration is so reasonable and defensible that one wonders why anybody can challenge it for an instant. The land is full of special publications. Machinists, farmers, dry-goods dealers, engineers, carriage-builders, millers, cabinet-makers, newsboys, printers, milkmen, organ-builders, instrument makers, sailors, doctors, lawyers, railway leaders, electricians, the deaf, the dumb, the blind, and so on toward the end of the unending list, have their special organs. No business man can "keep up with the procession" if he does not read about the progress of his guild. That church is imposed upon which has an office-bearer who does not read about that which God does in and for the church. No man is sufficiently talented to extemporize his facts. No leader can lead who is ignorant of the spirit and progress and opinions and devices of his fellow-leaders. The non-reading official is in the rear, and he ministers to keeping the people in the rear. It is insufferable and harmful assumption to claim that any non-reading official deserves his position. Bright young people plainly see that he is in the rear. We doubt not that many open-minded youth lose respect for a church that accepts unintelligent leaders. The issue does not need argument.—New York Advocate.

NOTES.

The Tennessee Conference has adopted the Holston Methodist as its organ.

Rev. George D. Parker occupied the pulpit of Dryades Street Church last Sunday.

Rev. H. R. Singleton was released from his quarantine prison last week and filled his pulpit last Sunday to the delight of his congregation.

Reverence lies at the bottom of all moral excellence. Flippancy is a barrier to all spiritual progress. Seriousness is the fountain of penitence and reform. The fear of God is the fruitful soil of character and peace.—Texas Advocate.

As complete a caricature as we have ever seen outside the comic papers, which make caricature a specialty, is the wood cut of Bishop Hendrix which appears in last week's issue of the Holston Methodist. If the Bishop should enter suit for damages, we are sure he would win. If we were the owner of Bro. Price's artist, we would trade him for a dog, and then lose the dog.

Christian education must be positive. We don't want our children educated in the neighborhood of piety and taught simply to respect religion. We must impress them that Christ is first, and that religion is the chief concern of mortals here below. Christ does not accept the patronage of worldly men who look upon him and his cause as something to be tolerated, and who think they have done well when they do give it tolerance.—North Carolina Christian Advocate.

The day of Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll as a popular lecturer is about over. The press takes comparatively little stock in him. On a recent Sabbath he lectured in Boston, and the next morning the dailies gave a very limited space to reports of his lecture. The mere abstracts were in marked contrast with the verbatim reports that were formerly accorded him when the public was interested in what he had to say. A more striking indication could hardly be given that he is no longer accounted a taking or influential factor. The truth is, people are tired of his tirades. They have lost faith in a man who is an infidel largely for the money that is in it. Besides, the sameness of his thought and illustration and the emptiness of his argument fail longer to attract and influence the public generally.—Presbyterian.

A wise distribution of labor is all-important and produces the highest and best results. A minister makes a great mistake in attempting to do all the work in his parish himself. The more he can bring others into loving and sympathetic co-operation, the better. He is to utilize all the forces at his command, and in proportion as he does will his church prosper. His is the part of the skillful general who directs to the greatest advantage those under his leadership. He is not to spare himself nor fail in any of his specific duties, but he ought not to do what others can and should do, as he thereby assumes burdens too heavy for him to carry, and weakens the energies of those whom God has placed in connection with him to help in his cause.—Presbyterian.

Daniel Webster is quoted as having said forty years ago: "If clergymen in our day would return to the simplicity of the gospel, and preach more to individuals and less to the crowd, there would not be so much complaint of the decline of true religion. Many of the ministers of the present day take their text from Paul and preach from the newspapers. When they do so I prefer to enjoy my own thoughts rather than to listen. I want my pastor to come to me in the spirit of the gospel, saying: 'You are mortal; your probation is brief; your work must be done speedily. You are immortal, too; you are hastening to the bar of God; the Judge, even now, standeth at the door.' When I am thus admonished I have no disposition either to muse or to sleep."

A writer in a religious paper is reminded of a conversation he had a few years ago with one of the most eminent statesmen of this country, now a justice of the Supreme Bench at Washington. Though not a professor of religion, he was a man who thought very profoundly on all religious subjects, and he said: "You ministers are making a fatal mistake in not holding forth before men, as prominently as the previous generation did, the retributive justice of God. You are fallen into a sentimental style of rhapsodizing over the love of God, and you are not appealing to that fear of future punishment which our Lord and Master made such a prominent element in his preaching. And we are seeing the effects of it in the widespread demoralization of private virtue and corruption of the public conscience throughout the land."—Presbyterian.

Trouble in a congregation is very easily made. It is with great difficulty healed. One person with rash temper may set a whole congregation in confusion. Mistakes which are magnified and truth perverted may cause no end of contention. Differences of opinion in reference to the manner of doing certain work is often so vigorously insisted upon that all efforts for good are made fruitless. A little thought will often avert what promises to bring trouble and difficulty. Respect for authority by those who are under it, and tender regard for feelings and dispositions of others by those in power, and, above all, charity for each other, will serve to promote the work and render possible the blessing of God upon it. For all church troubles St. Paul commended the best of all gifts, charity, for it "never faileth."—Reformed Messenger.

There are some attractions in the ministry as a profession. But the man who enters it merely because it promises him a surer support, or an easier life, or a better social position, or even more congenial study and work, than the legal, medical or pedagogical profession, has no business in it. I have known scores of ministers who told me how reluctant they were to give up other plans and prospects in life to prepare for the preaching of the gospel; how they yielded only because they felt as Paul did: "Necessity is laid upon me, yea, woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel." Those men have never had to go candidating. They are the men whom the churches want, and whose labors are abundantly blessed. They are not all pastors of large churches, but they are all happy in their work. Let a young man be sure that God wants him in the ministry before he rushes into it.—Herald and Presbyter.

THE MISSIONARY DEBT SECURED.

We wish to announce to the church at large that its members have generously pledged the payment of the entire missionary debt. There is not now one dollar on our Board of Missions that is not secured by a personal pledge. The debt of $132,000 increased at one time (since we have been seeking to remove it) to $141,000. This sum added to the expense incurred in the effort to remove it, made it necessary to raise $145,000. The great Head of the church, in whose hands are the hearts of men, has gone before, preparing the way and inclining the people to hear and respond. No public appeal has been made, but the work has been done in a private way by our representative people, including Bishops, leading laymen, elect women, preachers, college professors, and General Conference officers. Fifty-six thousand dollars have been given by nine persons, $100,000 by 200 persons, and the entire debt by less than 4,000 persons. This sum, coming from so small a number as 4,000 out of a membership of nearly 1,500,000, is in the ratio of one to every 375 members, and can not affect the general collections for missions. The work has been done heartily "as unto the Lord," with the frequent expression, "I am glad to give, and only regret I can not do more." In the continuous travel of more than a year and a half throughout the bounds of the church, we have met only three brethren who were less than courteous in hearing the appeal. And to those to whom we have presented the matter, an average of eight out of every ten have responded. Never has anything been more cheerfully done for the church than the payment of this debt. Our people are loyal and love their church, and are ever ready to sacrifice for her welfare. Let us thank God and take courage. The conditions have been met, the money can now be forwarded to T. B. Holt, Treasurer, Nashville, Tenn., and the payments made will be published from month to month.

THE CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC AT MERIDIAN.

President Beeson tells The Herald that his Conservatory of Music, which he has organized and equipped in connection with the East Mississippi Female College, is meeting with encouragement beyond all expectation. His idea that superior talent, the same that is employed in Cincinnati, Boston and other Northern conservatories, would draw patronage, has proven true beyond his anticipation. He has already engaged a very large number of students for his conservatory, some of whom have gone one or more years to Boston or Cincinnati. During his concert tour with his director they met a number of fine musicians, who were always the loudest in their praises of the talent he is employing. After hearing the pianist and talking with him many volunteered to say they had heard no such music since they left the Northern Conservatory. Some musicians who have heard Carl Faelton, of Boston, say they like the director of the Meridian Conservatory as well, and some have said they liked his playing better. These expressions come from musicians who are competent to judge. The violinist, Prof. Albert de Chandron, is equally as fine in his department. He has taught his special branches (which are the stringed instruments, such as violin, mandolin, guitar, etc.) in a large conservatory in Illinois, where he obtained a great reputation. He is a brilliant performer on the violin. Newspapers report his playing as something remarkable.

The vocalist is an excellent teacher with a lovely voice that always catches an audience.

These heads of the departments are assisted by able musicians, some of whom the director brought with him from the North. The methods used will be those of the best German conservatories, the director, Professor Conrad, being a native of Berlin, Germany, and graduate of Kullak's Conservatory.

With such an array of talent, no wonder the Meridian Conservatory is receiving such encouragement.

It will open with a grand concert by the teachers at the opening of college, which will be the last of October or first of November. The exact date will be announced later.

President Beeson says he has over a hundred boarders engaged for the East Mississippi Female College who are anxious to come as soon as the quarantine restrictions are raised. This is fine for Meridian.—Daily Herald, of Meridian.

EDUCATION.

It is so often said in print and speech that if a boy wants an education, he can get it by his own labor. Is this always so? Is it not very often not so? Ample buildings and apparatus, competent instructors and free tuition, great as these things are, do not pay bills for board and clothing and incidentals. The amount of these bills may seem small and within reach of any industrious young man; but it is large enough to block the way of the young man or woman, of sixteen to twenty years of age, who really can not pay it. And there are many such.

It is by no means true that all the boys capable and worthy of education attain that end by the force of their own genius and industry. Those who try and succeed get many side helps as they pass along. To hundreds who would enter the higher schools if they could there is no way open to meet necessary expenses. They have no resources at home. They belong to families whose daily bread must come from the daily toil. The earnings of this toil are consumed by the frugal supplies of plain living. It is no infrequent thing for a bright boy or girl of twelve or more years to be taken from the public or private school and put to work under the pinching demands of honest living. How is such a boy to get in sight of the hope of ever accomplishing a solid course of study? He hears only the voices of imperious necessity and sinks into submission, scarcely thinking that any other way is better, and not yet knowing the real meaning of life and the great advantages held by the educated mind. The mother of such a boy said to me the other day: "His wages pay our grocery bills." The parents of that boy would not take him from school, if they did not believe they must, nor would the boy be out of school but for filial service. It is quite likely that this turn in his school life will last but a short time; but with the many it is the permanent lot.

A brother preacher tells me that his son must leave college for the lack of funds. Two more years would carry him to graduation. But all resources fail, and he must seek work in some field, with little likelihood of saving enough in a few years to return and finish his college course. What a loss! Here is a young man of full age whose situation in life has allowed him limited opportunities in the common schools. Now he feels called to preach and has been recently licensed. He needs scholastic training and must have it. That is his purpose and effort. Perseverance will bring the achievement. But why leave him to struggle, unaided, with the most grinding and persistent difficulties, and allow him to spend twice the number of years needed for a consecutive course of study? Many of our young preachers who go untrained and without experience into the itinerant field would gladly go longer to school if they could. It is the regret of their lives that they could not. It will not do to say that these young men were not worth helping; that they lacked talent, energy, purpose, or "grit." As a whole, they are equal in these respects to the more fortunate collegians who only found other hands to open the way for them. The truth is, that there ought to be more help by encouragement to the poor boy who will take education, both by urging him to see its value and aiding him to gain its possession.

And there ought to be a systematic movement by the Conference to provide a fund for helping young preachers in their scholastic preparation for the itinerant work. The young man needs a definite source of aid.

TOPIC FOR OCTOBER.

ST. PAUL'S DOCTRINE OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

OCT. 31.—THE HOLY SPIRIT THE TEACHER.

(I. Cor. ii, 5-16; Eph. vi, 17.)

Because of sickness, we clip the following from the Nashville Advocate:

Our topic sets forth the Spirit as the Teacher, which clearly corresponds with the Word of God. This fact is presented in several ways:

1. He brings to mind the truth and applies it to the hearts of believers. It is to be inferred from the Scriptures that much our Savior said to his disciples would be forgotten, probably because they did not understand, and failed to cherish in their hearts. It is possible the Savior did not intend them to understand until after his resurrection. Still these things were important, and our Lord designed that they should be known and used, hence he said: "These things have I spoken unto you, being yet present with you; but the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." In illustration: When the Savior made his triumphal entry into Jerusalem the people took branches of palm trees and went forth to meet him, and cried: "Hosanna!" His disciples did not understand these things, and doubtless were amazed. "But when Jesus was glorified," and the Spirit had been poured out upon them, "then remembered they that these things were written of him." The significance of the Savior's words, "John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost," was not fully understood even after Pentecost, until the Spirit was given to the Gentiles. Peter was compelled to justify his course in preaching to a Gentile, and the ground of justification was "the Holy Ghost fell on them as on us at the beginning;" then said he: "Remembered I the word of the Lord." It is in this way "the Spirit takes the things of God and shows them unto us."

2. The Spirit opens the eyes of our understanding, and enables us to behold wondrous things in his law. Certainly we know not the method of his operations, and can not explain. Often we see things heretofore incomprehensible in a clear light, and though unable to explain, it is satisfactory. Only those of like experience can understand or enter into sympathy with us. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."

All our city fathers say: Use Salvation Oil, the greatest cure on earth for pain, for rheumatism and neuralgia. 25 cents.

Rev. GEO. W. F. PRICE, D. D., President.

Beginning with Nov. 1, 1897, Harper's Round Table will be published as an illustrated monthly magazine for youth, and will be sold for ten cents a copy—$1 a year, instead of $2 a year, as was the case when the paper was issued weekly. It will be greatly enlarged, and, in addition to three long serials for the coming year, it will contain many short stories in each number, besides a selection of articles on travel, sport, adventure, etc. There will also be money prizes for competitions in short stories, amateur photography and comic sketches.

To Whom It May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mul-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of sores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household.

Am 82 years old, hearing began to fail 20 years ago. For eleven years could only hear loud sounds could not hear conversation, had continual roaring in head, and sense of smell was entirely destroyed. Used Aerial Medication in '94, it did its work with the greatest satisfaction—the roaring ceased, discharge from head and throat stopped, hearing improved and for four years have been able to hear ordinary conversation and preaching. Sense of smell entirely restored, and cured of Catarrh and no indication of its return.—G. J. QUICK, Media, Illinois.

I had Catarrh twenty-one years, was deaf eighteen years, could not hear ordinary conversation, had roaring in ears, dreadful headaches, offensive discharge, bad taste and eyes so weak could not see to read. I used Aerial Medication in '92; it stopped the roaring and discharge, fully restored my hearing and for over five years my hearing has been perfect and am entirely free from Catarrh.—MRS. JANE BASTIC, Shelby, N. C.

Deaf Forty Years.

Had Catarrh in a very bad form forty years, which greatly affected my eyes, almost entirely destroyed my hearing, was confined to the house a great portion of the time, and coughed almost continually. Used Aerial Medication in '94, which fully restored my hearing; my eyes are well and I am entirely cured of Catarrh; can work and feel better than for forty years.—JOHN GARRIS, Flatbrookville, N. J.

When a child I met with an accident which caused a profuse offensive discharge from right ear, for 23 years had not heard a sound in that ear; was treated at two hospitals and by several physicians, was told I would never hear again as the drum was destroyed. Since using Aerial Medication can hear a watch tick distinctly in that ear, it is still improving, and the discharge has stopped entirely.—MRS. DAWES, 37 Ivory Place, Brighton, Eng.

EVER NEAR THEM.

BY WM. BRYANT.

Standing forth in life's rough way,
Father, guide them;
Oh! we know not what of harm
May betide them;
'Neath the shadow of thy wing,
Father, hide them;
Waking, sleeping, Lord, we pray,
Go beside them.

When in prayer they cry to thee,
Thou wilt hear them;
From the stains of sin and shame
Thou wilt clear them;
'Mid the quicksands and the rocks,
Thou wilt steer them;
In temptation, trial, grief,
Be thou near them.

Unto thee we give them up;
Lord, receive them;
In the world we know must be Much to grieve them—
Many striving oft and strong
To deceive them;
Trustful, in thy hands of love
We must leave them.

"THE OTHER HOME."

A lady who spent the Summer vacation months in a remote corner of New England relates, in a letter to a friend, a pleasant incident of Christian faithfulness and trust. She went one day to visit an old lady, who within the brief space of a year had been called upon to part with husband, daughter and brother—almost the last of her surviving kin.

There was, however, no sign of mourning, either in the aged woman's dress or manner, and her visitor wondered at her sweet cheerfulness of face and speech, her sunny, self-forgetful sympathy and evident peace of mind and heart. Presently the conversation turned to religious topics, in which the reality of God's love, the restfulness of faith and the hope of immortality were simply and in almost child-like acceptance dwelt upon by the good woman.

The visitor finally said: "Mrs. J., you have given me more hope and cheer in the half hour I have talked with you than I think I have ever received from any other Christian friend. And yet you have been called upon suddenly to bear a burden of sorrow and bereavement, such as falls to the lot of few of God's children."

"Yes," replied the dear old lady, "husband, brother and child have been taken from me—and yet it does not seem as if they had gone very far away. When I was a child, my older sister, whom I loved dearly, married, and went to live in a house about a mile from our home. At first I almost cried my eyes out; but one day mother said:

"'Why, Emmie! Don't you see that Sarah hasn't left us? She has only gone down the road to make another home where we can go—a home as full of love and welcome as this. Now you have two homes instead of one. Come, put on your sunbonnet and run down to the other home.'

"After I had accepted that view you may be sure no more tears were shed. Just in this way I think of my dear ones who have left this earthly house. They haven't gone far—simply just over to the other home. And before long I am going to put on my sunbonnet, just as I did when I was a little girl, and go to see them."

The wrinkled face was lighted by a smile of unspeakable sweetness, and the aged eyes shone with wistful joy, as they looked away into that blue sky where faith sees its "many mansions."

Death would be robbed of its terror, bereavement of its pang, mourning of its tears if we all had this trusting woman's conception of the life beyond the grave. Her faith was based upon the Great Teacher's declarations that death is not a narrowing, but a widening, of the horizon of life and love—the multiplying of those ties which unite us with the great household of God.—Presbyterian.

WHAT FRANKLIN ACCOMPLISHED.

Lord Jeffrey wrote of the American inventor and philosopher, "He never lost sight of common sense." Philip G. Hubert, Jr., in a sketch of Franklin in his recent book, "Inventors," says: "Nothing in nature failed to interest him," and a catalogue of his achievements, showing his activity and resource, is conclusive proof of the truth of both statements:

Franklin inspired and established the Junto, the pleasantest and most useful American club of which we have knowledge.

He founded the Philadelphia Library, parent of a thousand libraries; which marked the beginning of an intellectual movement of endless good to the whole country.

He first turned to great account the engine of advertising, indispensable in all modern business.

HALL'S Vegetable Sicilian HAIR RENEWER

Drives off old age; restores lost color to the hair; gives it the richness and gloss of youth; prevents baldness. No dandruff.

He published "Poor Richard," a record of homely wisdom of such shape that hundreds of thousands of readers were made better and stronger by it.

He created the postoffice system of America, and was the first champion of a reformed spelling.

He invented the Franklin stove, which economized fuel, and he suggested valuable improvements in ventilation and the building of chimneys.

He robbed thunder of its terrors, and lightning of some of its power to destroy.

He founded the American Philosophical Society, the first organization in America of the friends of science.

He suggested the use of mineral manures, introduced the basket willow, promoted the early culture of silk, and pointed out the advantages of white clothing in Summer.

He measured the temperature of the Gulf Stream, and discovered that northeast storms may begin in the southwest.

He pointed out the advantage of building ships in water-tight compartments, taking the hint from the Chinese, and first urged the use of oil as a means of quieting dangerous seas.

Besides these great achievements, accomplished largely as recreation from his life-work as economist and statesman, Benjamin Franklin helped the whole race of inventors by a remark that has been of incalculable value and comfort to theorists and dreamers the world over. When some one spoke contemptuously of Montgolfier's balloon experiments, and asked of what use they were, the great American replied in words now historic: "Of what use is a new-born babe."—Youth's Companion.

MANNERS FOR BOYS.

In the street, hat lifted when saying "Good-by," or "How do you do?" Also, when offering a lady a seat or acknowledging a favor.

Keep step with anyone with whom you walk. Always precede a lady up stairs, but ask if you shall precede her in going through a crowd or public place.

At the street door, hat off the moment you step into a private hall or office.

Let a lady pass first always, unless she asks you to precede her.

In the parlor, stand till every lady in the room, also older people, are seated.

Rise, if a lady enters the room after you are seated, and stand till she takes a seat.

Look people straight in the face when they are speaking to you.

Let ladies pass through the door first, standing aside for them.

In the dining-room, take your seat after ladies and elders.

Never play with your knife, ring, or spoon.

Do not take your napkin up in a bunch in your hand.

Eat as fast or slow as others, and finish the course when they do.

Do not ask to be excused before the others, unless the reason is imperative.

Rise when ladies leave the room and stand till they are out.

If all go together, the gentlemen stand by the door till ladies pass.

Special rules for the mouth—smacking the lips and all noises should be avoided.

If obliged to take anything from the mouth, cover it with the hand or napkin.

Always knock at a bed-room door, or at that of any private room.

These rules are imperative. There are many other little things that add to the grace of a gentleman, but to break any of these is almost unpardonable.—Christian Intelligencer.

A WORD WITH MOTHERS.

When a mother grows careless about her appearance at home, she is either declining in health, or her heart's love for her husband and children is lukewarm. How many hours did she spend in personal toilet attentions before she took up the sacredness of marriage, when her lover came "a-courtin' and admirin'"? Often and often these same dressy girls develop into veritable slouches after marriage, and why is it? Mother, why do you "dress up" when looking for company or go a-visiting? And why do you show the very worst side of yourself to your immediate home circle?

The children appreciate pretty gowns and smooth coiffures far more than you think; then why go about "arrayed in calico and loose hair," when these wide-awake critics are so alert to observe the least error in your appearance?

Our little ones appreciate a neat attire and smiling face; then mother should by no means deny them this pleasure, and reserve her best gowns and best smiles for the world, who only half appreciate them. I came from my dressing-room one warm afternoon, dressed in a plain, neat wrapper, but the collar and cuffs were of deep red, and also wore a dainty bow in my coiffure. My three-year-old boy, glancing up from a story-book, said admiringly, "Mamma dot a new dress with fancy work on it," and he was pleased, yet only a baby. It does pay to dress up at home. By dressing up I don't mean for a woman to wear out her best church or party dress in the kitchen, but try and always appear well dressed, even in calico and a gingham apron. Let the garments be clean and neat, pin on a little bow at the throat, have the hair shining and well arranged, not curled and fluffed like an actress, and the husband as well as the children will be pleased and full of praise for the woman who regards it her duty to look her best for dear loved ones.—Womankind.

WHAT SIXTY CENTS DID.

According to a Texas paper an investment of sixty cents in whisky, by a young man named Dean, in the year 1869, cost Fannin county, in time and money, more than the revenue arising from the whisky traffic for five years amounted to. Dean, inflamed with his whisky, shot and killed Dan Coulter. Then the McDonalds shot and killed Dean. For this offense they were arrested, and after continuing the case several times, were tried and convicted of manslaughter, and sentenced to the penitentiary. While in jail they were rescued by their friends breaking open the jail and liberating them. Taking it together, this sixty cents' worth of whisky killed two men, made one widow, caused two men to be incarcerated and kept in jail at an enormous expense to Fannin county, and caused trouble to the families and friends of those two men, and then the expense of witnesses and trials in court, with loss of time to the sheriff and posse, but Fannin county to the expense of not less than ten thousand dollars.—The Christian.

BE COURTEOUS.

If you wish to please, dear girls, cultivate the charming grace of courtesy. Do not let a false idea of dignity and good breeding seal your lips to such kindly words as shall brighten other lives. Thanks are due to the servant who conscientiously tries to follow your command, to the shop-girl who patiently endeavors to match your silk or wool, or to those who serve you in any capacity. You refuse alms to the beggar on the street whom your principles may not allow you to countenance; but you may do it in a way and with such fitting words as shall arouse any latent spark of manliness, and make him long to be worthy of respect.

Do not be afraid to speak to the one whom chance may have thrown by your side during an hour's travel. Help the tired mother to soothe her heavy baby; lend your book or paper to the poor girl who has perhaps had no money to buy one. So shall you one day hear the blessed words, "Ye have done it unto me."—Central Methodist.

There is no art, cosmetic or system of physical culture or gymnastics that can do a thousandth part as much towards adding dignity, strength and nobility of expression to a man's looks as can and does a great purpose, a righteous will, a devotion to principle and an enthusiasm that can not be quenched. The soul that is filled with pure thoughts and a love for humanity never fails to fashion the features of its individual possessor into its own likeness.—Westerly Tribune.

A sculptor once showed a visitor his studio. It was full of gods. One was very curious. The face was concealed by being covered with hair, and there were wings on each foot.

"What is his name?" said the spectator.

"Opportunity," was the reply.

"Why is his face hidden?"

"Because men seldom know him when he comes to them."

"Why has he wings on his feet?"

"Because he is soon gone, and once gone can never be overtaken."—Anon.

STUPIDITY ABOUT EATING.

Acting with different charity organizations, I am often treated to unpleasant surprises. In all large cities enough food is wasted every year to keep many families. Last year hundreds of families in this city were given rice, hominy, cornmeal, beans, coffee, sugar, and a large piece of salt meat. In a majority of cases the mothers of these families objected to the hominy, rice and cornmeal. Sometimes it was because the children would not eat it, sometimes because they did not know how to cook it, or they would "like something more substantial." To such families methods of economy of which we are glad to learn would not be worthy a second thought. There are people who practice these small economies that they may have something to give to families who would rather starve than resort to just such economical measures. What do you think of a poor young man eating eighteen eggs at one meal? What do you think of a mother who gives to each of her four boys four eggs for his breakfast, the oldest boy being under ten years of age? These are examples of what is met from day to day among the poor. I like to read the record of such work as ours to such mothers, and try to make them understand there is a duty in learning and practicing economy. What a blessing it would be if schools could be established in the poorer neighborhoods whereby these women might be educated in such matters!—Housekeeper.

PURE AIR.

Major-General Drayson, of the English army, has made a special study of the art of breathing, and is now free from coughs, colds, sore throat and other ailments from which he suffered as a young man. He declares food and liquid insignificant in comparison with air in the support of life. A man may live for days without food, but he dies in a few minutes without air. Rapid breathing in pure air, making forty or fifty deep inhalations per minute (the usual number is about twenty), is the panacea for the immediate recovery from headache, toothache, pains in the heart, restlessness and sleeplessness. He recommends for the latter walking about the room, to make sure of not breathing the same air a second time. He considers it an advantage in some cases to place a handkerchief over the nostrils and filter the air as it passes through the mouth. By continued lack of proper oxidation the blood becomes permanently bad, and tissue of the same character is formed from it, with the result of impairing the health.—Selected.

HOW TO FIND OUT.

Fill a bottle or common glass with urine and let it stand twenty four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys. When urine stains linen it is evidence of kidney trouble. Too frequent desire to urinate or pain in the back, is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

WHAT TO DO.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp Root, the great kidney remedy, fulfills every wish in relieving pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passages. It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to get up many times during the night to urinate. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine, you should have the best. SANCTIFICATION.

Sanctification presupposes the sinful condition of the object to be sanctified. Sanctification, in a Bible sense, means the setting apart to the work of God, or humanity being fitted for the Master's use. God, in his supreme love for man, has done all that he could consistently do for the setting apart of the human race to do the work of himself until there is an act upon the part of humanity. God did this in the gift of his Son. The work of sanctification is wrought jointly. This joint work is based upon our free moral agency and God's power. We, as sinful creatures, must repent, or turn away from our sins, and turn to God, before we can set ourselves apart to the work of God. In the act of repentance we agree to give ourselves wholly to the work of God, thus setting ourselves apart exclusively for his service. This we understand to be the human side of sanctification. (Lev. xi, 44.) Christ also sanctified himself. (John xvii, 19.) Sanctification is both instantaneous and gradual. Our setting ourselves apart to the work of God is an instantaneous act, and our keeping ourselves in the work of God is a continuous, gradual work, without a moment's intermission from the time we enter upon the service of God. This is gradual sanctification, the ground of which is complete consecration. 1 Tim. v, 22, "Keep thyself pure." I Cor. ix, 27, "But I keep under my body and bring it into subjection." All that man can do in sanctification is to set himself apart, and keep himself set apart to the work of God.

The divine side of sanctification is wrought in regeneration. The penitent sinner, having moved to, and having, so far as he could, set himself apart to the work of God, and looking up to God through faith, confessing his sin to God, God sends the Holy Spirit to wrought the work of regeneration. The work of regeneration is instantaneous; therefore, the divine side of sanctification is instantaneous in the same sense in which regeneration is, and is gradual in the sense in which God pilots and helps us to keep ourselves unspotted from the world.

Regeneration is made up of purification and sanctification, and these being wrought, we are left in a state of holiness. Purification is the cleansing work of regeneration—that is, our sinful appetites and sinful desires are extracted, and we are cleansed from all sin, "for the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin." (I. John i, 7.) We are, then, purified, cleansed and justified from all sin and its penalty. Simultaneously with this cleansing work God sets us apart for his service, to do his work, and for his glory. Thus we are sanctified and set apart to serve God. This being done, we are in a state of holiness, and God enters into our heart in the person of his Spirit, to dwell and to keep it. This God will do as long as we will let him. First, in repentance we sanctify ourselves for God's service, and God, in the act of regeneration, purifies us, that we may be fitted for his service. Both are instantaneous sanctification. Second, we keep ourselves under subjection to God, and God lives in our heart, and keeps it purified. Both are gradual sanctification; therefore, sanctification is instantaneous and gradual to him who finds and pursues it. Then we are adopted into the family of God, and that in the same moment in which we are regenerated. Thus we are made a member of the holy family. We must of necessity be holy before God will adopt us into his family. Then the steps to be taken in going from a state of sin to a state of holiness are: First, repentance; second, faith; third, justification; fourth, regeneration; fifth, adoption. This done, we are in a state of holiness, but not in a state of sinless perfection. Nor will we ever get into a state of sinless perfection in this life. But if we are holy, then there is no room for a second work of grace, or a second blessing, as some are pleased to call it. There can be no second blessing till there is a second sin committed, for which we will need a second work of grace. From this state of holiness we are exhorted to go on to perfection. Some have endeavored to make the terms sanctification, holiness and Christian perfection synonymous, but they are not and can not be synonymous, since each expresses different states. There is an essential difference between holiness and Christian perfection. Holiness is a state of being cleansed from all sin, and Christian perfection is a state in which it is possible to keep cleansed from all sin, God helping us. There is also a difference between Christian perfection and sinless perfection. Christian perfection is a state obtainable in this life, in the which it is possible to live without sin, and which we are all exhorted to go on to. This state we, as Methodist preachers, say we are going on to in taking the obligation preparatory to our ordination to the office of a deacon. Sinless perfection means a state in which a man can not sin if he wants to. This state is not attainable in this life, for it is equal to and includes godly perfection, which man can not obtain to this life. Adam and Eve were not in a state of sinless perfection, for they both sinned. Some of the angels in heaven left their own habitation, and they are called the fallen angels; therefore, we need not expect to reach a state of sinless perfection. This belongs to God only, but we, as Christians, ought to be perfected in this life, and must be if we ever get to heaven. God is the grand center of perfection, from whom all perfection emanates, and around whom all perfect beings must revolve. Man can not be as perfect as God is, in love, in justice, in truth, in mind, in knowledge, and in power; but we can be perfect as Christians.

As it requires a co-operation of human agency and divine power to sanctify a human being fully, and as holiness is the state in which the sanctifying and regenerating grace of God leaves us, so it requires the co-operation of human agency and divine power for a soul to go on to perfection. We may look and pray till the judgment day, and if we do not co-operate with the Spirit of God, which we received in regeneration, we will never be made perfect; and if we do, we will get blessings, not a "second blessing," but blessings by the hundreds and thousands through life; therefore, let us go on to perfection.

THE OLD SUPERANNUATE.

You ask me how I like superannuating. I can not say that I ever superannuated. It is not a relation I ever thought to take. I never prepared for it; I never asked for it. I was earnestly advised to take it, and urged to do so, by reasons I had never thought of, and do not think much of yet. I said: "Do what you think best. Tell the Committee on Relations they will find me here." No such committee ever came. No examination was ever made as to my physical or mental ability to do the work of a traveling preacher. While waiting for the committee to see me, somehow the Conference voted on my case. While thinking how I should state my case to the committee, a brother came and said, "You are superannuated." I am sure the brethren voted in love and Christian tenderness towards me.

Beginning back before I was twenty-one years of age, I labored industriously to learn how to preach and how to do the work of a pastor. I never attained to high position in the pulpit, but I made diligent study of the Sacred Scriptures, reading up, in a measure the authorities on doctrine. I came to some understanding of the great cardinal doctrines of the Bible as laid down in the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, and as illustrated and exemplified in the lives and epistles of the apostles. With faithfulness I tried to cultivate the tact and talent to make myself understood in the delivery of these great and precious truths to the congregations.

Early in my ministry I realized that I had but little adaptation to the pastoral work of a preacher. I was too unsocial, and enjoyed retirement and seclusion too well. Long and earnestly did I strive to overcome these seeming constitutional habits. I did learn much about this line of work, did good in it, built up and retained my congregations by it, and am sure of leading some souls to Christ and full salvation in cultivating this part of the Lord's vineyard. The leaving my old circuit, the going up to Conference for a new charge, the leaving Conference for a new field of labor had worn so deeply into the ruts of habit as to seem second to nature. Conference has lost its old attraction, no reports to make, no statement to be made of the status of a charge, no new circuit to prepare for, no new congregation with greetings, no new set of kind sisters to welcome me to a new home.

In all these years gone by I never saved up any money. From first to last spent more than I received. Started poor, learned specially no business by which to make a living, left the active work poorer than when I began; the allowance handed me at Conference spent; horse, buggy, and outfit, with some borrowed money, all spent to live. They now say of me, "He has money; the church supports him." On this the doctor presents his bill; I pay it—the first I ever paid. One brings buttermilk, and says, "I charge you only ten cents per gallon." One brings potatoes, and says: "I charge you fifty cents per bushel. I have to grub his them. Will not charge you a cent for grubbing." On some other lines of trade I get a discount.

The questions are constantly coming up: "What can I do? What can I find to do?" I had long been retarding off every extraneous and unbecoming feature in my character, so as to stand a truly round man, well fitted to the great work of my life, when suddenly I am dropped into a square hole. The incongruity of my adaptation to the place is too palpable to be misunderstood. I do feel so sensibly that I do not fit the place. But I never loved the brethren as I do now; I never had my sympathies with them as now; I never felt so associated with them in their difficult and varied fields of labor as I now do; I never enjoyed daily seasons of prayer for the preachers of the North Mississippi Conference as in these days. I am sure some of them have felt the touch of this sympathy, whether able to recognize the heart that touched theirs or not.

BUFKIN—Bro. JOE BUFKIN was born near Brown's Wells, Coplah county, Miss., Jan 3, 1860. He was married to Miss Sallie Beacham in 1883. There are two children living—a daughter and a son, aged thirteen and ten. He joined the church eleven years ago, but for the last year or more he was very decided in his religious life. He was a good citizen, and had a happy home. He attended the weekly prayer meeting Wednesday night, the thirteenth instant, and on his return home, near the church, he was fired on by one or two persons. Four bullets entered his body. He lived about a half hour. His two children and a number of friends were present. He died at the house of Mr. Thos. Beacham, near Cassyville, Miss. We have a sad time in the community. I will not write more here, as the court will deal with the case.

We commend his bereaved wife and children and all loved ones to our merciful God.

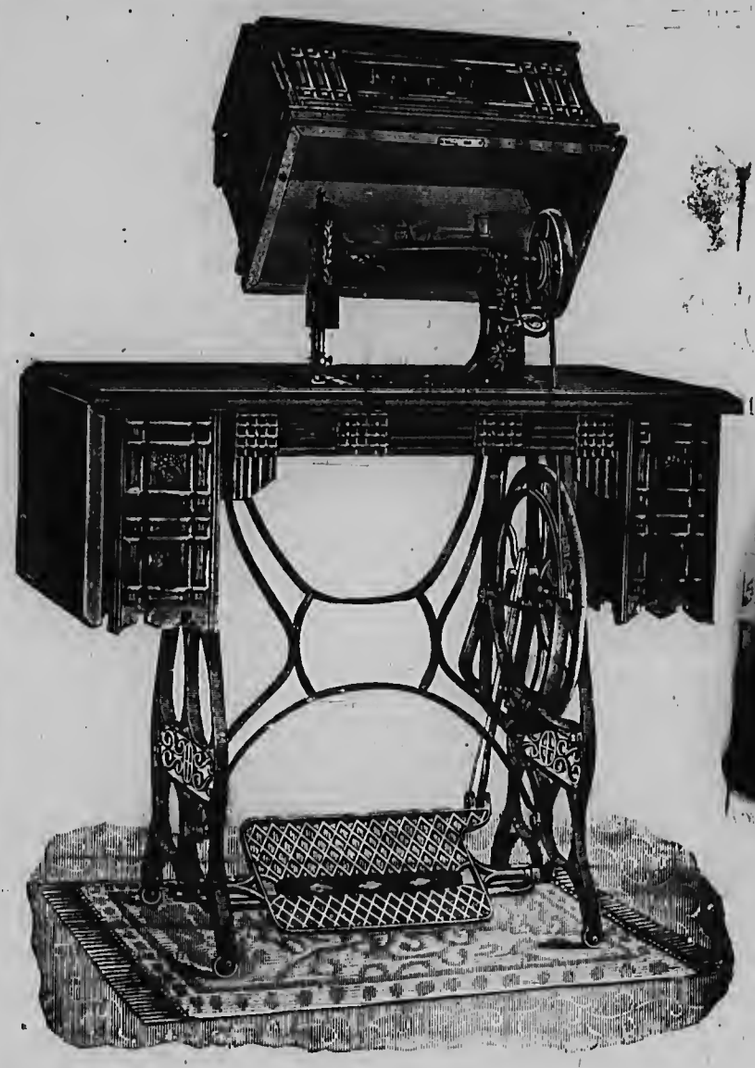
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.



The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take-up, convenient foot rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearing polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF THREADING—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell, without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

OUR OFFER.

To anyone, not now a subscriber to this paper, who will send us $19, we will send the machine and the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE one year. To old subscribers we make the following offer: Pay your subscription to April, '99, and send $17 additional, and we will send you the machine. This price does not include freight.

We allow purchaser to test the machine for ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

TO AGENTS:

We will send this machine free to any preacher or other person who will send us twenty new subscribers with the cash—$40. Address

The burning of a bridge on the Southern Pacific railroad, at a point east of Lake Charles, on Friday night, shortly after a mass meeting of the citizens of Calcasieu parish had declared that trains on the Southern Pacific would not under any circumstances be permitted to enter the parish, is significant.

Prince Peter Krapotkine, the Russian anarchist, is going to New York to stir up things, and will address a meeting in that city next Sunday. He is now in Washington, where he is to deliver an address before the Geographical Society. Prince Peter belongs to one of the highest families in Russia, and was brought up in the imperial palace of the Czar.

The adoption of electricity for the propulsion of street railway cars has been extraordinarily rapid in the past ten years. It has driven out horses and mules and has prevented the extension of cable lines. It will finally supersede them all. Ten years ago there were less than 100 miles of electric railway. To-day there are 14,000 miles of such road.

NEWTON, MISS.

On Sunday, the third instant, our presiding elder, Bro. W. W. Simmons, gave us two splendid sermons, and after holding our fourth Quarterly Conference left for his home in Forest in the afternoon of Monday. Bro. D. L. Barr, of the Presbyterian Church, and myself decided to continue the services as a union meeting during the week. We held the services in our church. The interest increased every day, and congregations grew larger; so we could not find the place to stop until at the end of two weeks—then with the largest congregation we had ever had during the meeting. Perfect harmony existed, and hearty co-operation was given by our people. Some of our oldest members say there has not been such a meeting held here in twenty years. We received twenty-two by profession and five by certificate. Bro. Barr received four on profession.

Many of our Baptist friends took great interest in the meeting, but the pastor of that church did not attend a single service. We have a ladies' cottage prayer meeting held weekly that is doing much good. They announce at each meeting the topic and leader for the succeeding meeting.

Our community was greatly shocked on the fifth instant by the sudden death of Miss Carrie Watts, the niece of Dr. Watts. At 4 A. M. they discovered that she was quite sick and called in the doctor, but in spite of all that could be done she fell asleep at 8 P. M. of the same day. Her life was consistent, and she gave us every assurance that all was well. Her father, Mr. Thos. Watts, was at work twenty miles away, and when he came it was a pathetic scene as he tried to get her to recognize him. May this dispensation of Providence be the means of bringing him to Christ! D. P. BRADFORD.

W. P. AND H. M. S.

The Annual Meeting of the W. P. and H. M. Society of the North Mississippi Conference, which was announced for Oct. 9-12, then postponed indefinitely, will be held in Winona, Miss., Nov. 13-16, 1897.

Let us have a full attendance, that we may consider well and plan wisely for another year. Let those societies which have not forwarded their money for our scholarship send it up to the meeting. Above all, let us come asking a great blessing upon us. Mrs. D. B. Turner is our corresponding secretary here. Send your name to her. Yours faithfully,

MRS. J. B. STONE,
Pres. W. P. and H. M. S., North Miss. Conf.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block Rochester, N. Y.

Any preacher who will look to the common concerns of life and to the phenomena of the natural world for his pulpit illustrations, will find that he will attract and hold with ease the attention of the people. All persons are familiar with these things, and when they are used in simple form of words to point great moral and spiritual truths, they are as effective as any illustrations which could be used.—Pittsburg Advocate.

We recommend the Piney Woods Dairy, 2050 Magazine St., to all who desire good country milk delivered in bottles.

THE THUNDER-STORM.

BY BISHOP J. C. KEENER.

Thunder, in the mountains;
Thunder, on the main;
Pealing in the distance—
Coming back again!

See! the lightning flashing,
Leaping from the cloud;
Hear the forest crashing,
Beneath the tempest loud!

O mighty rolling thunder,
O'er sky, and land, and sea!
Splitting trees asunder—
Lord, is it after me?

Thunder! sounding in my ears;
Thunder! rousing all my fears;
Thunder! rolling down the sky;
Thunder, tells me God is nigh.

Cherry Wild, Oct. 29, 1897.

GOD DEMANDS FRUIT.

Many advantages had the barren fig tree. Separated from the adjoining land, it was planted in the vineyard, and not out on the road-side, nor on the common, nor in the depths of the wilderness. Planted in the vineyard, this tree aptly illustrates the highly favorable situation of a Christian people, church, congregation, or individual dweller in a Christian land. Some certain men and women have thrown around them, by reason of their particular situation, conditions very favorable to their spiritual growth. By birth into a religious family, daily to breathe the atmosphere of a religious home; the sitting every Sabbath at the feet of a converted, deeply pious, painstaking teacher in the Sabbath-school, and the habit of life at home and school and college, forced upon him by reason of his being the well-looked-after son of pious parents—thus has many a man been, as it were, planted in the vineyard, in that, like the fig tree from the adjoining land, he has been separated from much of evil by the prayers, precepts, example and training of religious parents.

The barren fig tree was protected by walls or fences. Though planted in the vineyard, yet it was needful for thorough protection that it should be hedged in from the wild lands around. Thus it was safe from the destroying beasts and prowling thieves, and might, unhindered, go on to fulfill the legitimate end of its existence—the bringing forth of much fruit. So the man who is planted in a Christian community or family is walled up by wholesome restraints and wise laws. There are rules and regulations that he is compelled to observe, and which conduce to the protection and highest well-being of his body and soul. There are, no doubt, men who, though not Christians in the Bible acceptation of that term, yet are respectable citizens, and passably moral and decent members of society, almost altogether because of the promptly and thoroughly executed laws of the homes where they were nurtured, and the laws and sentiment of the community where they live. Laws not only enacted, but executed, are wonderfully productive of the morality and proper living of men; and a home where laws are laid down, and with kindly firmness enforced to the letter, are the training-schools for manly men and womanly women. There must be fences, hedges and walls; and yet, like the fig tree, men are often found barren, though planted in the vineyard and protected by healthy laws. Human nature needs more than mere planting and fencing. We find that the barren fig tree was cultivated with much care and labor. Its situation, being planted in the vineyard, a place set apart for that very purpose, unmistakably indicates that it had received at the gardener's hands much care and attention. This supposition is strengthened by the fact that the owner of the vineyard came three times to the tree, each time looking for fruit. Disappointed the first time, no doubt special orders were given that extra care should be bestowed upon that tree. In the same way, are there not many who are barren, and yet from whom God has very justly been expecting fruit, and much fruit, by reason of the wonderful amount of religious cultivation that has been expended on them? From earliest youth taught in the Scriptures and the precepts there laid down exemplified before their eyes all these years in the consistent living of the father who led at the family altar, and the mother who, at her knee, taught them the Lord's Prayer, and times without number spoke lovingly to them of the dear Savior; made the subject of special prayer by their Sunday-school teacher and by God's minister, whose earnest warnings and warm pleadings in and out of the sacred desk have at times rung through their souls, awaking longings after the life divine; not only cultivated by the unwearied efforts of father, mother, friend and minister, but, powerfully moved upon by the direct influence of the Holy Spirit, they have been made to realize themselves as sinners, altogether vile and justly condemned to death eternal, and have thus, in a measure, come to feel their need of Jesus Christ—all this, and possibly much more of spiritual cultivation, have they received, and yet to-day the most they can claim, if they can even truly do that, is that they are moral men. Likely they may have been admitted to membership in some branch of Christ's church, and hence have at their command all the means of grace which, if in these means Christ be sought by faith, must lead them into a real spiritual life; yet, it may nevertheless be true that nothing of all these things has brought them to a saving knowledge of the Son of God. They may have the leafage of honesty and purity of private life, of morality of character, and even of a public profession of religion, and yet, if they have not come to live the actual life of faith of the Son of God, being hid with Christ in God, they can not yet have borne the least particle of genuine fruit, and are still barren in the sight of God. Just look at this, "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin;" and hence, if they are not living a life of faith, all their best works, though commendable on general grounds, avail them nothing in response to God's demand for fruit. Is it not a marvel that, notwithstanding such great advantages, so many have yet nothing to show but leaves! Great advantages naturally excite great expectations, and we should never forget that where "much is given, much shall be," not only expected, but "required." There are unconverted men in all our communities who, by reason of what God has done in vain for them, remind us of the language of Christ in the eleventh chapter of Matthew: "Woe unto thee, Chorazin! woe unto thee, Bethsaida! for if the mighty works, which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes. But I say unto you it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment than for you. And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shall be brought down to hell: for, if the mighty works, which have been done in thee, had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day. But I say unto you, That it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment than for you." Why Chorazin? Why Bethsaida? Why Capernaum? Why New Orleans, or St. Louis, or New York? Why, respectable sinner? Why, boasting moralist? Why, formal professor? Why, ungodly church and non-church members? Why this doom to fall on any such? Because they have been exalted to heaven in religious privileges, and their fall must, therefore, be the deeper damnation. Woe to the man who goes down to his grave impenitent and unbelieving from the training of a pious home, from the side of a devoted Christian wife, from a land of Bibles and churches, from under the warnings and pleadings of earnest men of God, from the strivings and woolngs of the Holy Ghost, and, as may be the case with some, from the very altar-place of the church of God. For a man to remain barren when God demands of him repentance, faith and fruit, and throws around him in wonderful profusion all that shall enable him to meet the demand, is to fill all heaven with amazement and all hell with delight.

Now, we ask what returns God expects of men for his care, labor and love in their behalf? Just fruit. He looks for the fruits of penitence, faith and personal holiness. His declarations are: "Follow peace with all men, and holiness without which no man shall see the Lord." "As ye have yielded your members servants to uncleanness and to iniqnity unto iniquity, even so now yield your members servants to righteousness unto holiness." "Being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life." We are commanded to "put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness." Paul says: "God has not called us unto uncleanness, but unto holiness." John says: "Whosoever is born of God sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not." Is it not reasonable that, would a man be happy and fitted for heaven, he must be made pure in heart and wholly rid of sin, which makes him unhappy here, and will shut him out of heaven, for no sin can enter there? Would you be rid of a cancer on your breast, you must have it cut out by the roots, and every root. So with sin, more deadly than any cancer, for, while the cancer destroys the body, sin, if not eradicated, will forever destroy the soul. Hence, the great love of God is seen in this: that he does not seek to palliate, but to root out sin in man and give him a clean heart. "If we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin."

God undoubtedly expects the fruit of Christian activity. Some one has said, and truly: "You might as well attempt to check an earthquake as to prevent the going forth of the spirit of holiness from a soul washed with blood or a church refined by fire." A real Christian is a live man in the church, his activity never depending on whether he likes the preacher or the preaching, or has in his own hands the reins of rule and power. The motive for his steady zeal is the God-born flame of love for souls that burn with quenchless ardor at all times. Whether he likes or dislikes "the earthen vessel" who is sent to minister in holy things, he forgets not to pray fervently for him. Whether the gospel be sounded from a silver trumpet or a ram's horn, he thanks God and works with a will—not for man, nor simply for church, but for Jesus' sake, and that he himself may not die spiritually for lack of hard work in the Master's vineyard. We can not believe that God calls any man to mere spurts of zeal, and every soundly converted and thoroughly consecrated believer will be found working through light and dark, good and evil report, wet and dry, heat and cold, Sunday after Sunday and day after day, as long as he lives. Here is just the way the whole matter develops. Repenting and believing, we are saved. Crying out like David: "Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean; wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow. Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me," God hears our prayer; and again, in the words of David: "Then will I teach transgressors thy ways; and sinners shall be converted unto thee." Filled with the "spirit of power, and of love, and of a sound mind," we are expected of God to be ever at work in his vineyard. Our Father surely demands of his children not to be barren, but fruitful trees unto his glory in this their day and generation. With very many religious advantages has he signally blessed the Christians of this land and age. Are we using these? Are we growing, fruitful trees? Alas! are not very many like the tree of which a writer speaks? He says: "I once occupied a room looking out upon a garden beautifully arranged. When the Winter was passed, I watched with intense interest the effects of the return of Spring on the trees and plants. One tree remained brown and leafless, while all around it were putting on their beautiful robes. One day the gardener came to this tree and looked at it with an expression of sympathy. He seemed to wish to help it put forth foliage. His visits were repeated several times; new care was bestowed upon it; frequent tests were applied to ascertain whether it still lived. Days passed, and it was only becoming more hideous, as its companions grew more beautiful. My own sympathy for it sensibly declined with my hope for its recovery; it was become so manifest that it cumbered the ground. At length I observed the gardener come and give it one more earnest inspection. He shook his head as if hope had died in his heart, and his lips pronounced its doom. Soon he returned with his axe. Every blow upon it excited my sympathy, but satisfied my judgment. And when he cut it down, dragged it out and cast it on the fire, I said, 'It is right; but it is awfully symbolical of the doom of Christless men.'"

All men are by nature "dead in trespasses and in sins;" yet any man who will hear the voice and follow the lead of the Holy Spirit will be made a living soul, a new creature in Christ Jesus, and be planted and flourish in the vineyard of God. Repenting of every sin, and by faith laying hold on Christ, any poor sinner may, in that very moment of time, feel the life power of the Son of God throughout his dead self, giving him not only to put forth the leafage of a public profession of religion, but to show forth in his godly walk and conversation that he has been, in reality, rescued from his lost estate and planted into that new and spiritual life which is of God in Christ. When God, by his Spirit, witnesses to our sonship, he calls us to service by laying upon us the mandate, "Go, work to-day in my vineyard." The Master said, "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples." JNO. T. SAWYER.

THE SALE OF METHODIST CHURCH PROPERTY.

Methodist Churches—in the State of Mississippi, at least—not being incorporated, and not coming within the provisions of the law in reference to religious societies, because the members of no Methodist Church can "act as a separate organization, or be a distinct and independent society at each place," for these reasons: Methodist Churches in this State generally convey, or have conveyed, their property to trustees, who hold the property as the agents or appointees of the church.

Now, the question is: Can the trustees, together with the pastor of such a church, convey or sell the church property and convey a valid title to the purchaser without the consent of the church? Can they make such sale, taking it for granted that the church will approve their conduct; or must the sale of the church property be the act of the church, effectuated by the trustees as the agents of the church?

In discussing this proposition, it will be remarked, in the first place, that these trustees are under no bond for the faithful disposition of the proceeds of the sale of church property. And if they can act, as is first above suggested, they might, without consulting the church, sell all of its property, and use the proceeds of sale for their own benefit; and if they were insolvent, the church would lose all its property, and that, too, by a transaction with reference to which they were not even consulted. If such be Methodist law, it is high time it was changed.

On the general principles of law: Trustees can not sell the trust property without the consent of the cestuis que trust; or if they should make a breach of their trust and sell the trust property, the purchaser would take the property cum onere—that is, he would take it burdened with the trust, and would hold it as church property, just as the original trustees held. This has long been the doctrine of courts of chancery in reference to illegal sales by the trustees; and we at once recognize the wisdom and justice of this rule of law. It is wise, because such trustees, being without bond, if they could, by an illegal sale, convey the title to the property discharged of the trust, then they could sell and convey a man's property without the consent of the cestuis que trust. And the law is just, because the conscience of the purchaser is effected, and the law will not suffer him to make profit by his own wrong. Another principle of the courts of equity is especially vindicated in the case of the illegal sale of church property by the trustees thereof, since the purchaser must, from the very nature of the case, know that he is buying church property, and that his vendor is not the owner of the beneficial interest in the property; and he is chargeable with not merely construction, but actual notice of the status of the rem. But if it be said that in a large church an enforcement of this rule of law would be attended with inconvenience, then the trustees should be placed under bond, and this without any reflection on the honesty of the trustees, for bonds are intended as a protection as much against a man's misfortunes as against his dishonesty; and it would be against that diligence in business which the Scriptures enjoin for the church to allow their trustees to make sale of her property without first giving bond, so as to protect the church against the misfortune or dishonesty of agents. But, then, there is no practical inconvenience in the church's managing and directing its trustees as to the disposition of church property. The church might, by a vote, signify its wish and desire in reference to this matter as much so as in reference to any other; and one great benefit of action by the whole church is, that it prevents private schemes and sinister purposes which, under action by the trustees alone, would never appear. It would be perfectly easy, under action by the trustees alone, for some trustee who wished to make a sale of the church property, in order that he might reap advantage therefrom, to collude with his co-trustees and sell the church property, and either pocket the money or purchase some undesirable property, and turn the same over to the church in lieu of the valuable property which he had sold; or if the proposition to sell originates with the pastor, he and his trustees could sell the property, and then, when his time expired, the next minister and the trustees might sell, and thus the members of the church, like the Jews of old, would have a moving tabernacle. These trustees are merely the holders of a dry legal title. The trust is a passive trust, and they have no business even to be originating propositions to sell the church property as trustees, except as members of the congregation. They are trustees to hold, not to sell; and it is hardly necessary to say that the pastor has nothing to do with the church property. And I would examine very carefully into a sale of church property which originated with the pastor and trustees, and executed by trustees alone. It looks as if they had some reason for not bringing the matter before the church. If the trustees can sell the church property without consulting the church, they might sell the same for five dollars, and the church would be without remedy. We think it is held everywhere that a recorded vote of the church authorizing the trustees to sell is necessary to the validity of any deed made by them. It is similar to the case of the sale of municipal bonds, wherein the city is not bound unless these essential facts appear of record. There can, in such cases, be no such thing as an innocent purchaser, unless the authority to make the sale appears of record. Of course, the purchaser has no concern as to the truthfulness of this record. It is enough for him to see that such a record exists; but so much he must see to, else, in the case of the sale of the real estate of the church, he becomes a trustee for the church. This, of course, presuming that the purchaser has notice of the trust, which, in the case of the sale of church property, he must necessarily have.

It will never do to establish the doctrine that the trustees, or the trustees and pastor, can originate and make a sale of church property. It looks too much like "doing things in a corner;" it opens too wide a door to private schemes and speculation; and then it leaves the church without protection, except such as may be afforded by the personal honesty of the trustees, and this is entirely too unsafe a basis on which to rest the rights of the church.

This subject is rendered more important from the well known fact that the great majority of church members pay no attention to such matters; and all of the property of a church might be sold and go into the pockets of the trustees without the great majority of the church members being any the wiser. But where it is once established as the law of the church, that the trustees can not sell church property without the previous consent of the church, expressed by a recorded vote, then the church is safe, and all things are as right and justice and the welfare of the church demand that they should be.

I have written this article because I believed that the interest of the church required it, and without reference to any particular person, place or time. LAYMAN OR SEXTUS.

A FINISHED MAN.

A finished town is bad enough; but save us from a finished man! Nothing can be added to him. What he does not know would make a very small volume. He turns up his nose at every new discovery in science, at every new invention. Think of the man that has the audacity to discover something he does not know! There is one very queer thing about the finished man; he never dies; he always was and always will be. He laughed at the discovery of gravitation by Newton, stood by when Galileo swore that the earth stood still, scoffed at Watt's steam engine, derided Fulton's steamboat, shouted disapproval when Leverrier discovered a planet, cursed the binomial theorem, grinned at logarithms, ascribed printing to the devil, shook his head at mesmerism, made fun of Morse's telegraph, smiled scornfully at Edison's electric lights, and now goes into hysterics over the x-ray. Everything is a humbug except the finished man himself, who is all right in his own estimation.—Hoiston Methodist.

RELIGIOUS LIFE.

BY REV. DAVID EVERHARD FORD.

How vain is all beneath the skies!
How transient every earthly bliss!
How slender all the fondest ties
That bind us to a world like this!

The evening-cloud, the morning dew,
The withering grass, the fading flower,
Of earthly hopes are emblems true,
The glory of a passing hour.

But though earth's fairest blossoms die,
And all beneath the skies is vain,
There is a brighter world on high,
Beyond the reach of care and pain.

Then let the hope of joys to come
Dispel our care and chase our fears:
If God be ours, we're traveling home,
Though passing through a vale of tears.

LETTERS FROM CHINA.

The Summer, which we so much dread out here, is about over, and we have had a very good time. I think it was about the pleasantest Summer that I have spent out here. One week was very hot, but with that and a few other days exception, we had marvelously cool weather. We tried to borrow trouble by thinking that as the Summer was so cool, September would surely be a bad month. However, that is half gone and has been very healthy. How much better the Lord treats us than we deserve!

Our Annual Conference is upon us. It convenes next Wednesday. I think that our statistics will show a net loss this year; still we have made some advances this year. I think that we have gone forward some on the subject of self-support. There are some discouraging features about the work and there are some encouraging ones. On the whole, I think that we have reason to thank God and go forward. Last Sunday we baptized our first woman convert at this place. We have been waiting for this for nearly ten years; I hope that we will not have to wait nearly so long for several more. I believe that the women make better members than the men. Day before yesterday, at a town about fifteen miles from here, I baptized two women—mother and daughter-in-law. The son of the woman was formerly a pupil at Dr. Parker's school in Soochow and has been teaching about a year for us. They have a little girl that I am going to baptize when I go back, and then there will be three generations in the church.

Some weeks ago I received a cablogram announcing the death of my dear father. In one sense it is the greatest loss that I ever suffered, and yet I can not feel that I have lost him. I will miss the dear, cheerful, hopeful letters I used to get; still he is mine, and nothing can take from me the rich legacies that he has left me. Although he wrote with such difficulty, still he rarely missed sending me a letter of cheer and comfort by every mail. How I would have enjoyed spending more time with him here on earth, but I would not recall him if I could. He is happy now and busy as a bee. He never had a lazy bone in his body, and was never so happy as when doing something for somebody. I never knew a man who did less for himself. If he had been a selfish man, he would have died rich instead of poor. I am glad he died poor. Though he bore his confinement with so much resignation and cheerfulness, yet I know that he was glad when he felt that he was no longer bound down by that diseased body of his. How he enjoyed his meeting with the Lord and with the friends of his youth! Nobody loved Methodist preachers more than he; and how he will enjoy greeting those who went before him!

Our new missionary has reached the field in safety, or rather I should have said missionaries, for he has a wife. I refer to Rev. and Mrs. Kline, of Arkansas. No one gets a warmer welcome anywhere than a new missionary. Pray for us.

W. B. BURKE.

Sung-Kiang, China, Sept. 16, 1897.

P. S.—Since writing the above our Conference has convened, and I have gotten some of the statistics, which may be interesting:

Native communicants, 749; probationers, 456; received on probation this year, 180; received into communion this year, 70. Contributed for support of ministers, $659.06; contributed for missions, $307.90; contributed for church extension, $58 50; contributed for Bishops, $4; contributed for other purposes, $623.85; total contributed by native members, $623.85; total contributed by foreign members, $1,089.57. Sunday-schools, 19; scholars, 1,646; Epworth Leagues, 9; members, 292. W. B. B.

Sept. 24.

Our Conference is over, and we have had a fine time. I do not know when we have had a more harmonious and helpful time. On last Saturday night we foreigners met together at MoTyeire Home for a prayer meeting. Bro. Nance led and gave us a most helpful talk on love. After this the meeting was thrown open, and a number told what the Lord had done for them during the year. Although there was not time for all to talk, yet I think that all must have felt that the Lord was with us. It was a good place to be. Mr. Editor, I know that you would have enjoyed it. I feel that we start out with brighter prospects this year than ever before. The Lord is surely among us. He has made himself manifest.

Next year is to be our Jubilee. When the Bishop comes out to us, we expect to be ready for a big time. But for it to be a Jubilee in truth the church at home must do a thing or two. In the first place, that debt must be paid off. Then we want a Jubilee Memorial out here. We hope that the Board will let Dr. Allen tell you what we want. We have elected him delegate to the General Conference, and have also asked the Board to let him make an appeal to the church in behalf of our Jubilee. It is fitting that our oldest missionary should go before the church and receive this Jubilee Memorial. I feel sure that it will be given. Dr. Allen nearly finished his forty years out here. We send him to you now feeling assured that you will not send him back to us without cheering his heart. His head is white, but he has a lot of youth about him; and if you send him back full handed, the next ten years will be as fruitful or more so than any years of his life.

We have asked the Bishops to give us our Jubilee Conference not earlier than the fifteenth of next October. That is the only decent time to hold a Conference out here, and I hope that they will be kind enough to grant our request.

FEVER AND QUARANTINE.

DEAR ADVOCATE: After having been deprived of your weekly visits, owing to quarantine restrictions, for nearly or quite a month, we were overjoyed to receive you again last week, two copies at one time.

I was reading an article in the Mayflower, not long since, which said: "There are a class of people who never appreciate a thing properly until it is taken from them."

Now, I do not know how many belong to said class, but I believe I do. I never fully realized just how much you were worth to us until you were withheld from us a while. It is said, perhaps truly, that "misery loves company." While I do not derive any pleasure from the miseries of others, yet it is a little less lonely to know that others are "in the same boat;" and, like Bro. McIntosh, I scarcely know which is worse—the quarantine or the fever. "Beloved" could scarcely hope to get up a quarrel about presiding elders and their districts till the quarantine is a thing of the past. We thought to outwit the quarantine by land route in private conveyance from Louisiana to Mississippi, but found it of no avail, and had to allow our horses to retrace their footsteps. Why all this ado and worry over a little fever when we allow the devil to run regular trains from the city of contagion to our very doors? Some of us would show more wisdom if we were a little less afraid of some things and more afraid of others. We become very much alarmed lest some germ of disease enter our town or home, but are not nearly so careful to keep ourselves and children away from the little germs of sin far more damaging both in this life and the one to come. At such times one finds leisure to ponder many subjects, and as we are taught that "all things work together for our good," both the fever and quarantine may prove "a blessing in disguise."

I do not wish anyone to think that "I glory in a fuss," like the little boy J. H. Smith tells about; yet, on reading "Rex" and "North Mississippi," I feel like exclaiming, "Say it agin, mammy; say it agin."

Our little boy and girl started to school Monday; teacher and pupils all strangers. On the morning of the second day our little girl said: "Papa, I think I'll get acquainted with all of them to-day. They got so they called me Ethel yesterday." As Bill Arp would say, "I was ruminating" about how different we grown folks are. We must go through a lot of formalities, and sometimes it is years before we get acquainted. I believe it was Sam Jones who said, should the members of a certain church get to heaven, they'd have to spend a good part of eternity getting acquainted. But, "except" we "become as little children," we "can not enter the kingdom."

Come as often as you can, dear ADVOCATE. We do sincerely hope that neither you or your editor will get "the fever." ALICE CARY.

HOW MAKE OUR MONTHLY MEETINGS INTERESTING AND PROFITABLE?

(Prepared and read by Mrs. Robert F. Reed, of Natchez, Miss., at Annual Conference, W. F. M. S.)

Everyone is ready to say, in order to have interesting and profitable monthly meetings, we must have a consecrated, enthusiastic, and well-informed president. She must be self-possessed, must understand her duty, and must act promptly. The recording secretary must write and read her Minutes in a pleasing, lively manner. The corresponding secretary should keep in touch with other auxiliaries and with the Conference corresponding secretary, and occasionally have letters to read from these and from those missionaries who have charge of the special lines of work in which her auxiliary is interested, while the treasurer should make a display of her financial ability by always reporting every member called upon; dues, Conference and auxiliary contingent funds paid in full.

So much, and much more, for the officers. But what about the members? One clause of Sec. 8 of our By-laws reads thus, "Each member shall do what she can to add to the interest of her society."

I believe we can feel an interest in the work only by informing ourselves with regard to the needs of the heathen, and by keeping abreast with the operations of our W. B. F. M. All of which information can be obtained through the columns of the Woman's Missionary Advocate, the Little Worker, the Evangel, and the reports of the annual meetings of our Woman's Board. This information can be utilized at our monthly meetings by the different members in response to questions given by the president at a previous meeting. These responses may be given in the form of talks, map talks, or short papers, as the subject may require.

The following will illustrate the character of those questions: What circumstances led to your becoming interested in missions? What fields are now occupied by our Board? Date of opening work in each? What other Boards have entered these fields, and how does their work compare with ours? What other fields has our Board been entreated to enter, and why has it not responded? What missionaries have gone from our own State, and where are they located? What new missionaries were accepted at the last meeting of our Board, and in what fields will they labor? Locate the following, and state origin, object, and tell why so named: Clopton School, McTyeire Home and School, Davidson Memorial, Hayes-Wilkins Memorial, Mary Black Memorial Hall, McDonnell Institute. These and a host of other questions will lead our members to read and investigate.

Engaging in special lines of work, such as supporting Bible women, girls in mission schools, furnishing beds in hospitals, and many other things which can not now be mentioned for want of time, backed and directed by the power of the Holy Spirit, which spiritual power will also be manifested in our devotional exercises, will make our places of meeting most delightful. Punctuality and regularity in attendance are also essential elements of success. Then, if each member would talk about the work to those who "don't believe in missions," because of "so much to do at home," and would put forth her best efforts to secure new members, and would so report when the president calls for "individual work," the leaven would spread until we would indeed have interesting, profitable, and growing monthly meetings.

GLEANINGS.

W. M. A: New auxiliaries: Pleasant Valley, 16 members—10 regular and 6 honorary; juvenile, Wesson Stars, 22 members. We were pleased to find the report of Buds of Promise, Crystal Springs, organized a year ago, membership increased from 11 to 28. Arrangements made to place a ten-dollar iron bedstead in a ward in hospital, Soochow, China; money obtained, $17.90. To Scarritt Bible and Training-school, Waynesboro auxiliary, $4.85.

Let us not forget the Korean Mission—special for young people and juveniles. From Minutes of annual session: "All undirected specials raised by young people and juveniles be appropriated to the Korean Mission." "Last, but not least, we would emphasize the importance of secretaries of districts and auxiliaries, of both adult and juvenile, forwarding reports often to the editor of items for the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE; also utilizing secular and other religious papers."

Will not the pastors kindly secure quarterly reports from all auxiliaries, and a full report for the Annual Conference?

We would be glad to know that all pastors, especially those who kindly give us their subscriptions to the Evangel, if they would renew, and circulate the papers after reading them. We are sure that good would result. MRS. E. D. JONES.

WISE WORDS TO YOUNG PREACHERS.

BY ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D. D.

I thank God that I was stuck down in a quiet, little, obscure place to begin my ministry. For that is what spoils half of you young fellows. You get pitchforked into prominent positions at once, and then fritter yourselves away in all manner of little engagements that you call duties, going to this tea-meeting, and that anniversary, and the other breakfast celebration, instead of stopping at home and reading your Bibles and getting near to God. I thank God for the early days of struggle and obscurity. I dare not speak about attainments. I may venture to speak about aims, especially because I think that I have a number of my younger brethren here this morning, and I would like to give a last dying speech and confession to them. I began my ministry, and, thank God, I have been able to keep to that as my aim—I say nothing about attainments—with the determination of concentrating all my available strength on the work, the proper work of the Christian ministry, the pulpit; and I believe that the secret of success for all our ministers lies very largely in the simple charm of concentrating their intellectual force on the one work of preaching. I have tried, and I am thankful to Dr. Angus for his words on that matter, to make my ministry a ministry of exposition of Scripture. I know that it has failed in many respects; but I will say that I have endeavored from the beginning to the end to make that a characteristic of my public work. And I have tried to preach Jesus Christ, and the Jesus Christ, not of the gospels only, but the Christ of the gospels and the epistles. He is the same. Dear young brethren, I believe that the one thing that the world wants is the redemption, the power of that gospel on the individual soul; and that men know they want it. Dr. Johnson once said in his wise way, "Nothing odd lasts," and I believe that, too. "Nothing odd lasts;" but Christ lasts, and man's sin lasts, and man's need lasts, and we have got to preach Christ and him crucified, the Savior of mankind. And I have tried to preach Christ as if I believed in him; not as if I had hesitations and peradventures and limitations. And I have tried to preach him as if I lived on him; and that is the bottom of it all, that we shall ourselves feed on the truth that we proclaim to others. So, if my words can reach any of my dear younger brethren this morning, I do want to say: Concentrate yourselves on the work of your ministry, preach the Bible and its truth, preach Christ the Redeemer, preach him with all your heart, lift up your voice, lift it up with strength, be not afraid. We know that the Son of God has come; and he has given us an understanding that we may know him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. Brethren, depend upon it that if these be the themes and that be the spirit of our ministry, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear, they will know that there has been a prophet among them.—Northwestern Advocate.

IS LEGISLATION THE CURE-ALL?

BY REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

The present animated discussion of the female suffrage question helps to bring more prominently to the front another very important question, and that is the capability of legislation to reform all manner of social evils, to purify society, and to advance a social, political and moral "millennium." The idea is increasingly prevalent that legislation is a panacea which can cure a multitude of the ills that mortal flesh is heir to. The pitiable fiasco of Coxey's raid on Washington is a grotesque illustration of this idea. Many of those tramps were deluded with the idea that it was the business of the national government to provide for them by voting five hundred millions of money to give employment to the unemployed. A single stroke of legislation was to feed and clothe about all the destitute people in the land. Their most mischievous contention is that it is the duty of the government to make money plenty for everybody, even though the "flat" dollar shall not be worth intrinsically more than sixty or seventy cents. Legislation is their panacea of quacking; government, according to their notions, is bound to support the people, instead of the people supporting the government.

That noble and beneficent temperance reform—to which some of us have gladly given the labors of a life-time—has suffered sadly from the false idea that legislation is the cure-all for the innumerable woes of strong drink. During the early stages of this reform our efforts were mainly to overthrow the drinking usages and to make people abstainers. Out of this reformed public sentiment grew the original Maine law of prohibition—a law that wrought admirable results where a sound public sentiment has enforced it. Personally, I hold that license laws have proved to be a farce and failure. The only logical law is to permit every community to suppress the curse and crime of dram selling. But in order to obtain prohibitory legislation and to make prohibitory laws of any real value, it is indispensable that moral efforts against the drinking usages be kept up unceasingly by pulpit and press, in the home, and in the school, in the church, and everywhere.

This vital truth has been too much lost sight of. The cry has been, "Only prohibit the traffic by law, and the job is ended." But in those States in which suppression laws were enacted, it has been found that such good laws are not self-enforcing. Whenever moral efforts for temperance have been neglected, the laws have been trampled under foot. The friends of our reform out in Iowa have got to "do their first works" over again. They have found to their sorrow that legislation is not in itself the cure-all. Beneath it and behind it must be a righteous public conscience, and that is the result of moral effort and education.—Exchange.

LIVE PREACHING.

The preacher of to-day must dispense live sermons, or quit. The people do not care so much about the preliminary qualifications for the ministry as they do about the present efficiency of the pulpit. It is of less moment to them whether a pastor, young or old, is a college graduate, than whether he is now a close student of the Word of God, the ever-changing conditions of society, and the duties of the hour. The people want to be helped to a correct understanding of the questions which concern their moral welfare. They seek able and wise leadership. They have no respect for ministerial sloth. They quickly discover what preachers are studying to make themselves workmen that need not to be ashamed. A pastor who now relies upon a manuscript yellow with age for his Sunday ministration need not be surprised if he finds his mail next week full of white, fresh due bills from his grocer, butcher, and tailor. The conditions have so changed within fifteen years that the old pulpit homilies are no longer acceptable. The old gospel is still good, but the new applications of it are so urgent that thinking people will tolerate nothing else. Therefore the preachers must either bring themselves up with the times, or step down and out. Age has little to do with this issue. Mere classical training will not settle it. Hard and wise work alone will do it. There has never been a time when the multitudes were hungrier for living bread, or had more respect for live dispensers of it. We speak of facts as they are, of conditions as they exist. God knows we would not needlessly add burdens to the shoulders of our ministers, but the sooner they wake up to the real situation in which current movements and speculations have involved them, the better will it be for them, for the church, and for the world. The gist of the popular demand is not simply for college graduates, but for that class of men who have vim and energy enough to prepare themselves by some means for their tremendous responsibilities. Let the preachers take a new stand. Prepare new sermons, or revise the old ones. Set fire to the "barrels." Make kindling wood of ancient skeleton books. Purge your libraries from dead material. Cling ardently to your Bibles. Make close study of the "living epistles." Rely earnestly upon God's guidance. Pray like drowning men. Go to your pulpits with hearts aflame and with minds packed full of wholesome, living truth. Our word for it, you will not starve, nor sigh for hearers, nor doubt the reality of your divine call.—Michigan Advocate.

The will of God is like a rope thrown to us as we struggle among the untamed waves. To remain "independent" is to repulse all succor, all salvation. It is to wander without a compass and without a chart through the fury of the storm. To obey is to seize the rope, to face the blast, to brave the storm, to advance against the confederate waves, to let one's self be irresistibly drawn toward the invisible harbor where our heavenly Father awaits us. Obedience is duty under all its forms. Obedience is faith and resignation. Obedience has for its watchword, "May Thy will be done," which means, "I will fulfill it when I am strong; I will accept it when I am weak."—Wilfred Monod.

Life is a building. It rises slowly, day by day, through the years. Every new lesson we learn lays a block on the edifice which is rising silently within us. Every experience, every touch of another life of ours, every influence that impresses us, every book we read, every conversation we have, every act of our commonest days, adds something to the invisible building.—J. R. Miller.

The bitterest tears shed over graves are for words left unsaid and deeds left undone. "She never knew how I loved her." "He never knew what he was to me." "I always meant to make more of our friendship." Such words are the poisoned arrows which cruel death shoots backward at us from the sepulchre.—Harriet Beecher Stowe.

Work to-day, for you know not how much you will be hindered tomorrow.—Benjamin Franklin.

First, last, midst, and without end, honor every truth with use.—Emerson.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. R C Grace, Olla circuit, Oct. 21, 1897: "This is our second year on this circuit. On our return from Annual Conference our people received us nicely, and gave us a pounding. We have had several conversions during the year and thirty-three accessions to the church, and have completed the church at Pollock, that was so badly wrecked by the storm last Winter; and we expect to have our splendid new church here in Olla finished by Annual Conference. This is the second year that we have had a drouth in this part of God's vineyard, and the people are hard run, and I am afraid that we will be short with our Conference collections. Brethren, pray for us."

Rev. R. A. Davis, P. C., Oak Ridge, La., Oct. 20, 1897: "Our third Quarterly Conference for Oak Ridge circuit, Delhi district, Louisiana Conference, convened at Bowman's Chapel, near Millhaven post office, Ouachita parish, La. Rev. Benj F. White, P. E., was in the chair. Financial reports were very meagre, or slim. The services were protracted until Friday night, the fifteenth instant. The presiding elder remained until Thursday, at 11 o'clock A. M., when, after preaching, by the aid of Mrs. Emma White (his wife), he organized an Epworth League of seventeen members, electing Mr. Thomas M. Myers, president; Mrs. D. A. Hill, first vice president; Mrs. Ida Jones, second vice-president; Mrs. Mollie Wood, third vice-president; Mrs. Hellen Parson, treasurer; Mr. Thomas Puckett, secretary. The presiding elder left us Thursday morning for Desaird appointment, and we, with no ministerial help, continued our meeting until Friday night, when we closed with twelve penitents at the altar. Result of meeting: Two accessions by disciplinary form, three restored, and one on probation, with the church much revived. All praise to our blessed Savior!"

Rev. G. H. Jacobs, Arkabutla, Miss., Oct. 18, 1897: "I send a report of this year's work. I have held four meetings, and Rev. T. H. Porter, L. P., has held one in the bounds of my charge. I was assisted at Arkabutla by Bro. Porter. We had a good meeting; twelve joined our church and seven joined the Baptist Church. I was assisted by C. P. Moss, of Eureka charge. The people were delighted and profited by his preaching, and the Lord blessed him and us at each place. At one church I did the preaching after Sunday night. We had a good revival in the church, but only one conversion. Bro. Porter did faithful preaching at Arkabutla, and his labor was not in vain. The people seem to realize the need of a revival, and took right hold of the work, and the Lord blessed them. We have had thirty accessions by certificate and on profession of faith, and the church is in better condition, spiritually, than any time since I have been on the work, though there is room for greater improvements. Our finances are behind. It is difficult to get the people to see the importance of our Conference claims, and hence the work has not paid as much as fifty per cent. of the assessment as far back as I have examined the record. We are doing our best to secure these claims. We trust and pray the yellow fever will soon give way in your city and elsewhere. May the Lord extend mercy!"

Rev. R P Grier, Chester, Miss., Oct. 12 1897: "As I am packing up for a move, I thought maybe some one would like to know how I have made 'the home run.' Well, the Lord for three years past has given us a spiritual revival in our hearts; but this year he has reached our pocket books. Thanks be to his blessed name! We have built at Chapel Hill one of the best churches in Choctaw county, Miss. At Salem we have another nearing completion which will be as good, or better; and still another good house provided for at Antioch—about all the material is ready. This will give us six good churches out of seven, and one man at the seventh church ready with $100 to start the ball rolling as soon as we can get the title. So you see the Lord is giving us a parting blessing. We have had about one hundred conversions in the church this year, with 35 outside of the church; received some 25 members. We are praying the Lord to send a man in this field to do the work that we have played at for these four years. If the right man comes here, this is destined to be one of the first circuits in the North Mississippi Conference. If such results grow out of my poor labors, what would a good worker do? My reports will be in full at Conference, I think. God bless you and yours with the dear ADVOCATE! I will close, hoping to meet you at Conference."

Rev. D W. Babb, Louisville, Miss., Oct. 22, 1897: "Our protracted meetings are over for this year. In the main, they have been seasons of refreshings from the presence of the Lord. The church strengthened and on the up grade; twenty-one additions; nearly everybody belongs to some branch of the Christian Church—however, not all live members of the church, by a great deal. We were efficiently assisted by the following brethren: J. W. Anderson, of Rural Hill charge. He is a sweet-spirited, growing preacher. We predict for him a useful future. Bro. Lee Lipscomb, of Carrollton charge, preached for us to the delight and edification of the many who heard him. Bro. Deavenport, of Winstonville circuit, preached us some strong sermons, and did us much good. Lastly we were assisted by Rev. S P. Richardson, D. D., of the North Georgia Conference, who is simply inimitable in his line of thought and his illustrations. He reasons by illustrations so applicable they can not be answered. A more original preacher we have not heard, and we have heard Sam Jones dozens of times. His illustrations sound very much like they had grown in the same soil as Sam Jones', except he is perfectly chaste in all his language. He is now in his eighty-second year, and his mind is more vigorous and fruitful of thought than many men fifty years of age. Long will his sermons be remembered in Louisville, which were all on cardinal Bible doctrine and Methodist theology. We are under many obligations to these brethren. May the Lord reward them abundantly! Our Conference will soon be here. How we have to move to have everything rounded up by that time! We hope to be ready—also to be ready for the great Conference above. Doctor, we expect to meet you at our Conference. We have to give up our presiding elder, Bro. Mitchell, whose time will be out. No presiding elder in this Conference has wrought better the last four years than ours. I wish that his successor may be of his caste in labors abundant, and success crown his work. The NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE is much appreciated, and is growing on our people."

Nervous!

People wonder why their nerves are so weak; why they get tired so easily; why they do not sleep naturally; why they have frequent headaches, indigestion and

Nervous Dyspepsia. The explanation is simple. It is found in that impure blood feeding the nerves on refuse instead of the elements of strength and vigor. Hood's Sarsaparilla feeds the nerves pure, rich blood; gives natural sleep, good digestion, is the true remedy for all nervous troubles.

BURGESS MISSION.

A glorious revival of religion has just closed at Lovejoy Church. Lovejoy is a country church situated among the hills and dales, and is the most remote point of work on the above-named mission. The meeting began on Sunday night, Oct. 10, lasting ten days. It was conducted by Rev. Sam Bass, evangelist, assisted by the pastor in charge, Rev. Joe Wilson, and Bro. Aldridge, of the Free Methodist Church. We will also mention the great service rendered by our worthy brother, Harold McMinn, his playing on the organ being perfect, and accompanied by his noble voice in singing those beautiful, soul inspiring songs of praise. Never has a church been so aroused to a sense of duty as this one under the ministration of Bro. Bass. He held his audience almost spell-bound by his eloquence and power. His appeals, at times, to the church were sarcastic and cutting, and then again they were gentle and kind, captivating the heart, inspiring the soul to a sense of duty and its obligations to God and the church. The result of the meeting was forty-seven accessions to the church, of whom forty-two were baptized; five having already been baptized, and also nine children were dedicated in baptism. Never was this church so fully awakened to duty as at this time. Homes where family altars had never before been established are holding family prayer now. The peace of God which passeth all understanding pervades the hearts and minds of nearly all the community.

We were very much grieved to have our meeting close when it did; but our worthy Bro. Bass was worn and wearied from weeks and months of incessant labor at other points; so on Wednesday, at 11 o'clock, our meeting closed with eight or ten penitents at the altar unsaved. We bade Bro. Bass good bye with tearful eyes, bidding him God-speed in his noble and glorious work, he going to Corinth to his home and beloved family.

May God bless and reward his labors in other fields as an evangelist preacher.

Panola county, Miss., Oct 22, 1897.

GIVE TILL YOU FEEL IT.

A religion which costs nothing is good for nothing. Like a certain kind of faith we read of, "it is dead, being alone." How much meaning was conveyed in the answer which one man made to another who offered to contribute some small amount to a benevolent object, and said, "I can give this, and not feel it." "Would it not be better for you, my friend, to increase the amount till you can feel it?" So in every case. A person should feel what he does, and should do what he will be likely to feel, or morally there will be but very little good resulting from it.

In the beautiful island of Ceylon, a few years ago, the native Christians decided that they must have a church built for themselves. To the amazement of all, Maria Peabody, a lone orphan girl, who had been in the school at Oodooville, came forward and offered to give the land on which to build—the best site in her native village. Not only was it all she owned in the world, but it was her marriage portion, and in making the gift she renounced all hopes of ever being married. As this in the East is regarded as an awful step, many thought her beside herself, and endeavored to dissuade her from her purpose. "No," said Maria, "I have given it to Jesus, and as he has accepted it, you must." Maria Peabody's schooling had been paid for years by a colored servant in Salem, Massachusetts, whose wages were a little more than a dollar a week —Selected.

Never during the past century has the church of Christ had such an opportunity for the spread of the gospel as now presents itself. Never has the world manifested a greater interest in religious teaching. All substitudes for Christianity have proved a failure, and the nation is seeking once more for the old paths, the good old way. Let the church arise and make ready for the work.—Moody.

"Get spiritual enthusiasm and give it to your people. Get the old-time, Methodist, Holy-Ghost power. That is what the world needs. Circulate good literature, visit your people, pray much, live close to God, do all day's work every day. The people like an enthusiastic preacher. Lift your eyes unto the hills for your strength."—R. Stephens.

The story is told of a young married woman, who asked another young married woman how she managed to get along so amicably with her husband. The answer was, "I feed the brute—his stomach with food and his mind with flattery." Even a man will have to admit that this young woman had solved about two-thirds of the art of making the average man happy. The other third consists of keeping his body in such condition that he will enjoy his food and his mind in such condition that he will be susceptible to flattery. It isn't much use to put tempting food before a man who hasn't an appetite. It doesn't pay to lavish smiles on a man whose nerves are racked and overworked.

The average man pays very little attention to his health, and won't take medicine of his own accord until he is flat on his back. A shrewd wife will keep an eye on her husband's welfare in this respect, and when she sees that he is bilious or suffering from indigestion, or is generally out of sorts, will see that he resorts to that most wonderful of all invigorators, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is the best of all appetite-sharpeners, blood-makers and flesh-builders. It corrects all disorders of the digestion and makes the liver active and the blood pure. It tones the nerves and cures all cases of nervous exhaustion and prostration. It cures 98 per cent. of all cases of consumption, bronchial, throat and kindred ailments. Medicine dealers sell it.

Mrs. Rebecca F. Gardner, of Grafton, York Co., Va., writes: "I was so sick with dyspepsia that I could not eat anything for over four months. I thought I was going to die. I weighed only 80 pounds. I took two bottles of the 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I am now as well as ever and weigh 125 pounds."

For constipation—Dr. Pierce's Pellets.

We can not escape history.—Abraham Lincoln.

The tyrant, it has been said, is but a slave turned inside out.—Samuel Smiles.

To be trusted is a greater compliment than to be loved.—George Macdonald.

Resolve to perform what you ought; perform without fail what you resolve.—Benjamin Franklin.

The golden opportunity which you have to-day of doing good will return no more forever.

There is one very important thing that a man can do when he is doing nothing; he can make character.

Life is often more simple than it seems; stick to a few grand truths and you shall not be confounded.

That which astonishes, astonishes once; but whatever is admirable becomes more and more admired.—Joubert.

While high thinking does not always prevent low living, it is also true that there can be no high and holy living without high and holy thinking.—Rev. James McLeod.

It is vain for you to expect, it is impudent for you to ask of God forgiveness on your own behalf if you refuse to exercise this forgiving temper with respect to others.—Hordley.

It costs nothing to give to others the benefit of the gifts we have. The light of my torch is none the less because I allow my neighbor to light his torch by my flame.—Christian World.

This would be a pleasant world if people would only give the same name to the same quality in others as in themselves. But we call ours firmness, and that of others obstinacy, and so for many other qualities.

What an inspiration it would be to us if we would always remember that the cares, annoyances and vexations of life are a part of the discipline by means of which our heavenly Father is trying to fit us for mansions in the skies.

Fill your memories with things pleasant to remember—with the recollection of kindly deeds and helpful words, of temptations conquered and of service rendered. Thus will this wonderful gift of memory be to you a blessing, not a curse, a thing of joy and not of sorrow.

A GREAT REFORMER AND HERO.

On the second of October, Neal Dow, the veteran prohibition leader and temperance reformer, whose fame is world wide, died in great peace at his home in Portland, Maine. He was of Quaker parentage and was born at Portland in 1804, where he spent the greater portion of his life. After reaching manhood he pursued for a time the employment of merchant and manufacturer. Neal Dow first became interested in temperance reform through the influence of the Washingtonian temperance movement, which began in the city of Baltimore in 1840, and soon spread all over the country. His sympathies became deeply enlisted in behalf of reformed drunkards and their families. The more he labored to rescue the victims of drink from their terrible bondage, the more he became convinced that the removal of temptation was the only effective remedy for intemperance.

His determination to fight the liquor traffic to the death dates from the opposition and insolent language of a Portland liquor seller, who had been the cause of the ruin of a worthy citizen of that town. The drunkard's wife had appealed to Mr. Dow, who undertook to remonstrate with the saloon keeper, requesting him not to sell the man any more liquor. The reply was, "But I must supply my customers." "But don't you see," said Mr. Dow, "that this gentleman has a large family to support? If he neglects to go to his office to-morrow, he will lose his place. I beg of you not to sell him any more strong drink." The rum seller then grew angry, said that he had a license, that he, too, had a family to support, told Mr. Dow he wanted none of his advice, and ended by asking him what he was going to do about it. This roused Mr. Dow's righteous indignation, and he resolved that, with God's help, he would change all this. How well he kept his vow his subsequent life shows most signally.

His public career began in 1846, during which he traveled over four thousand miles, making prohibition speeches in almost every nook and corner of the State. The same year he secured the passage of a prohibitory law by the Legislature. This bill, however, was soon found inefficient, because the penalties attached were too light, the traffic becoming even bolder than before. After several unsuccessful attempts to secure the passage of an adequate prohibitory law, nothing daunted, Mr. Dow came before the Assembly in 1851 with his bill perfected, and success at last crowned his efforts.

During the same year he was elected mayor of Portland, and on coming into office he found "the times sadly out of joint." Mobs and riots were threatened. Whisky sellers were abusive and defiant. Mr. Dow issued a proclamation that he would vigorously enforce the law, giving venders sixty days to ship their liquors to other States willing to receive them, and close out their business. At the end of the time allowed, Mr. Dow confiscated and destroyed publicly two thousand dollars' worth of liquor. An old woman in the poorhouse, as she saw the liquor being poured out, made a pathetic exclamation that has since become famous. Said she: "O that this had been done twenty-five years ago! My husband would not have died a drunkard, and I should not have been here with my children." The mayors of other cities followed his example, and then scene extraordinary scenes were enacted. In the large cities long processions of drays and wagons were seen on the way to the wharves and railroad depots.

Says the editor of Zion's Herald, commenting upon the changes wrought by Mr. Dow's efforts:

"Few persons have been permitted to see so complete a reversal of forbidding conditions. At first he appeared to be alone. The little city was reeking with the fumes of liquor, her homes and her public places indicating the prevalence of the demon of destruction. The commonwealth was poor and heavily burdened, her people dejected, her future threatened. There was open defiance to such feeble restrictions to the liquor traffic as law had hesitatingly made. One man stood against all this, with thousands in opposition, with capital and traditions and sentiment arrayed on the other side. Yet he lived to see and to enjoy a complete change in all those circumstances, and to be recognized as the leading factor in the results.

"Instead of embarrassing debt, the State has money to lend. The savings bank deposits have supplanted farm mortgages, opulent cities have crowded their streets and factories beyond the confines of earlier village boundaries, thousands of intelligent persons have been reared without a glimpse of a saloon, and that often in communities once sorely infested with the meanest of liquor stores and vile inns."

In 1858 Mr. Dow was honored with a seat in the Legislature. After the close of the Civil War, in which he served as colonel of a Maine regiment, being promoted later to the rank of brigadier-general, he devoted the remainder of his life almost exclusively to the temperance cause. He traveled extensively and delivered thousands of addresses in the United States, Canada and Great Britain. Though he had been a stannoh Republican, he came to the conclusion that that party was not sufficiently in sympathy with the prohibitory law to enforce it properly, and so he left it for the Prohibition party.

In 1880 he was the candidate of that party for President of the United States. On the occasion of the celebration of his ninetieth birthday, three years ago, he received messages of congratulation from every country on the globe with but one exception.

As long as he lived he was a total abstainer, thus living up fully to the principles he advocated. He was a tireless toiler. Before the Maine Law was passed he sowed the State "knee-deep" with temperance literature, and left no stone unturned to bring about a change in public sentiment respecting the liquor traffic. For years after the passage of the bill he was equally diligent in securing its enforcement, doing his utmost to keep the people interested in the movement, and to keep them thoroughly informed as to its need and its overshadowing importance.

Prohibitionists will do well to follow the example of this illustrious leader in this respect. Cessation of temperance education and agitation begets indifference, which is sure to be followed by a retrograde movement. If the charges made from time to time that the moral tone of the people of Maine has declined somewhat, and that the prohibitory law is not enforced as it once was, are true, the sole reason is that Neal Dow's methods have been set aside.

The manner of Mr. Dow's death was a fitting close to his life. He died painlessly and without a fear. The night before his death he said to his nurse: "This is the end, and it is all right."

His attainment of such a ripe old age speaks louder than words of the invigorating, preserving power of faith, temperance and righteousness. His long, eventful and eminently useful career furnishes a signal illustration of the value of ardent devotion to a lofty purpose.

THE FEVER SITUATION.

The number of new cases of yellow fever in this city for the week ending Tuesday morning, the second, is 337, against 346 for the week previous—a decrease of 9. As cooler weather has now set in, it is believed that there will be a steady diminution of the number of new cases. The number of deaths, however, exceeds the deaths for the previous week by 19. This, however, was a thing to be expected. The advent of cold weather, while it diminishes the number of new cases, always increases the mortality among those already infected. The total number of cases is 1,548; deaths, 195; patients discharged, 754; cases under treatment, 599.

The following is a summary of the number of new cases during the last week at the principal points of infection: Mobile, 47; Biloxi, 64; Scranton, 66; Edwards, 17; Bay St. Louis, 61; Montgomery, 52.

AT ALGIERS.

By invitation of the pastor, Rev. R. H. Wynn, we spent last Sabbath at Algiers, occupying the pulpit both morning and night. We made a call upon Bro. and Sister Wynn at their parsonage home. They are delightfully domiciled three doors from the church. The good people of Algiers showed their appreciation of their pastor and his lovely bride by fitting up the parsonage in elegant style. Parlor, bed-rooms, kitchen and dining-room are supplied with everything needful. We have rarely, if ever, seen a young preacher's bride so admirably fitted up for housekeeping.

Under the wise leadership of Bro. Wynn, Algiers Methodism is making decided progress.

During our stay in Algiers we were domiciled with our friends, Bro. and Sister F. A. Daniels, whose cordial hospitalities and genial companionship we much enjoyed.

AT COVINGTON.

By invitation of the pastor, Rev. J. B. Kent, we lectured at Covington last Friday night. We went over on Thursday evening and spent Friday there—the first week-day we have spent out of the city since the Sam Jones Camp Meeting in August. The attendance was quite gratifying both to the lecturer and the pastor. The proceeds of the lecture will be used for the benefit of the parsonage. At the expiration of his pastorate Bro. Kent will leave the parsonage in much better shape than he found it. He is a diligent, faithful pastor, and is doing excellent work.

GREAT PREACHING.

Great preaching is the demand of the hour. It is a universal demand. From the hamlet and the country circuit, as well as from the aristocratic city church, comes the cry for eloquence. Men are wanted whose speech will thrill and enthuse the church, whose magnetism will attract and hold the crowds.

All preachers are not born orators. Only rarely do we find a man who is so fortunate as to be endowed with that peculiar poetic imagination, that fascination of manner, that charm of address, and that flow of thought, which makes the orator. Nevertheless it should be the constant aim of the man called to preach the "unsearchable riches of Christ" to be "thoroughly furnished" for the good work of declaring the glad tidings of great joy. "Poets are born, not made;" but most great preachers have grown into it by the slow and toilsome way of diligence and wise application of means to ends. So there is hope for the man of moderate ability, if he have self control and diligence. The preacher should look well to his style. On the one hand he should avoid the heavy, lumbering style of the theologian, and on the other hand he should avoid the chatty, chopped-up style of the corner grocery, under the mistaken notion that it is conversational preaching.

The preacher should get his style from the classic works of fiction and poetry, from standard books of travel and history, but, most of all, from the English Bible. This Book of books is written in the purest, the most elevated and the most vivacious style of any book in all the literatures of the world. It should be the preacher's book. He should study it for style. Its thought and language should enter the warp and woof of his mental constitution; then he can not help being a great preacher. Our Methodist economy is well adapted to make effective preachers. It throws the preacher among all classes of people; it makes him a man of the people. In moving from place to place he can avoid former mistakes and carry the good with him. The people are demanding good preachers, and the church is producing them. It may savor of egotism in us to say it, but nevertheless it is a fact, that Methodism is producing the greatest preachers of the age.

Let our preachers bear in mind that while there is increasing need that they be man of high personal character, and men of all-round qualifications for the general work of the pastorate, they must also be attractive and convincing preachers to do the greatest good.—Methodist Herald.

TACT IN THE PULPIT.

There is the story of a remarkably frank old country preacher who, on one occasion, occupied the pulpit in a church where he knew not a single member of the congregation. He took his text, "Ye are of your father, the devil," and commenced by saying that he did not know one of them, but that they were not altogether strangers to him, since he knew their father, and supposed that they were like him. It was to be supposed that after this exceedingly affectionate and complimentary introduction, he had the regardful and unreserved confidence of all his auditors.

If it seems impossible that a man should be so exceedingly and completely lost to the proprieties and to the possibilities of the pulpit, and should have so little sense of what he is in the pulpit to accomplish, so does it seem impossible that some other things that have actually been said should ever have been spoken from the pulpit to a congregation.

It is a rainy evening. The congregation is small. Many of the people are absent, but some have forced their way, lovingly and loyally, to the sanctuary. Instead of being met appreciatively by the preacher, and led in the service with cheeriest and most helpful words and smiles, they listen to more than one expression of displeasure as the preacher castigates the people who are present for the delinquencies of those who are absent, and informs them that there are few signs of Christian life or interest in the congregation. A gloom settles down over the handful, and some of them, at least, resolve that they will not run the risk of being present at the services again under such circumstances.—Herald and Presbyter.

PASTORAL PARTIALITY.

One of the things which is sure to injure a pastor's usefulness with his people is that of showing a marked and continued partiality toward those whom he particularly admires. He should never allow himself to make special pets of certain ones, especially if they be rich or fashionable or highly cultured. A pastor can not do this without having his motives questioned and jealousies engendered. Besides, he owes his services to all the flock, and should, therefore, seek to serve all alike, so far as he may be able, and so far as the condition of each requires his attention.

It may be said that a pastor can not help liking some of his members better than he does others, which is true, but he should not let his natural preferences lead him to bestow his attentions profusely on some, to the neglect of others, who perhaps need his regards and sympathies more than the especially admired ones do. It may be said also that Christ had his special favorites in the persons of Lazarus and his sisters. Yes, there was a wonderful intimacy between Christ and them, but he never neglected a single soul on account of his regard for those loved disciples. Moreover, Christ was not a pastor in the same sense that a modern pastor is. This is a marked distinction. The fact is, the pastor who is quite partial toward some members can not do the good which he might and ought to do for those whom he slights; nor is such a man popular with outsiders generally.—C. H. Wetherbe.

TO OUR FRIENDS.

Owing to the stagnation of business consequent upon the prevailing quarantine regulations, remittances from subscribers have been for the past two months like angels' visits—few and far between. Now that business is resuming its normal course, we appeal to our subscribers, and also to our agents, to remit the amount of their indebtedness at their earliest convenience. We have to pay cash for work, material, and everything necessary to carry on the paper, yellow fever or no yellow fever.

NOTES.

Rev. J. P. Drake, of Bay St. Louis, has greatly endeared himself to his flock and to the community by his loving attention to those afflicted with the pestilence. Sister Drake and two other members of his family have had the fever, but are now convalescent. Church services go on at the Bay as usual.

Rev. S. S. Keener was released from his quarantine prison last Saturday, after serving a term of five weeks. He would have been released two weeks since but for the fact that Sister Keener was not sufficiently strong to sit up for six or eight hours while the house was being fumigated. He occupied his pulpit last Sabbath morning and night to the delight and edification of his flock.

Rev. J. F. Foster occupied his pulpit last Sunday for the first time since he was stricken with the pestilence, much to the delight of his devoted flock.

Show me a church, or a denomination of churches, that is not missionary in spirit and practice and whose pastor or preachers never tell of the responsibility upon Christians to send the gospel to every creature, and I will show you a people who are stricken with the palsy of spiritual death. The spirit of missions is the spirit of Christ, and "he that hath not the spirit of Christ is none of his." Whatever we may think about it, the Word of God decides for every conscientious man and woman the question of duty with reference to this great matter.—Baptist Standard.

The marriage of Rev. R. H. Wynn to Miss Alma M. Sawtelle took place according to announcement. An immense crowd of admiring friends was in attendance. After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's father. In the evening the bridal couple went to the Algiers parsonage, where they were most cordially greeted by members of the church and congregation. The bridal presents were numerous and elegant. Bro. Wynn was taken sick that evening, and it was feared for a time that he had yellow fever. We are glad to be able to state, however, that he is now on his feet and ready to resume the duties of his pastorate.

Widespread and intelligent effort to provide Christian homes for the neglected children of the nation would doubtless be followed by proper nurture and training and a decided decrease in the prison population. If, in addition to such rational and Christian provision for the little ones who under other circumstances will receive their training in the streets, wise restrictions were put upon immigration, it would not be many years until the courts and prisons of the country would cost much less than they do at present. But who can tell when common-sense methods will come into vogue?—Central Advocate.

Too little account is taken of the permeating power of the gospel in modern civilization and philanthropic movements. If its influence were removed, mankind would sustain an irreparable loss. The world owes it a debt that it can never repay, but of which it seems to be unconscious. Faith in Jesus has been the inspirer of the noblest purposes and the grandest achievements. It is the sweetener and sanctifier of home life. It gladdens, purifies and blesses social relations. It imparts to life its beauty, power and glory. It ennobles and dignifies human intercourse and energy. If the Christ of the manger, of the cross and of the ascension were taken from the earth, its light would expire and darkness once more settle over its fairest portions as it now does in its benighted regions.—Presbyterian.

The prosperity and success of a denomination lies largely with its pastors. The officiary may devise and plan, but the pastors are the churches' executors. They are with the people, they are in their homes, they are in daily converse with them. Consciously or unconsciously the people imbibe their pastors' views, their enthusiasms, their aspirations, their hopes. We have known pastors to change the whole current of feeling and activity of a congregation. "Like priest like people" is as true in practice as in Scripture. Again and again have we seen how the support of all our general interests—the circulation of our official church paper, our educational, missionary and every other interest—are dependent upon the pastors who are in daily contact with the people. When pastors thoroughly understand that they are the connecting link between the local church and the church at large, and realize the responsibilities which it entails, the sooner will prosperity come to all our general interests, and, consequently, to the whole church.—Methodist Recorder.

PORT GIBSON FEMALE COLLEGE.

As letters of inqniry continne to come in from stndents and patrons, we wish to annonnce throngh the ADVOCATE that Port Gibson Female College will open Tnesday, Nov. 2. Day pupils and those in the conntry will enter at once. All students are requested to be in readiness to come in as soon as cool weather and raising of quarantine will permit.

Bnildings and gronnds are in excellent condition, and teachers at their posts ready for the opening. A good attendance is reasonably expected. The health of the community is unsurpassed; not a case of fever of any kind in the town, and not a snspicions case in the conntry. The work of pntting in electric lights and water pipes progresses satisfactorily.

FROM BRO. BASS.

I am just home from a six weeks' trip in the Sardis district, closing ont a glorious meeting with Bro. Joe Wilson, of the Bnrgess Mission, last Wednesday. There were forty-seven conversions and additions to our church at this point. Bro. Wilson is a jewel. May the Lord bless him! I could say mnch in regard to my work in the Sardis district, bnt some one wonld say, "He's blowing his horn." So I'll jnst say that it was a sncccss at every point. Prof. H. C. WHITWORTH COLLEGE.

Whitworth College is one of the few colleges in the State which opened on time, notwithstanding quarantine restrictions. Eighty boarding pnpils are enrolled, and are doing good work. Our facnity is one of the strongest and best, each being an artist in his or her department. Whitworth rnns ten months We are making special arrangements for onr girls who have been kept at home by qnarantine. Books have been sent to many of those in quarantined districts. We propose to help them make np all lost time. Their classes will be rnn later in June, if necessary. We have a perfectly healthy town, and no sickness in the college. We hope to welcome onr delayed pnpils very soon.

With instruction equal to any, and comforts snrpassing most, there is no reason why Whitworth shonld not claim a large patronage. The college has never, in its history, been able to offer better accommodations. Everything is in first class repair. Johnson Hall has been improved almost beyond recognition. The entire home department has been thoronghly furnished with everything necessary to health and comfort. During the past three years over five thousand dollars have been expended in improving the bnildings and in beantifying the grounds. There is an up to date air abont the college which is refreshing and stimniating. With fresh paint everywhere and scrnpnlons cleanliness, it is not snrprising that the health, thongh always good, was never better. The excellent health of the girls demonstrates the fact that the college is located in the healthiest part of the State.

Epworth League

BY REV. HERMANN W. KNICKERBOCKER.

TOPIC FOR NOVEMBER.

THE CHURCH OF ST. PAUL.

NOV. 7.—ITS ORIGIN AND DEVELOPMENT.

(Eph. ii, 19-22.)

1. The origin of the Christian Church was in Christ. He is the foundation. Only those who have the Christ-spirit are used as stones in the building of his church. Many who belong to the visible do not belong to the invisible church of Christ. All who have the spirit of Christ of whatever denomination or creed, are "fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God." Bigotry would make the lines coincident with ecclesiastical bonndaries, bnt the church of Christ can not be thns limited.

2. This church is to be the habitation of God. It is to incarnate God. Christ, in his body, is no longer in the world, bnt the church is to represent him. The church is the "body of Christ and members in particular." It makes virtnally omnipresent the body of Christ. Each Christian is an epitome of the church—his work is to represent Christ.

3. The world jndges Christ by the church. Whatever we do as professing Christians that we declare to be Christianity. Does the world mis jndge Christ to day? One reason is because we misrepresent him. Let ns remember that the honor of our Master's name is given to ns for keeping!

4. The church is the medium throngh which God shines down into the world. Sin will vitiate the medinm and make impossible the entrance of the life giving light. Let ns cleanse onrselves from all filthiness of the flesh and allow the light of God to shine throngh ns, transforming the moral ngliness of the hnman heart, and making to grow, instead of the brier, the beantifnl flowers of virtne, love and holiness.

DOTS.

The prevalence of yellow fever, instead of having a demoralizing effect npon the League, shonld be a stimnlns to greater endeavor.

The following is a condensed report of work of Tchonpitonlas Epworth League for past month, written up by Miss Nettie Zimmer, president:

Tchonpitonlas Epworth League is glad to report that mnch interest is still manifested in all departments of work. Our Department of Christian Effort is doing a good work in training onr yonng people to sing, pray and testify in pnblic for Jesus, as all Methodists should. Onr meetings are well attended. The other departments are all at work, the head of each respective committee realizing that they must "work while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work." The Charity and Help Department have done good work dnring the past month in visiting the sick and needy, and in the distribution of tracts, etc. We were delighted that the Union League met at Tchonpitonlas, and we invite them to come and visit us again.

Our president having resigned last month, Miss Nettie Zimmer was elected to fill that office.

To Whom it May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mul-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of sores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. BLACK,

FORTY YEARS OF LIGHT.

Cheerfulness belongs to Christianity. The church shonld be well snpplied with windows to admit the snnlight, and eqnipped with the very best appliances known to science for the artificial light needed for illnmination at night. The most modern and efficient diffuser of light is a reflector, bnt there are differences in the qnality of reflectors as there are differences in the qnality of flonr. To those interested in the proper lighting of their church a Book of Light and other information will be sent free of charge on application to I. P. Frink, 551 Pearl St., New York.

A revival of religion means the inntting np of the truants of the church. They are entirely too numerons. Numbers absent themselves so long from its ordinances as to have almost forfeited standing in Christ's school, and if not speedily looked after and brought back, will be wholly lost to it. Tact and kindness will accomplish more toward their return to the house and service of God than scolding and discipline.—Selected.

Some publishers are putting off Bibles on their subscribers which they claim are just as good as the Holman. There is no other as good. It has all the Oxford helps and the self-pronouncing feature besides. Every person, whether educated or uneducated, needs help in pronouncing Bible names. The Holman Bible gives yon the pronnnciation, not in an appendix where it has to be hunted np, but in the book itself wherever the name occurs. Paper and binding are excellent. There is a sentiment abroad that the God of the Bible who busied himself sending crops and qnails to ancient Israel is now enjoying his Sabbaths, and that the hand that is now upon the throttle of a busier and better world is the hand of nature. It sounds scientific, but it is only impudent infidelity.—Bible Reader.

SMILES.

BY ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

Smile a little, smile a little,
As you go along.
Not alone when life is pleasant,
But when things go wrong,
Care delights to see you frowning,
Loves to hear you sigh;
Turn a smiling face upon her,
Quick the flame will fly.

Smile a little, smile a little,
All along the road;
Every life must have its burden,
Every heart its load.
Why sit down in gloom and darkness,
With your grief to sup?
As you drink Fate's bitter tonic,
Smile across the cup.

Smile upon the troubled pilgrims
Whom you pass and meet;
Frowns are thorns, and smiles are blossoms
Oft for weary feet.
Do not make the way seem harder
By a sullen face.
Smile a little, smile a little,
Brighten up the place.

Smile upon your undone labor;
Not for one who grieves
O'er his task, waits wealth or glory;
He who smiles achieves.
Though you meet with loss and sorrow
In the passing years,
Smile a little, smile a little,
Even through your tears.

—Youth's Companion.

HOW PEOPLE GET ON IN THE WORLD.

To be successful! This has become one of the grandest tests of merit; for even the church in our age has grasped the promise of this life, as well as the next; and begun to look upon a genuine success as one of the legitimate fruits of the gospel. And when we consider that but for successful men there would be far fewer churches, hospitals, schools, etc., and vastly crippled missionary and charitable enterprises, we must acknowledge the blessedness of success, in its general results.

And when we regard it individually, success is in most cases an inward grace as well as an external gain. The qualities that have been cultivated in order to attain to it are, in the main, excellent qualities; for, though people talk of "luck," success does not come by chance. This world is run with far too tight a rein to permit of fortuitous events, and Providence, beyond all doubt, gives us good things by our own hands.

First, the successful man knows how to wait. Patience is genius, and failures are mostly consummated by want of faith and want of patience. To concentrate every power on one object, and go directly for it, converging all collateral aids, and to be determined to succeed, is to succeed, as a general rule. But if once we begin to doubt, we begin to sprawl, and in our days specialties only attain to eminence. We think Admirable Crichtons pleasant men to know, but we don't do business with them.

Over-sensitiveness is a great drawback to success. Before men are successful, they must take rebuffs, and plenty of them.

Selfish men, as a rule, do not succeed. If Providence helps those who help themselves, much more does he help those who help others, as well as themselves. "The liberal man deviseth liberal things; and by liberal things shall he stand." There have been hours in the lives of all successful men when everything depended upon someone throwing them a rope or lending them a hand. It is not only bad Christianity, it is also bad policy, to keep one's hands too much in one's own pockets. Indeed, selfish men are often a wonder to those who know them. They get much and gain nothing. They are like those Jews who built themselves ceiled houses, while the house of God lay waste. If they had minded their affairs, he would have minded theirs; for we can not serve God—or man either—for nought. But now, says God of such: "Ye have sown much, and bring in little; ye eat, but ye have not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink; ye clothe ye, but there is none warm; and he that earneth wages earneth wages to put it into a bag with holes." Self-reliance is a good thing; but mutual-reliance is a far better thing.

The preacher, thinker, philanthropist, etc., and all men who work with mind and spirit, can not be paid in matter; therefore their success must be measured by moral and mental influences; and for this reason the world often calls them "failures," a definition applied still more startlingly to men who band together for good, which are apparent non-successes. But these men are not "failures" if we consider that we are eternal. Truths may take but one step in a century, but they never recede; and even forlorn hopes have their glad and glorious days. Beneath the fire of storming batteries we touch something diviner than earth, and it is in the hottest conflicts we meet our heavenly brother-in-arms.

The world may thank God that there are men and women who, for their convictions and ideals, are content to be what it calls "unsuccessful"—to be of the minority, against the majority. These are the "foolish" ones to whom God says, "Forward!" and barbarism crumbles, and nations are kindled to a common compassion; and men give their lives to destroy slavery, and their money to feed the hungry, and teach the ignorant. These are the men who make us revolt at massacres, who succor desolate women, and nourish famishing children, and protect animal life. Well, then, though material success is a great power for good, there is a higher success than a golden one. Let us not despise it, because it appears so unreal. Beautiful ideals expand the hearts that welcome them: and like the hazel wand, guess at springs that have not yet flowed. People may smile at the disproportion between our ideals and realities. Never mind. It is just here that we touch the first step of the ladder which leads up to the regions of light; and to that gloriously comprehensive divine verdict, "Well done, good and faithful servant!"—Amelia E. Barr, in Christian Herald.

A Cougher's Coffers

may not be so full as he wishes, but if he is wise he will neglect his coffers awhile and attend to his cough. A man's coffers may be so secure that no one can take them away from him. But a little cough has taken many a man away from his coffers. The "slight cough" is somewhat like the small pebble that lies on the mountain side, and appears utterly insignificant. A fluttering bird, perhaps, starts the pebble rolling, and the rolling pebble begets an avalanche that buries a town. Many fatal diseases begin with a slight cough. But any cough, taken in time, can be cured by the use of

LIVES NEAREST OUR OWN.

Much has been spoken and written about the careless and often bitter words that we offer those who are closest to our hearts; of the little omissions and commissions of which we would not be guilty with respect to those who do not belong to us. It may not, in the way of illustrating a reply to the charges of this sort, seem sacrilege to give the answer of a child who was asked by her mother, "Why do you not fear to offend God as you do me by your neglects and mistakes?"

"God sees for himself just how sorry I am, and how hard I am trying to live close to him," said the girl. Are not her words suggestive of the attitude of grown-up children towards those whom they love, who are so very near to them that they often take advantage of the insight that they accredit to the best beloved? They pour out what is in the heart, both of good and evil, believing that love is omniscient, and will see the intention of affection.

But after these nearest ones are gone—ah, then, how remorse gnaws at the centre of conscienceness! How the sapping of the tie that bound two lives as one shocks the nature into a condition that invites all the spirits of despair, that mock the poor, lonely one into almost a belief that he is a demon! Women who have lived in the experience and have adopted the individuality of the husband whose human existence was wrenched from theirs, who have given their all of time, strength, purpose, to this one of their love, have become, through this complete devotion and absorbing relationship, victims of their own unbalanced condition. One such wrote, under the maddening influence of grief, loneliness and regret: "Do you think if I ask God, he will tell my dear one how much I loved him back of and beyond all my mistakes in my married life?"

Just here lies our help—in believing that the highest, purest, deepest love must comprehend the love that responds to it, and that when the spirit is freed from its own limitations, it must, if allowed to remain cognizant of the hopes and fears of the one whose life was a part of it on the earth, understand more fully the central purpose of the one who is left to suffer on account of the mistakes common to humanity. If it could be allowed to whisper a word to raise the fainting spirit of its heart's darling, would not this freed soul breathe, "In this higher atmosphere, and in the presence of God, the test I find is loyalty at the centre." To all who are faint and sick often, as they are filled with regret for things done or undone as related to those who have passed on to clear vision, may not this whisper be passed on to give them courage for the years that remain before they, too, "know as they are known?"—Mary R. Baldwin, in Christian Work.

RELIGIOUS READING.

This includes not merely the Bible and strictly devotional books, but any literature which tends directly to enrich the spiritual life. It consists in large part of volumes of devout meditations, religious poetry and the biographies of persons eminent for saintly living. It often is said that the habit of religious reading is dying out, and undoubtedly many individuals, even among professed Christians, neglect it. But the very large sales of such publications afford strong evidence to the contrary.

There still is a vast demand for such reading and a deep interest in it. But its character has changed somewhat during the last half-century, especially in the department of biography. Many once popular volumes of this class now are never read because of their unnaturalness. It is recognized more than formerly that there must be genuine manliness or womanliness as truly as piety in any character if it is to exert a useful spiritual influence.

But it is well understood that religious reading promotes both self-knowledge and knowledge of God. It is an aid to holy reflection. It prompts to intelligent prayer. It opens the soul's eyes to the way of duty. It quickens and enlarges the whole spiritual nature. It encourages us by informing us of the victories of divine truth in the hearts of others and in the world at large.

The best books and journals for religious reading are not always those which deal exclusively with distinctively sacred subjects. We live in a world of manifold thought and action, and the highest type of religion takes this into account. Those publications which look at Christianity in its actual relations with mankind, which aim to help living people to learn and do God's will in common life, are usually the most helpful as well as the most enjoyable. But once in a while some book of old-world pious meditation, some actually mediæval record of religious mental processes or efforts, is found inspiring. Whatever by actual use brings Christ close is good for the soul.—The Congregationalist.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S PERSONALITY.

The heart of gold, the will of iron, the royal temper of steel, the pride, patriotism, and the deep piety of Victoria have been enshrined in a small, but vigorous frame, the "mignonne" aspect of which especially strikes those who behold her for the first time in these, her "chair days." It was reported how, when Prince Albert was dying, he roused himself from a period of wandering to turn with ineffable love to his spouse and sovereign, saying to her, with a kiss, "Good little wife!" And when the prince consort was actually passing away, after those twenty-one years of wedded happiness, it was told how the queen bent over him and whispered, "It is your little wife," at which last words the angel of death stayed his hand while once again the dear eyes opened and the dying lips smiled. But though this be so, no one who has ever been honored by near approach to her majesty, or has ever tarried in her presence, will fail to testify to the extreme majesty of her bearing, mingled always with the most perfect grace and gentleness. Her voice has, moreover, always been pleasant and musical to hear, and is so now. The hand which holds the scepter of the seas is the softest that can be touched: the eyes which have grown dim with labors of state for England, and with too frequent tears, are the kindest that can be seen.—Sir Edwin Arnold, in the Forum.

THE GLORY OF TRUE SERVICE.

Unless in rare instances, I can best designate the story-tellers by their earthly employments or conditions, of which everyone is proud; since all are now content with their individual lots before coming here. In the light, which we now dwell in, we can see that what we were, and what we aimed for in our former estate, was ordered by divine love; and now we never quarrel in our hearts with the infinite love of God, or distrust his care of us, whether in days present or past. Indeed, all our burdens are gone, and we feel happiest of all that we have now definitely laid aside the work of attempting to govern the universe, which we once sought to do—at least so far as concerned our place in it; and this is the reason why we say now: "I was a shoemaker, and I wear a golden hammer for my badge. I never cheated at shoemaking, and I am proud of my old occupation." Or, one says: "I used to do domestic work, and make clean corners for women who could not well do it for themselves; and now I wear a golden broom for my badge, and I am proud of it. I was never an eye-servant. I lived as seeing Him who is invisible."—From "A Story of the Heavenly Camp-Fires."

Hygiene.

NATURE'S CURE FOR NERVOUSNESS.

The natural antidote to weak nerves is the healthy development of the muscles; that is, of the general muscular system instead of special muscles only. This can only be done by active exercise in the open air which thoroughly oxygenates the blood and wastes the muscular tissues, thus preparing them to be replenished from food elements of the blood. The constant waste and rebuilding are vital processes that measure vitality and efficiency. When these go on healthfully, nervousness is never present except by some flagrant abuse of the digestive functions, some unwise drain of a vital fluid, or some exhausting tension of the mind. Therefore steer clear of these and give proper attention to the muscles and nervousness will be avoided.—Domestic Journal.

HOW TO REST.

To understand how to rest is of more importance than to know how to work. The latter can be learned easily; the former it takes years to learn, and some people never learn the art of resting. It is simply a change of scenes and activities. Loafing may not be resting. Sleeping is not always resting. Sitting down for days with nothing to do is not restful. A change is needed to bring into play a different set of faculties, and to turn the life into a new channel. The man who works hard finds his best rest in playing hard. The man who is burdened with care finds relief in something that is active, yet free from responsibility. Above all, keep good-natured, and don't abuse your best friend—the stomach.—New York Ledger.

WHY?

BY CLIFFORD R. JONES.

Why all this anguish, Savior mine?
Why, Lord, tha bitter pain?
Why do the imps of hell combine
To rend my soul in twain?

Why are the clouds so dark, dear God?
Why does my heart bleed so?
Why strike with such a heavy rod?
Why bring thy child so low?

Why are the thorns that pierce my brow
The sharpest that I know?
Why are these trials all somehow
So hard, so full of woe?

Jesus, through sorrows black as night
I reach for thee;
Hold thou my hand, for all is right
When thou'rt with me.

Arcadia, La.

AFTERWARDS.

BY FANNIE MINOR MONTGOMERY.

"Afterwards it yieldeth tha peaceable fruits of righteousness."

After the clouds the sunshine,
After the storm a calm,
After the labor resting,
After a wound the balm.

After the waters bitter
Cometh tha fountain sweet;
Tha toilsome journey ends in Rest for tha weary feet.

Not forever the conflict,
Pain with glory is rife;
Sorrow shall change to singing,
Death be swallowed of life.

WHY ARE WE JUSTIFIED BY FAITH?

Why are we justified by faith? Paul says: "Therefore, as by one offense judgment came upon all men to condemnation, even so by one righteousness the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." (Rom. v, 18.) This being the "ground" of our justification, so the "ground" is the reason "why." If we follow pursue the argument a little farther. What made Adam so weak as to fall into outward transgression? From the plain teaching of the Word we know that no man will willfully disobey God before unbelief enters his heart. So it was with Eve (and Adam also). When she was tempted she never disobeyed God until the serpent persuaded her that she would not die. Unbelief took possession of her heart, and then, not till then, did she disobey God. If she had not lost her faith in God, she would never have sinned. Unbelief, then, was the cause of the fall, or rather the condition of the fall; so, then, belief, or faith, must be the condition, as far as our part is concerned, of our justification.

THE VOICE OF THE PREACHER.

Man has invented many curious wind instruments, but nothing quite so marvelous as the human voice. It bears the stamp of the divine. Beside this divine masterpiece the inventions of men appear cheap and mean. Man's work is unimprovable; to get something better, he must invent a new instrument; but the human voice, unlike even those of beast and bird, is susceptible of the most merciful improvement. As first given, the notes of some birds surpass that of the human being; but the voice of the bird is stationary like a wind instrument, while that of man is capable of indefinite cultivation.

In sending them forth to disciple the nations, Christ gave his preachers this silver trumpet. The world can never outgrow its charms. The printed page can never replace the cunning of the tongue or voice. There are two things remarkable about this instrument of persuasion: It is adapted to embody sentiment and moral truth; it gives expression to the spiritual as well as the material world. The brute can tell only his material needs, sufferings or joys, and the bird, in his song, can not lift himself out of the mundane sphere; but man's voice is full of suggestions of the invisible and the spiritual.

Again, the improvableness of the human voice is almost incalculable. Words are rubber, and susceptible of indefinite inflection by the skillful use of the human voice. Some voices are naturally better than others, but even the poorest may be bettered by use and attention to the laws regulating articulation and pronunciation. The minister should be a good reader as well as speaker, and to keep himself fresh in this department, he should read aloud each day. The voice, with facility in its use, is an important part of his stock in trade. He must be a voice, but not a mere voice. The voice must have a man and a gospel behind it.—Zion's Herald.

CATARRH CAN NOT BE CURED

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they can not reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it, you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials, free.

SMITH—ROBT. M. SMITH was born in McLemore, Tenn., Aug. 15, 1833, and died at his home in Crawford, Miss., Aug. 1, 1897. He moved to Mississippi about the close of the late war, and located at Crawford, where the remaining years of his useful life were spent.

He was married Sept. 3, 1867, to Miss Alice Smith, a beautiful, accomplished, and Christian young lady, and erected a home which, for thirty years, was famous for its hospitality and the beauty and congeniality of the home life of its family. Four children blessed their union, three of whom are now living—one son and two daughters—who, with their devoted mother, mourn their irreparable loss.

In 1875, under the ministry of his friend, Rev. R. G. Porter, he was converted and joined the Methodist Church, becoming one of its most active, zealous, and faithful members.

On the day of his death he attended the Sunday-school of which he was superintendent, and spent the remainder of the day with his family, being most cheerful and happy during the entire day. At 10:30 o'clock that night his family were summoned to his bedside to see him breathe his last, for God, without warning, summoned his great soul to rest.

Bro. Smith served the church as steward, trustee and Sunday-school superintendent during all his Christian life, making a most devoted, efficient and active official in each position; and several times he represented the church at its Annual Conference with distinguished ability. He was always loyal to his pastor, and could be relied upon to co-operate in anything that had for its object the upbuilding of the church or the advancement of the cause of Christ. He was a typical representative of broad-minded, generous, chivalrous Christian manhood; a devoted husband and father, a true and loyal friend, a useful and patriotic citizen.

May God, in his wisdom and mercy, comfort and bless his bereaved family, and may those who knew him strive to emulate his example! Thank God for the assurance of a reunion beyond the river! Among the blood-washed throng we expect to meet our departed friend.

S. M. THAMES.

HART—THOMAS HOWARD HART was born on the twenty-sixth of May, 1853, and died in Canton, Madison county, Oct. 9, 1897. He was a consistent member of the M. E. Church, South. He suffered for years with a dreadful disease, which gradually sapped his pure life away. He bore it with courage seldom seen, refusing to take an opiate until a few weeks before his death, thinking it a sin. When he realized how his family suffered from seeing his great agony, then he consented. He had so often told his wife he wanted to die in his right mind. Not many days before he died (a beautiful Sabbath morning) he asked his wife not to give him the opiate until he could talk with his son—a young man—his firstborn. He gave wise counsel that morning, and I pray God that they are treasured in dear Charlie's heart, and may bring forth abundant fruit. Then he told his wife to give him the medicine, and "let me go"—into unconsciousness he meant. I remember once hearing his wife say, "Tommie lives his religion at home." I thought then, and have thought many times since, What a heritage to leave his children! I have seen him this year feebly wending his way to the Lord's table, and I thought, A few more times here, and then the communion in heaven with father, mother, and loved ones gone before.

I have known Tommie since he was a small boy. I have knelt around his father's fireside with him, in the morning and evening sacrifice, and have always known him to be the same quiet Christian character. May the God whom he loved to worship sanctify this bereavement to the good of his loved ones!

A FRIEND.

REED—SARAH A. REED (nee Miller) was born Dec. 20, 1820. She joined the M. E. Church, South, at about twenty years of age, and lived a consistent member until God took her home, Jan. 25, 1897. Her husband and seven children preceded her to the spirit land, leaving six children and many friends to mourn their loss.

Sister Reed was one of the few of our old landmarks. A good woman has gone from us. In the death of Sister Reed we have sustained a great loss as a church, the preachers one of their best friends, the children a good and loving mother.

Oh, how kind Grandma Reed was to the sick and suffering, always ready to go, rain or shine, hot or cold, to do what she could to relieve anyone in distress! Oh, how we all miss her! Among the last things she said was, "The will of the Lord be done," and then she passed away from us as easy as an infant goes to sleep in its mother's arms.

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep."

May the children, relatives and friends so live as to meet her in heaven! Farewell, grandma; thou art sleeping in thy lone grave. Nature's turmoil all is over, for thy gentle spirit has fled.

Now to the children: Your mother can never come to you; so live for God and heaven.

Your pastor, R. P. GOAR.

POLLARD—Mrs. JULIA A. POLLARD (nee Williams) was born Feb. 22, 1833, and was married to W. I. Pollard, Jan. 30, 1851. She joined the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in youth, and in the Fall of 1852 she joined the Methodist Church, in which she was a consistent member until her death, which occurred Sept. 22, 1897. She was a kind wife, an affectionate mother, and was always a shining religious light within her circle.

Sister Pollard died of that fearful disease, cancer. Oh, how she suffered for years!—but she bore her suffering with remarkable Christian fortitude. She leaves an aged husband, three sons and three daughters, with a host of relatives and friends, to mourn their loss.

She was a Methodist true and tried. Well might Wesley say, "Our people die well," for so they do. The writer said to her, "Do you feel that God is with you?" "Yes." "If it is his will, are you ready to go?" "Yes, all is well—no cloud, no doubt." Oh, to live the life of the righteous! Thank God! they never die.

In the death of Sister Pollard we have sustained a great loss, both in the home and church; but, thank God! our loss is her gain.

Weep not, husband and dear children; your loved one is at rest. Strive to meet her in the sweet bye-and-bye.

Her pastor, R. P. GOAR.

BARNES—GEORG A. M. GRIFFIN was born at McNary, Tenn., Aug. 12, 1872, and died at her father's, in Nugent, Grant parish, La., Sept. 14, 1897, at 3 o'clock P. M. Her mother preceded her to the kingdom in the year 1891 (Jan. 2). Sister Georgia was married to Bro. Barnes, May 25, 1892, at Fort Worth, Texas, and was his devout wife till her death. She died of that dreaded disease, consumption. She joined our church May 30, 1897, and was happily converted while in the act of joining the church. I visited her during her illness, and found her quite composed, trusting her Savior, and willing to meet her Lord in judgment. Her remains were interred at Pleasant Grove, McNary county, Tenn., Sept. 17, 1897. She leaves a husband, father, stepmother, two brothers and two sisters to mourn her departure. Weep not for her, dear ones, for we may meet her in heaven, if faithful.

This is the head of a Pearline woman. "There are others." And if the others don't look cheerful, it's no wonder. You've got to work hard, if you do your washing and cleaning with soap, and you've got to work a long time over it, and you're wearing things out with your rubbing. Pearline makes the work easy and quick; saves rubbing. The wonder is that any woman who has to do soap's hard work can look pleasant. Still, some of them do, in spite of it. 544

Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.

The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take-up, convenient foot rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearing polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF THREADING—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle; with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell, without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

The interest of the United States government in the Union Pacific railroad terminated on Nov. 1, when at the foreclosure sale of the mortgage held by the United States, the road was purchased by the committee of eastern capitalists formed for its reorganization. The full amount accruing to the United States from the sale can not be given exactly, but it is estimated to be $58,065,748.40.

There is now in progress at Washington a conference between representatives of Russia, Japan and the United States on the subject of the preservation of the fur seals. As may be remembered, Great Britain declined to send representatives to this conference, or to be bound by its findings in any way. Despite the absence of Great Britain, however, the conference is going right ahead with the work before it.

There is no disguising the fact that a portion of the people of the United States is becoming dissatisfied with the territorial limits of their country, vast as they are, and are looking abroad for colonial additions. In order to secure possession of an island in the Gulf of Mexico, and a few mountainous islands in the Pacific Ocean, we are willing to risk war successively with Spain and Japan, and incidentally incur the ill-will of most of the leading European nations.

FOREIGN.

The French government has officially commissioned a physician to visit this country and report upon the working of our dental colleges.

The King of Siam has subsidized the sacred books of the Buddhists that are being translated by various oriental scholars under the supervision of Max Muller.

General Woyler, late captain-general of Cuba, embarked on a steamer for Spain on Oct. 29; but, under instructions from Madrid, the vessel will not leave until after the arrival of Marshal Blanco, the new governor-general of Cuba.

The reply of the Spanish government to the note of the United States, presented some time since, has apparently been received at Washington with complacency. There is no evidence of flurry or warlike preparations in that quarter.

It has just been ascertained that all cartridges fitted to the torpedoes for Greece during the war between Greece and Turkey were not provided with percussion caps and fulminating mercury. Hence, if the torpedoes had been wanted, they would have been perfectly harmless.

Serious troubles have arisen between Hayti and Germany. The German minister to that republic, Count Schwerin, has hauled down his flag, and according to current report three German warships are expected there to enforce the ultimatum of the minister to Hayti, demanding indemnity for the alleged illegal arrest of a German citizen.

The national congress of German journalists and writers, at Leipsic, has petitioned the Reichstag to change the existing laws so as to prohibit the present mode of punishing press offenders by treating editors as common malefactors, on a par with thieves and murderers, keeping them in chains in dungeons, and giving them the same fare as common criminals.

The recent cables from Europe have reported a threatening state of things in the Niger Valley. France appears to be determined to secure control of a portion of the Upper Nile Valley, and French expeditions are known to be pushing forward from the westward, with a view to taking possession of the coveted district, and eventually extending French influence into Ethiopia. Great Britain has always claimed control of the Nile Valley.

The Spanish cruisor "Alfonso XIII," with Marshal Blanco, the new governor-general of Cuba on board, was sighted off Havana on Oct. 31. At 7 o'clock the "Alfonso" entered the harbor, and Lieutenant-General Weyler, and other high military and naval officers, went on a special steamer to meet General Blanco. After a long and cordial conference, General Weyler yielded up his command to his successor.

REMEMBERING THE PASTOR.

The following is clipped from a Gretna paper of recent date:

At the Methodist Church on Newton street, Tuesday evening, the esteemed pastor, Rev. J. M. Alford, was agreeably remembered by his congregation, who tendered him the sum of $33. Rev. H. H. Ahrens was present, and on behalf of the congregation, he made the presentation to the young pastor. Rev. Mr. Alford covered up the modest blushes that forced themselves to his cheeks by making a happy and feeling response. The members of the congregation are to be commended for showing this substantial appreciation of their pastor's efforts in their behalf.

This was indeed a pleasant surprise. It is worthy of note that it is the result of the efforts of our young people at Gretna. May God bless them and make them as happy in giving as their pastor is in receiving! We value these expressions of kindness more for the motive by which they were actuated in giving than the mere intrinsic worth of the gift.

Our young people's prayer meeting, which is conducted by them alone, is a decided success, doing a work which would be creditable to people much more experienced in Christian work.

J. M. ALFORD, Pastor.

Mr. Jacob B. Brown, of Graham ville, S. C., was troubled with chills and fever, and unable to procure relief, until he began to take Ayer's Pills. He is now enjoying excellent health, and is a warm and sincere advocate of Ayer's Pills for all complaints of stomach, liver, or bowels.

Mr. Ruskin has written some sixty-four books, and his publisher pays him $20,000 a year.

TALK SHORT!

Phillips Brooks has emphasized in his lectures on preaching the importance of the man behind the sermon. I should like to put in a plea for the man in front of the sermon. He demands in our day from the pulpit, as from all other departments of busy modern life, condensed worth in small packages. The Ram's Horn writer pithily says that many ministers, in preparing their sermons, prepare no place to stop. A small boy said to his mother, "Mama, may I be a preacher when I grow up?" The mother, delighted at this evidence of piety in her boy, who had not heretofore been conspicuous for his attainments in this direction, said, "Of course you may, my darling; why do you want to be a preacher?" "Oh, 'cause, mama, it's so much harder to sit still so long and listen, than 'tis to walk round and holler."

I have thought that ministers must like their work more than men of other occupations, because, while workmen are everywhere clamoring for shorter hours, the minister is determined to go on when everybody is anxious for him to stop. He often destroys, in the second twenty minutes, the effect which he has produced in the first twenty. Like the Tower of Babel, his structure is destroyed by the confusion of tongue. We can not add a cubit to our stature, but we can subtract a cubit from our remarks. A man who had been talking a long while at a religious service was about to gather renewed inspiration from a quotation from Cicero. "Cicero says," he began, "Cicero says"—and some one helped him out by saying, "How long, O Catiline, wilt thou abuse our patience?" The minister who preached till only one was left, and said that it was a pity to stop preaching as long as there was anyone anxious to hear the gospel, succeeded far better in scattering his congregation than he did in scattering the good seed of the kingdom. Too much wind blows the soil away. What earnest and noble words are these of J. M. Buckley: "The whole art of making a good speech is to have something pertinent and moving to say; to say something all the time, to say it vivaciously; and, if it is a religious speech, to say it with religious feeling, and to stop when everyone wishes you to go on."—Standard.

MAYOR OF GREATER NEW YORK.

In the first election in Greater New York, on Tuesday last, Robert A. Van Wyck was elected mayor by a plurality of 87,000. Out of 500,000 votes cast he received about 233,000. He is a Tammany Hall Democrat. Seth Low (Citizens' Union) came second with nearly 146,000. General Tracy, the Republican candidate, received about 100,000. Henry George, Jr., as a Jeffersonian Democrat, in his father's place, received 16,000.

THE PRESENT MOMENT.

The present moment is divinely sent,
The present duty is thy Master's will;
Oh, thou who longed for some noble work,
Do thou this hour the given task fulfill!
And thou shalt find, though small at first it seemed,
It is the work of which thou oft hast dreamed.

Oh, think not if thou art not called to work
In mission fields of some far-distant clime,
That thine is no grand mission! Every deed
That comes to thee in God's allotted time
Is just the greatest deed that thine could be,
Since God's high will appointeth it to thee.

LETTER FROM MR. MOODY.

At this time of the year, when people are returning from the country, and thoughts of all turn from the rest and quiet that may have come with the Summer to the business and work of the Fall and Winter, and many minds are busily at work to stimulate activity on old lines, and arouse enthusiasm and promote definite action on new and untried lines, ought there not to be, and may there not be, an aggressive and forward movement by the whole church of Christ of this land? May it not be a year in which those that know Christ shall stand shoulder to shoulder, and with one heart and one mind strike together for the faith of the gospel as never before?—a year in which we shall "expect great things from God and attempt great things for God," which means that we shall realize great things from God.

As I write there arises before my mental vision the host of men and women up and down the towns and villages of our country who never enter a church, who never hear the voice of evangelist or minister from one year's end to another. Shall not the gospel be brought to their doors, and the helpful books and leaflets scattered broadcast through these homes?

And, then, as we turn our thoughts to the great unchurched masses in our cities, what possibilities rise before us for them! These are the days of schools and classes for the study of everything under the sun. Why should there not be weekly or semi-weekly Bible classes started by Christian young men and women, where hundreds—yea, thousands—might hear the Word of Life, and go out in turn to draw in others, or start smaller, but no less needed centers of teaching?

This is not a new suggestion. In certain places such classes have been tried, and have proved a success by the numbers regularly attended. We thank God for them all, but what we want is to have them multiplied by the thousand until our great cities—the congested centers of life and activity—be riddled with Bible classes, and society permeated with the truths of God's Word and made to realize their reality.

And shall we limit our attempt of great things for God this year to our own country? I would be untrue to the vision before me did I not speak of the field of India, China, Japan and Africa, "white already to the harvest;" "regions beyond," where one might at any time find a parish of two or three million sheep heeding no shepherd. There is this year the opportunity to open hundreds of orphanages in India, where might be gathered the little ones, made homeless and destitute by the famine, and trained for Christ; and is there to be no response in men and means?

Over against the possibilities and needs of this year I see the host of men and women in our churches to whom the Master is saying, "Why stand ye here all the day idle?" Many have gifts for training and leading and teaching of which they are themselves perhaps ignorant; others could open their parlors for meetings and Bible classes, or by consecrating their means make it possible for others to give their time to the work of saving souls; others feel the need of training and Bible study before taking up any line of service; many more are sickened with the so-called round of social duty at present making up their life.

I believe one of the greatest needs of the time is for centers where those who so feel that they have been put in touch with the gospel, and are in debt to a lost world, may come aside for a longer or shorter time, as they are able, for the study of God's Word, and contact with those of long experience in the work of winning souls, and go out again to be a blessing. Demands are coming to me all the time for pastors' assistants, teachers and workers in all kinds of Christian work. I doubt not there may be many who are efficient and able to meet these means, but where are they, and how are they to be found unless they let themselves be known to some such center as has been suggested?

There is a training-school for Christian men and women in Chicago known as the Bible Institute, and should these lines fall under the eye of any who may be led to say with one of our mission leaders of to-day, "If God will show me anything I am not doing for the salvation of the world, I will do it now," and would like to put themselves under training for effective service, let me hear from them at once. D. L. MOODY.

"THE SALE OF METHODIST CHURCH PROPERTY."

In the ADVOCATE, of Nov. 4, there appeared an article written by "Layman or Sextus" on "The Sale of Methodist Church Property."

I am not sure that I understand fully the question as it presents itself to the mind of the writer; but if I do, I think his fears are groundless and his suggestion unwise. The article seems based upon the supposition that a local Board of Trustees, with or without the consent of the preacher in charge, can sell Methodist Church property and give a valid title to the purchaser. The dangers to which the church is subject, through the abuse of this power by dishonest trustees, are strongly presented, and a remedy is suggested in so changing the law as to make a vote of the membership of the local church the condition of a valid sale.

The subject is an important one, and if the dangers to which the writer calls attention are real, the law should be so changed as to protect the church against possible damage. But I think the danger is an imaginary one, for the supposition upon which it is based is incorrect. Trustees are elected to hold and not to sell church property. But since it may come to pass that the interests of the church will be promoted by the sale of a certain piece of property, the church has provided that the Quarterly Conference may order its sale, and, as may be seen in paragraph 424 of the Discipline, "the trustees, with the consent of the preacher in charge and the Quarterly Conference, shall have power to sell," etc.

If it be objected that the matter by this provision is simply taken out of the hands of possibly unscrupulous trustees and put into the hands of a possibly unscrupulous Quarterly Conference, I would reply that the Quarterly Conference is so constituted as to be, in an unusual degree, a representative body, and their action may be fairly judged to reflect the will of the membership of the church. But if this were not so, the suggestion that the local membership should by vote decide the question, however proper for a congregational church, is, in the case of a church having a connectional government, open to the fatal objection that the trustees do not hold the property for the local church, but for the M. E. Church, South, which by law has made the Quarterly Conference its representative, as far as the sale of property is concerned.

In view of this fact it is not as self-evident as "Layman" supposes that "the pastor has nothing to do with church property."

In conclusion, I would suggest that I would not only, with "Layman," "examine very carefully into the sale of church-property, which originated with the pastor and trustees," but I would not accept as valid any sale of Methodist Church property unless made by the trustees "with the consent of the preacher in charge and the Quarterly Conference."

There are other objections to the proposed vote by the members of the church, but they may be dismissed in view of the fact that the connectional church, and not the local church, is the owner of Methodist Church property. A. F. WATKINS.

CENTENARY AND DR. MATHEWS.

There are two classes of people, it is said, who can talk or write inexhaustibly on almost any subject. One is the class which knows all about the subject, and the other is the class which knows nothing about it. The latter can give free rein to fancy and the imagination without being encumbered by the limitation of facts. We do not belong to either of the above classes, but we know enough of Centenary Church, in St. Louis, to discover that much of the tall talk and criticism of Bishop Wilson in the distance for his recent provision for this church is based on a misapprehension of facts. Every-one of our Bishops is about as familiar with the actual and real conditions in the case as Bishop Wilson, and will doubtless fully indorse his work in providing for such a difficult field. A work which is already more difficult to provide for than anyone of our several charges at "Key West, of the Florida Conference."

Centenary is one of the last of the great old Protestant Churches yet remaining in the old down-town or east part of St. Louis. The others have followed their wealthy members and gone miles westward and built more modern churches in the midst of the territory in which most of their members live. Centenary still stands like a grand old light-house on some lone rock, lashed by the dark billows of an angry, surging sea, with its tall spire casting its shadow over human habitations as far from God as the heart of the Congo Valley. The services of policemen are at times required to push back these dark waves across the dead-line limitation of 300 feet, thus preventing these lawless, infamous billows from lashing the very walls of this historic old sanctuary.

The building is of stone, and one of the most spacious and abiding in the city, with such acoustics that 1,500 can comfortably hear the words of the preacher. Beneath this vast second-story auditorium are old-fashioned, but ample provisions for great social meetings, Sunday-schools, Epworth Leagues, etc. But the great problems confronting this immense old church are: How to fill these vast spaces with the unsaved multitude, and how to meet the enormous expense of successfully running such a work. Nearly all the former members of wealth are dead, or have moved their membership to churches in the West End. A few of the very loyal, devoted and self-sacrificing members who also live in the West End, miles away, still retain their membership in Centenary, and are still willing to sacrifice, to labor and to pay as long as the work can be carried on with practical success.

It is practically a mission church without an endowment. These few West End members of limited means have held on and worked on, giving liberally of their means, from the fact that with Dr. Mathews as pastor they can succeed in doing a great and good work for a multitude of poor people even without an endowment. Some critics seem to think this appointment was made in obedience to the dictatorial, domineering spirit of a rich, proud and self-willed city church. This is as far from the truth as the east is from the west. It is true the letter of the law may have been evaded, but this law has been several times much more triflingly evaded when no one protested. When a Bishop appoints a man Sunday-school Agent to let him have a year's pleasure trip in Europe, or that he may have the felicity of a Bishop's company around the world, and still be eligible to the honors of his Conference without having to locate, nothing is said; but when this same nominal appointment is made to meet the emergency of a great crisis and crucial hour in the history of the most gigantic city mission work in all Southern Methodism, we hear the mutterings of distant thunder.

Neither was this appointment made through any pet partiality for Dr. Mathews. We have been over about all the mission fields of Southern Methodism in every part of the world, at home and abroad, and not only familiar with the fields, but personally acquainted with our most important workers, and we are very clear and candid in the belief that not one of our Bishops in any part of the world has appointed a man to take up a more ponderous burden than the pulpit and pastoral work of Centenary Church. Dr. Mathews could get more money with much less labor in other fields, and numbers of his friends and family were very anxious for him to do so, but he does not feel called of God to seek places of ease, but to keep his armor bright to the very last, fighting where the battle rages fiercest and hottest.

We have men more logical, some more literary, some more scientific, some more oratorical and rhetorical, but we doubt whether we have a man with such a combination of gifts as to perform this difficult work with such success. He preaches from forty five to fifty minutes every Sunday morning and evening to immense audiences, often conducting protracted altar services at the close of his sermons, attends his morning and afternoon Sunday-schools, visits the sick, sometimes conducts two or three funerals on the same Sabbath, and attends some kind of a church meeting nearly every evening in the week. During October he made over 500 pastoral calls. His physical energy and endurance is really marvelous. Were it not for the simplicity of his child-like faith, his abundant, abounding hope, his artesian spring of good cheer, and radiant, perennial sunshine of spirit, we would fear some such sudden collapse as ended the splendid career of Henry George last week in New York.

To see such a veteran, so far beyond the allotted threescore and ten, surrounded by the multitude crowding the galleries, hanging on the earnest words of the old-fashioned, evangelical gospel, his voice ringing like a silver trumpet and his bald head waving like the white plume of Henry of Navarre, touches one with a sense of the sublime. Long may he wave and never waver!—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

A FADING-OUT OF THE DEAD LINE.

The churches are in need of the pruning-hook to cut away a hurtful tradition. They do not know that conditions have changed in regard to some things, and, therefore, do not change their relations to them. We will first show them wherein they were right, and then wherein they are wrong. It was so far true that a minister, having crossed his fiftieth year, dwelt thereafter in the past, and was oblivious to the present, that he was not acceptable to the people. This incompetency was fostered by a maxim which we even yet occasionally hear—that there can be nothing new in theology. In much less than thirty years of preaching a minister would have worn a deep path for himself by going round and round in a narrow theological circle—and thenceforth there was nothing for him to do but go round and round again. He had no work to do. It was all in his barrel, ready to hand. Therefore the people marked down the dead line of fifty, and those who passed it by might leave hope behind. So far the people were right; but they do not seem to have observed that this is now a tradition of the past, not a fact of the present. Competition for desirable pulpits has become as intense as competition in any other avocation. The minister at fifty knows that he is at a disadvantage because of prejudice against his age. The effect upon him is that he is an intenser student, and more determined to be at his best than is the young minister of thirty. And he has great advantages. He has experience in life and with people. He is a better and a much more acceptable spiritual physician. He is riper in scholarship and in general practical knowledge. He has the equipment for greatly excelling his young competitor—and he knows that he must greatly excel him, or be beaten in the contest of living. And he does excel him. The great sermons, the sustained effort; the highest success are found on the dark side of the dead line. There is no mistake about this. The ministers who have passed that line, as a class, are more acceptable than the class who have not reached it—and this superiority will become more marked as the present generations of enterprising young ministers pass across it. They will be conscious that they are abler than when they were younger, and they will not permit their freshness to fade. Therefore we say to the churches: Do not act upon a tradition, but look for yourself at the present, when seeking for a pastor. And we say to the ministers who have not passed that line: Prepare yourselves for it. The first care should be of your health. Do not overwork. Do not fret. Cross the dead line in perfect health, and make it an object of life to do so. Then you can let yourself out for fifteen to twenty years of superb ministry, and be four times as good at sixty as you were at thirty. The dead line is already fading out. In another ten years it will only be a hateful reminiscence. —The Interior.

JOHN FLETCHER ON "THE HIGHER LIFE."

We direct the attention of our readers to an extract on another page from John Fletcher's writings on sanctification. His teachings on this theme are emphasized by the character and devotion which he exemplified, for he not only taught the higher life in theory, but he was a pattern of its graces and an embodiment of its power in his private conduct and in his public ministry. Mr. Wesley said of him:

"I was intimately acquainted with him for above thirty years; I conversed with him morning, noon, and night, without the least reserve, during a journey of many hundred miles; and in all that time I never heard him speak one improper word, nor saw him do an improper action. To conclude: Many exemplary men have I known, holy in heart and life, within fourscore years; but one equal to him I have not known—one so inwardly and outwardly devoted to God. So unblamable a character in every respect I have not found in Europe or America; nor do I expect to find another such on this side of eternity."

Joseph Benson, who knew and loved Mr. Fletcher for many years, and was closely associated with him in the work of evangelism, bears this testimony concerning his "hungering and thirsting after righteousness":

"He never rested in anything he had either experienced or done in spiritual matters. But this one thing he did: 'Forgetting those things that were behind, and reaching forth unto those things which were before,' he 'pressed toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.' He was a true Christian racer, always on the stretch for higher and better things. Though his attainments, both in experience and usefulness, were above the common standard, yet the language of his conversation and behavior always was, 'Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfected; but I follow after, if by any means I may apprehend that for which I am apprehended of Christ Jesus.' He had his eyes upon a full conformity to the Son of God; or what the apostle terms 'the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.' Nor could he be satisfied with anything less."

In view of these remarkable testimonies the utterances of Mr. Fletcher are of unusual worth. Were this doctrine taught after Fletcher's fashion, with the even poise of his judgment, and with utter absence of partisan feeling, and with critical knowledge of the Scripture, it would not create dissension, nor divide a church into cliques, nor arouse disturbance and confusion in the minds of earnest seekers for deeper piety. To those who are perplexed and anxious as to the actual truth in the case, we suggest a careful reading of Mr. Fletcher's teachings. They will be found very different, in some respects, from certain modern utterances on the subject.—Central Advocate.

A NEW CREATURE.

A Scotch girl was converted under the preaching of Whitefield. When asked if her heart was changed, her true and beautiful answer was:

"Something I know is changed; it may be the world, it may be my heart; there is a great change somewhere, I'm sure, for everything is different from what it once was."

"How wonderfully," says an ancient writer, "does the new-born soul differ from his former self! He liveth a new life, he walketh in a new way. His principle is new, his pattern is new, his practices are new, his projects are new—all is new. He ravels out all he had woven before, and employeth himself wholly about another work."—Selected.

THE CHURCH PAPER.

I would be glad to say a good word for the religious press. By all means let us increase the use of our church papers, and set their standard as high as possible, both in literature and information.

Five different papers are read in my family every week, and each paper is helpful in its own way. The religious papers are specially helpful in preventing the reading of the secular papers on Sunday, and the summary of the news must be valuable for those who have little leisure on any other day.—William H. Jackson.

There is one thing to be said to those who have large responsibilities as employers of labor. It is an imperative duty that they observe a conciliatory attitude toward their employees. A man who treats his employees like Christian brethren, who is interested in them, who shows that he is not a mere selfish money gatherer, is very much more likely to get on well with his employees than one who is overbearing, even if he be reasonable. Strikes do not come so much from the unreasonableness of the employers as they do from their ungraciousness. An employer should keep himself in touch with his workmen, and not simply deal with them at long range through his foremen. It is as much business to know how his workmen are getting on as it is to know how his work is getting on. There is such a thing as religion in business, as a soul in a corporation.—New York Independent.

IF.

If all my years were Summer, could I know
What my Lord means by his "Made white as snow"
If all my days were sunny, could I say,
"In his fair land he wipes all tears away"?
If I were never weary, could I keep
Close to my heart, "He gives his beloved sleep"?

Were no graves mine, might I not come to deem
The life eternal but a baseless dream!
My Winter—yes, my tears, my weariness,
Even my graves—may be his way to bless.
I call them ills, yet that can surely be Nothing but good that shows my Lord to me.

—The Evangelist.

GOSPEL SINGERS AND GOSPEL SONGS.

Away back in the first dark days of the war a young man with a remarkable voice, distinguished for its sympathetic quality and marked tremolo, was invited to sing in the Senate Chamber at Washington, D. C., at a great meeting of the United States Christian Commission, which had met under the presidency of the Hon. William H. Seward, Secretary of State under Abraham Lincoln.

The hall was crowded with leading statesmen, prominent generals of the army, and friends of the Union. The song selected by the singer on this occasion was one written by Mrs. Ellen Huntington Gates, a sister of Mr. C. P. Huntington, now president of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, entitled, "Your Mission," the first verse being as follows:

"If you can not on the ocean
Sail among the swiftest fleet,
Rocking on the highest billows,
Laughing at the storms you meet;
You can stand among the sailors,
Anchored yet within the bay;
You can lend a hand to help them
As they launch their boats away."

The audience was spell-bound as the singer went on from verse to verse until he reached the fifth stanza, which roused the meeting into great enthusiasm. The climax of the song was reached in this verse, which seemed so well fitted for the occasion:

"If you can not in the conflict
Prove yourself a soldier true;
If, where fire and smoke are thickest,
There's no work for you to do;
When the battle-field is silent,
You can go with careful tread;
You can bear away the wounded,
You can cover up the dead."

The great heart of Lincoln, who sat near the singer, was profoundly moved, and he hurriedly wrote the following note, which was handed to the chairman, Mr. Seward:

"Near the close let us have 'Your Mission' repeated by Mr. Phillips. Don't say I called for it.

"A. LINCOLN."

The song was repeated, and together with the stirring addresses made by the speakers, this incident was heralded throughout the country by the public press, thus calling attention to the wonderful power there is in an appropriate song, well sung by a single voice, to arouse and thrill a great audience, such as had gathered on that important occasion.

The singer was soon in demand everywhere, while requests to sing this and other songs before large gatherings of people poured in upon him; and so it was that Philip Phillips began his wonderful pilgrimage of sacred song. Thus it was that he became the pioneer of sacred solo singing in this and other lands. Many singers had sung solos before him, but no one up to that time had sung to so many people. Shortly before his death he made a tour of the world. The writer recently attended his funeral at Fredonia, N. Y., and sang there his favorite song, "The Home of the Soul," the words having also been written by the author of "Your Mission."

Other popular singers soon took up the mission of sacred song, and there are many to-day who are singing the gospel message in such a way as to win men to the better life.—Ira D. Sankey, in Pittsburg Advocate.

AN EXPERIMENT IN SOCIAL REFORM.

The gospel of Jesus Christ, faithfully inculcated, will cure men of the disposition to riot, and transform law breakers into reputable citizens. Lord Shaftesbury, one of the noblest men of the century, speaking of the city of London, with which he had large experience, said, "One city missionary is worth a hundred policemen as a moral force in society." The French government, notoriously secular and godless, has for years fostered and encouraged the McCall Missions, declaring that their influence in the preservation of order is of more value to government than as many police stations. Five Points in New York City, thirty years ago, was a synonym for hell. It was the bottom of the cesspool, and received the dregs of unfiltered degradation. Thither gravitated lost men and abandoned women, thieves, harlots, cut-throats, assassins. There flourished the saloon, the opium den, the gambling hell, the brothel. Every crime known to the calendar was of daily commission. So desperate was the locality that the very police dreaded to enter it. It is now some thirty years, perhaps, since a band of Christian women went down into that plague spot and established The Five Points Mission. Instead of a policeman's billy they wielded the Bible; they broke hearts in place of heads; they raided the slums, not with the patrol wagon, but with bands of mercy; they arrested law breakers, not with a magistrate's warrant, but with the voice of prayer and the charm of music; they "ran in" the toughs of the neighborhood into the Sunday-school instead of the police station. They reversed the whole tactics of municipal misrule. Force and brutality were superseded by kindness and compassion. Love was invoked as a mightier influence than law. Like the Son of God himself, their mission was "to seek and to save that which was lost." And never was the gospel more clearly demonstrated to be the power of God unto salvation than in the moral and social revolution accomplished in Five Points. On the site of "The Old Brewery," an infamous rookery that once sheltered more wickedness and degradation than any other roof of equal area on the continent, stands to-day a substantial mission house, with school-room and chapel, library and gymnasium, free to all. And, like "the happy gates of gospel grace," this refuge of the lost "stands open night and day." There are prayer meetings and evangelistic services almost every night in the year, class meeting, Sunday-school and preaching on the Sabbath, with the deaconess and colporteur perpetually on duty, out in the highways and hedges, visiting the sick, ministering to the dying, distributing tracts and publishing the invitation to the gospel feast.

And no quarter of the great city is to-day freer from crime or more peaceable and law-abiding than the once unspeakable Five Points. This is the fruit of applied Christianity in one short generation. Would it not be the part of patriotism and statesmanship, to say nothing of Christian obligation, to try what the gospel will do for Chicago mobs, and what would be the effect on the mutterings of social discontent throughout the country of a widespread and prodigious evangelism?—Northwestern Advocate.

DISCOURAGED.

One of the worst evils wrought by the sin of discouragement is that we are tempted to stop when we are just on the eve of realized success, and almost in sight of the richest blessings. Up near the summit of Mount Washington there is—or used to be—a cairn of stones to mark the spot where a poor girl perished of exposure and heart failure on a cold, autumnal night. Her father and she had rashly essayed to ascend the mountains without a guide, had become lost, and sat down bewildered in the chilling darkness. The next morning the distracted father discovered that a few rods more would have brought him in sight of the lights from the windows of the "Tip-top House"! Here is a bit of a parable to illustrate how those who are doing, not rash things, but wise things, may be tempted to lose heart and relax their efforts when they are almost in sight of success. During my first ministry in the little church at Burlington, New Jersey, I became distressed at the difficulties to be encountered, and at the apparent failure of my efforts. I became sinfully discouraged, and began to think of fleeing away to some Tarshish or other. God was better to me than I was to him. He "headed me off" with a wonderful outpouring of his Spirit on that little church which doubled its members and taught me one of the most blessed lessons I have ever learned. The darkest hour was just before the dawn. I tremble to think how near I came to missing that glorious revival, which was worth more to me than any year in the seminary.

Noble old Dr. Adoniram Judson preached in Burmah for six years without the first visible convert; then came a great harvest. What a heroic story Father Paton told us of his struggles with hordes of "Amalekites" in those cannibal islands of the New Hebrides! In these days, when skepticisms spread their malaria, and worldliness abounds more than conversions do, ministers and God's people in our churches may well imitate David and "encourage ourselves in the Lord our God." If we, instead of betaking ourselves to all manner of new devices in our churches, go straight to God on our knees and implore the "power from on high," we shall have the rich satisfaction of knowing that we are working on God's lines, and can rightfully claim his blessing. Two-thirds of all the failures in this world come from the want of courage. In the next world we shall probably discover that discouragement has robbed many sinners of their souls and many Christians of their crowns. —Rev. Dr. T. L. Cuyler, in The Evangelist.

CHRIST NOT OUR IDEAL.

He is our pattern, which is perfect. Our ideals can not be. Conscience should be adjusted to the law of the Lord, and not to our imagination. Our ideal is what we would be if it cost nothing, and could be reached on the down-grade, and in a short time. It is likely to be selfish and full of vanity, being what we desire for ourselves. Ideals are commonly exaggerated pictures of self, and out of conformity with a wise and healthy ambition. It is a melancholy sight to see a young man, with a lofty ideal, of home-made pattern, who has been trained to shoot at the sun till his squint-eyes can not see the path at his feet. I know him; his home is in every hamlet and on every street. When you hear a youngster boast of a high ideal, just reflect that it is evolved from a mind wholly immature, and an imagination founded on haze. To such an one the life of the Nazarene would have few attractions. By youthful ideals and erroneous teachings, we are more or less harnessed to our hurt and embarrassment. Conscience deals with that which we conceive to be right and duty, and goads as tormentingly for a failure to act in harmony with a false conviction as one that is founded in righteous law. What wonder and amaze would strike us if we could see society changed from what it is to what its individual ideals would make it! How the foundations under the good we have would crumble if the common sense of the pews did not resent the idealistic altruism sometimes taught from the pulpit! The beneficent character of Jesus is and should be imitated. The idolized theory of benevolence of the transcendentalist can not and should not be. The egotist who worships his exalted ideals does homage to his own creation and the creator as well. An over-estimate of what we can do, and what we ought to do, gives Satan a vantage-ground where there are many hiding-places from which he torments the conscience to distraction for unreal sins, and makes it to agonize over failure to do things which ought not to be done.—Jared Maria.

LOVE FOR ONE'S CHOSEN WORK.

Mr. Gladstone, in the House of Commons, in his proposition to erect a suitable memorial to the late distinguished surgeon, Sir Andrew Clark, gave a characteristic incident which has in it a moral for all workers. Sir Andrew, he said, was once condoled with in view of the approaching close of a long vacation which he had been obliged to take. Instead of appreciating the condolence, he replied, "Sir, I love my profession." To this great physician work was better than play, his professional labors were more delightful and inspiring than his vacation rest and ramblings. One of the secrets of his remarkable success is to be found in this trait—his absorbing love for his profession. It is possible for men to do good work even when their tasks are not altogether to their liking; but the man who would do his best work ought to engage in those labors, engagements, and opportunities with which he can become enamored. The minister of the gospel, for example, who loves his work, to whom it is a delight to study, prepare sermons, teach, write, preach, help perplexed and struggling mortals, succor the tempted, visit the sick, and attend to all the varied, exacting, and withal inspiring work of the pastorate, possesses in this fondness for the duties of his calling a mighty element of victory. And, on the other hand, it may be said that that the preacher who does not enjoy the labors of the pulpit and the pastorate, to whom they are a drag and a burden, who enters without zest and relish into his manifold labors as a minister, is out of his element. He ought either to seek and obtain, in some way, a love for his work, or else he ought to find some other employment. Genuine preachers possess an absorbing, inspiring, and soul-renewing affection for their manifold vocation, which is in itself a tremendous engine of power, and a warrant of success.—Selected.

WANTED—A PREACHER.

AT HARDSCRABBLE DISTRICT. SALARY, $300 A YEAR.

Our church wants a preacher—a preacher of fame,
Not too fond of sensation, nor too prosy and tame;
But one who has learning, devotion and skill,
And can live on a pittance, will just fill the bill.

We feel in our hearts we can justly expect
He shall not be too young to command our respect;
Nor yet do we want one decrepit and old,
But one who will add to the strength of the fold.

The pastor we're seeking, and hoping to find,
Must be active and earnest and helpful and kind;
Not too conservative—fond of the past—
Nor yet too progressive, too daring, or fast.

The success of our church on the preacher depends,
So we trust he will know how to win hosts of friends.
He must not be frivolous, vapid, or light,
Nor yet to be so solemn our souls to affright.

There's one fault that all of our pastors have shown:
They expected that part of their time was their own;
But we have a right, for the money we pay,
To call for their service by night or by day.

In fact, we are waiting and hoping some day
An angelic pastor may wander this way,
Who can live, work, and suffer, yet never complain,
If sometimes he fails in his dues to obtain;

Quite humble and meek, not puffed up with pride,
Nor greedy, nor selfish, nor dissatisfied,
But thankful to take what the church may afford,
Knowing patience is ever its own best reward!

—The Ram's Horn.

MONEY AND RELIGIOUS PROGRESS.

To some people it seems strange that the conversion of the heathen, or the progress of religion at home, should depend in any degree upon the contribution of money, as if the Lord could not carry on his work without the money of the wealthy. The idea embodied in this objection is that it is derogatory to spiritual work to assume that it requires temporal and earthly things. But the things of earth are intimately related to happiness, usefulness and mental improvement; and this does not degrade those blessings in our eyes. An exchange pertinently replies to this style of cavilling by saying, one might just as well ask whether a man's soul can be saved without oxygen gas. For answer, we might say, had any of the rooms in which St. Paul delivered the gospel to his hearers been suddenly deprived of that element, the saving power of his message would have been immediately annulled. The illustration should be sufficient to show where the answer to this question lies. Money relates, as does oxygen, to that physical constitution of man which is inextricably bound up with his spiritual condition, and which has always to be taken into account in all dealings with the latter. The question, as stated, would seem to imply that money is something entirely outside of, if not opposed to, God's government of the world, and his development in it of a spiritual kingdom. The New Testament gives no countenance to any such idea.

It is because moral duty is involved in the right use of property that the church has obligations with regard to social questions. The objection here referred to is similar to many others which regard the natural defects of Christian people as objections to religion. Whatever is necessary to maintain life and health is necessary to promote religion.—Guardian.

FAVORED CLASSES OF CRIME.

We have plenty of good laws, but a feeble execution. As regards some of them, there is a general agreement respecting their enforcement; but as to others too much division of sentiment exists, and, hence, a corresponding degree of indifference. Where murder and robbery are concerned, the demand, uniform and pressing, is, arrest and punish the guilty parties; but when we come to deal with saloons and gambling hells and brothels we find a divided opinion and conflicting interests. Political policy acts as a counteractive. The money power is antagonistic. The cry of "personal liberty" is raised. Self-interest comes into play, and resists the efforts to suppress intemperance and vice. Officers find their hands tied. Legal ingenuity and experience erect barriers. Juries are prejudiced. Violators, even when indicted and tried, often escape. Good men become discouraged. Thus in many ways the laws against drunkenness, gambling and lust are comparatively a dead letter. What we need is a more united public sentiment, a hearty and earnest revival of respect for law, a persistent demand for its vigorous enforcement. Let the people awaken to a sense of their duty in this matter, and evil will become less bold and wanton.—The Presbyterian.

HOW TO KILL A PRAYER MEETING.

First of all, get ready for the slaughter at home. See to it that supper is a little late, and that you have a chance to quarrel a little with some one who is at the table. Then grab up your hat and coat, stalk out of the house in high dudgeon, and come into the meeting a little late. Take a back seat, and as they sing start into a conversation with your neighbor. When Father Noble prays, snicker at his nasal voice and peculiar grammar, and look as if actually wounded when old Mother Goodheart speaks—her appearance is so shocking, you know, and she ought to keep out of sight. Do not pray or speak yourself, and only sing a very little. Look bored if you can all the while, and as you go out say to Mrs. Newcomer, "A prayer meeting is a stupid thing, isn't it?"

If by this course you do not succeed in killing the meeting for others, you will certainly prevent its doing yourself any good.—Keokuk Pilgrim.

The most sacred place to a sincerely devout life is the closet. The closed door shuts out the noises of the world and the souls listens to God's voice. Their thoughts go straight to the Lord, and worship is in spirit and truth. Whatever interruption the services of the sanctuary may suffer, this of the closet need never, ought never to be interfered with. Church life may grow languid through the Summer, but heart life never. The place of public worship may be closed against entrance, but the closet door should be shut with the worshiper on the inside every day. True religion consists more in the secret communion of heart, mind, and will with God than in any external acts of adoration or sacrifice. A considerable portion of the Sermon on the Mount is concerned with emphasizing the importance of private devotion. The Lord urges it in a series of contrasts with the characteristics of the religious life of the times which is designated by the words, "Seen of men." The life he sought to instill is in striking opposition to the established custom, and is described by the words, "In secret."—The Christian Intelligencer.

One can bear with hope and calmness a parting which is only for a time, and not forever. As the great ship swings away from the dock, with every revolution of its wheels carrying our dear one away from us, half across the globe to be gone for years, we span the gulf of absence with the bridge of hope, we forecast the coming back, we know that ere long, or perhaps after long, we will meet again. So, when out on the silent sea the muffled oars of death carry our barque, our dear ones here know that in Christ we shall meet before many years. When we give our loved ones up, it is in the good hope of the resurrection. Death hath no more dominion over those who are one in faith and love in the risen Christ. And this is the Easter joy and crown of rejoicing.—Margaret E. Sangster.

The man who first brewed beer was a pest for Germany. I have survived the genuine beer, for it has now become small beer in every sense; and I have prayed to God that he might destroy the whole beer-brewing business. There is enough barley destroyed in the breweries to feed all Germany.—Martin Luther.

Kindness begets kindness, and trust will bear a rich harvest of truth and trust. There are many trivial acts of kindness which teach us more about a man's character than many vague phrases.

Do not pout and sulk. If you have aught against anyone, talk it over face to face, never forgetting to take the Master with you. To do poorly that which you have ample ability to do well, because some one has crossed your path somewhere, is a species of littleness unbecoming genuine manhood. To mope, and drag, and look sullen, and stick out the lips, and refuse to speak, is an exhibition of spoiled juvenility that suggests the necessity of an old-fashioned dose of "hickory tea." For a preacher, or an editor, or a superintendent, or a steward, or anybody else, to be guilty of such, is—well, the Anglo-Saxon fails us, and we know no other.—Holston Methodist.

There is no success in all this world which is so to be dreaded as the success of getting away from God's purpose for us. Every now and then people say they are getting along in life, everything is running smoothly, money is coming in, and they write over all these things, "This is success." But until they have found God's plan for their lives, the more success they have, the more failure they have brought upon their lives. Men only succeed when they have fallen into line with God's plan for them.—R. E. Speer.

He who will gauge the future of the religion of the Spirit by the yard measure of his experience, however devout his thought, will paralyze all hope and aspiration, will shut out the range of his destiny, and look back to the past as the end of the glorious possibilities of God. The revelations of the past are great, indeed; our hearts glow with thankfulness when we return to them. But man's own powers and possibilities are more glorious still.—Mozoomdar.

Each present conviction, each secret suggestion of duty constitutes a distinct and separate call of God which can never be slighted without the certainty of its total departure or its fainter return. The power which is not wisely spent must be wildly wasted. Our true opportunities come but once; they are sufficient, but not redundant; we have time enough for the longest duty, but not for the shortest sin.—James Martineau.

The man who is willing to do wrong in secret will after while be willing to do so in public. The fear of God is a better protection than the fear of man. The drink habit is indulged in secret only for a little while. Where principle is lacking policy will not long restrain.

A man must not choose his neighbor; he must take the neighbor that God sends him. In him, whoever he be, lies hidden or revealed a beautiful brother. The neighbor is just the man who is next to you at this moment. This love of our neighbor is the only door out of the dungeon of self.—Geo. McDonald.

If you reject the truth of Christianity, what will you do with the Christ of the gospels—his spotless character, his transcendant doctrines, and the thought of him that dominates the world? The strongest evidence of the truth of Christianity is Christ.—Rev. John Scott, D. D.

We should so live and labor in our time that what came to us as seed may go to the next generation as blossom, and that what came to us as blossom may go to them as fruit. That is what we mean by progress. —Henry Ward Beecher.

Rest in work is better than rest from work. Rest from work is mere inaction. There is no real gain in that. One grows tired in it, if not of it. But rest in work is refreshing. One gains strength and power as he works while thus resting.

It is a degrading thing to enjoy husks till there is no man to give them. It is a base thing to resolve to give to God as little as possible, and not to serve him till you must.

Our attitude to evil is as real a test of our character as is our attitude to good. The obligation to hate the former is as great as the obligation to love the latter.

That which astonishes, astonishes once; but whatever is admirable becomes more and more admired.—Joubert.

Faith in God is the only thing that will keep us bright when there is nothing bright in sight.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. H. S. Johns, Bayou Chicot, La., Oct. 28, 1897: "Our year here has been healthful and pleasant. I have had the largest congregations since coming to South Lonisiana. Officiated at thirteen weddings, baptized about fifteen adults and received about forty into the church. About twenty infants have been baptized. Collections will, I think, be in full or almost so."

Rev. J. C. Lowe: "I desire to express through the ADVOCATE my feelings of gratitude to our heavenly Father that we are closing the Conference year with some degree of success, after unremitting labor such as falls to the lot of every itinerant Methodist preacher. But this has been 'a labor of love,' and not such as brings weariness to both body and mind. Indeed, the 'way seems to grow brighter,' and although the pastorate is filled with so many and such delicate duties, I believe that the pleasures enjoyed in attending to them increase more and more. I have enjoyed almost uninterrupted health for quite a number of years, having lost only two hours from the pulpit, because of ill-health, in more than ten years. We have had fine meetings in both of our congregations. Of the one at Verona I have already written. The meeting at Nettleton was held the last week in July. Bro. W. D. Bass and his brother were with us here as at Verona. Some of the citizens of Nettleton think the town has never enjoyed such extensive results from any meeting they have had. Bro. Bass seems to have a peculiar power over his congregations. The effect of his ministry is very spiritual, and, therefore, builds up the church and brings sinners to God. We had eighteen conversions at Nettleton and thirteen accessions, making thirty one accessions during the year on profession of faith in the two congregations, and a net gain of thirty-three. Because of better business advantages at Tupelo, which is only four and a half miles away, many of our citizens are moving there. Seven or eight Methodist families will leave Verona by the last of December. This will weaken the church here greatly, and there is no material here out of which we can regain this loss. By death and removal the church in Verona has grown weaker every year for the last five; yet the members have tried hard to meet expenses and hold up the church. Verona is one of the most healthful towns in the State, and our parsonage home is one of the most pleasant. The house is comfortable, and out of our well, more than three hundred and fifty feet deep, we get the purest of freestone water. Hence our health is good, and we are grateful. We are in the midst of a clever, appreciative, and 'church-going' people."

A GREAT REVIVAL AT HEBRON.

We closed a ten days' meeting at Hebron on the night of the twenty-sixth ultimo. Rev. W. M. McIntosh did the preaching and some fine pastoral visiting with me. We worked faithfully to get him, and prayed that the Lord might come with him in power. Finance took care of itself. There was no worry or strain, but the people made handsome free-will offerings, and did things in a princely way. Raised $130 in cash and subscriptions on Conference collections.

Bro. Mc would have been the happiest man, save this pastor, if the young people with whom he labored and prayed so earnestly had all been converted. I believe he will hear glad news from them before long.

It was a touching scene to see some of the prominent men who had never joined the church come in with their companions who had prayed so long. Seven men, heads of families, joined, and every one was led by a Christian woman. It is rather strange that our church has not known more of this people, the very cream of Southern chivalry, evolved from a mixture of Anglo-Saxon, Keltic and Gallic blood, toned up by the finishing touches of Virginia, the Carolinas, Georgia, and last, but not least, the twin sisters, Alabama and Mississippi. We don't care much for mere numbers; but the excellent character and integrity of the twenty-five received on profession of faith and the seven received by certificate marks this as an era in our history.

We were glad to have with us Bro. M. E. Tumlin, who did some very faithful work; also Bro. Morgan, of the Protestant Methodist Church. Bro. D. W. Babb and his excellent wife were with us to enjoy the last service. It seems that the Lord sent him this way to permit him to reap some of the fruits as a faithful pastor. Our able organist, Mrs. Jennie Skinner, was at her best, and was assisted by Miss Irene Tyler, of Tuskaloosa, and Mrs. T. O. Moore, of Warsaw. May God bless them every one and help them to consecrate their deft fingers and voices to his service! Their hearts are attuned to his praise, and the thrill was felt in their touch of the keys.

We regretted that some of our boys and girls who are away at school could not be with us. But the Lord will bless them. Many hearts were anxious for them. Vanderbilt University, University of Alabama, Tuskaloosa Female College and Verner's School, Tuskaloosa, and the I. I. and C., at Montevallo, have representatives from this neighborhood.

My space is about used up.
God bless you!
B. P. PATTERSON.

"THINKETH NO EVIL."

So many of us appear to have delight and joy in imagining evil of other people that it is surprising that we can grow in grace at all. There are so many times when we are willing to give ourselves up to wrong thoughts, so many ways in which we can manufacture material for our imagination to dwell upon, that it is no wonder that in a short time one comes to think evil of everybody, and to think that everything, no matter how trifling, contains something evil.

We know people who otherwise might be of great value in Christian work who have this weakness. If we are constantly looking for something evil in these weak human natures of ours, we shall not have much difficulty in finding weaknesses without number; and if we magnify these, and imagine many more which do not exist, we shall be so engrossed in this that we can not see the good traits, the good deeds, the good motives, or anything else that is good about our fellow-men.

It is far better for us to be looking for good traits, good motives, than for evil things in our neighbors and friends. It is not healthy, it is not wise, it is not Christ-like to allow one's mind to run in the direction of evil.

Our time, our talents, our energy, our every thought, ought to be taken up with the great work of soul-saving. Better, by far, to leave God to look after the weaknesses and sins of our neighbors and friends than for us to attempt it.—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

CLEAR-HEADED PREACHING.

A part of any sermon must be constructed of argument. The preacher aims by inference from certain admitted facts to show that certain things which are not admitted follow. Now it is vain to assert that there is one kind of logic for the pulpit and another for the bar or the press. The human mind moves according to the laws of thought, and a fallacy is just as much a fallacy in a sermon as in a stump speech. The acute business or professional man who finds his minister resorting to a method of argumentation that would be scouted in a social or financial discussion inevitably loses some respect for the preacher.

The essentials of the gospel, to be sure, are readily apprehended, but the application of the gospel to the individual life and to complex social conditions is by no means an easy matter. Much of the pertinency and effect of a discourse must lie in its adaptation to the hearers. To secure that, the preacher must have a first-hand and comprehensive knowledge of human nature and of the specific human nature he is addressing. And when he seeks to apply the gospel to the urgent questions of modern life, he needs a precise knowledge of what the gospel is, in its depth and breadth, and of the question he is treating. Some ministers have lost enormously in influence with the thinking part of the community simply because when they pass outside of a narrow range of topics they reveal an inadequate or one-sided comprehension of Christian principles and a curious misunderstanding of the matters to which they are seeking to apply those principles.

BE PROMPT.

Don't live a single hour in your life without doing exactly what is to be done in it, and going straight through it from beginning to end. Work, play, study—whatever it is, take hold at once, and finish it up squarely; then to the next thing, without letting any moment drop between.

It is wonderful to see how many hours these prompt people contrive to make of a day. It is as though they picked up the moments the dawdlers lost. And if you ever find yourself where you have so many things pressing upon you that you hardly know how to begin, let me tell you a secret: Take hold of the very first one that comes to hand, and you will find the rest will all fall into line, and follow after, like a company of well-drilled soldiers; and though work may be hard to meet when it charges in a squad, it is easily vanquished if you can bring it into line.

You may have seen the anecdote of the man who was asked how he had accomplished so much in his life. "My father taught me," was the reply, "when I had anything to do, to go and do it." There is the secret—the magic word, Now!—Lutheran.

There are several ways of numbering our days. One way is merely to count them off as we tear off the daily leaves of our calendar. Each evening a man has one day less to live. But that is not true numbering. Another way is merely to count the days into the aggregate of life. A man is one day older—but that is all. He is no better. He has left no worthy record on the day's page. The true numbering is that which fills the days as they pass with records of good and beautiful living, and with lines of growth in character.

Just now we are looking back over the story of a closing year. What have we given the days to keep for us? What lessons of wisdom have we learned from them, as one by one they have passed? There is little good in worrying over the failures of the year, but we ought to learn from our past. He is the wise man, not who makes no mistakes, but who does not repeat his mistakes.—J. R. Miller, D. D.

The best thing with which a mother can crown her daughter is a common sense knowledge of the distinctly feminine physiology. Every woman should thoroughly understand her own nature. Every woman should understand the supreme importance of keeping herself well and strong in a womanly way. Nearly all of the pains and aches, nearly all the weakness and sickness and suffering of women is due to disorders or disease of the organs distinctly feminine.

A woman who suffers in this way is unfitted for wifehood and motherhood. Maternity is a menace of death. Thousands of women suffer in this way because their innate modesty will not permit them to submit to the disgusting examinations and local treatment insisted upon by the average physician. These ordeals are unnecessary. Dr. R. V. Pierce, an eminent and skillful specialist, for thirty years chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, at Buffalo, N. Y., has discovered a wonderful remedy with which women may treat and speedily cure themselves in the privacy of their own homes. This medicine is known as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It acts directly on the delicate and important organs concerned. It makes them well and strong. It allays inflammation, heals ulceration, soothes pain and rests the tortured nerves. Taken during the critical period, it banishes the usual discomforts and makes baby's advent easy and almost painless. Thousands of women who were once weak, sickly, nervous fretful invalids, are now happy, healthy wives, because of this medicine. It is sold by all good medicine dealers and no honest dealer will advise a substitute.

"When I commenced using Dr. Pierce's medicines some three years ago," writes Mrs. Ella J. Fox, care of W. C. Fox, of Eldorado, Saline Co., Ills. "I was the picture of death. I had no heart to take anything. Weight was 125. My husband had been to see five different doctors about my trouble (female weakness). I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's medicines, also wrote to him for advice. I took four bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and one vial of his 'Pleasant Pellets,' and am now a well woman."

Life! we've been long together,
Through pleasant and through stormy weather;
'Tis hard to part when friends are dear.
'Twill cost a sigh, perhaps a tear –
Then steal away, give little warning,
Choose thine own time;
Say not, "Good night," but in some brighter clime
Bid me, "Good morning."

—Mrs. Barbauld.

The present time—youngest born of eternity, child and heir of all the past times with their good and evil, and parent of all the future—is ever a "new era" to the thinking man. . . . To know it, and what it bids us do, is ever the sum of knowledge for all of us.—Thomas Carlyle.

AN EMASCULATED CREED.

Several weeks ago the widely-known Presbyterian evangelist, Rev. B. Fay Mills, who has been suspected for some time of having weakened in his creed, gave a statement of his religious views to the public press in order to correct, as he said, some inaccurate reports, and to show where he stands, theologically and denominationally. His recent utterances are by no means reassuring to his Presbyterian brethren, and, while remarkable for vagueness, indicate that he has drifted far from some of the fundamentals of the orthodox Christian faith. After declaring himself a sympathizer with the views of such men as Maurice and Bushnell, he makes a most surprising statement. "I would not dogmatize," he remarks, "either in affirmation or denial, concerning the Scriptures, the supernatural character and work of Jesus, or the mysteries of the world to come." A man professing to be a Christian who has no clear, deeply rooted convictions as to these things, is indeed to be pitied. Mr. Mills professes to have great confidence in "the doctrine of progress," by which he thinks "men should be convicted of the sin of loving the lower in place of the higher good, and choosing that which has been in place of that which is to be!" He characterizes as a great gospel "the positive religious philosophy which hopes and believes as well as bears and endures all things!" This last is a catching statement; but where, we ask, shall we obtain the love that exhibits such characteristics except through Him who is the only mediator between God and man? Unless it be the offspring of a living faith in the Son of God, it is at best but a form of stoicism, cold and comfortless.

Though Mr. Mills has not formally joined the Unitarians, he announces himself as especially in harmony with the Unitarian platform of "the religion of Jesus as summed up in love to God and man." This sounds orthodox, and looks innocent enough, but it hides a pernicious heresy nevertheless. Liberality in religion is a good thing, but when it signifies shallowness of conviction and ambiguity in creed, as it seems to do with Mr. Mills and others, we beg to be excused from sharing it.

Though leading Unitarian divines have beautifully set forth the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, an inquiry into their belief discloses the fact that they reject the divinity of Christ, ridicule the doctrine of depravity, and refuse to accept the Bible as a direct, authoritative revelation of the will of God.

At the Unitarian Conference held at Saratoga, N. Y., in September, while much was said about humanitarianism and social reforms, representative speakers expressed views utterly antagonistic to what we conceive to be the true nature of Christianity. One speaker asserted that, "as a rule, the old orthodoxy of the double nature of Jesus has been given up," and that he is now recognized as "a normal man and beneath divinity." He further remarked that "Christ was a person of supreme importance, . . . but only on this earth. If Jesus was God, demigods are not few."

Another speaker, Rev. W. S. Crowe, said: "We have lost the Christ. We admire the ideal man, but he calls forth no such devotion as in those who believe that their life is through his death. His life was all the old theology had. We have gained the infinite Fatherhood. We can well afford to lose the atonement when we have gained an all-compassing pledge of evolution."

"The new orthodoxy," said Rev. Charles F. Dole, in rebuke of faint-hearted ministers, "has not got altogether beyond treating the Bible as a unique revelation. Some of our ministers hardly venture to intersperse their Scripture readings with passages from Epictetus or St. Augustine. . . . There is no secular or sacred." Mr. Dole remarked also that "the doctrine of sin must be relegated to the infancy of the race. It does not fit into the scheme of modern thought." The doctrine of "the new birth" was also ridiculed. "Salvation by character" is one of the principal tenets of Unitarianism, grace and faith being relegated to the background. Twice during one session of the Conference the audience laughed at the mention of the atoning blood of Christ.

And this is the creed towards which Mr. Mills leans! Shades of Luther, defend us! This is a liberal gospel with a vengeance. Gospel indeed! It is a travesty of the gospel—a trap for the unwary. It is but a philosophic, humanistic morality destitute of power to affect the conscience, move the feelings, or regulate the will, and is not a whit better than Judaism.

Some who hear all this prating by Mr. Mills and others about humanitarianism, freedom of thought, etc., may fancy them defenders of a noble creed, true interpreters of Christian doctrine, fearless preachers of righteousness. We emphatically assert, however, that any creed that discredits Christ's divinity, and makes light of the atonement, however much it may enjoin benevolence, is dangerous in the extreme. There is a world of truth in the famous saying that "if Christ is not God, he is not good." Not to preach Christ as "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world" is to leave out the most vital element in the proclamation of Christian truth. Says the Apostle Paul: "Though we or an angel from heaven preach unto you any other gospel than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." The Master himself said: "I am the Way, the Truth and the Life." "No man cometh unto the Father but by me." Christ is the channel through which the stream of divine love and grace flows down the ages to a sin-cursed race.

Labor for the amelioration of human suffering, for the improvement of social conditions, is commendable and necessary; but labor for the renovation of the souls of men is infinitely more important. Missionaries in every land testify that the greatest need of the heathen is not better environment, more of the comforts of life, or a higher civilization; but acceptance of the gospel in its renewing, hope-inspiring, love-begetting power. "Talk about questions of the day," says Mr. Gladstone, "the gospel of Christ can and will correct everything that needs correction." That is a spurious humanitarianism that takes account of physical and intellectual wants and woes, and passes spiritual degradation by.[1] It is well to preach to men to be good, to be virtuous, to be philanthropic; but how shall they be all these unless they first be renewed in the inner man? Where is the unconverted man who follows righteousness for its own sake? Moral teaching that ignores human depravity and the necessity of regeneration by the Spirit of God is but an idle attempt to make men practice goodness without first making them good.

The forcelessness and inefficacy of so called liberal religion, its lack of power to move the masses, to reach the hearts of men, is shown by the insignificant growth and pitiably small membership of the Unitarian and Universalist denominations, which stand as the chief exponents of ultra liberalism. According to the latest census statistics, there are in the United States 130,266 ministers of all denominations. Of this numerous band Universalists and Unitarians can claim only 1,319. The membership of all the churches in this country, Catholic and Protestant, aggregates 24,657,434. Of this mighty host the liberals have but 130,612, more than half of these being in the New England States.

Neither true love to God nor true love to man can exist without acceptance of the doctrine of the atonement—of God's infinite love to man in giving his Son for the redemption of a fallen race, and of man's measureless guilt and helplessness without this gift. As long as sin lasts and man's need lasts will there be reason for preaching the old-fashioned gospel of repentance towards God and faith in Christ as the only hope of salvation.

FOOT BALL MUST GO.

Evidences of the brutality and serious danger attending the game of foot ball have been abundant and convincing ever since the game came into vogue among college students; but the further the interest in this sport increases, the more dangerous and demoralizing it becomes. Every few weeks fresh testimony is added to its perilous nature. A match game is hardly ever played now without resulting in serious injury to one or more of the contestants. It is by no means uncommon for a player to have an arm or a leg or a rib broken, or to be knocked senseless during the progress of the game, while from time to time a fatality is recorded against this barbarous sport. Players frequently receive injuries from which they never entirely recover, having to carry the scar or disability through life. Success in gaining certain points of the game depends almost entirely upon brute force. Even where the contestants are unharmed, the great strain on the vital organs and on the nervous system necessitated by the scrimmages are productive of bad results to the system, which, though they may not be immediately perceived, are sure to appear in after life in the form of heart trouble, or the premature decay of the physical powers. Nature never fails to inflict due punishment for the violation of her laws, whether by excesses or otherwise.

The latest casualty chargeable to foot ball is young Richard Von Gam, of Rome, Ga., a student at the University of Georgia, who was fatally injured during a match game a short time since between the teams of the University of Georgia and the University of Virginia. He died the following morning. He was a member of a prominent Georgia family, was an expert player of strong physique, and is said to have been one of the most popular students at the University. The chancellor of the University has since announced that the students will hereafter be prohibited from engaging in this sport. It is thought that the Georgia Legislature, which is now in session, will, in consequence of this deplorable tragedy, pass a bill making it a misdemeanor to engage in a game of foot ball in the State.

In addition to the hazardous nature of the game, especially where match-games are indulged in, there are other grave evils growing out of it. Not the least is the unwholesome ideal it arouses in the minds of the students, many of whom become far more ambitious to excel on the "gridiron" and whip a rival team than to excel in their studies. The chief aim of college life, as we understand it, is not to turn out trained athletes merely, tough in muscle and in spirit, but men of trained minds and sturdy Christian character. We heard once of a young collegian of a great university who was foolish enough to say that he would rather be captain of the 'varsity foot ball team than to win the first honors of the institution. Nor is this an isolated case of such unworthy ambition. Heaven save our young men from such an ideal!

Such enthusiasm over foot ball and boating has developed among the students at certain colleges and universities in the New England States as largely to overshadow interest in the pursuit of knowledge, and has rendered proper regulation of athletics well-nigh impossible. It will be a dark day for our Southern colleges when interest in foot ball or any other form of athletics is allowed to become so excessive as to trespass upon the acquisition of knowledge. If it requires sport like this to make students manly, we beg to be excused from such unmanly manliness. A college whose fame rests principally upon its foot ball championship had better not be known at all.

The loss of time caused by the trips of contesting teams in going to and from the meeting places, as well as the inevitable distraction of the minds of the students from scholarly pursuits, are matters not to be lightly considered. Then, too, foot ball games furnish great occasion for gambling, though the players themselves may take no part therein.

Now and then foot ball games terminate in a free fight between the students of rival institutions, as was the case, a year or two ago, at Nashville, in consequence of the intense feeling engendered over the issue of the game. There is no question that this game gives a splendid opportunity for wreaking vengeance or spite upon an enemy or an opponent.

In view of its demoralizing, brutalizing tendency, as well as its dangers, we think it is high time for the game to be put under the ban everywhere. We see little to choose between this game as frequently played and prize fighting. Let it be put in the same category with gladiatorial combats. We would be glad to see it prohibited by law.

The men who edit papers to perfection are the men who have no papers and never had.—Baptist Standard.

YELLOW FEVER.

The fever situation is improving all along the line. At most of the infected places the number of new cases is so small and so rapidly declining as to indicate the extinction of the disease in a very few days. This city is not an exception to the rule. The number of new cases during the past week (we count from Tuesday to Tuesday) is 208 against 337 for the previous week—a decrease of 129.

In order to throw further light on the situation we present the following report for each day of the past week: Tuesday, 35; Wednesday, 52; Thursday, 40; Friday, 31; Saturday, 23; Sunday, 13; Monday, 14. An inspection of these figures will show that the average for the first three days of the week is a fraction over 42 cases per day, while the average for the last three days is only about 16 per day. This reduction is due to the cold weather of the early part of last week. Within a week or two we believe the disease will be extinct. The total number of cases in this city to date is 1,756. Of these 243 have died, and 996 have recovered, leaving 517 now under treatment. At the rate at which discharges are now being made, there will be very few under treatment within a week. The number discharged yesterday (Monday) was 56.

The opinion that prevails throughout the country that New Orleans has had a fearful epidemic of yellow fever is a mistake. In our judgment, it is a misnomer to speak of the present visitation of fever as an epidemic. We are firmly of the opinion that every case of yellow fever in the city this year has been contracted by contact with an infected person, or an infected house, or infected clothing. In other words, we do not believe that the fever has been in the air. If so, how is it that we have had less than two thousand cases out of a population of 270,000?

In former years the number of cases was so great that an exact enumeration of them was not attempted. The number of yellow-fever deaths sometimes amounted to a hundred per day. This year, from Sept. 6 to Nov. 9 (63 days), the number of deaths has been an average of less than four per day. When the thirty-first day of December comes we believe an inspection of the mortality reports for the entire year will show that the present year has been better than an average year for health. In other words, we believe that, notwithstanding our 243 yellow-fever deaths, the total mortality for '97 will be less than that of '96. If any one doubts this, we only say, Wait and see.

If Edwards had had no more fever in proportion to population than this city, then, instead of having had 533 cases, she would have had only four or five.

The small number of cases here is, in our judgment, due to the system of house quarantine and improved methods of sanitation which have come into use since the last visitation nineteen years ago.

TO OUR FRIENDS.

Owing to the stagnation of business consequent upon the prevailing quarantine regulations, remittances from subscribers have been for the past two months like angels' visits—few and far between. Now that business is resuming its normal course, we appeal to our subscribers, and also to our agents, to remit the amount of their indebtedness at their earliest convenience. We have to pay cash for work, material, and everything necessary to carry on the paper, yellow fever or no yellow fever.

GONE HOME.

Sister Lenore B. Mims, the wife of Bro. J. C. Mims, of the North Mississippi Conference, died in this town last night at 9 o'clock, after ten weeks' suffering from slow fever. The stroke comes heavy upon Bro. Mims. Many hearts are made sad. May God comfort Bro. Mims!

J. W. ANDERSON.

Houston, Miss.

The above announcement will be read with profound sorrow by a numerous circle of friends. Sister Mims was a sweet-spirited, lovable Christian woman, whose friends were legion wherever she was known. We deeply sympathize with our brother in his sore bereavement.

REV. SAMUEL NURSE.

Rev. Samuel Nurse, a local preacher in the Greenville station, died of paralysis, on the twenty-sixth of October, at his home in Greenville. He was a man of blameless character, great usefulness, and deep piety.

In Australia the superannuated preacher of the Methodist Church is paid "a pension based upon the years he has been in active service." If it has been five years, he receives $250. This increases to a maximum of $1,000 for forty-four years of service. —Baltimore Advocate.

Hon. Thomas S. Ford died of yellow fever at his home in Scranton, Miss., last week. He was an able lawyer and had filled some important official positions. He was for a time attorney-general of Mississippi, and was a member of the late Constitutional Convention. He was a devout Methodist and a man of most admirable character.

We are in receipt of an invitation to attend the marriage of Miss Fannie Rayner, eldest daughter of Rev. B. S. Rayner, of the Mississippi Conference, to Mr. P. K. Whitney, of Fayette, Miss. The ceremony will be performed in the Methodist Church of Fayette on the tenth. We extend our heartiest congratulations to the happy pair. May Heaven's richest blessings attend them through life!

In the New Orleans Preachers' Meeting, last Monday, the question of the extension of the pastorate was discussed. The discussion was two-sided. There were some who were opposed to any modification of our present system, and there were pros who thought the time near at hand when the church might wisely make provision for an extension in exceptional cases—i. e., cases where the local church, the Quarterly Conference, the presiding elder and the Bishop all concur in the opinion that an extension would be for the best.

The constant effort to say things in a striking and extravagant way has both a direct and a reflex action, working backward and forward like a badly handled gun which not only scatters its shot in front of the muzzle, but also kicks over the fellow that fires it. This foolish rhetorical habit wearies the audience and at the same time wears out the speaker. A genius, like Carlyle or Joseph Parker, may become a law unto himself in the use of the English tongue, but he who attempts to imitate such men only makes a fool of himself. A simple, straightforward manner of speech in the long run is best for both speaker and hearer.—Central Advocate.

CONFERENCE CLAIMANTS.

By reference to the Report of Joint Board of Finance, as published on page 6 of the last Louisiana Conference Minutes, we find that there was received last year "from charges for Conference claimants" only $2,904.76 on the assessment of $4,900. Therefore the amount raised by us for this good cause was slightly over 59 1-4 per cent. of the amount assessed. Were it not for the Bynum estate, the New Orleans Depository, the Publishing House and the Colvin Fund, adding in all $1,706.40 to the amount brought in by the preachers, "the superannuated preachers and widows and orphans of preachers" would have fared poorly. The presiding elders and preachers in charge received about 78 1-5 per cent. of the assessments made for them. If we had raised 78 1 5 per cent. of amount for our Conference claimants, they could have been paid over $900 more than they received.

Last year was classed as a hard year, financially, and we know, beyond the peradventure of a doubt, that this year of yellow fever and quarantine will prove to be a still harder year as to financial results. It is to be hoped, however, that the amount to be reported at Crowley for the laid aside heroes of Louisiana Methodism and the widows and orphans of the grand men already gathered into glory, may not fall short of last year, but be greatly increased; so that, with what comes from other sources, there may be in hand the full assessment of $4,900 for distribution.

I feel sure there is no collection we preachers take more cheerfully than this one, for these claimants are made the special care of the living body of itinerants, who are following on to the same honorable retirement, after duty well done and victories many for the blood stained cross of Christ. The "people called Methodists" are always quick to respond to this collection, and our uniform experience is that we can get the full assessment for this more easily than for any other cause.

Amidst the distress and financial depression that environs us and our flocks, may we not forget the Conference claimants? Urging all to do their utmost in this behalf, it will be found that our people will gladly and liberally respond, and the full assessment will be met.

FROM MOSS POINT.

MR. EDITOR: The death of Hon. T. S. Ford is inexpressibly sad. To me it is a personal sorrow. His character was above reproach. True, brave, tender, sincere, he was an honor to the human race. Heaven is very real since my friend has entered. We offer our profound sympathy to the bereaved brother, to the nine precious children, and other loved ones.

The death of Mrs. Mande Perkins, of Purvis, formerly of this place, has cast a gloom over this place. Sister Perkins was a beautiful type of Christian womanhood. Her memory is a benediction to those who knew her. To the sorely bereaved we offer our prayers and sympathy.

Moss Point has had almost an epidemic of dengue and malaria. My entire family has had the fever. Death came very near to the oldest boy. We are very grateful for recovery and for kind friends.

I. W. COOPER.

THE SALE OF METHODIST CHURCH PROPERTY.

MR. EDITOR: I call the attention of "Layman or Sextns" to ¶ 424 of the Discipline. It says: "The trustees, with the consent of the preacher in charge and the Quarterly Conference, shall have power to sell any church or parsonage property, which has gone out of use, or which should be removed to another place, the proceeds of which shall be invested in other church property under the direction of the Quarterly Conference."

From this it is seen that the trustees, preacher in charge and the Quarterly Conference must all three agree to sell before that can be done. It is also seen that they can not sell except for two reasons, viz.: the property "has gone out of use," or it "should be removed to another place." Therefore, the trustees, neither by themselves nor in conjunction with the pastor, can sell any church property to the detriment of the church. The Quarterly Conference, which is the church in its official capacity, must first give its consent. And, should all three agree to sell, yet must the sale be based upon one of the two valid reasons stated in ¶ 424. Having sold under disciplinary conditions, the amount realized is to be "invested in other church property under the direction of the Quarterly Conference." The property of the church is perfectly safe under the existing law of the church.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

To the Patrons and Friends of Millsaps College:

The sixth annual session of Millsaps College will begin Wednesday, Nov. 17, and will continue, without intermission for the Christmas holidays, until June 14.

The entrance examinations in Latin and Greek will be held Nov. 16; in English and Mathematics, Nov. 17. New students should be present Tuesday in order to be promptly classified.

A full session's work will be completed. The advancement of no student will be delayed as result of the postponement of the opening.

Students immediately from infected points will not be received so long as there is danger of infection.

During the Summer extensive improvements have been made on the college grounds and buildings and many books added to the library, so that Millsaps College is better prepared than ever to do satisfactory work.

Never defer a vital matter. A cough shouldn't be neglected when Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup will cure it at once.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

Our students who were hindered by quarantine from beginning the session's work at the regular opening will be afforded every facility for making up lost time. Tuition will be charged from time of entrance.

C. W. CARTER, Pres.

GRENADA COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE.

We have now had heavy frosts in North Mississippi, and there is no longer any danger of a further spread of the fever. Grenada has escaped the plague, and our patrons can safely send their daughters on to school. I have arranged for ample instruction for all who come in late, so that pupils entering Nov. 15 and Dec. 1 can make up the year's work, as the Spring term will run one month later. Charges will be made from time of entrance.

J. W. MALONE, Pres.

EAST MISSISSIPPI FEMALE COLLEGE.

At last the quarantine is raised, and our college opens Nov. 10, after a delay of six weeks. We were fortunate in not opening before the yellow fever fright for several reasons. First, many pupils could not have come at first and would then be several weeks behind their classes and could not have recovered from the backset. As it is, all pupils get an even start and have an equal showing. Nothing is more discouraging than for a pupil to enter six weeks or two months behind time. They can never make up lost time. Then if we had opened on time, pupils and patrons would have been so uneasy that the work would have been very unsatisfactory.

The delay gave us time to complete our elegant new addition. This gives us ample room for the large number of boarders engaged. It also gives us one of the prettiest and most convenient dining-rooms in the State. So the delay was not time lost to us, as we can continue longer in the Summer, and finish the session.

We had over 100 boarders engaged before the epidemic broke out. Of course, some of those can not come at first, but others who would have gone to other colleges, but were prevented on account of quarantine regulations, will come to us because our session will not be interrupted. They prefer to come here even at a long distance because our school has not finished part of the session.

With a new building, new furniture, new pianos, new water works of our own, fine pure water from 314 feet in the ground, hot and cold baths, water closets, one of the finest faculties of expert teachers in the South, no wonder this college is attracting great attention. It is nothing in us, but in our advantages.

Then our Conservatory of Music has drawn a great number of students. With a director, graduate from Kullak's Conservatory, Germany, who has taught in Cincinnati, and one of the finest pianists in this country; and a violinist from France, who has held his chair in fine Northern conservatories, and an able corps of musicians, some fine new grand pianos, it is no wonder that we have engaged a large number for our conservatory. Some have gone one or more years to Cincinnati or Boston; but after meeting our pianist and hearing him play, learning of his methods, they have decided to finish in Meridian. Several who have been to these Northern conservatories have told us they get no better talent than we offer. While, of course, the epidemic has hurt us some, still we will have a large attendance—much larger than last year when all are in. We ask our pupils to come at once, if possible. Let us lose no more time. I will meet all trains.

J. W. BREESON, Pres't.

DEPARTED.

Capt. Robt. J. Sharp, of Wall Hill, Miss., was found dead in his bed Saturday morning, Oct. 30. He had not been sick, and retired Friday evening cheerful as usual. A good citizen, a true friend, a devoted Methodist and a consistent Christian is gone. We will miss him, but hope to meet him in the home of the soul at the reunion of the blessed.

A YEAR AGO.

A year ago!
A year ago I had my baby here,
With hair of gold, and eyes so blue and clear;
A year ago I heard his pattering feet,
And listened to his childish babble sweet,
Now he has gone—gone whither? Who can say?
I only know he left me that sad day,
A year ago.

And is that all?
Is there no comfort for the aching heart?
No balm to ease, no hand to bind the smart?
Are all my hopes lost in a bleak unknown,
And is my baby wandering forth alone?
My baby, whom I loved and fondled so,
And soothed to sleep with mother-croonings low,
A year ago!

Nay, heart, not all!
For, see! beyond, in countries not unknown,
My baby waits, well loved, and not alone;
A strong hand guides him, lest his feet should fall,
And loving ears are quick to hear his call;
He waits full happy, safe from all alarms;
For Jesus took my baby in his arms
A year ago.

THE BIBLE'S STORY.

My name is Bible. It is a Greek name, and in Greek it means the same as "The Book" in English.

I am a child of God. My infancy was in the days of Moses; but God made me grow and grow, until in the days of Paul and John I became full-grown.

I have passed through many hands and appeared in many different forms before I came to be put together as you see me now. Men have tried to destroy me by burning all the copies they could find, but still I lived on through more than thirty centuries.

In my childhood—Old Testament days—I spoke in Hebrew. Seventy wise men are said to have translated my Old Testament sayings from the Hebrew language into Greek. This was two hundred and eighty years before Christ came to the earth.

In my early manhood Greek was my language. The Gospels were written in Greek, and the Epistles of Paul and of the other apostles (afterward gathered together and arranged as the New Testament) were all in Greek.

About four hundred years after Christ, the aged saint Chrysostom gave me my name of "Bible," for until then I was spoken of as the "Scriptures."

But many of the people could not read Hebrew and Greek; so Jerome (in the fourth century) took me and translated me into Latin. About the year 1380, Wycliffe, the reformer, changed my dress into an English one.

Then Tyndale, in the sixteenth century, brought out another translation. His dying prayer, "Lord, open the King of England's eyes!" was answered when King James directed the last edition.

Now in my English dress I stand before you all and ask you to come and learn about Jesus.—Christian Observer.

A RESULT OF HEALTH.

Many infirmities of the mind—bad humor, fretfulness, nagging, complaining—are in reality infirmities of the body, the results of ill-health only. We all know some unfortunate like this, who has no idea that he or she is not perfectly well. There are but few, comparatively, of the other kind. Let us describe, contrary to the usual doctor's custom, some of the symptoms of good health.

It produces what are known as "comfortable people," and this is the way they should act: They never fret and fume over the inevitable; they make no arrogant pretensions, and naturally, therefore, they indulge in no harsh strictures, no ungentle criticism. They are equally free from that distressing mock modesty which practices a morbid self-introspection, and bestows the results of the process on a small public too bored and indifferent to appreciate the confidences. They never attitudinize as martyrs, no matter how great the sacrifices they make, their self-effacement being so genuine that it is truly invisible. They never stroke one the wrong way, nor do they indulge in nagging—that annoying and perhaps most intolerable of the small foes to the peace of the household, while the disagreeableness inflicted by those who do practice the irritating art is borne with such placidity that the sharp tongues are reduced to silence through very shame. The opposite of all this everybody knows. We do not say they are all actually sick; but there is something wrong with them.—Success.

LOSING FRIENDS.

One of the things that most people wake up to when they are approaching middle age is that they have lost a good many friends through their own carelessness. You receive an invitation to the wedding of one whom

HALL'S Vegetable Sicilian HAIR RENEWER

Prevents the hair from falling out, and makes a new growth come in. You save what you have and get more. No gray hair.

you knew well eight or ten years ago. He has quite passed out of your life; though, if you were living near each other so that you would meet occasionally, he is the kind of a man in whose society you would find real pleasure. When the invitation comes you express your pleasure that Dick or John is to be married, and hope that he may be happy. And that is the end of it. You do not send a present, or, what is better—and often costs more—a friendly note conveying your congratulations and good wishes. The occasion passes without any sign from you, and you have lost an opportunity of identifying yourself with your friend's happiness. He will not associate you with that epoch of his life, and very likely will resent your silence. It is the same when you neglect to take note of a friend's afflictions. It is a real effort to write a letter of sympathy. But such a note may mean a vast deal to one in trouble, and by it you can bind a heart to your own with hooks of steel. The people who claim that they have so few friends have themselves to blame for it. They have lost them through their indifference or thoughtlessness. "A man that hath friends must show himself friendly."—Watchman.

BOYS WHO SUCCEED.

"A new boy came into our office to-day," said a wholesale grocery merchant to his wife at the supper-table, "He was hired by the firm at the request of the senior member, who thought the boy gave promise of good things. But I feel sure that the boy will be out of the office in less than a week."

"What makes you think so?"

"Because, the first thing he wanted to know was just exactly how much he was expected to do."

"Perhaps you will change your mind about him?"

"Perhaps I shall," replied the merchant, "but I don't think so."

Three days later the business man said to his wife:

"About that boy, you remember, I mentioned three or four days ago. Well, he is the best boy that ever entered the store."

"How did you find that out?"

"In the easiest way in the world. The first morning after the boy began work he performed faithfully and systematically the exact duties assigned, which he had been so careful to have explained to him. When he had finished he came to me, and said: 'Mr. H., I have finished all that work. Now, what can I do?'

"I was a little surprised; but I gave him a little job of work, and forgot all about him until he came into my room with the question, 'What next?' That settled him for me. He was the first boy that had ever entered our office who was willing, and volunteered to do more than was assigned to him. I predict a successful career for that boy as a business man."

Business men know capacity when they see it, and they make a note of it. Willingness to do more than the assigned task is one of the chief stepping-stones to commercial success.—Selected.

LOVE.

We learn to love by loving. It grows by practice. Like everything else, it gathers strength through exercise. The more we keep at it, the easier and more natural it becomes. We can form the habit of looking at people with love, thinking about them with love, speaking of them in love, and acting toward them lovingly.

Our deeds will react upon our thoughts, and our thoughts and feelings will prompt to action. So we may become steeped in love.

It will radiate from us as the light from the lamps. We shall be charged with it as the battery is with electricity, and power will go out from us. So, instead of crying idly, "Oh, for more love!" let us lay more stress upon the practice.

If we continually use what we have, it will increase.

Love never cast a shadow upon a home, never wounded a human heart, and never wronged a human soul. Love is never deaf to the cry of the needy, never blind to the wants of the deserving, responds to call back the erring, to aid the distressed, to up-build humankind.—Jewish Times.

A MAN'S IDEA OF HOME COMFORT.

A man wants some one place in home which he can call his very own, some portion of the house where his will is law, where no conflict of authority can arise. This is not altogether for the purpose of securing solitude, for his family is usually most welcome there, but the need for it springs from the desire for that sense of proprietorship which is his habit abroad, and from the wish to be able to do precisely as he pleases in at least a corner of his own house. Here he should feel at his ease, troubled by no fear of "mussing things," no need to thread his way anxiously through a maze of furniture and various decorative obstructions, trembling lest something should be the seat of that admired disorder to which he has the clue. His books and papers should be left as he leaves them, though to the orderly female eye they may seem to lie in hopeless confusion. His desk may be littered with piles of books, magazines, letters, manuscript that can possibly find a place there, but if a woman wishes to secure to a man one of his most cherished home comforts, she will let that desk alone.—Ladies' Home Journal.

PROTECT THE HOME.

The home life must be the sweetest. Keep out all bickering and strife. The world is full of backbiting and misunderstanding and envy; the home must be a refuge. The man is to be pitied who, after a hard day's sail amid the storms of business cares and fears, can not drop anchor at eventide in the quiet harbor of a peaceful home. We want to get rid of our grumbling, fault-finding spirit in the home, and learn to speak words of praise and approval. It is as easy to tell the wife when she does well as when she misses a button or has weak coffee; it is wiser to praise the children for their good deeds than to be unceasingly nagging them about their mistakes. Make home happy, and richest results will follow.—The Peninsular Methodist.

GOOD MANNERS.

Archbishop Whately says that "good manners are a part of good morals." We all acknowledge the truth of the trite saying that true politeness comes from the heart, and that it is only the outward and visible sign of that inward grace which makes us give up in small things to the comfort of others. But "assume the virtue if you have it not," for the polite person must always be more popular and give more pleasure to others than the rough and boorish one. A little courtesy costs nothing but a little thought, and it makes the wheels of society move vastly more smooth. We do not mean that the form of good manners should take the place of the reality, but unselfishness can be cultivated, and with its growth naturally comes politeness.—Housewife.

A dear mother lay dying, and her oldest son, as he knelt by her bedside, cried, "You have been a good mother to us." The dying woman opened her eyes, and with a feeble smile whispered, "You never said so before, John," and she was gone. If we have kind words to speak, let us speak them now, while our loved ones are yet with us. If we have loving deeds to do, let them be done to-day. Flowers on coffin lids and epitaphs on tombstones bring no cheer to the living. And how often they but contrast the more strongly with the absence of the gifts and the kind words while our dear ones lived.—Exchange.

It is an old admonition, but it can not be too frequently repeated. Be your best at home in dress, manners, and spirit. Life is too short to waste its holy hours in criticism, fault-finding, and unkind words and acts. Only a few brief years do family circles remain unbroken by the invasion of marriages, removals, or deaths; and if one retrospect of the time spent together is to be a precious memory, let its hours be filled with all that is loving and generous and noble.—Evening Messenger.

The boy who begins with dime novels will not drop easily into the habit of reading his Bible, and the boy who begins with the Bible is not apt to read dime novels. Nothing pays so well in this world as a good start.

For what is it when a child dies? It is the great Head Master calling him into his own room to finish his education at his own feet. The whole thought of a child's development in heaven instead of earth is one of the most exalting on which the mind can rest. Always there must be something in those who died as children to make them different to all eternity from those who grew up to be men here among all the temptations and hindrances of earth.—Phillips Brooks.

"I tell you," said a non-thinker, "the idea that there is a God has never come into my head!" "Ah! precisely like my dog. But there is this difference; he doesn't go around howling about it."

Hygiene.

LEAN-MEAT DIET.

Physiological facts which are known to-day fully justify the statement that a person subsisting upon a lean-meat diet, however comfortable he may be, however much relieved from various digestive inconveniences to which he may have been previously subject, is, nevertheless, in a pathological state, and one which is vastly more serious than the conditions which ordinarily arise from the simple fermentation or souring of saccharine or farinaceous or souring in the stomach. The acids developed by such fermentations are irritating, and produce more or less disturbance, local and reflex; nevertheless the ultimate effects are by no means so formidable as those of the insidious, but far-reaching and tissue-changing poisons which accumulate in the body as a result of a lean-meat diet.

The truth seems to be that a person subsisting on a lean-meat diet, while he may manifest a greater amount of strength than upon a more natural dietary, and may be unconscious of any abnormal condition, is like a person in a powder magazine—he is in constant danger of vital catastrophe. The poison-destroying functions of his liver, and the poison-eliminating capacity of his kidneys, are taxed to their utmost to keep the proportion of ptomain and leucomains in the tissues down to a point which permits of the performance of the vital functions. The margin of safety, which nature has wisely made very large in order to provide for emergencies, is reduced to the narrowest possible limit, so that anything which temporarily interferes with the functions of the liver or the kidneys, which imposes additional work upon them, may be sufficient to obliterate the safety margin, and produce an attack of grave disease.—Public Health Journal.

THE BEST CURE FOR WEARINESS.

There is nothing which will give a chance for rest to the overtired nerves so surely as a simple religious faith in the overruling, wise and tender Providence which has us in its keeping. It is in chafing against the conditions of our lives that we tire ourselves immeasurably. It is in being anxious about things which we can not help that we often do the most of our spending. A simple faith in God, which practically and every moment, and not only theoretically and on Sundays, rests on the knowledge that he cares for us at least as much as we care for those who are the dearest to us, will do much to give the tired nerves the feeling of the bird in its nest. Do not spend what strength you have, like the clematis, in climbing on yourself, but lay hold on things which are eternal, and the peace of them will pass into your soul like a healing balm. Put yourself in the great, everlasting currents, and then you can rest on your oars, and let those currents bear you on their strength.—Anna C. Bracket, in Harper's Magazine.

The late Rev. W. E. Penn the noted Evangelist, to Mrs. W. H. Watson, New Albion, N. Y.

Dear Madame: I recommend the Moore treatment, have tried it, and know it to be just what he says it is, was cured by it and have remained so eight years; have known of many others being cured of the very worst cases. Finally all means get it. Yours, W. E. PENN

Eureka Springs, Ark., May 24, '91.

Deaf Twenty-Five Years.

For many years I suffered from Catarrh, which destroyed my hearing, and for 25 years I was so deaf I could not hear a clock strike by holding my ear against it. Had tried every known remedy and nothing gave me the slightest relief. I obtained Aerial Medication and in three weeks my hearing began to improve, now can hear common conversation across a room; can hear a clock strike in an adjoining room 30 feet away, and think I am entirely cured and my hearing permanently restored. —EDWIN COLEMAN, Box 585, Wichita, Kansas.

Restored His Hearing in Five Minutes.

I suffered from Catarrh ten years. Had intense headache, continual roaring and singing in ears, took cold easily. My hearing failed, and for three years was almost entirely deaf, and continually grew worse. Everything I had tried failed. In despair I commenced to use Aerial Medication in 1888, and the effect of the first application was simply wonderful. In less than five minutes my hearing was fully restored, and has been perfect ever since, and in a few months was entirely cured of Catarrh.—ELI BROWN, Jacksboro, Tenn.

After being deaf thirty years have used Aerial Medication with very beneficial results, the improvement was felt from the start, and I now hear ordinary conversation first-class. My left ear had been useless many years, but gradually coming right. I am well known in Sheffield, and the restoration of my hearing has caused quite a talk. I feel in duty bound to very gratefully do all I can for this wonderful treatment.—J. MALLABAND, Clark Grove Rd., Sheffield, Eng.

THE VALUE OF A GOOD BOOK.

Channing said, "Let every man, if possible, gather a few good books under his roof." In this remarkable age, when the "art preservative" has reached such a high standard of excellence, and the best productions are printed in cheap form, it is possible for every person to possess, or at least have the reading of a few good books. With few exceptions, the few good books mastered have formed the foundations of the great intellects. It is not the quantity, but the quality of mental food that makes the strong intellect. Some persons read books simply to gratify the taste, and the taste is often perverted. They allow literary pastry and confectionery to take the place of solid, nourishing food. A book that does not furnish mental pabulum is of little value.

To estimate the value of a good book it is essential to know what constitutes a good book. Every book has a character and a personality. The elements that constitute true manhood, or mental and moral worth, are not always indicated by the clothes that hang on the back. Neither is the worth of a book to be judged by the richness of its binding or its typographical perfection. Many an unpretentious volume, so far as machanical execution is concerned, contains the ripest wisdom of the wisest sages. Value is not always to be measured by the pleasurable effect produced upon the senses. There is a mental intoxication that is enervating. The things which are of greatest worth are those which enter into and become a part of our being. The material is evanescent. Gold has wings and flies away. But knowledge is something that can not be taken from us. A book is of value mainly for the thoughts it contains, its stimulating effect upon the mental faculties, and its moral grandeur. If a book does not add to the thinking force or increase the mental capital, it is scarcely worth reading. I do not mean that one should choose the practical to the neglect of the æsthetic. All allies of the intellect should be cultivated. I like a book that furnishes the skeleton and leaves me to put on the flesh and skin. Joseph Parker and John Robertson are among my favorite preachers, not because they are theologians or great scholars, but because they fling out golden apples of thought, and my mind goes chasing after them and comes back exhilarated with the exercise. Give me the book that is stimulating and structural in its effect upon the mind.

Style, as well as character, is an important element in a good book. To the writer and public speaker this is essential. Most of the great barristers and preachers have modeled after some of the old masters of pure English. Macaulay's sentences have the swing of soldiers on the march. Some of Ingersoll's sentences in his great political speeches flow like the ripple of the waves on a Summer sea, or like the music of the purling brook. Though different, both are masters of style.

But the chief value of a book is what it may do for a man. Like the drop of rain that made its indenture in the soft clay, and finally became stereotyped into the hard rock, thoughts stereotype themselves into character. The influence of a good book in shaping the character of the young is almost incalculable. Three boys in New York read the sensational lives of the James brothers. The result was the wrecking of a railroad train and the injury of life. Abraham Lincoln read Weems' "Life of Washington," rose to the presidency of a great nation, and performed the most signal act in American history. The incendiaries' torch is scarcely more dangerous than the yellow-back novel. On the other hand, no factor enters into the home and school life of the young calculated to exert a more elevating and lasting influence upon the life and character than the good book. Hence the importance of putting good books into the homes and into the school and public libraries. The Christian Culture course which will be outlined from week to week in The Standard, the University Extension courses, the Chautauqua Circles, are all stimulating the desire for good books. Let parents encourage their children to take up these helpful lines of study. As eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, so eternal discretion in the selection of books for the boys and girls is the promoter of good morals and sound minds.—Standard.

DARKNESS—Died Oct. 1, 1897, at Delhi, La., JULIA KYLE, the dearly loved wife of James Darkness, of Belfast, Ireland, and fifth daughter of the late Rev. Wm. L. McGaughey, of the Louisiana Conference.

BLUE—MARY, daughter of John and Pinkie Blue, was born in Copiah county, Miss., May 25, 1896, and died at Mr. Thos. Beacham's, at Caseyville, Miss., Oct. 22, 1897.

She was a sweet child, and the only one, and will be sadly missed. May God's grace sustain the parents! C. McD.

Caseyville, Miss.

BEACHAM—Mrs. SARAH JANE BEACHAM, whose maiden name was Baker, was born in Copiah county, Miss., Nov. 15, 1828. She was married to Mr. Samuel P. Beachem, May 24, 1845. They were blessed with twelve children, eight of whom are living and were present at the funeral services; also her brother and two sisters. She joined the Presbyterian Church first, and soon after her marriage she united with the Methodist Church with her husband. She was consistent as a church member and very spiritual. Her husband died many years ago. She lived in the vicinity where she was born and reared, honored and beloved by all who knew her. She was taken violently sick on Oct. 13, while visiting at the house of a kinsman, and died there on the twenty-first, in her sixty-ninth year. May her loved ones meet her in heaven! C. McDONALD.

Caseyville, Miss.

MILLER—Died Sunday morning, Oct. 24, 1897, at 11 A. M., Dr. WILLIAM MILLER, aged sixty-four years, at his home in Vidalia, La. He will be missed by his many friends.

Dr. Miller was a friend to the poor, the widow, the orphan. He was received in the M. E. Church in 1896; Rev. White Davies, pastor. He received the sacrament. He was soft and gentle in his manners; won many lady friends. His life was a cross. I trust he now wears the crown in heaven. He leaves three sisters and one brother to mourn his loss. To them we will say: God's will be done. He was a veteran of the late war. A few of the veterans gathered around his grave to drop the falling tear. Loving hands placed flowers upon his grave. The angels stand at the door to waft away a soul to rest. L. L. C.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Mary Carolina Phillips (nee Smith) was born in Union district (county), S. C., Nov. 1, 1817. She professed religion at home and joined the M. E. Church at Pleasant Grove, Spartanburg circuit, in 1833; Bro. Armstrong, pastor. She was married to Daniel Asbury Phillips, Jan. 10, 1839. She moved to Marshall county, Miss., in 1849. Here her husband died in 1851, leaving her the mother of seven children, four of whom lived to mature years. She moved to Lafayette county, Miss., in 1859, where she lived until her death, Sept. 16, 1897.

Thus is sketched an eventful life, covering a period of great moment in Church and State; but the stormy winds of doctrine, nor the desperate struggles of warfare, were not able to shake her confidence in her heavenly Father's protection, nor the happy prospect of some time getting home to rest forever.

Having caught the pure, strong faith of the Son of God at the age of sixteen, the young life was fixed in its purpose, never to be jostled from its stronghold.

She had the peculiar history of belonging to three different denominations without ever changing her creed or membership, going with the Southern branch at the division of the M. E. Church; then with her section of country to the Protestant Methodist Church; then back to the Southern Methodist when the Protestants came back to us.

For forty-six lonely years she wore the solemnity of a widow, struggling bravely with the cares of life with a cheerfulness that was exceptional.

It was a treat for the young people and children to visit her home, and all felt that in her they had a true friend; and her loneliness seemed to find a genuine relief in providing for and enjoying with them some little sport.

"Aunt Polly," as she was known in later years, was a favorite of all. Her buoyant hope and jolly nature was a tonic to the most despondent.

When that desperate struggle between the States came she had two brave sons to lay on the altar of her country. The younger one endured the camp, the march, the desperate battle, and the horrid prison, and came home when it was all over without any material injury, and as bravely took up the cares of life, and was never more obedient to army officer than with tender regard he hearkened to every want of "mother" to her dying day. But the shadow never left that home in sorrow for the noble boy who bravely kissed "mother" farewell, never to return. For long, weary years, in anxious expectancy, they watched and waited for the return of the soldier boy that was doubtless sleeping in a lonely grave; but no comrade lived to bring a last message.

But the disappointments and sorrows of this life for her are over now. What a triumph of faith was the closing scene! The end was peace and submission to the Lord's will. During her last suffering she begged them to stop giving her medicine, and let her go and be at rest. She talked much of her departure, and exhorted friends and loved ones to live for God and meet her in heaven.

The writer had the privilege of seeing her a short time before her death, and among other things she said was: "I was not dreaming, and don't think I am superstitious, but somehow I see, just as plainly as I ever did, some who have been gone for years." Then she told of seeing her companion, who had been gone near half a century, and the soldier boy of whom she had never heard since the close of cruel war, and many other loved ones who had gone on before. She said she hardly knew whether to stay here with those who were so good to her, or go and be with those in the home above, where she hoped they would all some time meet to part no more. When she was dying she raised both hands as if to embrace some one, and said, "Daniel." Doubtless the husband who left her in the prime of young manhood had come to welcome her home. She leaves a son and daughter, several grandchildren and loved ones to mourn for her.

May we all so live that we can meet her in the "sweet by-and-by!" J. H. SMITH.

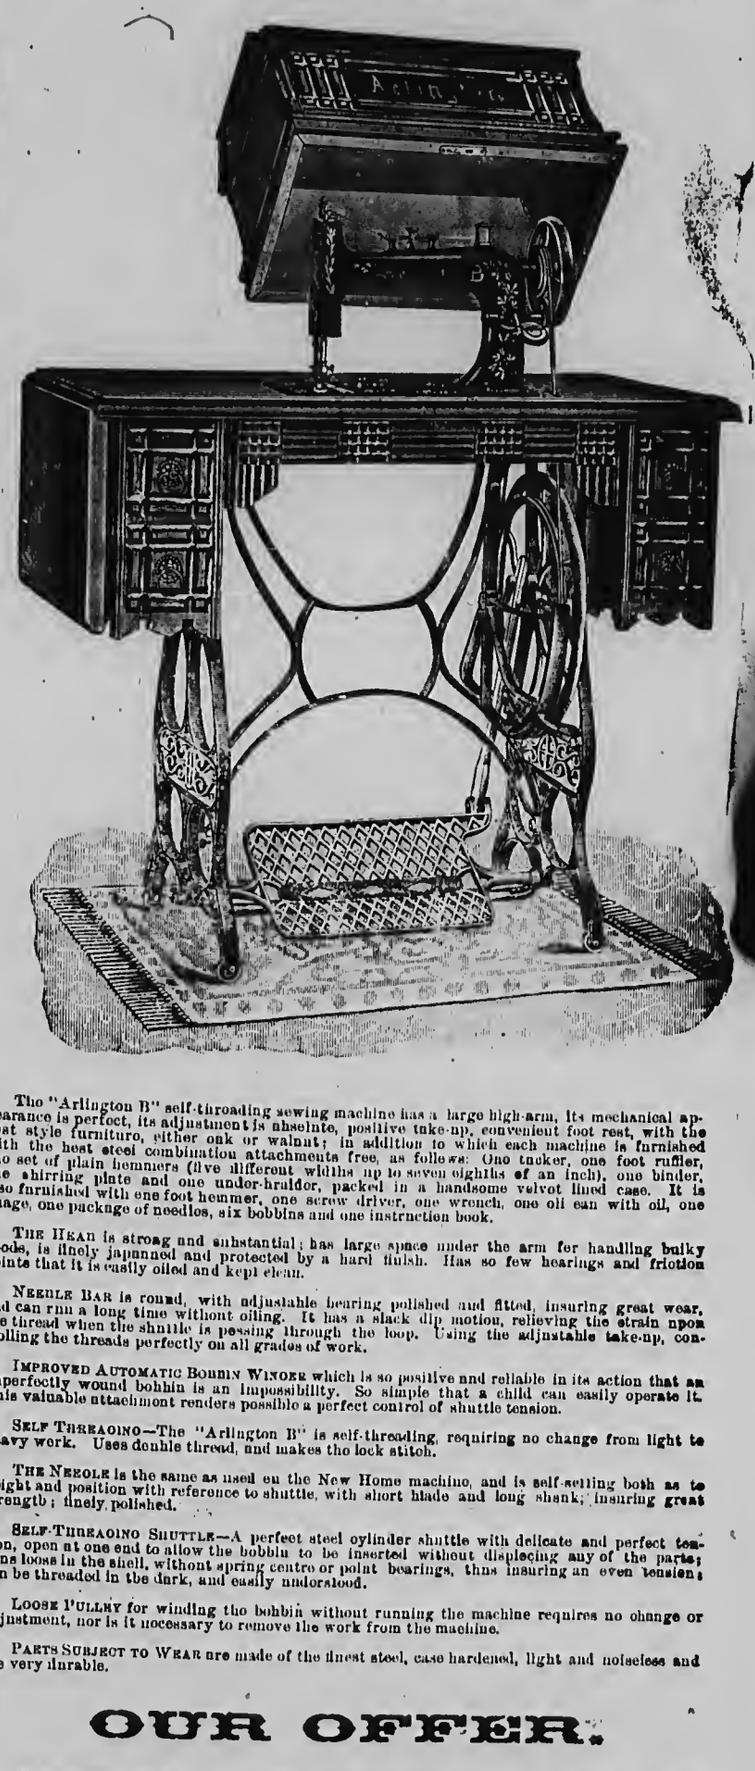
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

With A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.



The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take-up, convenient foot rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one guage, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearing polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF THREADING—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank; insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell, without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

OUR OFFER.

To anyone, not now a subscriber to this paper, who will send us $19, we will send the machine and the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE one year. To old subscribers we make the following offer: Pay your subscription to April, '99, and send $17 additional, and we will send you the machine. This price does not include freight.

We allow purchaser to test the machine for ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

"THE SALE OF METHODIST CHURCH PROPERTY."

In an interesting discussion of the above subject in your issue of Nov. 4, 1897, your correspondent, "Sextus," asks this question: "Can the trustees, together with the pastor of a church, convey or sell the church property and convey a valid title to the purchaser without the consent of the church? . . . If such be church law, it is high time it was changed."

Such is not church law; if it ever was, it has not been since 1854, when the following was inserted in the Book of Discipline, now ¶ 424: "The trustees, with the consent of the preacher in charge and the Quarterly Conference, shall have power to sell any church or parsonage property which has gone out of use, or which should be removed to another place, the proceeds of which shall be invested in other church property under the direction of the Quarterly Conference." In ¶ 420 it is provided that all conveyances of ground for the building of houses of worship shall contain the following clause: "In trust, that said premises shall be used, kept, maintained, and disposed of, as a place of divine worship for the use of the ministry and membership of the M. E. Church, South; subject to the discipline, usage, and ministerial appointments of said church, as from time to time authorized and declared by the General Conference of said church," etc.

Thus it appears that the language of the trust clause in the deed gives notice that the power of the trustees to "dispose of" the property is to be exercised "subject to the discipline and usage of the church," and the "discipline and usage of the church, as authorized and declared by the General Conference," require the concurrence of trustees, pastor and Quarterly Conference.

It is nevertheless a fact that many of the deeds to our churches do not contain the trust clause of the Discipline. When such is the case the trustees might, perhaps, be able to commit such a breach of trust as that suggested by "Sextus," at the same time giving an innocent purchaser a good title; but this would result, not from defect of church law, but from failure of the local church authorities in the beginning to secure a proper deed conforming to that law.

The Board of Church Extension, 705 West Chestnut street, Louisville, Ky., furnishes to all who apply for them, free of charge, printed forms for deeds that conform strictly to the law of the church, and also define the powers of the trustees in the matter of selling church property. No Board of Trustees should undertake to purchase property or receive it by gift without using one of these forms. A special form has recently been provided for use in Louisiana.

"Prepare for the worst, but hope for the best," says the old proverb. Hope for health, but be prepared for colds, coughs, croup, bronchitis, pneumonia, or any other throat or lung difficulty, by having Ayer's Cherry Pectoral always at hand. It is prompt to act, sure to cure.

The old adage, "Physician, heal thyself," should be diligently considered by the preacher who on the Sabbath day preaches a fervent sermon on the duty of trusting in God and the privilege of being preserved in peace in the midst of privation, danger and all possible vicissitudes, and then begins to worry on Monday morning in view of his prospective appointment at the approaching Conference. — Baltimore Advocate.

TO CURE CATARRH

Do not depend upon snuffs, inhalants, or other local applications. Catarrh is a constitutional disease, and can be successfully treated only by means of a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which thoroughly purifies the blood and removes the scrofulous taints which cause catarrh. The great number of testimonials from those who have been cured of catarrh by Hood's Sarsaparilla prove the unequalled power of this medicine to conquer this disease. If troubled with Catarrh, give Hood's Sarsaparilla a fair trial at once.

To Whom it May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mul-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of sores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. BLACK,

NOTHING TO DO.

Nothing to do in this world of ours,
Where weeds spring up with the fairest flowers,
Where smiles have only a fitful play,
Where hearts are breaking every day?

Nothing to do, then sinful soul,
Wrapping thee round in thy selfish stole?
Off with the garments of sloth and sin!
Christ thy Lord hath a kingdom to win.

Nothing to do? There are prayers to lay
On the altar of incense day by day;
There are foes to meet within and without;
There is error to conquer, strong and stout.

Nothing to do? There are lambs to feed,
The precious hope of the church's need;
Strength to be borne to the weak and faint,
Vigils to keep with the doubting saint.

MATERIALISM IN RELIGION.

The faculties and powers of the human mind are limited; the scope of our thought, like the area of our vision, is limited; so that, in dealing with our final destiny, with immortality, we are tied down by the circumstances of our environments. The soul stilkes and dashes against these bars—these tenements of clay—and, conscious of her immortality, she feign would soar aloft and claim her kinship with divinity. In every clime and among all peoples man has ever maintained this deathless claim to a life beyond the bounds of this transitory existence. Faith stands by the bedside of the dying and points the soul to her home beyond the skies; and as his fast glazing eyes are closing in death, the notes of heavenly music fall on his ear, and the voice that he hears is the cherubim's song. No heathen philosopher of a by-gone age, no blatant infidel of the present age, can make man believe that death is an eternal sleep. The powers and capacities of the human mind, especially memory; the deep emotions of the human heart, and that wonderful faculty by which, even when the body reposes in the most profound slumber, the mind walks back over the journey of life, quaffs again the cooling waters of the flowing fountains, is scorched by the blistering sands of the desert, meets and holds sweet converse with friends that have long been dead, or reaches out into the future, and, with the ken of prophecy, receives impressions of coming events—these all declare that the soul's final resting place is in a clime where the sun never sets, where the stars never go out, and where the friends we here part with shall live in our presence forever. The seer of Patmos, in his rapt vision of the New Jerusalem, said, "And there shall be no night there."

Weary traveler on life's rugged way, you have a home; heir of immortality, you have an inheritance that is incorruptible and fadeth not away. As the days of the years of your life are drawing to a close, and the shadows lengthen in the eventide, and the crumbling of this earthly tenement admonishes you that the end of your journey is near, look up, for bright—yes, bright—o'er the hills dawns the glorious morn of immortality; and even now, as you go your weary way, there come quiet, peaceful moments when you have sweet visions of that home.

Materialism is an insult to divine justice. The circumstances and conditions of life are so varied, are so uneven and irregular, that they point to another life as the place where crooked things will be made straight and dark things plain. The great apostle to the Gentiles says: "Now we see through a glass darkly, but then, face to face. Now I know in part, but then shall I know even as also I am known." Here we hear one side; there we shall hear both sides. Here we see the wrong prevail and the right suppressed. Here we see crime clad in purple and fine linen, and failing sumptuously every day, and the just and righteous man a beggar at the gates of his rich and wicked neighbor; but then you must remember that this is only one act of the drama. Withhold your judgment until the end comes, and whilst one part of this drama has occurred on earth, the other part and the end will be in eternity. The godless rich man seems to have had, in many cases, the best of it in this life; but Dives did not think that he had the best of it in the other life. We also find confirmation of this idea—that is, that the period of one life is frequently too short for the equalization of the life of men—in Holy Scripture, for we are told that the sins of the father shall be visited on the child. And why? Some say that it is unjust that the sins of one man should be visited on another. But this is not visiting one man's sins on another, because the son's life is merely a continuation of the life of the father. Before that son was born he was in the loins of his father; he was a part of the father, the father's seed. A part of the father germinated and produced the son. A man continues his own life in the life of his offspring. The father lies down and dies; but he is not dead—there he stands in the person of the son. This seed may produce a dozen sons, and go on from generation, each man transmitting the seed, and living again in his offspring; and the curse may be on this seed, and this seed continues, although offshoots from it may die continuously. For instance: The blessing to Abraham was on his seed. Physical characteristics are transmitted, and the results of vicious habits which have worked structural changes in the physical organism will be transmitted from father to son. Thus—and for example—inebriety, long continued, induces structural changes in the nervous system, and, as a result thereof, the children of confirmed inebriates are especially liable to nervous diseases, particularly insanity and paralysis; and this is the great cause of the increase in insane persons and paralytics. And so we might go on to show how the blessing or curse is to the seed, and, as a consequence, that the sins of the father are visited on the children in the third and fourth generations, because it takes three or four generations of correct living to correct these evils. So it is not in one life that the doings of that life are equalized.

This tendency of the human mind to judge everything by the results of outward observation, and observing the leveling and disintegrating changes wrought by the hand of time—the leaves as they go to the ground in the Autumn, the decrepit steps of age as they halt feebly to the tomb, and the ruddy glow on the cheek of beauty as it passes into the hectic flush, a silent sentinel of the march of death—these all cause men to declare that decay and death are written on all creation. Our baser, lower nature calls for something tangible, something visible; hence we find the heathen bowing down to stocks and stones, worshiping something that he can see. Faith comes from revelation. Man has an instinctive religious nature; he is naturally disposed to worship; but this materialistic character of his mind forces, or rather causes, him to worship something that he can see; hence he constructs for himself an idol of wood or stone. Faith is the highest exercise of the mind; faith makes us, for the present, content, as seeing him that is invisible; but this faith is a change in the soul wrought by regeneration. The unregenerated man is in no respect different from the heathen. He does not worship him that is invisible. In his natural state he is a heathen, but by the process of regeneration a change takes place which is so radical and wonderful that the same is called a new birth. The regenerated man is a new creature; by faith he apprehends him that is invisible. Before regeneration he had no such apprehension, and could not have. This apprehension of the invisible by faith, and the consequent worship, is the result of regeneration; the man has been born again. What was the man before this new birth? He was a natural, unregenerated man, a heathen, and he is also a materialist. And why so? Because the natural tendency of his mind makes him disposed to worship something, and another tendency makes him worship something that he can see—that is, this natural tendency to materialism makes him worship something that he can see, and so, naturally, he is an idol worshiper. Of course, our civilization would prevent an unregenerated man, here with us, from worshiping an idol; but take him to Africa, and he will worship idols. We may well imagine that if natural religion had been sufficient—and by natural religion we mean those existing evidences of the Supreme Being and his attributes, furnished and shown forth in nature—if these, we say, had been fully adequate unto faith and salvation, we may well suppose that we would have been without direct revelation.

Materialism is of the earth, earthy; idealism is lofty and sublime. Materialism scoffs at and rejects everything that is supernatural. With the materialist seeing is believing. And here we would remark that among us at this day there is too much talk and too many slighting remarks made, even from the pulpit, against the supernatural. We sometimes forget that our very religion is based on the supernatural. Faith is not of this earth, nor directed towards anything earthy. The great God is supernatural, infinite in his attributes, divine. The god of the idol worshiper is visible, bodily, before him—an object of sense and touch. Regeneration is supernatural. So great is this wonderful change that it is called a new birth. The office, work and operation of the Holy Spirit is supernatural.

But we have a church in our land which is strongly tinctured with materialism. This church gives to the written or printed "Word," and the reading of the same, that power which alone is the office of the Holy Spirit. This church virtually denies the office and work of the Holy Spirit as understood and taught by orthodox churches; and this same church is much opposed to creeds, and naturally so, I think, because to publish and proclaim their belief, truly, would show it to be unscriptural. And whilst they declaim against creeds, they are the most iron-bound of all churches in their belief. With this church water baptism, by immersion, is a "sine qua non" to church membership, if not even to salvation. You say to them, "I don't attach the importance you do to water baptism by immersion." They say, 'Read the Word." You reply, "But I don't interpret the Word as you do." Again they say: "Read the Word. You can't read it to mean anything but what I say." And unless you read and interpret the Word as they do, and submit to baptism by immersion, you can't join their church; yet they say they have no creed. The ministers of this church speak and talk of religion as if it was a thing that could be handled, measured and weighed as wheat, corn, or any other commodity. And the great doctrine of regeneration as a supernatural work of the Holy Spirit, a supernatural change or new birth wrought in the heart of man by the direct operation of the Holy Spirit, they do not teach. Their requisites for church membership are a belief in the Lord Jesus Christ and baptism by immersion. This church declaims against anything supernatural in religion. They are religio-materialist, yet they arrogate to themselves the distinctive title of Christians—the Christian Church, but commonly called Campbellites.

This day and time calls for the preaching of the old doctrine of salvation by faith in all its pristine purity. Preach it till every hill and vale, rock and dale shall resound. Preach it until, like a drum-beat and bugle-blast, it encircles the world. Preach it until it shall usher in the noon-tide glory of universal righteousness. Preach it until the church militant shall become the church triumphant, and shall sit down in glory to the bridal supper of the Lamb.

LAYMAN OR SEXTUS.

HAYGOOD MEMORIAL HALL.

The M. E. Church, South, would have been untrue to herself and unmindful of the duties and privileges of the hour if, when the colored members within her communion were organized into a separate and independent church, she had not assumed the attitude of patron to the new organization, and pledged herself to give it all possible moral and material support. The cordial relations maintained and the substantial aid given, while never measuring up to the full duty of the church, have been sufficient to preserve in the thought of both churches the abiding and acknowledged obligation.

The recent action of the Board of Education in undertaking, in connection with the C. M. E. Church, the erection of an additional building for Paine Institute, was a fitting acknowledgment of this obligation and an evidence of willingness to redeem the pledges of the past. This action took the form of resolutions recognizing the need of the building, and calling for $25 000 for the erection and equipment of the same; urging the co-operation of our preachers and people in this worthy cause, and authorizing our Secretary of Education to use his time, as far as practicable, in the advancement of the cause, and calling upon all Conference Boards of Education to lend their influence and aid in this important work. The name of Haygood Memorial Hall was suggested for the proposed building. The propriety of this name will be evident to all who remember that the moral and intellectual advancement of the negro has had no more earnest or able advocate than our late Bishop Haygood.

Dr Bigham, our Secretary of Education, has thrown himself with characteristic vigor into the great work, and it is encouraging to note the success that is attending his efforts. Several subscriptions of $1,000 each have been made to the fund, and by Sept. 15 there had been raised for this purpose nearly $9 000. In the interests of the same work Bishop Holsey, of the C. M. E Church, has taken the field, and before the Annual Conferences and elsewhere is presenting the cause.

That the great work undertaken will be accomplished does not admit of a doubt; but the time of its accomplishment will depend mainly upon the intelligent liberality of the members of the M. E. Church, South. The considerations of duty to God, our brethren, ourselves and the civil government, emphasize the importance of the plea now being presented by Dr. Bigham and Bishop Holsey.

The Bible and the spelling-book are God's great levers for overturning the world of sin and ignorance. Upon these two levers the hands of Paine Institute have been placed, and the Methodists of Mississippi should strengthen these hands.

ORPHANS' HOME NOTES.

BY REV. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD.

On account of the yellow fever and consequent quarantine restrictions, the agent of the Orphans' Home has been unable to travel for some weeks past. Killing frosts, and with them cooler weather, have come, and now that all danger seems to have passed, we are enabled once more to represent the cause so near our hearts. One brother has written, inviting us to his charge to preach and take a collection on and promises a good attendance and a liberal response. We would be glad to hear from other preachers who can give us an opportunity before the session of Conference to represent the claims of the institution in the bounds of their charges. Since God has been so good to us in that we have been spared from the attack of the prevailing fever, we ought, as an evidence of our gratitude and as an appreciation of the blessings received, to do more and give more than we otherwise would have done. We realize and recognize the fact that the Annual Conferences are near at hand, and that a goodly amount of money will be needed to "round up," but subscriptions payable within the next few months can be made toward the Home, and we trust that many of our people will have a mind to act upon this suggestion. During the quarantine, when mails, "like angels' visits," were few and far between, we received a telegram from Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, of inquiring as to what they might do for the Home. We wired back, "Make building for single beds." All will remember the devastating overflow of last Spring in that Delta country, and yet those good people are ready to help the friendless orphans by assisting in the furnishing of the Home. We hope that all who read these lines will endeavor to help, and, if possible, to help now, that the Home may soon be opened. Be sure to set apart some amount as a free will offering on Thanksgiving Day—Thursday, Nov. 25. We trust that all subscriptions made during the Summer in answer to our appeals and the appeals of the pastors will be paid and sent in without delay. May the richest blessings of Heaven rest upon all our people, and may they heed now this call for help!

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The eighty-fourth session of the Mississippi Annual Conference—Bishop A. W. Wilson presiding—will convene in the First Methodist Church, Jackson, at 9:30 o'clock, Thursday morning, Dec. 30.

The presiding elders of the several districts will please furnish us with their Conference lists, containing the names of lay delegates elect, or of alternates who are to attend, of local preachers who are candidates for orders, of supplies on Conference charges, and of others entitled to entertainment, and not appearing in the list of episcopal appointments.

The classes of the undergraduates will be provided comfortable places of meeting. Chairmen of committees will call their classes to meet them at the church at a time to suit their convenience. Careful allotment of rooms will be made in the church or chapel, or in Epworth Hall, in the same block. Any request for accommodation of special committees to meet before the Conference session should be made at once.

A Conference postoffice, telephone, and messenger and intelligence service will be maintained in the lobby of the chapel for the convenience of members and delegates. The usual special ticket rate will be made by the railways entering Jackson.

Selections.

THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE.

Leon Gambetta, of France; the Wesleys and Fletchers, of England, and Abraham Lincoln, of America, owed much, if not all, of their sterling characters and public advance to the superior training and inculcation of principles on the part of their mothers. Who can adequately gauge the importance of the silent influence and moulding of character that is associated with the word "mother"? How all essential, then, that parents watch the education of the hearts of children committed to their care; and of what paramount importance it is that the training given them should qualify them, not for making themselves money and pleasure, but constituting them useful and beneficial to their day and generation. It was William Ross Wallace who wrote, in answer to the question, "Who rules the world?" the following lines:

They say that man is mighty,
He governs land and sea,
He wields a mighty sceptre
O'er lesser powers that be;
But a mightier power and stronger
Man from his throne has hurled,
And the hand that rocks the cradle
Is the hand that rules the world.

—Exchange.

The power to repress ourselves under trying circumstances is an inestimably precious virtue. Sometimes silence wins the victory just as a soft answer turns away wrath. It is a great thing to possess one's soul in patience. A constant talker is rarely a wise man. Garrulity and folly are generally inseparably linked. There are times when we must seal our lips. Too often one bitter word has alienated two hearts forever. Here is one of the tests of character—the ability to say nothing and to bide one's time—Texas Christian Advocate.

TOPIC FOR NOVEMBER.

THE CHURCH OF ST. PAUL.

NOV. 21.—ITS UNITY AND BEAUTY. (Eph. iii. 11-19.)

1. The unity of the church is not in creed, but in life. In the evolution of creeds it was inevitable that homogeneity should be lost. As a tree grows the differentiation of its parts is more and more definite; yet these parts have a common life. So it is in the church; its different branches draw their life from Him who said, "I am the vine."

2. A very important lesson for the church to learn to-day is to sink intellectual differences below spiritual likenesses. Dwell upon the spiritual harmony rather than the mental discord. Correct doctrine is good; a good heart is better. Get the heart right, and the creed will be relatively right also. Organic union is not desirable; heart union there must be.

3. Beauty is harmony; ugliness is discord. Physical beauty is the harmony of parts, colors, etc.; the result of necessary laws. Spiritual beauty is harmony, human and divine; the result of volition. As plant life is but a dim type of conscious human life, so physical beauty is but a poor foreshadowing of the beauty of holiness. This is the divine ideal. In the church are the blooming flowers of virtue, love, and holiness, that God grows in his garden of the universe.

DOTS.

Louisiana Avenue League will give its first social this Fall at Mrs. Randolph's, 1225 Harmony street, next Friday night, Nov. 19.

Quite an interesting meeting of the Union League was held last Tuesday night at Louisiana Avenue Church. Carrollton, Dryades, Tchoupitoulas, Rayne Memorial and Algiers were represented. There was a large delegation from Tchoupitoulas. Would that others were as enthusiastic! Rayne Memorial sent in a splendid report. Among those present was the happiest man in Algiers. The next meeting will be held at Carrollton.

Now is the time to work for the League. Let us see which League can report the largest number of new members by the next union meeting.

FAITH.

BY WILLIAM HENRY HURLBUT.

We will not weep, for God is standing by us,
And tears will blind us to the blessed sight;
We will not doubt; if darkness still doth try us,
Our souls have promise of serenest light.

We will not faint; if heavy burdens bind us,
They press no harder than our souls can bear—
The thornless way is lying still behind us,
We shall be braver for our past despair.

Oh, not in doubt shall be our journey's ending;
Sin, with its fears, shall leave us at the last—
All its best hopes in glad fulfillment blending,
Life shall be with us when the death is past.

Help us, O Father! when the world is pressing
On our frail hearts, that faint without their friend—
Help us, O Father! let thy constant blessing
Strengthen our weakness till the joyful end.

GEORGIA LETTER.

Your North Mississippi superannuate writes a somewhat touching letter about himself, and, as I am in the same class with him, I am prepared to appreciate his feelings and sympathize with him. No church is less patient with pastors who are growing old than our own, and in no church are the authorities so ready to vote them inefficient. Most men are retired by the almanac, and as soon as the fiftieth year has past, presiding elders begin to look eagerly for the day when dear Bro. Jones shall ask to have his name referred. If the dear man does not suggest it, after a cabinet session or two the presiding elder will interview him, and say to him that as Conference is so crowded, and as it is so hard to get a good place, such as he (Bro. Jones) deserves, had he not better have his case referred. Up to that good hour Bro. Jones really thought the people loved him, and wanted him to stay in the field; but the beloved ought to know, and so Bro. Jones asks as advised and is put on the list of worn out preachers. He feels that he is not worn out, and it puzzles him sometimes to know how it is that the presiding elder is an older man than he is, and, as far as he can judge, no better preacher and, as far as he has heard, no more popular with the people; thinks he is worn out, and yet he does not ask to have his own case referred. Bro. Jones has no parsonage and no money, and is not likely to get any till the next Conference, and then not much; so the good man has much need of faith and prayer to go literally out into the world to live he knows not how.

Well! this is a sad picture, and a true one, and the painful features are added to when a microscopic inspection is made into Bro. Jones' private affairs, and searching enquiries are made as to whether Bro. Jones could not possibly squeeze along without help. I could send you a list of questions propounded to superannuates in one of our older Conferences which so smacks of the poor-house that one is not surprised to learn that the layman who devised them was once overseer for the poor. What is he to do? Does the church encourage him and aid him by giving him employ?

Here is my dear old friend, Herbert Bacon, of Virginia. He had a little place on the staff of the Sunday-school Board. It paid him $25 per month. When the new administration came in he was promptly discharged, and a young lady employed to take his place. The secretary said the Sunday-school Board was no Board of Finance to take charge of worn-out preachers. Bro. Bacon was a cripple and dependent on his small stipend. I got my discharge, too, but I was able to get along. If the superannuate fills a pulpit, no one ever thinks of compensating him. Dr. Jesse Boring, one of the grandest men who ever lived, went once when he was superannuated to the Sparta Camp Meeting. He preached magnificently. The preacher in charge came to me, and said: "Bro. Smith, I am trying to get up a little purse for the old Doctor; can't you help me?"

"Certainly," I said, and I handed him five dollars.

"That's too much," he replied; "I only want fifty cents."

"Fifty cents for Jesse Boring! No, sir; I could not insult him so far nor degrade myself by doing so little a thing."

Does the superannuate do nothing? Are the vested funds he has helped to provide a matter of charity? I am sure a court of equity would wonderfully wake up some Boards who dispense trust funds as if they were charitable contributions. To pay Bishops, presiding elders and preachers in charge without reference to whether they are rich or poor, and then to distribute to superannuates according to their necessities, is a strange procedure.

But there is another side. Our church does more for its old preachers when they are retired than any other. The superannuates are beloved and a thousand homes are open to them, and they have the sweet assurance that they shall not want, and none of them have ever starved as far as the records go. We could do something better if we could have the matter settled by the Annual Conferences by their own laws and taken out of the hands of the General Conference. We could devise plans which would make it easier to retire men, and make it easier for those who are retired. I feel a tender sympathy for those who are now in the hospital tent and who can hear the roar of the guns, and I can feel for them when they are a little impatient and, it may be, a little soured. There are, however, great compensations in this dealing of Providence. We have little, we need little; the night will soon be gone, the day will soon dawn. Let us look up and hope to the end.

GEO. G. SMITH.

OBITUARIES AND MONUMENTS.

St. Paul said, "When I was a child I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child: but when I became a man I put away childish things." If he had lived in our day and generation, he might have modified the sentence a little, for I do not believe he thought, spake or understood as the children of to-day do. However, when I was a child I used to have some queer thoughts, whether like other children or not I know not. One thing I used to think was that I'd like to play dead—in other words, go off in a trance like I had heard of some doing. I was inclined to be jealous-hearted, and when I thought I was not properly loved and appreciated, or felt like I hadn't had "my share," I'd want to know just how much people thought of me, and was wise enough to know that for them to believe me dead would be the best way to find out.

Since I became a woman I have often thought what a pity it is that people must die in order to be appreciated. Our virtues never shine till the light has gone out of the eye, and the pale hands are folded in that last sleep over a still heart. All the good things are left to be said when our ears can not hear them. If our dead could only read the "fish stories" written about them after they are gone, they would be surprised, to say the least. I, for one, believe this is all wrong. We would like to know that all who die go to a better world; still, if there is any doubt about it, better not ask the preacher to preach them to glory, and then write a lengthy obituary. If I were a preacher, I'd dislike very much to sign my name to a romance gotten up about a person after he is dead. Better not write obituaries about strangers; they have been known in the community in which they lived, and your account may not tally with the record they have left.

"Dead men tell no tales;" but the living are not so trustworthy. Not many years ago there appeared in a paper an obituary, written by one of our young preachers, about a person I had known in childhood, which said the subject "was converted in youth and lived a consistent Christian till death." Now, said person was a notorious character in youth and made no pretentions to religion till nearing old age. True, the preacher had only written what was told, and, perhaps, does not know till this day that his name appeared in print at the bottom of a falsehood.

Of writing obituaries and building monuments there seems to be no end, and yet there are heroes whose dust sleeps in an unmarked grave, whose monuments will endure long after the costly ones the world has erected over its heroes, who may be living now in eternity as lost souls only, have crumbled to dust and ashes. Think you that any truly great man rests more sweetly because of this waste of means, while many of God's poor are suffering for the bare necessities of life under the very shadow of these monuments? I trow not. If they could speak, they would say: "Spend not a dollar for me; give it to some poor, starving creature whom it may benefit; your chance for making me happier or better is forever passed." The first great man to deserve a monument will be the one who leaves as his dying request that none be erected. If the vast amount of money paid for cold, useless marble could be given to send the gospel to heathen lands or redeem lost souls in our midst, both the world and its heroes would be made better and happier. Better leave the dead in the hands of their Creator, and give both our attention and means to the living. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me."

REPLY TO "GILDEROY."

MR. EDITOR: We have just read Bro. "Gilderoy's" article on second page of the ADVOCATE, of Sept. 16, "The Old Preacher's Experience with Some Newly Sanctified Young People." We write to suggest that that difficulty be charged up to our Zinzendorfian brethren, who teach that we "get it all at once." Bro. "Gilderoy" says those young people were taught that "they jump from the middle of the bad case of sin into full, complete and entire sanctification at one spring." No "second-blessing" man teaches that way. He further says, "I doubt if anyone of those new converts knew that we have an Article of Religion on sin after justification." The "second-blessing" school keeps the truth embodied in this "Article of Religion on sin after justification" prominently before their young converts; but the converts of Zinzendorfian brethren know but little of such an Article of Religion, and what they do know is to deny the truthfulness of it. Let each take what belongs to him.

A GREAT QUESTION—BAD ANSWER.

In the catechism following the Sunday school lesson for Dec. 5 one of the two questions and answers is as follows:

"Ques. 32. In what consists the misery of the state into which mankind has fallen?

"Ans. The misery of the state into which mankind fell consists in being born in sin and following the devices and desires of their own corrupt hearts; in being under the wrath and curse of God, and liable to the sufferings of this life, to death, and the pains of hell hereafter."

As I analyze this answer I get the following: "The misery of the state into which mankind fell consists:" (1) Of being born in sin (2) and following the devices . . . of their corrupt hearts; (3) in being under the wrath of God, (4) and liable to the sufferings of this life; (5) and (liable) to death, (6) and to the pains of hell hereafter.

How can one born in this condition be saved? Either of the six parts of this answer applies as much to "the inevitable" as the first, or any other part of it. What follows in the next lesson offers no solution to the over-done Ans. 32, unless it be construed to mean "universal, unconditional" salvation. If "following the devices and desires of their corrupt hearts" is as much a part of "the misery of the fall" as "being born in sin," how can one avoid the one part any more than the other? And if the case be so, how can one avoid "the pains of hell hereafter," seeing that is as much a part of "the misery of the fall" as "being born in sin?"

In the previous answer (to Ques. 31) the editor tells us about the difference between "original sin" and "actual transgression," but in this answer (to Ques. 32) both are put up in the same package and reckoned as one. While it is unquestionably correct to say "the misery of the condition," etc., is "being born in sin," it is not correct to say that we are born "to death, and the pains of hell hereafter." As I look at this answer it says just that, and no less. It seems to me a much better answer might have been copied from Art. VII. of our creed, viz.: "The misery of the condition into which mankind fell" is in "the corruption of the nature of every man, that naturally is engendered of the offspring of Adam, whereby man is very far gone from original righteousness, and of his own nature inclined to evil, and that continually."

This statement has consistency all through it, while Ans. 32 is out of harmony with itself and the whole system of Methodist theology.

MRS. REBECCA H DILLEHAY.

Mrs. Rebecca H. Dillehay, widow of Rev. D. W. Dillehay, late of the Mississippi Conference, was born in Baltimore, Md., March 11, 1819, and died in Lawrance, Miss., Sept. 21, 1897, being seventy-eight years six months and ten days old. Her maiden name was Cox, and she was united in matrimony with Bro. Dillehay, Jan. 14, 1836, at Madisonville, Miss. She was of English parentage, and reared an Episcopalian. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Church during the first year of her married life. She was the mother of ten children, four of whom survive her. Dr. A. H. Dillehay, of Meridian, Miss., and three sisters remain to venerate her blessed memory. She was buried at Newton, Miss., Rev. D. P. Bradford officiating.

Sister Dillehay was a faithful woman, faithful in all the relations in life. A good and thoughtful wife, a tender mother, an ardent friend, she filled her place in life well. She was a model itinerant's wife. She knew how to go anywhere, live on small salaries, and endure hardships. For several years she has lived with her children, for some time with Dr. Dillehay in Meridian, and for awhile with Mrs. Caldwell, her daughter, in Lawrance.

We who knew her best have no doubt she has rejoined her glorified husband on the other shore. Delightful reunion! Forever safe, forever at rest! May all that knew and loved her meet her on the other shore! God comfort the loved ones.

Selections.

THE RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

The salt and sweetness of family life are its relations to the kingdom of God. It keeps these relations through intelligent interest in what Christians are doing in Christian service, in the development of their own lives, in the church, the community, the State. To lose this interest is to die spiritually, to allow the choicest ties of the family to decay and to weaken its beneficent influence in society.

No other instrument works more effectively and constantly to foster this noble interest than the religious newspaper. It talks with the children about the things of the kingdom in which they are already interested. It exalts the office of fatherhood and motherhood, of husband and wife, by treating of household ministries which bless the bodies, minds and hearts of all the family, from the babe in the cradle to the grandsire in his declining years. It suggests the ornaments, the books and the ways which give to the home the culture that makes its attractions outvie the temptations which, more powerfully than ever before, led the young, and sometimes the older ones, astray.

The religious newspaper makes the teaching of the Bible practical and present. It applies revealed truth to daily living, makes it a power in the decisions which must be made in those smaller affairs where the purposes of life are shaped and developed for its great crisis. It reenforces the utterances of the pastor, instructs the church in many ways by the recorded experiences of other churches, and helps to guide and quicken its spiritual life. Most of the new movements by which the churches advance in strength and influence are started by information which is first spread through the religious newspaper. Christians who do not read it know little and feel little their relations to the body to which they belong, and are little moved to join its work to bring the nations to Christ.

The religious newspaper is as necessary to men's intellectual as to their spiritual growth. Men without it may be keen and eager in their business, and women without it may be zealous to maintain their social standing. They may keep informed through the secular press of passing events, but the interests of culture, no less than of religion, require them to study present problems in the light of Christianity. There would not be motive enough to keep the intellectual nature of the ordinary man or woman alive if the questions which engage their attention as related to society and the world at large were divorced from religion. The great questions which society is striving to answer are moral problems, and in their last analyses are questions of personal duty depending on divine sanctions. The integrity of the family, the relations between employers and employed, and the education of the people by schools and platforms and pulpits, by literature, the social habits of the people in eating and drinking and amusements, and discoveries, inventions and methods which affect social and business life in the moral relations, the making of nations by law and policy, and the dealings of nations with each other—all these pass under review in the religious newspaper, and each one's duty in relation to them is interpreted by the position he holds, or ought to hold, in the kingdom of God.

For these reasons, and others like these, we counsel every head of a family to take the best religious newspaper he can find; to furnish it to his sons and daughters as they go out from their homes; to see that it is present in the new homes they found for themselves, and to commend it heartily to their neighbors and friends. Pastors, it would seem, should hardly need this counsel. They can have no more effective ally in building up their churches. It speaks when they must be silent, and it carries to their flocks many messages which they would be glad to give concerning themselves and their personal relations to their people, but which, in their position, they are compelled to withhold. For the sake of the family, the Church, the State and the kingdom of God, extend the circulation and influence of the religious newspaper.—Congregationalist.

THE DEVOTIONAL HABIT.

"How will I ever get through this day?" said one at an early morning hour, anticipating for that particular day an unusual amount of care and trial. These words were uttered with no misleading ignorance in respect to divine Providence; only with unmindfulness, at that moment, of infinite love and watch-care Soon afterward, at the morning hour of family worship, there came a sweet sense of Christ's love and strength, and then the shrinking soul was enabled to go forth with courage to meet successfully the work of life. It was not, we may suppose, any willful distrust of God that occasioned the above remark, but only the temporary suspension of a conscious devotional habit.

How common is such an experience! And because it is so universal, we come to think that deliverance from the unreflecting habit is something quite impossible in this life; whereas God would have his servants possess such an elevation of Christian character that, absorbed as they must necessarily be in the affairs of this life, they still have a secret reliance upon himself all the time—a substratum of holy confidence, a quiet strength and joy! Every soul should so live as always to say with each opening day, "God does keep me, and does help me to meet every duty and trial."

The Christian mother, occupied, as is so often the case, with almost innumerable cares each day, may have this quiet, strong undercurrent of love and trust. It may not be expressed in words. It may not always be interpreted by herself as a spiritual undercurrent, worthy of being called holy trust. Yet there is—a deep, divine soul-union with God, even when the thoughts are engaged in earthly affairs. All this is possible, because the scriptural promises point the way to such hallowed rest of soul.—Selected.

WHAT THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST HAS DONE.

James Russell Lowell, some years ago, in an after-dinner speech in London, thus replied to a sneer at religion:

"Some gentlemen tell us very complacently that they have no need of religion; they can get along well enough without it. Let me tell you, my friends, the worst kind of religion is no religion at all. And those men who live in ease and luxury, indulging themselves in the amusement of going without religion, may be thankful that they live in lands where the gospel they neglected has tamed the beastliness and ferocity of the men who, but for Christianity, might long ago have eaten their bodies like the South Sea Islanders, or cut off their heads like the monsters of the French Revolution. When the microscopic search of skepticism, which has hunted the heavens and sounded the seas to disprove the existence of a Creator, has turned its attention to human society, and has found a place on this planet ten miles square where a decent man can live in decency, comfort, and security, supporting and educating his children unspoiled and unpolluted; a place where age is reverenced, infancy respected, womanhood honored, and human life held in due regard—when the skeptic can find such a place on this globe where the gospel of Christ has not gone and cleared the way, and laid the foundations, and made decency and security possible, it will then be in order for the skeptical literati to move thither, and there ventilate their views. But so long as these men are dependent upon the religion which they discard for every privilege they enjoy, they may well hesitate a little before they seek to rob the Christian of his hope and humanity of its faith in that Savior who alone has given to man that hope of eternal life which makes life tolerable and society possible, and robs death of its terrors and the grave of its gloom."—Exchange.

THE PRESENT POPE AND THE BIBLE.

We have heard a great deal, of late, of the increasing liberality of the Catholic Church in regard to the reading of the Bible by the people generally. Yet in an article in the last Independent we see the statement that the reign of the present Pope has been marked by a new edict restraining all Catholics from reading the Bible in the vernacular. It has been impossible to keep them entirely from the Word of God, but that church is determined to keep them from any edition that has not been so translated and annotated as to suit the Pope. The Pope declares:

"Since experience has proved that, on account of man's boldness, more evil than good arises if the Sacred Books are allowed to all without check in the vulgar tongue; wherefore all versions in the vernacular, even though made by Catholics, are entirely forbidden, unless approved by the Holy See or issued under the care of Bishops, with notes taken from the holy Fathers of the church and from learned Catholic writers.

"Prohibited are all versions of the Holy Scriptures made by whatever non-Catholic writers, in whatever vulgar tongue, and those especially which are spread broadcast by Bible societies, again and again condemned by the Roman Pontiffs, since they entirely discard the most salutary laws of the church relative to Divine Books.

"These regulations are that he must ask permission not of his confessor, but of his Bishop; and this permission may be given 'only in urgent cases' and 'for single books.'"—Presbyterian.

A FATAL INVERSION.

The great trouble with the merely ethical teaching of the times is that it has lost the idea of a vital grip upon the grace of Christ. The purport of its dogma is, "Be good, and you will be like Christ, the superb moral Teacher and Exemplar!" That statement does not give the right order, or indicate the real genesis of virtue. It is not the logical or historical order. We might as well take a willow cutting, and prop it up somewhere, and cry unto it, "Leaf out, O slip, and by and by you will have some roots!" No horticulturist acts on that principle, of course. Roots must come before branchings. And so, instead of recommending, "Be good, and you will be like Christ," it is rather fitting to say, "Take hold of Christ vitally, and let him take hold of you, and then you will begin to branch and leaf out with moral verdure worthy of the garden of the Lord!"—Southern Presbyterian.

God has a definite life-plan for every human person, girding him, visibly or invisibly, for some exact thing, which it will be the true significance and glory of his life to have accomplished. . . . Away, then, O man, with thy feeble complaints and feverish despondencies. If God is really preparing us all to become that which is the very highest and best thing possible, there ought never to be a discouraged or uncheerful being in the world.—Horace Bushnell.

Fearing nothing, blame nothing, flee nothing, so much as thy vices and sins, which ought to be more displeasing to thee than any losses whatsoever of things earthly.—Thomas a Kempis.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. H. Armstrong, P. C.: "The Opelousas charge consists of two appointments. The congregation in the country never had a house of worship of their own, until about two months ago, when a beautiful church, 30x50 feet, was completed, painted inside and out, furnished with a new $100 Epworth organ, and valued at $1,500. This new church is only five miles from Opelousas. Since the completion of this new church, the Sunday-school has greatly increased in numbers, and the attendance upon preaching is much better. The church in town is holding its own."

Rev. R. M. Blocker, Jeanerette, La., Nov. 9, 1897: "Our people are at peace among themselves, and quite a number enjoy peace with God. We have been in suspense since the yellow-fever scare. The scare reached us, but the fever did not. We have an old-time class meeting each week, which we hope will do much good. We have greatly improved the parsonage by tearing away old rooms and adding comfortable ones. We now have a house (almost) good enough for the editor of the ADVOCATE to live in. The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is sweet to our taste every week."

Rev. J. R. Wilson, P. C., Central Academy, Miss., Oct. 5, 1897: "We closed a meeting, about two weeks ago, at Love Joy, on the Burgess mission, which resulted in 46 accessions on profession of faith to our church. Rev. Sam Q. Bass, of Corinth, did the preaching, and the Lord poured out his Spirit upon the church, and the people 'spake with other tongues.' Bro. Bass is an earnest, honest worker. He can get the most timid men and women to pray in public, and the converted do not hesitate to testify for Christ. If all evangelists are like Bro. Bass, I do not see why there should be any objection to them."

Rev. J. S. Sanders, Plaquemine Brulee: "We have just closed a very gracious meeting in our new church here at Plaquemine. We ran it two and a half weeks. Rev. W. J. Porter preached four times for us during the first week, and Bro. Geddie Salone preached the last Sunday in the afternoon. This was all the preaching help we had. We have a band of about twenty in the Plaquemine congregation that are fine helpers, and they did faithful work in the congregation and around the altar. Bro. Frank Hoffpauir led the singing, and the Lord was present from the first service to the last. I believe we had the greatest power I ever saw displayed among the people. Many services were perfect Pentecosts. Often fifteen or twenty shouting and praising God at the same time, and some were prostrated under the great power of God. One sister fell into a trance and lay so all night till eight o'clock next day; came through shouting and praising God. I have never witnessed greater conviction on the unconverted nor never witnessed a greater spirit of prayer on God's people. The altar was constantly filled with seekers, both for conversion and sanctification. A number of bright conversions; we know of twenty-five. Several backsliders reclaimed, and twenty or more sanctified. A number of new family altars erected, and a forward move generally in the work. We have a live congregation at Plaquemine; thirty-five who pray in public, and a number of them ready to hold prayer meeting or work anywhere. We are closing up our fourth year, and it has been our best. We shall hate to say good-by to this people."

Layman, Greensburg, La., Nov. 6, 1897: "One of the best meetings held at the Methodist Church at this place in many years was begun on Monday last and closed Thursday night. Rev. J. A. B. Jones, of Magnolia, Miss., did all the preaching, and the large crowds that flocked to hear him must have served as an inspiration to this grand old man of God, for at times it seemed to your correspondent that he passed entirely out of self, and his words came as messages direct from the throne in heaven. Christian people were greatly edified and strengthened, while many unconverted people were convicted of sin and sought for mercy and found it. There were thirteen accessions to the church and other good work accomplished that eternity alone will only be able to reveal in full. Bro. Jones' sermon, Thursday night, upon the life and character of Moses was, we think, among one of the best sermons we ever heard, and at the most opportune time, for he had a large audience of very intelligent people who were competent to judge and to appreciate a good thing, and there were present nearly two hundred students from the two colleges here; upon whose flexible minds the sermon was bound to make deep and lasting impressions. Mississippi has produced many grand and noble characters who have figured in both Church and State, and have written their names high upon the walls of fame; but, in our humble estimation, Bro. Jones is as grand an old commoner as any of them. The pastor, Rev. G. D. Anders, had the promise of other ministerial aid to be on hand Friday to carry the meeting on, as Bro. Jones was compelled to leave, but they failed him at the last moment, and he closed much to the regret of all, as the prospects for much more good were very bright. . . . Our people greatly desire to have you, Bro. Black, to visit the historical old town of Greensburg and take a peep at what we are doing here for the Master, especially in the way of Christian education. We have been slow, perhaps, in the past, but we are coming at last and are going to make ourselves heard."

Rev. Sam Q. Bass, L. P., Corinth, Miss., Nov. 10, 1897: "If you will allow me space in your columns, I will say a few words (humbly) in regard to the 'local-preacher-evangelist' of our church. I have been a local preacher twelve years, and I have seen and heard some strange things along this way. For the life of me, I can not see where or how it is strictly necessary for us all to belong to the Conference before our work can be credited by our brethren in the ministry. It is strange to me that a pastor can do what is called 'evangelistic work' among his brother pastors, and nothing is said about it. But if a local preacher helps a pastor, and has a great meeting, some brother pastor will jump on to him and say hard things to him and of him about it. It has not been a great while since a good brother said to me: 'I have no confidence in all your work this year as an evangelist. All those people you speak of would have been converted if you had not gone to those points.' I do not wish to be understood as throwing any mud at anyone, but I do think that this is very poor logic. I also think that this is very poor encouragement to the local preacher. Whatever controversy of opinions may exist concerning the term, 'evangelist,' it is nevertheless a 'Bible term' strictly; and it does seem to me that we ought not to jump on a thing that we find in the Bible. I am aware of the fact that some 'local-preacher-evangelists' do not do as they ought. I also know that there are some pastors who do not do as well as they might, but I would not do and say against a pastor what I have heard said of and against local preachers for my right arm. I sometimes feel like appealing to the General Conference to enact some law that will compel the presiding elder and pastor to recognize, utilize and give honor to the local preacher's work. As a rule, the local preacher has but little or no show. I know where there is a local preacher whose relatives and friends have asked him time and again to assist their pastor in a meeting. The pastor would be willing, but the presiding elder objects to 'local-preacher-evangelist.' Well, perhaps this is right. A good pastor said to me this year: 'Bro. Sam, I would ask you to assist me in some of my meetings. I have some points at which I believe you could do great good for me and the church. But my presiding elder don't want anyone but a pastor to work in his district.' The Lord willing, I will be at Conference with the brethren."

STUDYING ONE'S HEARERS.

Considering the person to be addressed is even more important than considering the main thought in an address. It is not enough for a preacher to have God's truth as the basis of his message, and to know that the subject of his message is intrinsically of the highest importance. He must know enough of his hearers to be sure that they are capable of comprehending that subject, and then he must see to it that his form of presenting that subject, and the illustrations he uses in order to make it clear, are adapted to their special understanding and needs. College boys and factory girls have different peculiar requirements which a preacher must recognize, if he would give them, severally, a word in due season. Young children and old sailors are not to be addressed in just the same way. As Paul suggests, some have need of milk, and some of strong meat. Yet not all preachers or teachers or talkers bear this truth in mind as they prepare themselves for an address. It is a great mistake to be thinking more of one's message than of those who need a message, when preparing for one's service as a preacher or as a teacher.—Sunday-School Times.

In a late lecture before the students of the Theological Seminary of Virginia, Dr. Dix, rector of Trinity Church, New York City, exposed a great weakness in the modern church when he affirmed, with great distinctness, that "the pulpit had lost the light, the sweetness and the power of the great doctrine of atonement." Associated with this loss is the loss of a corresponding doctrine—the "scriptural conception of sin." "Sin," thoroughly acknowledged, leads to a true appreciation of the atonement for sin, and in it Jesus Christ is revealed as the great burden-bearer for men—the propitiation for the sins of the world. The church must get back to this doctrine and the preaching thereof, or remain hopelessly weak.—Exchange.

The itinerant system of the Methodists does much to check the tendency, observable in some other denominations, to join the preacher instead of the church. There are hundreds, if not thousands, of people in this country who have united with some particular church society for the sake of the popular preacher who fills its pulpit. It may be better to join the preacher rather than not join at all, but to join the church is infinitely preferable.—St. Louis Advocate.

According to the Chicago Daily Record the profit of the St. Louis Brewing Company, owned and controlled by an English syndicate, was $712,872.40. This shows an increase of $153,592.80 over the preceding year. The brewer flourished right along through the hard times, while many a legitimate enterprise has gone to the wall.

No quality will ever get a man more friends than a sincere admiration of the qualities of others. It indicates generosity of nature, frankness, cordiality, and cheerful recognition of merits.—Dr. Johnson.

POSTPONEMENT.

If possible, please announce in this week's ADVOCATE that Meridian District Epworth League Conference has been postponed to Nov. 30, Dec. 1 and 2. A good attendance and profitable occasion is expected.

H. G. HAWKINS.

The raging lion that ravages the earth, seeking that which it may devour is a fearsome antagonist to fight. Ill-health is a stealthier but much more dangerous enemy. It is always easier and better to avoid it than to fight it. It comes in various guises. At first it is usually as a trifling indigestion or a slight attack of biliousness. Then follow loss of appetite, or headache, or nervousness and sleeplessness, or stupor. These are the advance heralds of consumption, malaria, nervous exhaustion and prostration, and a multitude of other ills.

There is an easy way to avoid, and a sure way to escape from, ill-health. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery gives edge to the appetite, invigorates the liver, makes the digestion perfect and the blood pure. It is the great appetite-sharpener, blood-maker, flesh-builder and nerve-tonic. It cures 98 per cent. of all cases of consumption. It does not make flabby flesh like cod-liver oil, but firm, healthy tissue, without corpulency. Honest dealers don't urge substitutes for a little extra profit.

"I cannot praise Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery too highly," writes Mrs. Mary A. Seay, of Andersonville, Buckingham Co., Va. "My friends gave me up as dying of consumption. I tried everything, but grew worse, until I became so weak I gave up all my housework. I tried four bottles of the 'Golden Medical Discovery' and have now no more need to take medicine of any kind. I recommend your medicines—the 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pleasant Pellets'—to my friends with a full belief in their efficiency."

When any member of the family is sick or hurt, look in Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, and there you will find the remedy. It used to cost $1.50; now it's FREE. 1008 pages. Over 300 illustrations. Send 21 one-cent stamps, to cover cost of mailing only, to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y., for paper-covered copy. Cloth binding, 10 cents extra.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE POSTPONED.

In view of the long and serious interruption of travel and of business due to the yellow fever quarantine regulations, I have consented to postpone the date of the session of the Louisiana Conference to Thursday, Jan. 6. I hereby cancel all my engagements to preach in Louisiana between now and the date first fixed for the Conference.

Groping blindly in the darkness,
And are lifted up and strengthened.

"Look on your best friends with the thought that they may one day become your worst enemies," was an ancient maxim of worldly prudence. It is for us to reverse the maxim, and rather say, "Look on your worst enemies with the thought that they may some day become your best friends."—Dean Stanley.

CHURCH ATTENDANCE.

Church attendance, though an indispensable means of grace and a plain Christian duty, is by a good many professing Christians "more honored in the breach than in the observance." A large number we fear can not say with the Psalmist, "A day in thy courts is better than a thousand." Faithfulness in church attendance is an excellent gauge of one's piety.

It is amazing how many and how trivial are the excuses people find for not attending divine service regularly. Church members let slight hindrances and ailments keep them from going up to the house of God that would not be allowed for a moment to interfere with business or pleasure. If the weather is unusually warm or cold, if the sky is a little threatening, if one has a convenient headache or backache, if one's shoes pinch or are a little old, if there is a feeling of weariness from the week's work, if a special collection is to be taken, or if some other member of the family does not wish to go, the service of the sanctuary is sure to be minus more than one worshiper who could be present if he would. A believer who suffers himself to be kept at home by such trifles, however respectable and honest he may be, is simply playing at religion. The habit of non-attendance grows fast, and is exceedingly hard to overcome.

Not a few act as if church going were an unimportant and profitless thing. They go occasionally in order to enjoy the music, to hear some new preacher, or, perhaps, to meet some of their friends; but as for communing with God, for receiving a spiritual uplift, they care little or nothing. Many church members seem to place a higher estimate upon physical rest and recreation than upon spiritual renewal and the favor of God. Even on God's holy day they prefer to entertain themselves by reading a novel, the latest magazine, or the Sunday newspaper, above seeking the blessing and guidance of the King of Heaven. The pleasure-seeker in his blindness fancies there is more profit in physical enjoyment, in taking a spin upon a bicycle, in a horse-back or car ride, than in remembering the Lord and in attending to the wants of the soul. Immeasurable is the folly of those who thus act. Their whole range of vision is darkened. Are we wiser than God? Are we mightier than he? Do we imagine we can forget him and neglect his ordinances with impunity? Is any Christian foolish enough to say that the favor of God is to be despised, that his blessings are worthless, and that his worship is a vain thing? None would dare say such a thing, but in action how many thousands give the lie to their honest convictions?

Many excuse themselves by saying: "I can worship God just as well at home." That is one of the devil's catches, and contains just enough truth to make it dangerous. It is true only in the case of the believer who finds it absolutely impossible on account of sickness, remoteness from the place of worship, or some other insurmountable hindrance, to go to the sanctuary. He who could go, but remains at home to take his ease, flattering himself that he can derive just as much benefit from reading a sermon by Talmage or somebody else, breaks a solemn vow and violates the plain teaching of Scripture. It is expressly enjoined upon us to "forsake not the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is." The whole tenor of Scripture is contrary to the supposition that God will bless with his presence and gracious influence those who are not in earnest enough to sacrifice convenience or pleasure in order to worship him in the assemblies of the saints in accordance with his own command. The man or woman who thinks to atone for neglect of church attendance by reading in private a sermon or a chapter or two in the Bible is almost sure ere long to cease to do even this much. There is a power and inspiring influence in the spoken word which is wanting in the printed sermon read at home. There is a mighty stimulus that comes from worship in the great congregation that is absent in private devotion. God assuredly pours out his spirit in greater fullness upon men united in public worship than he does upon those who purposely avoid the sanctuary and worship only in seclusion. This is the honor that he puts upon his Word and ordinances.

The non-church-going class, which in some sections is large and increasing, is a menace to society and to Christianity. General neglect of church attendance means the closing of the churches, the silencing of the pulpit and the decay of vital religion. Suppose every believer were to absent himself from service habitually as some do, what would become of the church? No organized work could be carried on and the conversion of sinners would become well nigh impossible. The believer who attends church is within reach of religious influences. Many a man's ruin dates from his ceasing to go to church. Neglect of this duty leads to spiritual deadness, backsliding, Sabbath-breaking and oftentimes to skepticism.

He is a Christian only in name who goes to church only when he feels like it, or when it suits his convenience. One of the evangelists tells us a whole volume about Jesus in a single sentence: "As his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day." No man can be a true follower of the Master who does not follow his example in attending public worship.

Encourage your pastor by waiting upon his ministry. The realization that you and some other members of his flock can be counted on to attend only during the most favorable weather or on some special occasions is enough to dampen his ardor. Don't be one of those who come out only to hear some prominent preacher or evangelist from abroad. A church made up of such members would soon go to pieces.

YELLOW FEVER.

During the week closing Tuesday morning the number of new cases in this city was 65 against 208 last week—a decrease of 143. A similar decline is reported from all infected points. The yellow fever of '97 will, therefore, soon be a thing of the past.

Our lineage is heathen. Missionary enterprise rescued us from paganism. Gratitude for our own emancipation, and love for our brethren, the heathen, of all countries, should move us with a mighty impulse to engage in missionary work.—R. Long.

It is a misfortune for any man to be soured on his church. He may be plain, he may be candid, but he ought to be loving toward his individual brethren and toward the church as a whole. The words of a sore-head, a malcontent, do not stop with the man that hears them, but they start a wave of disloyalty and discontent that may break on distant shores. Prudence and justice on the one hand and patience and charity on the other are much needed in all the churches of the land.—Holston Methodist.

The habit which some parents have fallen into of letting their children go home after Sunday school, instead of keeping them at church, can not be too much deprecated. A generation of non-church-goers is thus trained up, and numbers will be lost to the cause of God.

It is all in vain for parents to pray God to save their boys from the death work of the saloon, while they never lift a finger to exterminate it—while they even purchase their groceries where a saloon and grocery store are run together. God does not and will not hear such prayers, as is clearly seen in the thousands of drunkards who were reared by praying parents.—Religions Telescope.

By invitation of the pastor, Rev. J. B. Kent, we spent last Sabbath in Covington, preaching Sunday morning to a full house. At night we heard an earnest, well-arranged and practical discourse from Bro. Kent from the text, "Thy kingdom come." During our stay we enjoyed the hospitalities of Bro. and Sister Courtney. We are also indebted to Dr. J. L. Pope for appreciated courtesies. We were pleased to meet Bro. Henry C. Brown, of the Mississippi Conference, and to find him gradually recovering the use of his voice.

Now is a good time to work for the ADVOCATE. If all the preachers of the patronizing Conferences would work as diligently and persistently for their Conference organ as a few of them are working for other papers, the ADVOCATE would flourish like a green bay tree. The brethren will confer a very great favor on the publisher if they will remit the amount of their indebtedness before Conference instead of waiting to settle at Conference. We have more than one reason for making this request. We sincerely hope the brethren will give heed thereto.

The minister should cultivate absolute correctness of speech in the pulpit. It is true that many people will not be critical, but in these days of compulsory education the number is constantly increasing of those who will be watchful of the language in which the sermon is put. Even the uneducated mind is always ready to appreciate correct speaking, while the trained mind is disgusted with both speaker and utterance if the latter be filled with blunders. In these days an ungrammatical speaker is out of place in the pulpit, for the people are too well educated.—Pittsburg Advocate.

The preaching of the gospel is as great a power as ever it was, and the world is ready to receive it if properly presented. Prayer and labor are the chief elements of success. The labor required involves constant mental effort, as well as active pastoral work. The preacher who would do the best work must be a thinker. He must read, he must study, he must write. The least educated audience demands the hardest study, for it is a difficult task to reproduce profound thought in simple language. In a successful ministry there can be no leisure. More than ever it demands knowledge, devotion and energy; but for this very reason it is the grandest vocation that is possible to man.—Reformed Church Messenger.

The following extracts from a private letter from our friend, Rev. J. A. Bowen, will be read with interest. We regret exceedingly to hear of the misfortune of Bro. Morehead, but hope that he will suffer no serious inconvenience therefrom.

Rev. H. C. Morehead, our presiding elder, was accidentally thrown from his cart last Monday near Charleston, Miss., and came near being killed; but we are glad to tell you that he is some better, and we expect him to be able for work next week.

Bro. J. A. Braswell, P. C., Water Valley circuit, is quite sick at his parsonage, Taylor, Miss. While we hope he is not dangerously ill, yet he will not be able to finish up his work. He has slow fever.

All the preachers in this district are doing good work. Bro. W. T. Browning held a glorious revival at Main Street during October, which resulted in 21 accessions to the church. He was assisted by Rev. W. O. Saddler and the presiding elder and others. Wood Street is in better condition than I have seen the charge.

Miss Ruth Singleton, daughter of Rev. Hiram R. Singleton, will be married on Tuesday, the twenty-third, to Mr. Claude James, of Eddyville, Ky. The marriage will take place, at 5 o'clock P. M., at Rayne Memorial Church, the bride's father officiating. The bridal party will leave immediately for their Kentucky home. The dashing young Kentuckian is to be congratulated upon his good fortune in winning so rich a prize. We extend our heartiest congratulations in advance.

There is nothing to be said in defense of foot ball. It is essentially brutal, and is degrading in its influences. Nearly every game played results in physical injury to some of the players, and the list of those who have been killed during the season or have been injured for life is simply appalling. If the college authorities will not or can not control this mania for the brutal among our college men, then the strong arm of the law ought to interfere with it; and the sooner the law is put into vigorous operation the better for our colleges and the cause of morals generally.—New York Advocate.

The pastor and the faithful of the flock can do much to build up the congregation by house-to house visiting, by looking up strangers and non-attendants and giving them a cordial invitation to attend service, by treating them cordially when they come, and by making the services as attractive as possible. People like to go where they find a warm welcome, and where they can hear good music and soulful sermons. Let the preaching be pointed, pictorial, persuasive, and of moderate length, and it will draw. If people are not induced to come to church, there is little chance to reach them with the gospel.

Corinth, Miss., Nov. 13, 1897.

MR. EDITOR: I hasten to thank you with a full heart for your article just read in the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, of Nov. 11, on "Foot Ball Must Go." Keep striking it till it is stretched dead on the field. No Christian college should tolerate it, or any other violent game. You have made your points fit and clear. I wish that article could be embraced in definite Conference action.

Your brother,
W. T. J. SULLIVAN.

On the very day the above was written the press dispatches gave notice of a foot ball contest between two schools in Cincinnati, in which "one player was laid out unconscious for several minutes, another got a broken nose, while a great many came off with black eyes and bruised heads." Foot ball must go. It would be a great deal better for our colleges to abolish it now than to do so after there has been a fatality attending it.

The great majority of people will find the work of life near at hand. It may be, perhaps, to correct the faults in one's self, to sweeten the atmosphere of home, to bless the local church, to consecrate one's business, or to purify the political atmosphere. Trite and true as is this statement, it is a difficult one to apprehend. If we set ourselves to master it, the task is soon abandoned, and we are looking far away for some other and greater work to do. The most successful and useful minister is the man whose labors are confined strictly to the cultivation of the one vineyard committed to his care. The minister's best helper is that member of his church who finds duty nearest at hand, and can always be relied upon to sustain the home church in its regular constituted work.—Zion's Herald.

It will not do in this workaday world to live too much in either the past or the future. Neither musty memories nor vacuous visions can sustain the healthiest life of the soul. Yet there are minds of an over-reminiscent type that are always groaning under burdens long since decayed into dust and fighting over and over again battles on fields where peace was long ago declared. And so, on the other hand, there are spirits that seem to feed on the thin air of hopeless hopes, impractical dreamers who stand steadfastly gazing up not really into heaven, but into hazy, mazy clouds where they see no Lord and whence they gain no inspiration. But duty lies neither in the past nor in the future. Opportunity is always conjugated in the present tense. Now is the day of salvation; here is the arena for effort; at hand are all decisions of destinies.—New York Observer.

The illustrious John Randolph once said: "When I try to make myself an infidel, I fancy I feel the hand of my mother on my head and her voice sounding in my ear as she taught me to say, 'Our Father, who art in heaven.'" No child ever started out in life a skeptic. The child believes everything told it until it has been deceived by parents and persons who fail to keep their promises. Infidelity begins in the family where the first lie is told, where the first promise is broken, and where deception is practiced by old heads.

The "Christian Uplook" has this to say of detractors and backbiters: "He who tries, directly or indirectly, to injure another in business or reputation is always, eventually, the loser. The injured one, if he maintains his integrity, will come out of the furnace without the smell of fire on him, while the other will bear the taint of the traducer. Some men are, morally, coarse-grained and have a conscience seared with selfishness. They lack that nice sense of moral propriety which leads to a practical recognition of the golden rule: Doing unto others as they would like others do unto them. They will perpetrate a petty, mean act without a qualm of conscience or a solitary disturbing emotion. Having done an injury and being aware of it, they never betray the possession of the spirit of true manliness by a frank acknowledgment of the same."

***

The service rendered to a congregation by the pastor who uses his time and influence to induce people to read good literature can not be measured. Those who do not read their own denominational journals are by their lack of knowledge and of connectional sympathy placed to a degree beyond the reach of the pulpit. The well-informed members of a congregation appreciate the message of the preacher, while the non-reading ones may utterly fail to apprehend its drift and scope. Next to the actual preaching of the gospel comes the influence and ministry of the religious press, which advocates, supplements, and extends all other evangelical agencies. The pastor who neglects to make the religious paper his helper and sub-pastor is blind to his own interest as well as to the larger interests of the people whom he is set to serve.—Exchange.

It is a lamentable fact that there are in our own church as well as in other denominations great numbers of people who have never been brought to realize that it is a high privilege to contribute toward the support of the gospel. They can not be induced to pledge a specific amount for pastoral support or for the benevolent enterprises of the church, and practically add nothing to the financial strength of the congregations with which they are connected. They can secure money for many things which they would be better off without, or which are, at least, not absolutely necessary to them, but they plead inability to obtain any for the maintenance of the church. They have reached a stage of religious paralysis where it seems possible to satisfy the demands of conscience by occasionally patronizing a church entertainment or supper. Those who in laying their financial plans make provision for everything but the claims of the church, are robbing God and impoverishing their own souls.—Central Advocate.

After all it is not from the possession of extraordinary qualities of intellect or genius that our leading men are able to fill their positions or accomplish their work. If it were, the ordinary man might well despair. Men of remarkable endowments are generally worsted in the battle of life, like wild eagles in a cage, beating their heads and their wings against the bars which limit the freedom of their flight. The qualities which make men useful in this every-day world are good judgment, adaptability, sincerity, kindliness, energy, patience; those common virtues which every person has or may develop. No one who has good health and fair mental ability need stand on the highway of life complaining of lack of opportunity to do something. If the call which comes from the world without to climb to the mountain top finds no echo in his heart, it is from his own contemptible littleness. It is meet and right that mother nature should leave him whining by the wayside, while she gives her attention to some more worthy children.—Methodist Herald.

TO THE PREACHERS OF THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

DEAR BRETHREN: Please fill blanks for Sunday-school statistics sent you by your Board, and return them to me by Dec. 1, if possible. If you can not send them before the above date, please bring them to Conference with you. We desire to give due credit to every pastoral charge for all Sunday-school work done. Then we will plan to help the cause more for the future. There is much more interest manifest in this work than has ever been reported; hence these new methods adopted at our last Conference session. Accept our thanks in advance for your prompt assistance. I am, Yours in love,

ENTERPRISE IN PUBLISHING.

A noteworthy example of progress in up-to-date publishing houses is the success achieved by the David C. Cook Publishing Co., of Chicago. Their "Young People's Weekly" has forged to the front within the past year until it now has a circulation of 225,000 copies. It is the largest, best and cheapest young people's paper in the world, is profusely and beautifully illustrated with half tone engravings and printed in colors. The religious publications of the David C. Cook Publishing Co. have, for more than twenty years, been accepted as standard by all evangelical denominations, and have found their way to all parts of the globe where the English language is used.

IUKA NORMAL INSTITUTE.

Iuka (Miss.) Normal Institute is open for the reception of students from all non infected points. All quarantine regulations will doubtless be removed by the fifteenth. We have good classes in Classical and Scientific courses, also in all the usual English branches, Art, Elocution, Physical Culture, Music, Stenography, and Bookkeeping.

Pupils may enter on the sixteenth instant, find classes to suit their advancement, and be in school nine months of this school year, which closes July 29, '98, or seven months to June 4, 1898.

Those who are so sure as to the origin whence man sprung would do well to recall what Sir William Dawson has said: "I know nothing about the origin of man except what I am told in the Scriptures—that God created him. I do not know anything more than that, and I do not know anybody who does." And a greater than Sir William, Lord Kelvin, the greatest living scientist now that Helmholtz has passed away, declared in his address before the British Association: "There is nothing in science that reaches the origin of anything at all." But the callow birdlings will chirp when the parent birds are still.—Christian Work.

Robert Louis Stevenson wrote as follows of South Sea missions: "I had conceived a great prejudice against missions in the South Seas, but I had no sooner come here than that prejudice was at first reduced and at last annihilated. Those who deblatterate against missions have only one thing to do—come and see them on the spot."

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTICE

Preachers and others desiring to procure during the Conference session special books, will please notify me in due time, so that I may surely have what they want. The undergraduates will please let me know what books of the Course of Study they will want; by so doing they will save expense.

It would be a great favor if brethren who owe me any amount for books will remit the same at once, or be ready to settle on the first day of the Conference session at the farthest. Like every other preacher, I desire to be able to report collections in full. G. W. BACHMAN.

CAPT. A. M. MOORE.

Capt. A. M. Moore died at his home in Scooba, Miss., on the seventh instant, at 11 A. M. He was buried at Binnsville on Monday. A large number of persons attended the burial services, attesting thereby their respect for our departed brother. The Methodist Church has lost one of its best and most influential members at that place; and, indeed, the whole community feel keenly his loss. He died peacefully and joyfully. A more extended notice will probably appear later.

After you get angry and stop your paper, just poke your finger into water, pull it out, and look at the hole. Then you will know how sadly you are missed. A man who thinks a paper can not thrive without his support, ought to go off and stay awhile. When he comes back, half his friends will not know he has gone, and the other half will not care, while the world at large kept no account of his movements. You will find things you can not indorse in every paper. The "Book of books" is often very plain, and hits some hard raps, but if you were to get mad and burn your Bible, the hundreds of presses would still go on printing it. So when you stop your paper, and call the editor names, the paper will still be published, and what is more, you will read it on the sly.—Cycle, Charleston, S. C.

BABY GONE TO SCHOOL.

The baby has gone to school; ah, me!
What will mother do,
With never a call to button or pin,
Or tie a little shoe?
How can she [illegible] busy all day
With the little "hindering thing" away?

Another basket to fill with lunch,
Another "good-bye" to say,
And the mother stands at the door to see
Her baby march away,
And turns with a sigh that is half relief
And half a something akin to grief.

She thinks of a possible future morn
When the children, one by one,
Will go from their home out into the world,
To battle with life alone,
And not even the baby be left to cheer
The desolate home of that future year.

She picks up garments here and there,
Thrown down in careless haste,
And tries to think how it would seem
If nothing were displaced.
If the house were always still as this,
How could she bear the loneliness?

HOME EDUCATION.

There are few parents who do not have knowledge that would be helpful to the boy or girl some time. Many parents have not the time to give a stated hour daily to this work, though many who think this is so in their case could plan for this time. Yet, where impossible, or very inconvenient, much can be done while at other duties.

Not only will the child be receiving instruction from the best, because the most interested and loved, instructor, but he can be made more thorough in what is often learned very superficially. Or, when the parents have had advantages outside the public schools, they may give lessons that will save many a dollar paid out to teachers.

Are you incredulous? Notice little children, and begin with those old enough for the chart class of the public schools, and at the age of ten much may have been done.

If the parent understands music and playing, much might be gained by beginning very early in the child's life to ground him in the foundation principles of music. If an artist, then, with the probably inherited talents, the child could have the training that in after days, if higher instruction could be given, would place him immediately beyond his compeers.

If in the education of the parent has been included the higher branches of the college, academy or high school, a course of studies can be prepared for even little children, including algebra, history, language, literature, etc.

If you are doubtful of the feasibility of this plan, let me advise a trial. Do you understand botany? Have the children gather some leaves, and from them explain the structure of veins, teach the names of the forms and some of the names of trees and plants represented. If thoroughly done, you will not get through with leaves the first Summer, but the little ones will in that time be more thorough than the big brother or sister who takes a common high school course in the same branch, but who takes it all in the same length of time. The blossom could come the next season, and this would finish the course perhaps, for roots and stems and family distinctions would work in themselves.

Have you studied Latin? Begin it with the wee ones, and if you suit your lessons to your surroundings to a great extent, you will surely think you have most intelligent children.

Maybe you have received your education in a country school, and never got beyond the three "R's." Don't stop because of that. Read all you can of the best literature, and meanwhile drill the children on what you know. If you begin in time, you are still infinitely ahead of them, and in helping them you will help yourself learn, and if in the end they outstrip you in book learning, you will be ahead in experience and riper knowledge.

Through it all, and through everything, I would like to impress on every parent's mind the need of good reading; the best is none to good. Good literature in the home is a most important factor in the education of children. In reading, I wish all could realize that while poetry should be first supplied to the child, fiction, good novels, should come last; after history, biography, travels, etc. I say good novels, for the second grade down to the lowest have no place or room in a decent library or home.

So far I have only referred to the mental education. As to moral training, see to it that your children do not go wrong through lack of proper teaching. Take your stand steadfastly on the side of right, and let your example be all on this side. Where sin and crime creep in stealthily, be prepared for it, and explain the danger carefully.

Children should be taught to work, and should come up to manhood and womanhood with knowledge of some sort of work that will enable them, if necessary, to earn their living. The father, we will presume, is a carpenter, also saws his own wood, cares for his own tools, and for his horse and cow. You know there is a right and wrong way to do everything, and though this father's son may be intended for a lawyer, I do not believe the father is doing his duty unless he trains his son in using a hammer and saw, and insists on his doing all other duties in the best way. The same way with the daughter. Although the mother may intend this daughter to follow in the footsteps of the "new woman," or to marry rich, and so escape drudgery, it is only justice to her that she be taught housework.

Children are given us to train. Let us take care that we do our duty in no half-hearted, one-sided way. The opportunity once lost can never be regained. As we labor so shall we also reap.—Household.

AYER'S ARGUMENT.

If there is any reason why you should use any sarsaparilla, there is every reason why you should use Ayer's. When you take sarsaparilla you take it to cure disease; you want to be cured as quickly as possible and as cheaply as possible. That is why you should use Ayer's: it cures quickly and cheaply—and it cures to stay. Many people write us: "I would sooner have one bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla than three of any other kind." A druggist writes that "one bottle of Ayer's will give more benefit than six of any other kind." If one bottle of Ayer's will do the work of three it must have the strength of three at the cost of one. There's the point in a nutshell. It pays every way to use

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

"THE YOUNG MAN IN BUSINESS."

It will amaze not a few to learn through Mr. Bok's careful investigation that the demand for capable young men in New York, for example, is far in excess of the supply. It is difficult to find men to fill positions of great importance. Business men are having this experience right along. The disposition is to dispute this statement at once and with emphasis, but this, at least, must have been noticed by all who have been in the habit of noticing, that of a hundred applicants for a place or for work, probably no more than five are quite up to it. They will be wanting in skill or in character. According to Mr. Bok, the average young man in business to-day may be likened to an automatic machine. He does the same thing through the required hours, day after day, and then goes home. Then he wonders why he is not advanced or his salary increased, though he is worth no more this year than last, and his place could be supplied in five minutes. If he serves ten years, he does neither more nor better work the tenth than he did the first or second. What reason in advancing his salary, other things remaining equal, or why should he be placed in higher position? If he was paid the first year as much as he is worth in the business this year, how can he expect higher pay? Is he not to be paid according to the worth of his services rather than according to the years of service? Concentration is one of the business virtues; undivided attention to business in business hours; no idling, no romancing, no visiting, no careless work. These are not what the contract calls for. The employee has no more right to depart from the contract on his side than the employer on his. What outcry would be heard were the employer to deduct from salary or wages according to the time wasted or according to the defective work! Thoroughness is one of the conditions of success. Everything should be done as well as possible. It is no art to do something after a fashion unless it is a good fashion. A little omission here, and a little neglect there, a slip in comparatively minor matters is bad. It is no special art to simply fill the position for which one is paid; the art is in doing more than was bargained for, in making more of his position than has usually been made of it in the interest of his employer. Such a man does not need to ask advancement; his work advances him. This is not the sort of a man who is at the end of the year nothing more than at the beginning. It is not the sort of man who is careful to arrive at his post not one second before the time and equally careful to leave it the moment the clock strikes. A young man must be all alive in business hours; alive not only to the present duties and methods, but as far as may be excepting present duties and studying better methods. The principles laid down are not less applicable to young women, and there is not one who is now employed or is proposing to seek work to whom these suggestions may not be commended.—Exchange.

GREAT POPULAR QUESTIONS ARE DECIDED AT THE FIRESIDE.

I have seen the sea lashed into a fury and tossed into a spray, and its grandeur moves the soul of the dullest man. But I remember that it is not the billows, but the calm level of the sea from which all heights and depths are measured. When the storm has passed, and the hour of calm settles on the ocean; when sunlight bathes its smooth surface, then the astronomer and surveyor takes the level from which he measures all terrestrial heights and depths.

Gentlemen of the convention, your present temper may not mark the healthful pulse of our people. When our enthusiasm has passed, when the emotions of this hour have subsided, we shall find the calm level of public opinion below the storm from which the thoughts of a mighty people are to be measured, and by which their final action will be determined. Not here in this brilliant circle, where fifteen thousand men and women are assembled, is the destiny of the Republic to be decreed; nor here, where I see the enthusiastic faces of seven hundred and fifty-six delegates, waiting to cast their votes into the urn and determine the choice of their party; but by four million Republican firesides, where the thoughtful fathers, with wives and children about them, with calm thoughts inspired by love of home and love of country, with the history of the past, the hopes of the future, and the knowledge of the great men who have adorned and blessed our nation in days gone by—there God prepares the verdict that shall determine the wisdom of our work to-night.—Jas. A. Garfield.

POOR GIRLS.

The poorest girls in the world are those not taught to work. There are thousands of them. Rich parents have petted them, and they have been taught to despise labor and to depend upon others for a living, and are perfectly helpless. The most forlorn women belong to this class. Every daughter should learn to earn her own living, the rich as well as the poor. The wheel of fortune rolls swiftly around; the rich are likely to become poor, and the poor rich. Skill added to labor is no disadvantage to the rich, and is indispensable to the poor. Well-to-do girls should learn to work. No reform is more imperative than this.—London Gentlewoman.

THE GREAT MOTIVE.

Love does not calculate. Love gives. Perhaps Mary never paused to estimate the value of her vase of spikenard. It was Judas who did the figuring. Love gives the costliest things at hand, and gives without measuring the cost. When we are really on fire with love, it is very likely that our arithmetic will be for the time forgotten.—The Lookout.

SOUL INSURANCE.

A little boy on his father's knee said:

"Papa, is your soul insured?"

"Why do you ask, my son?"

"Because I heard Uncle Frank say that you had your house insured and your life insured, but he did not think you thought of your soul, and he was afraid you would lose it. Can't you get it insured right away?"

It was all true, and the father was led to seek the divine guarantee of his soul's well-being.—Exchange.

A great many young people's societies are suffering for the want of something practical to do. Meeting together and talking, time after time, is only a part of training. We learn not only that we may serve, but we learn best by serving. We chance to know a society in Georgia composed of twenty-nine young people who pay one-half the salary of a missionary in a foreign field, and they are made happy by doing so. There is nothing that will so develop interest as the consciousness of accomplishing some good result. All the time talking about the work and not doing it will react hurtfully.

The payment of the pastor's salary is a duty. It is not a gift that the church gives him, but the discharge of an honest obligation for service done. Let no church member ever feel that what he contributes to his pastor's salary is a gift to charity.

Hygiene.

BRAIN STIMULANT.

The best possible thing for a man to do when he feels too weak to carry anything through is to go to bed and sleep as long as he can. This is the only recuperation of brain power, the only actual recuperation of brain force; because during sleep the brain is in a state of rest, in a condition to receive and appropriate particles of nutriment from the blood, which take the place of those which have been consumed by previous labor, since the very act of thinking burns up solid particles, as every turn of the wheel or screw of the steamer is the result of consumption by fire of the fuel in the furnace. The supply of consumed brain substance can only be had from the nutritive particles in the blood, which were obtained from the food eaten previously; and the brain is so constituted that it can best receive and appropriate to itself those nutritive particles during the state of rest, of quiet, and stillness of sleep. Mere stimulants supply nothing in themselves; they goad the brain, force it to a greater consumption of its substance, until it is so exhausted that there is not power enough left to receive a supply.—Medical Journal.

A HOT BATH WILL BRING SLEEP.

Suppose a person to be tired out by overwork of any kind, to feel nervous, irritable and worn, to be absolutely certain that bed means only tossing for hours in an unhappy wakefulness. We all know this condition of the body and mind. Turn on the hot water in the bath-room and soak in the hot bath until the drowsy feeling comes, which will be within three minutes; turn on cold water until it becomes tepid; then rub yourself briskly with a coarse Turkish towel until the body is perfectly dry, and then go to bed. You will sleep the sleep of the just, and rise in the morning wondering how you could have felt so badly the night before. The bath has saved many a one from a sleepless night, if not from a severe headache the next day.—Dr. Cyrus Edson.

STAGNATION VS. SENSATION.

With two offensive words we head this article. We do not know which word is the worst It is the national habit in literature and religion to call that sensationalism which we ourselves can not do. If an author writes a book that will not sell, he is apt to charge the books of the day which do succeed as being sensational There are a great many men who, in the world and the church, are dead failures; who spend their time in letting the public know that they are not sensationalists. This fact is, that they never made any stir while living, nor will they in dying, save as they rob the undertaker of his fees, they not leaving enough to pay their dismission expenses.

We hate sensationalism in the pulpit, so far as that word means the preaching of everything but the gospel; but the simple fact is, that whenever and wherever faith, and repentance, and heaven, and hell are proclaimed with emphasis, there will be a sensation The people in our great cities are hungry for the old gospel of Christ. If our young men in the ministry went large audiences, let them quit philosophizing, and hair-splitting, and bota-sizing, and without gloves take hold of men's sins and troubles, and there will be no lack of hearers. Stagnation is worse than sensationalism. We have always noticed that just in proportion as a man can not get along himself, he is fearful of some one else making an excitement. Last week a mud-turtle down by the brook opened its shell, and discoursed to a horse that was coming down to drink. The mud-turtle said to the horse: "Just as I get sound asleep, you are sure to come past and wake me up We always used to have a good, quiet time down here in the swamp till you got in the habit of thumping along this way. I am conservative, and like to keep in my shell. I have been pastor of thirteen other mud-turtles, and we always had peace till you came, and next week, at our semi-annual meeting of mud-turtles, we shall either have you voted a nuisance, or will talk it over in private, eight or ten of us, which will probably be the more prudent way" Then the mud-turtle's shell went shut with a snap, at which the horse kicked up his heels as he turned to go up to the barn to be harnessed to a load of corn that was ready for the market Let us all wake up and go to work. There are in the private membership of our churches, and in the ministry, a great many men who are dead, but have never had the common decency to get buried. With the harvest white and "lodging" for lack of a sickle, instead of lying under the trees criticising the sweating reapers who are at work, let us throw off our own coats and go out to see how good a swathe we can cut, and how much grain we can garner.—Christian Herald.

For Over Fifty Years

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup has been used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for Diarrhœa Twenty-five cents a bottle.

OLD FRIENDS.

It takes a great many new friends to make one old friend. Friendship is not like asparagus—a plant that shoots up in a night and is then ready for the knife. It is rather like the hickory or the oak, of gradual growth and solid fibre. As it is the wood which has been "seasoned" by long exposure to wind and weather that emits the hottest fire, so the friendships that have been seasoned by many years of sun and storm produce the warmest glow. An eccentric old man in London hung out an auctioneer's red flag over his front door. He said that he did it to "weed out the false friends who would make off if they thought that he had come to bankruptcy." A rather sharp stroke of humor was that device, and there are quite too many who are ready to halt their carriages before the door of a fine mansion, but who have very few bye-streets and back-lanes on their visiting lists. Prosperity breeds friends; adversity tests them.

A genuine, unselfish friendship sweetens and mellows by age. A true, honest face becomes dearer the longer it is looked at, just as a loving pair become more beautiful to each other when they reach the milestone of their "golden wedding." One of the best antidotes to pessimism is the cordial grasp of the hand by a long-tried friend. It renews our faith in human nature. In spite of Adam's fall, and its disastrous consequences, this old world has many a foretaste of heaven in it when invalights its pure, sweet flame on the altar of the heart.

One of the best tests of friendship is the willingness to point out our mistakes, and to deal faithfully with our sins. Blessed be the friend who makes us to see and to feel our faults! What a sharp contrast the inspired Book draws between the treacherous "kisses of an enemy," and the "wounds" of a brave, true friend who applies the lancet to the diseased spot in our character! That is the way that our adorable and loving Savior deals with his redeemed ones. He saith, "As many as I love I rebuke and chasten," and he never loves us more than when he is applying the pruning-knife to the vine in order to let the rich clusters ripen. My own experience has been that the very best way to ensure the respect and affection of those whose friendship is worth the most, is to offer frank and loving criticism when conscience prompts it. I once wrote such a frank criticism to a very distinguished clergyman in regard to what seemed to me to be a painful defect in one of his sermons. Instead of awakening his resentment it drew forth a cordial response, and kindled a friendship that grew warmer until the said day when I followed his remains to their burial in Westminster Abbey. We ministers make a grievous mistake when we shrink from a plain, tender, faithful dealing with the faults and sins of those who are committed to our care. "Son of man, I have made thee a watchman; give them warning from Me." That is the divine injunction to all ministers to be faithful to the souls of their flock. There will be a great many blessed renewals of friendship in heaven, and none will be sweeter than that of pastors and the souls whom they have led to Jesus. They will be our "joy and crown."—Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler.

To Whom it May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mul-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of sores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. Black,

RAY—Angus C. Ray, son of the late Rev. Neal M. Ray, was born in Robinson county, N. C., Aug. 26, 1867 He served the Postal Telegraph Company as lineman at Pearlington, Miss., where he was married to Miss Mettie Geiger, daughter of Judge M. Geiger, Sept. 5, 1894 Two children live to bless their happy union.

Mr. Ray was a worthy and useful young man, highly esteemed by all who knew him. He was called to Scranton, Miss., by the Postal Telegraph Company, where he was taken down with yellow fever, and the grim messenger, Death, claimed him as his victim, Oct. 13, 1897.

He leaves a wife and two children to mourn his loss, and to whom we extend our heartfelt sympathies and bid them look to "God, who is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble," who will provide for them if they put their trust in him. W. A. Brown.

NORTON—Bro. D A. Norton was born of Methodist parents in Edgefield district, S. C., Sept. 23, 1813. When about twelve years of age he moved to Alebama with his parents. November 30, 1834, he was united in marriage to Miss Lucinde Johnson. About this time he joined the M. E Church, and began a long, active and useful career in the service of his Lord, occupying almost every official position as a layman in the church. In 1866 he removed with his family to Louisiana, and settled near Arcadia, to continue that fertility and successful life until disabled by old age and many infirmities He was a good man and true. In baptism and benediction the hand of Bishop Asbury had rested upon his head in infancy, and on Oct. 18, 1897, we laid him to rest in the cemetery at Arcadia beside the wife who had some years before preceded him to rest and reward. He leaves several daughters and numerous friends, to whom we offer the consolations of the promises of God, looking for the time when we shall rejoice in that meeting by and by W. F. WATTS—Death is a sad visitor, even when he lingers at the threshold for days or weeks before the icy fingers are laid upon some loved one; but especially when the visit is so unexpected are hearts doubly saddened.

The home of Dr. T J. Watts was overshadowed with gloom on the 5th of October, when Miss Connie, the daughter of Thos and Maggie Watts, passed from their vision into the realms of eternal glory after an illness of only a few hours. Miss Corrie's mother died when she was only two and a half years old. She was brought to the home of her uncle, Dr. T. J. Watts, in Newton, Miss., where she was brought up to womanhood. About twelve years ago she united with the M. E. Church, South, under the ministry of Bro. Peebles.

To say here was a consistent life is an assertion that will not be gainsaid by any who knew her. She was the "pet" of the home in which she had been reared. She was for eight years the secretary of our Sunday-school. Afterwards she was elected treasurer, which position she held till death.

Our community was greatly shocked when it was learned that Miss Corrie was dangerously ill. Her popularity as a quiet, unostentatious, religious girl was attested by expressions from the lips of all who knew her life. Wednesday afternoon, followed by a large concourse of sorrowing friends and loved ones, we laid that which was mortal to rest in full hope of a glorious resurrection.

D P. Bradford, Pastor.

Newton, Miss.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Methodist Sunday-school, Newton, Miss., on the death of Miss Corrie Watts, who departed this life Tuesday, Oct. 5, 1897:

Whereas, It has pleased the Supreme Ruler to remove from our midst our beloved sister and co-worker in the Sunday-school, Corrie Watts, and that in so doing we are deprived of a valued friend and useful member of the Sunday-school; yet we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well; And, whereas, By her death we are admonished to be also ready; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we mourn her loss and remember her noble life and many virtues, and that we should imitate her in piety and consecration to God.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the family in this dark hour, and tender them our condolence in their sad bereavement.

To Grocers.

We have direct proof that peddlers of washing-powders say that the stuff they're selling is "made in the same factory" as Pearline—and that buying from them will save going to, or ordering from, the grocery store. Do you want people "saved" that. You have these same washing-powders in stock. Possibly you are giving them out, whenever you can, in place of Pearline. You are trying to push them into notice; they are trying to crowd you out. You think you are "making more money on them." But will it pay you, in the end?

Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.

The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take-up, convenient foot rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

The Head is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

Needle Bar is round, with adjustable bearing polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack slip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

Improved Automatic Bobbin Winder which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

Self Threading—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

The Needle is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

Self-Threading Shuttle—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell, without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

Loose Pulley for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

Parts Subject to Wear are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

The Yale faculty has taken a new step and instituted compulsory gymnasium work for the freshman class. The "freshies" are to give two hours a week to developing their muscles, but all men who are training for athletic teams are to be exempted.

The patrons of the New York Public Library need have no fear of any disease germs lingering amongst the books. Each book, as it is returned, is to be subjected to a fumigating process, which is guaranteed to clean out the most obstreperous bacillus.

A few days ago United States Judge Jackson, of West Virginia, decided that gangers and storekeepers in the employ of the internal revenue service were under the protection of the civil service law, and could not be removed from their positions except for causes other than political.

It is said that the Bible house at Fourth avenue and Astor place, in New York City, has been put upon the market. The property, which is worth $750,000, was formerly a source of revenue to the society from its rentals. The finances of the society are in such a condition that it has been deemed necessary to make an appeal for aid to the churches of New York and Brooklyn. A statement has been made, according to the Commercial Advertiser, that the expenditures of the society in the last two years have exceeded the income by $156,050.

READING ALOUD.

A lecturer on reading recently made some remarkable statements, such as:

"Thus to read aloud agreeably at sight requires great intellectual development on the part of the reader. One must see, hear, and enunciate at the same time, and not only enter into the thought of the writer, but be able to project that thought—a thing that very few of us can do."

This is most true. The horrible travesty of reading, often heard in the pulpit, results from the fact that the lessons and hymns have not been carefully studied before reading, and the reader has not the intellectual development sufficient to read aloud agreeably at sight.

It was said years ago by a great teacher that he had heard a number of ministers of different denominations read, and there was but one among them that he would not have put at the foot of any class which he had in his school. His statement was challenged, and he invited an editor to accompany him, and the editor said afterward that the statement was incorrect, because it implied that a teacher of his grade would admit such a reader to his school at all!—New York Advocate.

About two years ago the Rev. Mr. Surf, of Blue Springs, Nebr., lost his hair after fever, and became nearly bald. He finally resolved to use Ayer's Hair Vigor, and now has as fine a head of hair as could be desired. This is certainly a fact worth remembering.

THANKSGIVING.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

If they had cause for thankfulness
Who crossed the bitter sea
To build within the wilderness
The altar of the free;
Who paused amid their bread of tears
In exile and in pain,
To praise the God who hushed their fears
And gave them sun and rain,
And seed that pierced the rocky soil,
And harvest ere the snow—
If they were glad, 'mid grief and toil,
Our fathers, long ago,
Oh, what rich chord of nobler song
Should we this hour uplift,
On whom so swift love's favors throng,
Who reap so large a gift!
Father, from out thine open hand
Through all our borders wide,
Drop bounties on our smiling land,
No prayer of want denied.
Receive our thanks that seek thee, Lord,
Our words are weak to say
Praise God, from whom all blessings flow,
Our heartfelt psalm this day.

A STATEMENT OF FACTS.

The following from the pen of W. L. Arnold, who acted as attorney for H. C. Morrison in his appeal to the Louisville Conference, is copied from the Pentecostal Herald by request of a member of one of our patronizing Conferences:

It was at this point that one of our visiting connectional officers undertook to act as mediator in bringing about an adjustment of the difficulty. As a peace measure, and in order to prevent a reopening of the case, he drew up the following paper, and urged its acceptance:

"I did not believe I was violating law when I held the Dublin meeting. I did not intend contumacious conduct by continuing to preach after my suspension. I have never indulged defiance to church law. If I feared to its membership and ministry I will remain loyal to the church and obedient to its discipline while I continue in its connection."

This paper was hurriedly drawn and was faulty. If Bro. Morrison had been asked to write out his own statement, it would never have been put in this way.

When this paper was presented to us we readily signified our willingness to accept the first three sentences. Bro. Morrison did not at the time, and does not now, believe that he violated the law of the church by preaching at the camp meeting at Dublin. He has never intended contumacious conduct nor defiance of church law, and has not hesitated to say so at any time. But on account of the equivocal character of the remaining sentence, he refused to sign the paper. The fact that another misunderstanding might arise in regard to the meaning of the words, "I will remain loyal to the church and obedient to its discipline," was clearly pointed out, and on account of this he refused to accept it. There was no possible chance of misunderstanding his position. If the language in question was to be understood in its plain, natural sense, it was not objectionable. As a consistent member of the church, he could not expect to do otherwise than be subject to its discipline and abide by the laws, when authoritatively interpreted. But if it was to be understood as conceding the unauthorized and unwarranted construction insisted upon by his opponents, he would not accept it. He would not sign the paper except with the understanding that he did not concede this point.

When it was presented to the other side it was rejected by them also. Bishop Wilson insisted on the insertion of the promise not to go into any pastoral charge without the consent of the pastor. This, of course, he would not consent to.

We refused to consent to this, not because of any disposition to interfere with the rightful authority of the pastor. Bro. Morrison has been a pastor himself, knows the duties and responsibilities of the office, and there is no danger whatever of his doing violence to any prerogative that is given this official by the law of the church. We refused to consent to it (1) because the law of the church does not restrict a local preacher in his ministrations; neither does it give the pastor control over services held outside of his own churches. Such a promise upon our part would have gone beyond the law. No man has a right to demand of us what the law does not require, and it would certainly have been unwise to promise a thing not enjoined by the Discipline. (2) Such a precedent once established, it would be easily possible to break up and destroy every camp meeting that has been established by the holiness people. These camp meetings are established at railroad centers and at other places of convenient access, with little or no reference to the local church. The opposition claim that the whole territory of our country is divided into charges; that each pastor has exclusive control of all services held by our preachers within the bounds of his charge (just what the General Conference refused to enact); and under such a construction all that would be necessary to break up any camp meeting would be to appoint a preacher to the nearest charge who is opposed to the work. This is the supreme point of the whole controversy. Of course, we did not propose to put a weapon in the hands of the opposition with which they could so easily club our people to death.

Thus the matter stood on Saturday evening. Monday morning our connectional officer came to us, saying: "I see daylight breaking. Those fellows are willing to settle this morning on your terms." He again presented his paper. Again we hesitated; again the possible misconstruction was pointed out, and our unwillingness so to be understood was explicitly declared. We pointed out the fact that the paper still leaves it an open question as to what construction should be placed upon the law. Said he: "Never mind that. If you will sign this paper, they will accept it, and it will settle this case." It was not intimated to us that we were expected to concede anything. Had it been, the paper would never have been signed. Finally our signatures were attached, with the express understanding that we did not accept the construction of the opposite side. When the paper was taken to the brethren of the other side, they accepted it without question. Thus the matter was removed from before us, and the Conference adjourned in peace. Morrison did not escape by a mere technicality. The action of the Dublin brethren and of the Lexington Quarterly Conference was not justified; neither did Morrison accept the prosecution's construction of the law.

REV. E. A. ROSS AND THE ROSEBURG CONFERENCE.

A pastor in one of our patronizing Conferences sends us the following clipping from a recent issue of the Pacific Advocate, with the request that we publish it:

I have just read in the Pentecostal Herald, of Oct. 6, the unholy attack of Bro. Ross on our recent Conference at Roseburg. As it is so unjust to the church and misleading to those who were not present, I ask your permission to point out some of the errors it contains.

Speaking of Dr. Hoss' address, Bro. Ross says: "He labored earnestly to convince us that the Nashville Christian Advocate was a clear cut holiness paper, and, according to Dr. Hoss, the unpardonable sin is to make a specialty of preaching holiness and refusing to subscribe for the Nashville Advocate. I find in the homes of our people political, secret order, and Advent books and papers; yet not one word was spoken against these. But the sin of all sins is in subscribing to the Pentecostal Herald."

It amazes me that Bro. Ross could pen such a statement. The most untruthful man in Oregon ought to blush to write it. The fact is, Dr. Hoss did not utter one word against holiness; nor did he speak disrespectfully of anyone because of his views respecting holiness. He did not utter one word against the Pentecostal Herald; nor did he even mention the paper, either directly or indirectly.

"The local preacher who never does any preaching," says Bro. Ross, "was highly spoken of by the Doctor, while the evangelist came in for a special share of his affections."

Here is another misstatement. Dr. Hoss made no such allusion to such local preachers, either expressed or implied. He did express his belief that the modern evangelist was often a sower of discord in the church and a reviler of his brethren. Bro. Ross' letter substantiates the Doctor's statement, and renders his argument unanswerable.

Referring to a meeting he held last Winter in Dillard, Bro. Ross continues: "I organized the first South Methodist class ever in the place, and it is the best one to-day in the entire Conference. The presiding elder attached it to the Roseburg work. When the pastor came down to fill his appointment, he put up at the sister's house who invited me. She said, 'Bro. ——, we would like to have you preach holiness to us.' He replied: 'I do not believe in the second blessing. I got sanctified when I was converted.' The rest of the evening he spent in giddy, light, frivolous chat about the girls, and telling pussy cat stories, and wound up by saying it made him sick to hear people profess sanctification."

The pastor referred to is one of our most worthy young men, and just so long as he could swallow, without mastication, everything Bro. Ross said, and gave unqualified endorsement to all of his idiosyncrasies, sensational methods, and far-fetched theories, his praises were sung loud and long by Bro. Ross wherever he went. But the moment he showed doubt in Bro. Ross' sincerity, and disapprobation of his inordinate zeal for public notoriety, that moment his name is cast out as evil. And what is true in this case is true of every other pastor in the Columbia Conference.

The pastor referred to may be guilty of too much levity at times, "courting a smile when he should woo a soul;" but if he can surpass Bro. Ross in this line of conduct, he is an adept indeed. Bro. Ross does not stop with "pussy cat stories." It would be well for the cause of purity if he did. But when he relates, in the social circle and in the pulpit of the holy sanctuary, incidents so coarse and indelicate as to cause the refined and virtuous wives and daughters of our homes to blush with a sense of mortification, it is time for all good people to stop and consider. Not long since a lady of Roseburg remarked that if Bro. Ross dared relate in her parlors the indelicate incidents rehearsed by him in the pulpit, she would show him the door.

Hear Bro. Ross again. He says: "I heard Dr. Hoss preach that night. He made a desperate attempt to demolish the holiness cause; said it was unscriptural and against reason." Now, I heard every word of that sermon, and I can prove it by one hundred witnesses that he never uttered one word against the "holiness cause." He did say that the "second-blessing" theory of holiness was anti-scriptural and against reason. But that is a different statement altogether. He did not pronounce Bro. Ross' "shibboleth," but he did preach the doctrine of salvation from all sin and perfect love in this life His sermon was on the "New Birth." It was logical, scriptural, and intensely edifying to the large congregation who sat spellbound under his ministry. "I was away on Sunday," Bro. Ross continues, "and did not hear the Bishop's sermon, but my wife did, and she says he fought holiness even more bitterly than the Nashville editor. . . . When those who sit in Moses' seat make a hobby of fighting holiness, and boast that they have taken but one degree in religion, while they strive to take thirty-three in Free Masonry, it is time for the Lord's people to stir themselves. Some of the brethren who have not seen a soul saved under their ministry for years waxed fat under this onslaught against the doctrine of holiness."

This is a most slanderous statement, and without foundation in fact. I was astonished beyond degree when I read it, for since he wrote it, and before I read it, Bro. Ross told me, in the presence of others, that he had never uttered a word against the Bishops or the church in his life.

I heard many speak of that sermon in terms of the highest praise, and among the number some who profess the experience of sanctification, and that according to the "second blessing," too. They themselves expressed to me great surprise at Bro. Ross' statement.

But the most unprincipled paragraph in the whole letter is this: "I do not believe a soul would be saved in a thousand years under such preaching as Dr. Hoss and Bishop Hargrove gave us at Rosebnrg." What a gross insult is here offered to the scores of pure and devout men and women to whom the preaching of these two men at Rosebnrg was a spiritual feast. Such abusive language is unbecoming the most ill-bred and uncouth man or woman in Oregon. Bro. Ross owes to Dr. Hoss and Bishop Hargrove, who never did him any harm, nor spoke an evil word of him, an apology full and unqualified; yea, he owes it to the preachers and laymen who were present at Roseburg, and, above all, he owes it to himself. He can not afford to go into eternity and before God's bar of justice with such slanderous statements unatoned.

"Some of the truly loyal," Bro. Ross continues, "informed us that the Bishop had attended to our case, and that we had better hunt a job in some secular business."

I deny this statement with emphasis, and call on Bro. Ross for the proof. We had no preacher or delegate at the Rosebnrg Conference so ignorant as to think that local preachers have any case to settle at an Annual Conference, unless it be an appeal from the Quarterly Conference, which was not true with Bro. Ross. The Bishop had nothing to do with attending to his "case" at Conference. He could not have trombled Bro. Ross officially if he wanted to do so, and he never uttered a word against him at any official meeting of the Conference, for I was present at everyone of them.

The exhibitions of anger and malice in the words and conduct of Bro. Ross at Rosebnrg towards Dr. Hoss and Bishop Hargrove, and such misleading statements as his letter contains, published, too, in a paper professing to be the exponent of "perfect love," though stabbing the church at every pore—such a course can but separate more widely those who are of the same household of faith, and who hope to gain the same heaven when we die.

THE PROBLEM OF HUMAN LIFE.

Life exists in perpetual activity. We belong to a vast system of things, no part of which is ever still. We may live and die in the immediate neighborhood of our birth; yet in all the years of life we are great travelers. Our earth, in its diurnal revolutions, gives us twenty-four thousands of miles of travel every day. Then, running in her orbit around the sun, the earth moves at the rate of eighteen and a half miles per second. Add these two motions together, and it will be seen that we are going through space at the lively speed of something more than two millions of miles per day; not in a straight line, but in curves like the long-drawn spirals of a thread as it unwinds rapidly from a broach. Then the sun himself is moving in an orbit so vast that the curvature has not yet been taken. He is supposed to move at the rate of sixteen miles per second. Thus a new motion is given to our earth, and as it speeds around the sun in its annual orbit, while it is carried by that great luminary along the path of an unknown orbit, could its route through space become visible, it would be like another spiral cord long drawn out. This added motion gives us a speed of more than three millions of miles per day. Who can tell where these complicated movements are tending, and whether there is anywhere a fixed center? Thus, while we may keep our bearings in reference to subluunary things, it is evident that in the great realm of space we are forever on the move, and at a rate of speed compared to which the flight of a cannon ball is tame. The place of our birth has been left far behind on the track of time. In more senses than one we are fast livers. For this very reason we have been forever on a stretch. Even in our most sluggish moods we are the victims of endless change. We may stagnate in thought and the mind may rot in idleness, but even here there is change. Sometimes we seem to reach an eddy where each day is a repetition of the day preceding, but it is only seeming. Whether we act as "a hero in the strife," or behave like "dumb, driven cattle," each day leaves its impress upon us. We have added one more to the final account, and have "one less of life to live." We can not throw off the responsibility of life. We may take refuge in the deep well of selfishness, and vainly wish to draw the well in after us, so as to shut out every cry of the world's pain. We may disregard every appeal for help, or we may live broadly in the world's great brotherhood of helpfulness; but in either case the flight of time for every day is registered upon us. From birth to death there is never a halt. The cradle and the coffin, the initial and the final sign-boards in every life, are connected by a stretch of time which, viewed from its finish, is always short.

It was ever thus the numberless generations have followed in "the long train of ages." History gives but a meager account of some of the more fortunate races of men. In some instances we catch but a glimpse of vast tribes which, like numberless dark specks on a distant landscape, never come plainly into view. And no doubt extensive nations, vast empires and whole races of men have disappeared from the earth and left not a trace behind. What has become of all these myriads of hosts? And what will become of all the greater multitudes yet to live on the earth before "God hath made the plie complete?" Are they all to be reduced to the simple elements of nature, and go on feeding other worlds yet to be? Or shall our faith catch glimpses of a nobler destiny, and realize that the waste of earth is the making of heaven? In such a view creation seems worth of God. Reason is satisfied with such a solution of the problem of earthly existence. It is wise "to trust the larger hope."

SOUTH WARREN CIRCUIT.

Our fourth and last quarterly meeting for South Warren circuit, Vicksburg district, Mississippi Conference, was held at Wesley Chapel, on Saturday and Sunday last, Nov. 13 and 14. Dr. J. M. Weems, who runs the district, was on hand fully equipped and harnessed for the emergencies of a fourth Quarterly Conference. Having been shut up in Vicksburg for two months by rigid quarantine regulations, he came to us fresh and vigorous, overflowing with good things out of the treasures of the gospel. His sermons on Saturday and Sunday were scholarly and full of the Holy Ghost. The Doctor being polite, kind and genial always, wins the hearts and affections of both preachers and people. We regret very much that this year ends his labors on the district for the present at least.

In many respects, this has been a very pleasant year to this writer, and to some extent a profitable one. We have had some revival influence on the charge. During the year there has been six or seven accessions to our membership, and at some points the church has been quickened into new life and activity. On South Warren we have a noble, whole souled people who know how to value the labors of their pastor.

Our Children's Day was a fine success at all points and in all respects, and our esteemed friend, Rev. A. D. Miller, of Hermanville, may look well to his laurels when final reports are made. Our results were $29.50.

Our finances are not up to date, attributable in a large measure to quarantine regulations and five-cent cotton. Our Board of Stewards are true and good men, and will do the best they can under existing circumstances. My recording scribe is a man of parts, faithful and loyal to the authorities and institutions of the church, and a liberal contributor to all the collections. Being my nearest neighbor, he and his excellent family never forget that the parsonage is situated near their homes.

W. W. HURST.

Vicksburg, Nov. 20.

Resolved, That the officials of South Warren charge, with this congregation, tender to Dr. J. M. Weems, presiding elder of the Vicksburg district, Mississippi Conference, their highest appreciation of his faithful, painstaking labors among us for the past four years, and for the very faithful and impartial manner in which he has administered the laws and usages of the M. E. Church, South, and for the ability which has marked his administration both in and out of the pulpit.

Resolved, That this resolution be spread on the journal of this Quarterly Conference, and a copy be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

THE KIND THEY WANT.

"BIG HUNGRY CIRCUIT."

Good morning, "Brother Elder," I hope you are well.
And can spare me a moment, my business to tell.
I'm chief of the stewards of "Big Hungry" charge,
And am sent in behalf of the circuit at large.

The Bishop and cabinet soon will convene,
The works to consider and preachers to send.
Then do, "Brother Elder," please bear this in mind:
The one we are hunting we expect you to find.

He must sing like an angel, and preach to please all;
The man that can't do this the Lord never called;
And, besides, as a pastor, untiring must be,
And through sunshine and tempest his flock go to see.

The "fads" and the fashions, that people pursue,
He must not, in preaching, warn them to eschew;
And of sins most degrading, that blacken the soul,
His hearers elite won't submit to be told.

He must talk of the trees that perennial grow
On the banks of that river where pure waters flow;
Of harps and of crowns, for the righteous must tell;
But never a word must he say about hell.

He must preach about angels and golden-paved streets;
Of mansions of splendor, where kindred shall meet;
Of sparkling fountains and pastures most green,
Though they but by few of his hearers be seen.

He must not get tired as other men do,
And rest a short season, his strength to renew;
But labor and suffer by night and by day,
Lest, while he is resting, the sheep go astray.

He must always be cheerful, though his garments be thin;
Though the barrel be empty, and no oil in the bin;
And remember Elijah, the "Tishbite" of old,
Who was fed by the ravens, and not by the fold.

The man we are wanting, and hope you shall find,
Must be of the class of the angelic kind,
Who lives, loves and labors through all the rough way,
And needs no encouragement, praises or pay.

So now, "Brother Elder," I pray you be aware!
And search for the preacher we are wanting, with care;
And if in your Conference you fail him to find,
"Transfer" one for us, of above mentioned kind.

THE LOVING GIFT.

Of all the gifts that found their way
Within the treasury that day,
One only did the Lord commend.
Thus shall it be till time shall end.
The loving gift from slender store
Attracts his kindly notice more
Than larger offerings coldly given.
Then, humble heart, look up to heaven
And bring thy gift; though small it be,
The Master's welcome waits for thee.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL HOME DEPARTMENT.

No department of the church work of to-day is eliciting more interest than the Sunday-school. Many ways and means are being devised for its greatest usefulness. The day has passed for considering the Sunday-school as for the children only. Being an institution for Bible study and religious teaching, it has come to be recognized as well calculated to benefit all, of every age and condition, who will participate in its work. How to enlist the indifferent, and those whose conditions of life prevent regular attendance upon the Sunday-school services, is, and has long been, a question of no little importance with those who have this great cause at heart. But the solution to this problem is evidently to be found in the "Home Department Method." This is a well-regulated plan for studying the Bible at home, and reporting the results thereof by such as are unable to go to the school, because of distance, health, or the nature of their occupation.

"Somewhat after the University Extension idea or the Chautauqua Reading Circle idea, it is a plan for carrying the Sunday school to the people where the people can not come to the Sunday-school."

It was adopted as a regular branch of Sunday-school work by the International Committee at the triennial convention in 1893. Its methods have been thoroughly systematized in the United States and Canada, and, after several years of trial, it is now widely popular, and its work in many places highly satisfactory. For the operating of the Home Department plan suitable literature is provided, such as leaflets and pamphlets explanatory of the work, collection envelopes, record books, etc. Any person, old or young, becomes a member of this Home Class, and will be regarded and treated in all respects as a member of the school by accepting the lesson helps and cards, and agreeing to give at least one-half hour's study each week to the regular lesson, and so reporting on a card given for the purpose, and which will be called for by a "visitor" at the end of the quarter.

Some of the benefits of this work are enumerated by Dr. Duncan from reports as follows: "It comforts and helps invalids, recovers backsliders, develops family religion, develops Christian workers, increases attendance upon the main school and other church services, and has proved to be a great evangelistic power."

These considerations certainly commend the Home Department as worthy of trial in all our schools. The plan is simple, inexpensive, and, where properly worked, is effective in building up the Sunday school cause and extending the Redeemer's kingdom. It is hoped that our pastors and superintendents will give this matter due attention and fair trial.

I will cheerfully give information concerning this work to all in the North Mississippi Conference desiring it. Others can procure the same by addressing Barbee & Smith, Agents, Nashville, Tenn.

Will those pastors in our Conference who have been working this plan this year please report to me at once the results thereof?

SOME QUESTIONS.

I am a young man just entering the work of the Christian ministry; graduated from Millsaps College last June, and after the death of Rev. J. V. Penn I was asked to take charge of this work till Conference. I did so with much fear and trembling. Being a young man, I feel very much interested in the welfare of the young men of our country. From my limited observation, and from hearing some of the strongest men in the work of the Young Men's Christian Association lecture, it appears to me that the churches of our Lord, especially in the cities, do not reach the young men as they should.

I wish to ask two or three questions, which I hope some one will answer as promptly as possible: What per cent. of the young men of the United States belong to some branch of the Christian Church? If the church, as a rule, fails to get hold of the young men, what is the cause for the failure at this point?

I believe the church will never prospor as it should prosper while it suffers the youth of our land to be led captive by the devil and his host.

JAPAN ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

The sixth session of our Japan Annual Conference met at Matsuyama, Sept. 29, at 7:30 P. M. The reason for meeting at night instead of in the morning was to enable the examining committees, if possible, to finish their work before the session began.

Matsuyama is a city of abont 35,000 inhabitants, pleasantly situated about three miles from the seashore, and connected with the port by rail. It was there that Bro. H. G. Hawkins, of the Mississippi Conference, labored while in Japan. We have had work there since 1889. The Matsuyama work opened with a boom, then followed the reaction, and for a long time it was, as the boy said of himself, "Sometimes up and sometimes down, but mostly down." Now, however, through the faithful efforts of those who labored there amid much discouragement, as well as by the diligent labor of those who have found a readier response to their efforts, the work is probably in a better condition than it has ever been before. With a nice new church and parsonage, and with the prospect that in a month or two the foreign missionary also will have a very pleasant semi-foreign residence, the outward attractions of Matsuyama are by no means inconsiderable. In addition to that, Bros. Meyers and Hori seem to have favor with the people, and the work of the Lord is prospering in their hands.

We were well entertained; Bro. Meyers entertaining the missionaries at his house, while Bro. Hori provided for the Japanese brethren at the parsonage. To American ideas that may seem a very difficult feat; but a Japanese house is well suited to the accommodation of a large number of guests, for every room may be a bed-room at night and a sitting-room in the day. At Bro. Meyers' we used beds as far as they would go, and then took to the floor. At Bro. Hori's I suppose there was no thought of beds. It is true, we sometimes felt the need of more privacy, but what we lacked in privacy we made up in sociability.

The reports for the year were, on the whole, quite encouraging, I thought. There were received on profession of faith, 83; that is 18 more than last year. There were received by certificate 62, which is 5 more than last year. Total number of members, 559—a net gain of 17. The net gain is not quite so large as last year, because "other removals" were 31 in excess of last year, there having been in many places this year quite a thorough revision of the rolls. The number of Sunday-schools is 64, which is 12 less than last year. The number of Sunday-school scholars is 1,554—only 11 less than last year. The decrease in Sunday-schools is due to the fact that 17 chapels had to be given up on account of lack of funds, and in most of these chapels Sunday-school had been held. The amount paid for support of native pastors was 685 yen; last year it was 518 yen. (One yen is 50 cents.) There was a small increase in total Conference collections and a small decrease in current expenses. There has been a gain in native pastors' support of about 22 per cent.; in membership 3 per cent.; in accession on profession of faith 28 per cent.; in total accessions 19 per cent.

If we consider our work in relation to the evangelization of the whole country, of course our advance seems very small; but I think there is much encouragement in the fact that the reports of last year were better than those of the year before, and that this year's reports are better than last year's.

Now Conference is over, and re-adjustment is being made for another year's work. Now is the time for the "sobetsukai" (farewell meeting) and the "kangeikai" (the meeting of wisdom). To give you an idea of what an institution these meetings are, let me cite the case of Bro. Tanaka, who was moved from Kobe station and put on Osaka circuit, with Bro. Ashida and myself. That involved four combined farewell and welcome meetings, which was, by the way quite an economical arrangement. First, Bro. T. must interrupt his packing, etc., to come up Thursday night to the West Osaka meeting, which was a farewell meeting to Bros. Usaki and Towson, and a welcome meeting to Bros. Tanaka, Ashida, and myself. Then he must go back to attend the same kind of a meeting at Kobe on Friday night. Then he must move to Osaka Saturday, and attend the same combined sociable at East Osaka, Saturday night; and on Monday night he is due at Sakai on the same business. Truly, one might think that, if that is an economical arrangement, it would be somewhat burdensome to attend an ill-arranged series. Some might think these extensive sociables too extravagant, but the expense is easily met by every one paying 2½ cents, and that provides for everybody tea and cake. To a Japanese it seems very lonesome to have a social meeting of any kind without tea and cake. To some it may seem that these meetings are utterly useless; and, personally, I must confess that I could easily dispense with them. But a great deal can be accomplished at these sociables if well planned and worked.

The outlook for the coming year is good. Everywhere the spirit of faith and hope is strong, and I trust that, under God's blessing, the coming year will be the best we have ever had. Yours in Christ,

B. W. Waters.

THE VALUE OF DIGNITY.

It is the opinion of some observers that the American sense of humor, combined with the confirmed American disposition to take a good-natured view of everything, has tended to a lack of seriousness and of dignity in our attitude toward public affairs. It is held that our public speakers, especially at banquets and other festive occasions, treat us to chaff and jokes, with little or no effort to appeal to our intellectual tastes. They say that many of our newspapers are no longer our instructors, but avowedly our entertainers, giving us only such brief and furtive instalments of genuine instruction as are necessary to keep up the pretense of guiding public opinion. These, and other like manifestations, are pointed to as signs of a change in national character; but we do not think that they reflect accurately the true feeling of the American people. Certainly in the recent political crisis the press and our public speakers showed a capacity for serious and able discussion.

Anyone who moves about much among his fellows knows that there is a widespread weariness of the flippant after-dinner oratory of the period. Whenever, at a public banquet, some speaker makes a thoughtful, serious, earnest speech, the response of the audience is invariably so quick and hearty as to give evidence of a keen appetite for wholesome intellectual diet of this kind. So, too, in the press and in public life. The real instructor and leader of public opinion was never surer of a following than he is to-day. The whole country is, in fact, straining its eyes eagerly over the political field in search of true statesmen, real leaders, who take a dignified view of their place in politics—that is, an elevated and worthy one.

We believe firmly that our public men have sometimes underestimated the public taste in this matter. Surely the American statesmen who are held in highest veneration were men of dignity, having that elevation of character, deportment, and speech which was worthy their office. Washington was the ideal of dignity. Lincoln was a most impressively dignified man in his public acts and utterances. What nobler dignity can be found than exists in his inaugural addresses and in the Gettysburg oration? Long before he delivered those immortal productions, in his speeches in the famous Illinois campaign with Douglas—notably in that at Springfield, in which he defined his attitude toward the slavery question—this same high dignity was revealed.—Century Magazine.

DIABOLICAL MISSIONARY WORK.

At a meeting held in the interests of the saloon business, an officer of the Liquor League of Ohio made the following address: "It will appear from these facts, gentlemen, that the success of our business is dependent largely upon the creation of appetite for drink. Men who drink liquor, like others, will die; and if there is no new appetite created, our counters will be empty, as will be our coffers. Our children will go hungry, or we must change our business to that of some other more remunerative. The open field for the creation of this appetite is among the boys. After men have grown and their habits are formed, they rarely change in this regard. It will be needful, therefore, that missionary work be done among the boys; and I make the suggestion, gentlemen, that nickels expended in treats to the boys now will return in dollars to your tills after the appetite has been formed. Above all things, create appetite!"

Mephistopheles himself could not plot in colder blood against the welfare of souls than words such as these disclose. It is hard to believe that even a saloon man would dare thus to speak. From such missionaries may the good Lord deliver us!—The Lutheran.

OUR GREATEST NEED—A LIVING CHRIST.

It was the door of eternity which the angel opened when he rolled back the stone from the sepulcher, through which the spiritual life of Christ, with all that it accomplishes, came for the illumination of the church and the conquest of the world. What the weak and wandering soul of man most of all needs is the assurance of a living Savior, who imparts everlasting life to his followers. And as we stand before that open tomb, astounded at the earthquake, at the appearance of the angels, at the figures of the Roman soldiers lying there as dead men, at the amazed women, we see that the meaning of all these circumstances is the risen Lord, whom the grave could not hold. A living Christ in our hearts is the fountain of a new life for us every day. The risen Christ is a living Christ. For this ever blessed be his name!—T. S. Doolittle.

HOW TO TEST AMUSEMENTS.

First. Do they rest and strengthen, or weary and weaken the body?

Second. Do they strengthen and rest, or weary and weaken the brain?

Third. Do they make resistance to temptations easier or harder?

Fourth. Do they increase or lessen love for virtue, purity, temperance and justice?

Fifth. Do they give inspiration and quicken enthusiasm, or stupefy the intellectual and harden the moral nature?

Sixth. Do they increase or diminish respect for manhood and womanhood?

Seventh. Do they draw one nearer to or remove one farther from the Christ?—Christian Commonwealth.

A little boy came out from dinner one day, saying, "Papa, I had a plum, and a half of it was bad!" The boy spoke as a pessimist, an optimist would have said, "I had a plum, and half of it was good." Here lies the difference between happiness and misery. When we fix our thoughts on the bad half of the plum, we are wretched. When we forget the bad half, we are serene and comfortable.

All life proves in experience to be the little lad's plum. Both success and happiness lie in fixing the mind and heart on the good half. One may cherish such an ambition, such a faith in God and the future as will turn all that we term drudgery into a delightful joy.—Sunday Magazine.

Probably the most serious obstacle which confronts all reform movements is the proverbial indiscretion of reformers. No sooner does the average reformer decide that something needs reforming than off he goes to the task without surveying the field or planning the battle, trusting to his zeal to make up for what may be lacking in judgment. The result is mainly noise and dust and the overturning of things that should not be overturned in a vain effort to get at something that ought to be overturned. It is not strange that the world has lost patience with the average reformer.—Bible Reader.

HIGHEST GAIN IN SOREST LOSS.

Very many fall into the error of supposing that if every wish could be gratified, they would be perfectly happy. They do not seem to understand how full of mischief and mistake are their own desires, and how little they comprehend what will be really best for them. God could hardly take a surer way of compassing our ruin than by gratifying without exception all our passing fancies. We are by no means fit to take charge of our own destinies, though in the height of our pride we often think we are competent to adjust the seasons and manage the universe. The surest proof of wisdom on our part is in discerning our lack of wisdom and becoming willing to commit the keeping and guiding of ourselves to God. Not from the fulfillment of our natural wishes comes happiness, but from the abandonment of those wishes and the putting in their stead one all-absorbing desire for the carrying out of the glorious will of God for us of which each moment as it comes makes perfect manifestation.—Zion's Herald.

When the Psalmist asks, "Who can understand his errors?" the question implies the answer, No one. We do not stop to make the distinction between errors and sins, but when we realize how ignorant we are of the correct standard of right, how ignorant we are of things themselves, and how ignorant we are of ourselves, we do not wonder that the Psalmist should ask, "Who can understand his errors?" But when we consider our errors in their relation to others, much less can we understand the far-reaching effect of our errors. The influences going out from our little lapses, errors and mistakes, which, possibly, we may scarcely note, sometimes affect those about us and load them into sore distress and grievous wrong. The errors of the parent often deepen into sins in their children. Were we gifted with an enlarged vision so that we could look down along the long line of effect which sometimes flows from our needless mistakes and common errors of life and see the world of folly or misery or pain, we would know more fully the meaning of the Psalmist's question, "Who can understand his errors?" and more often would the accompanying prayer of the Psalmist, "Cleanse thou me from secret faults," be on our lips.—Methodist Herald.

A poor old widow, living in the Scottish Highlands, was called upon one day by a gentleman who had heard that she was in need. The old lady complained of her condition, and remarked that her son was in Australia, and doing well. "But does he do nothing to help you?" inquired the visitor. "No, nothing," was the reply. "He writes me regularly once a month, but only sends me a little picture with his letter." The gentleman asked to see one of the pictures that she had received, and found each of them to be a draft for £10. That is the condition of many of God's children. He has given us many "exceeding great and precious promises," which we either are ignorant of or fail to appreciate. Many of them seem to be pretty pictures of an ideal peace and rest, but are not appropriated as practical helps in daily life. And not one of these promises is more neglected than the assurance of salvation. An open Bible places them within reach of all, and we may appropriate the blessing which such a knowledge brings.—D. L. Moody.

Many a weak and struggling church would be made strong and independent if persons of means and influence would settle the question of their church home, not upon the ground of personal advantage in the shape of fine music, superior preaching and social standing, but upon the basis of pure usefulness. Every Christian ought to put to himself the inquiry, "Where am I most needed?" and after answering it at the mercy seat in the light of providential indications, he should follow the dictate of conscience and grace, and heartily and fully work for the success of the enterprise with which the Spirit of God has identified him. As the result, he would find his own spiritual good and that of his family, as well as the cause of Christ, greatly advanced by his wise decision and worthy action.—Presbyterian.

Cursed be the social lies that warp us from the living truth.—Tennyson.

SPEAK TO STRANGERS.

We saw the following significant fact in a League meeting not long ago: A prominent member of the chapter sat in a devotional service with a throng of friends about him. Four strangers came in and sat on chairs beside him. When the service was over the prominent member rushed up to speak to persons he had seen each day, and perhaps each hour during the week, and left the strangers to take care of themselves. Yet some of our people say that when strangers intimate that our churches are not cordial, the fault lies with the strangers. Not always, as in this case which came under our own observation. Look out for the strangers, and let the friends look out for themselves—at least, until the strangers are seen and welcomed. One man in Washington City has brought into the church, by his own instrumentality, twenty-five persons. He himself was first attracted by being spoken to by a member of the church at the church door.—Baltimore Advocate.

We have all heard homilies on "Sins of Omission." Did it ever occur to you that there are omissions which are virtues? This is especially true of sermons. They are efficient in what they omit, as well as in what they contain. Some one suggests the following important omissions: "They should certainly omit anything and everything but the gospel, excepting only as other things are introduced to illustrate or enforce the gospel. They should just as certainly omit all offensive personalities; and there are very few personalities which are not at least remotely offensive. They should likewise omit all that is irrelevant. . . . They should omit egotism, which is one of the grossest and most objectionable forms of pulpit personality. But they should not omit faithful exposition, fair presentation, and full application of the truth. They should never omit elements of consolation and words of exhortation. And, above all, they must not omit the honor and unction of the Holy Ghost."—Pacific.

If anything is clearly taught in the Bible, it is that prayer in some way enables a man to receive larger things from God than he could receive without it. Knowing so little as we do of the nature of God's plans, it is probably unwise either to affirm or to deny that they may be changed by human petition. What we may with confidence affirm is that God desires and purposes to do the best possible thing for every man; and if a man, by his undevout and prayerless life, shuts himself out of fellowship with God, then God can not bestow upon him the full blessing. That is the mystery of human freedom. If a man stretches out the hand of faith to a loving God, more willing to give than we are to receive, the hand is filled with the things most needed for the man's largest development. That is the mystery of prayer.—The Standard.

Humility was a virtue unknown in the ancient world, and even to-day it is not widely cultivated. And yet it was one of the most striking characteristics in the life of the Lord Jesus. "He humbled Himself."

Yesterday is yours no longer; to-morrow may be never yours; but to-day is yours, the living present yours, and in the living present you may stretch forward to the things that are before.—F. W. Farrar.

When one inquired of the refiner of silver how he knew when the dross was sufficiently separated, he received answer: "When I can see my own image perfectly reflected in it."—St. Thomas Aquinas.

JOHN WESLEY.

There must be many a field in Great Britain thicksown with stones which have been thrown at John Wesley and his proto-Methodists. Traveling from four to five thousand miles every year, and preaching from two to four times nearly every day to audiences of thousands; often disturbed by mobs of men more savage than wild beasts; keeping an eye on all his preachers, and receiving their reports; starting a publishing house, and carrying it on, that his people might have wholesome intellectual fare within their scanty means; taking no money but just what would suffice for his bare expenses; stopping for no storms or floods, fires or frosts; reading and studying on horseback, and answering innumerable assaults through the press, from bishops, archbishops, and ecclesiastical foes of all ranks; compiling grammars in Greek, and Hebrew, and French and Latin for his students; editing, writing, translating or abridging not less than two hundred different publications, eager only in it all to save men and to extend the kingdom of God. Half a million souls were to be numbered as his adherents at the close of that fifty years, and outside of this, a vast multitude that no man can number, morally and spiritually benefitted by his movement. He is, I think, the finest illustration of consecrated, unselfish, whole-hearted devotion, for fifty solid years of the old world's dark history, that the church of Christ has ever offered to the vision of men, perhaps to that of angels.—S. E. Merrick.

TRUE PREACHING.

The late Dr. A. J Gordon often told of a Sabbath on which he went in the morning to hear a distinguished preacher who was celebrated for his biblical knowledge. He came home delighted with the clear and brilliant expositions of the truth that he heard, but chilled with the icy coldness of the message. It was true, clear scriptural truth, but as cold as an iceberg

He went in the afternoon to hear another preacher distinguished for his fervor, and he came back delighted with the earnestness and unction of the preacher, but it was a fire of shavings, and there was not truth enough in it to make it lasting.

He went again at night, and heard a third preacher, and he came away not only instructed, but thrilled; because this sermon had been not only an exposition of scriptural truth, but it had also been alive with the power of God and full of the fire of the Holy Ghost. It was not a fire of shavings, but of substantial fuel, and it left not only a memory of truth, but a glow of warmth that filled his heart with joy and love. This is the power of the Holy Ghost speaking the truth in love; the Bible ablaze with holy fire; the Word of God dissolved in unction and love, until it can be observed in every fibre of our being and become the nutriment of our life.—Watchword.

CONCEIT OF SOME EDITORS.

Great is the conceit of some folks—some editors of secular papers, for instance. Just let an editor of a church paper venture to deliver himself on some political issue, and immediately the editors of the great dailies—treat at least as the agents of evil—read him a caustic lecture for presuming to know anything on such subjects. These same editors will not hesitate to express themselves on any and every church question which may arise, and sometimes, too, with an ignorance which is amazing. Should an editor of a church organ display such ignorance in writing on any theme, he would be tried for lunacy. Referring to the criticisms of some war-time editors, General Lee once said that the Confederacy had made a great blunder in putting the mightiest generals to edit the papers, instead of sending them to the front. If we may judge by some of the utterances of some editors of secular journals, then the greatest preachers and mightiest theologians have been spoiled by making poor editors out of them.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

EXPOSITORY PREACHING.

I have tried to make my ministry a ministry of exposition of Scripture. I know it has failed in many respects. But I will say that I have endeavored from the beginning to the end to make that the characteristic of all my public work. And I have tried to preach Jesus Christ, and the Jesus Christ not of the gospels only, but the Christ of the gospels and the epistles; he is the same Christ. I believe that the one thing the world needs is redemption, the power of the gospel on the individual soul; and that men know they need it. Dr. Johnson once said in his wise way, "Nothing odd lasts," and I believe that, too. Nothing odd lasts, but Christ lasts, and men's sins last, and men's needs last; and we must preach Christ and him crucified, the Savior of mankind. And I have tried to preach Christ as if I believed in him; not as if I had hesitations and peradventures and limitations. And I have tried to preach him as if I lived on him; and at the bottom of it all—that we shall ourselves feed on the truth that we proclaim to others. —Maclaren.

AT FUNERALS.

I heard Dr. John Hall, of New York, expound to some young preachers one way in which he used funerals as a means to save the totally ungodly. He said that he, like all preachers, was sent for far and wide to bury the dead of those whom he had never seen, and who had never seen him. He always said yes, gave up his pressing work, and went. He made it a point to go early, and habitually moved around the group assembled, especially among the inner circle of those the most solemnized, and, sitting down by one after another, spoke a few earnest words, and then asked what church the person attended. If a somewhat regular church connection was reported, he soon passed on; but if, as usually, there was none, Dr. Hall openly took down his address, and said that he intended to call, adding, perhaps, if not speaking to a crushed mourner, some pleasant sentence, as, that he would never cease to persecute him till he got him to church This promise he made in good faith, and he told us that he had continued to call upon a family, after such a beginning, seven years before he finally got them to church.

It struck me as an incalculably troublesome undertaking thus to add to his visiting list in every quarter of the city; but he commended it heartily, from experience, as an excellent means of reaching the unevangelized.—Margaret Meredith, in Presbyterian.

I remember once asking a friend the secret of her having a good time herself, and making all her friends have such a good time, and she said, "I don't know, unless it is that when I am with my friends I am all there." And that was true. She let herself go, heartily, brightly, into whatever she was to share, and that very abandonment, for the time, of herself, her own notions, her fastidious preferences and ways, was the secret of the joy she got and the pleasure she gave.—Mary Lowe Dickinson.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. M. E. Tumlin: "We are closing a year of considerable prosperity on the Shuqualak circuit, North Mississippi Conference. An excellent new house of worship has been built 4½ miles west of Shuqualak. We had a good revival at the new church, and six accessions. The last of October Rev. W. M. McIntosh came to us here from Hebron, twenty miles east of this place, where he had just closed one of the greatest meetings in the history of this country. He was flushed with victory, but sick with cold. He labored faithfully and ably for about ten days with us. Here he was confronted by sin, malice and bigotry, but the old-fashioned gospel proved to be the power of God unto the salvation of a number of souls and the quickening of a number of church members. There were 7 accessions to the Methodist Church, with more to follow, and several to other churches. Several greet each other kindly now who did not seem to know each other before the meeting. Lips that were profane a few days ago now lead us in the public devotions. We thank God and take courage."

Rev. W. M. Sullivan, P. C, Forest charge: "This is a new circuit formed at the last Conference, composed of Forest, Harperville, Homewood and Pulaski—the first located on the A. and V. R. R., about half way between Meridian and Jackson, the other three country villages, nine, ten and eleven miles from Forest. This is a pleasant charge to serve. I have held four protracted meetings, helped by the following brethren: I. L. Peebles, I. B. Robertson, P. H. Howse, L. S. Jones, J. H. Foreman, and our faithful and efficient presiding elder, W. W. Simmons. Bro. D. P. Bradford was with us one day during our Forest meeting, very much to the delight of his brethren and many friends of this place. These brethren did faithful, good preaching, and God honored their ministry in saving souls. Eternity alone can only reveal the good done. I have received on profession of faith, 35; by certificate, 16; expended over two hundred dollars on churches and parsonage. Will have, I think, a clean sheet at Conference. God has been very good to us this year. The good women of Forest are looking after the parsonage."

Rev. John W. Ramsey, Waterford, Miss., Nov. 12, 1897: "I wish to express through the ADVOCATE my gratitude to our blessed Christ for the manifold evidences of his gracious presence with me during the year. This has been a prosperous year in every respect. While this section of country has passed through a continued drouth, and for several seasons but little cotton has been sold, still I am moving along nicely with my Conference collections, and am glad to say that, regarded as of many hindrances, these collections are in advance of last year. This charge has been active in many directions. We have done some repairing on the parsonage, and it is much more comfortable than it was. The Sunday schools at some places have been better than for a long time—more enrolled, better attendance, and greater interest. God has given me some great revivals. I think I can safely say that in the meetings which I have held this year I have seen near 200 souls happily converted to God. On my own charge there have been 75 conversions and something over 60 accessions. I thank God my lot has been cast among the good people, who know how to love their pastor and co operate with him in every good work. They have been so kind, loyal, and sympathetic to this preacher that he has fallen in love with them all, and should the Bishop move him, he will be loathe to leave them. May our Father continue to reward them with his richest blessings! In immediate and visible results this has been a remarkably successful year with us. We have worked hard, trying faithfully to do our part, and God has blessed our labors. We 'thank God and take courage,' and confidently, with faith in God, look forward to greater things next year. 'To him that loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood' be all the praise."

SAVE THE BABY!

A mother will risk her own life many times over, to save her babe from the horrors of hydrophobia. There are graver perils from which a mother should protect her child. A mad dog is a rarity, but thousands of children die daily because of the seeds of disease implanted in their little bodies before birth.

A woman may insure the health of her babe if she sees to it that she is thoroughly strong and healthy in a womanly way during the period of gestation. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures all weakness and disease of the delicate and important organs that sustain the burden of maternity. It makes them strong, healthy, vigorous and elastic. It banishes the squeamish spells of the expectant period and makes baby's introduction to the world easy and nearly painless. It rids maternity of peril. It insures the newcomer's health and an ample supply of nourishment. It transforms sickly, nervous, fretful, despondent, childless women into healthy, happy, helpful, amiable wives and mothers. Over 90,000 women have testified to the benefits derived from this marvelous medicine. It does away with the necessity for the embarrassing examinations and local treatment upon which most physicians insist. It substitutes certainty for the doubtful treatment of obscure physicians, who seldom correctly diagnose these troubles. All medicine dealers sell it, and Dr. Pierce will cheerfully give free advice to ailing women who write him.

Scores of women who have been permanently cured of obstinate and dangerous diseases by this great medicine, have permitted their names, addresses, experiences and photographs to be printed in Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. This book is free and contains 1008 pages, telling the home-treatment for most diseases. Send 21 one-cent stamps, to cover mailing only for paper-covered copy. Cloth binding 31 stamps. Address Dr. R. Every proper name in the text is syllabified and accented, and has the vowels marked according to the most authoritative modern standards of pronunciation. The text is in exact conformity with that of the world-famous Oxford S. S. Teacher's Bible. All the valuable "Helps to the Study of the Bible" contained in the Oxford Bible are retained.
The only Teacher's Bible with a self-pronouncing text. No similar Bible was ever obtainable heretofore; in fact, no publishers ever attempted its publication.
"The essence of fifty expensive volumes, by men of sacred learning, is condensed in these 'Helps.'"
The large-type (Bourgeois) edition sells to persons who are not subscriber for $3.75. Our subscribers get it, on conditions specified below, for $2.35. The same Bible in Minion type, which is somewhat smaller than Bourgeois, we offer to our subscribers, on conditions named below, for $1.55. To those who are not subscribers we sell it at $2.75. We also handle an edition in still smaller type (Emerald). Our subscribers get this for $1.00.
In order to get any one of these at these rates it is necessary to pay your subscription one year in advance, viz., to November, '98. (A little later it will be December, '98.)
For twenty cents we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside of the book.

NOTICE.

The Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE will hold their annual session in the ADVOCATE office, Wednesday, Dec. 1, at ten o'clock A. M.

Whene'er a noble deed is wrought,
Whene'er is spoken a noble thought,
Our hearts in glad surprise
To higher levels rise.

The tidal wave of deepest souls
Into our inmost being rolls,
And lifts us unawares
Out of our meaner cares.

—Tennyson.

Some people talk more religion in a day than they live in a year.

It is easy finding reasons why other folks should be patient.—George Eliot.

The shortest way to do many things is to only do one thing at once.—Exchange

Character determines condition; this is God's way of deciding our place in the future life.

The best cure for spiritual despondency is service; real work for the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom.

I would rather dwell in the dim fog of superstition than in air rarified to nothing by the air pump of unbelief.—J. P. Richter.

If we had a column in our statistical tables for the number of church members who are good for nothing, what would the figures be? Would your name be there?

Looking within us, we find in conscience an observatory higher than that of physical science ever was, from which to gaze upon the supreme harmonies of the universe.—Joseph Cook.

A livery man in conversation with Henry Ward Beecher once said of one of his horses, "He will work anywhere you put him." Beecher replied, "I wish he was a member of my church."

Religion can not pass away. Be not disturbed by infidelity. Religion can not pass away. The burning of a little straw may hide the stars, but the stars are there and will reappear.—Thomas Carlyle.

You stay out of the church because there are inconsistent men in it. Do you abandon your calling in life because all the men engaged in it are not up to your standard? Do you desert your political party because it contains a few rascals? Why is it that you act upon such a principle only in the realm of religion? A little reflection just here may reveal the fact that you are deceiving yourself.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

The annual observance of a special day of thanksgiving is a noble and beautiful custom that has come down to us from the Puritans, and is in every way worthy of perpetuation. Whatever may be said of other nations, the foundations of our Republic were laid in the fear of God. In the Constitutional Convention of 1787 Benjamin Franklin introduced a motion for daily prayers, and supported it by remarking: "In the beginning of the contest with England, when we were sensible of danger, we had daily prayers in this room for the divine protection. Our prayers, sir, were heard, and they were graciously answered. . . . The longer I live the more convincing proofs I see of this truth: that God governs in the affairs of men." In 1789 Washington appointed a day of thanksgiving for the adoption of the Constitution, and from that auspicious moment down to the present our chief rulers have one and all reverently recognized the Giver of all good by setting apart yearly a day of thanksgiving. A dark day will it be in our history if ever, on account of skepticism or widespread degeneracy, such honoring of God shall cease among us.

National blessings and national mercies call for national thanksgiving, while national sins and perils should prompt to national repentance and supplication. The nation that forgets to honor God will as certainly suffer dishonor and calamity as that God lives.

The observance of this day does no little to make us recognize our unity as a nation, and our common dependence upon the Lord of heaven and earth. As God-fearing citizens, we can not render praise that is meet unless we call to mind and reflect upon some, at least, of the numberless blessings that we enjoy.

Gratitude should fill our hearts at the continuance among us of the white-winged angel of peace. Though wars have threatened and unrest is abroad, yet God has kept the ship of state in quiet waters, and our people dwell securely in the full enjoyment of their rights and liberties. Let us thank God for quietness, security, and the stability of our institutions.

Nor should we lightly pass over the spirit of unity and brotherly kindness that prevails throughout our borders like a breath from Eden. Sectional prejudices are fast passing away, and our people are being bound more closely together by the ties of commerce, patriotism and Christianity than ever before.

The preservation of religious liberty—that precious boon which our forefathers purchased so dearly—is another cause for general rejoicing. Little do many in this day realize what struggles and sufferings it cost. The growth of religious tolerance is indeed one of the wonders of the age.

Boundless should be our gratitude to God for blessing our land with abundant harvests, so that there is enough and to spare for both man and beast. Despite the Spring floods and the Fall drouth, the fields have brought forth plentifully, and nowhere need there be suffering for lack of bread. Yet in Ireland, and in some other lands, there is near prospect of dire famine. While we eat bread to the full, let us not forget that it is God who "giveth richly all things to enjoy," nor fail to share our gifts with the needy.

Some, perhaps, are ready to say that the people of the South have little to be thankful for this year, one calamity after another having overtaken us. The floods, the prevalence of the yellow fever and the quarantines together have caused no little distress, we admit. Nevertheless, we ought to rejoice that things are no worse. The fever was about the mildest ever known, and came so late as to do infinitely less damage than it would otherwise have done. The recent outbreak, by revealing the point of danger, may save us from a far more destructive visitation in the near future. Despite the pestilence, the health of the people in most sections has been of unusual excellence, the mortality even in infected regions showing little, if any, increase. Is not this something to be thankful for as well as the opportune coming of the ice king? Moreover, the presence of the fever has made not a few people reflect seriously and realize their helplessness and their dependence upon God. Disappointed in their plans and hopes of business success, and dispirited because of pecuniary losses caused by the low price of cotton and the temporary suspension of business, men have been forced to consider the transitory nature of earthly possessions, and many have been led to turn their eyes Godward, who before were thoughtless and self-satisfied.

Almost the whole South is disturbed and disheartened on account of the depression in the cotton market. Many a man, in his disappointment and loss, is crying, "I am ruined." But is there no brightness in the cloud? The South has survived far worse evils than are now upon her. She came forth from the late war stripped and desolated. Yet how glorious is the progress and wonderful the prosperity she has since seen! This may be the very lesson needed to teach our people the importance of diversifying their crops, and of depending more upon their own products and thriftiness. Though money is scarce, it is a matter for thankfulness that food is plentiful and cheap, and that the public is so responsive to the calls of charity.

Though many think the Lord is dealing hardly with them, he has been kinder to the best of us than we deserve. How thankless we are for his ceaseless protection and benefits! How little we have offered him in return for his matchless kindness and love!

However much he may have lost, no man is ruined who has health, character and hope. Relying upon God, such a man may laugh at discouragements and retrieve all losses. The misfortunes now upon us are but the trial of our faith, and if borne patiently as from the Lord, they can but result in good to our souls. Let us remember that "whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth."

Who can declare all the mercies of God? Food, raiment, health, friends, opportunities to labor, gospel privileges, citizenship in a Christian land—these are blessings whose worth is far above rubies. No other people enjoy so many comforts, so great freedom, such wonderful opportunities of self-improvement as the people of America. Shall we not praise the Lord to-day and every day for these gracious gifts? The poorest and most afflicted believer can praise God for the free air and the life-giving sunshine, for life, for sustaining grace, and for the hope of heaven.

If many who think themselves unfortunate would consider the condition of the afflicted and less fortunate around them, then they would speedily become ashamed of their discontent and ingratitude. Let us praise God for all his dealings with us, "giving thanks always for all things." Our Lord knows what is best for us, and "will not withhold any good thing from them that walk uprightly."

To some this will seem a sad Thanksgiving on account of bereavement, affliction, or misfortune. Though passing through sore trials, the man who loves God can say with the poet:

"O Thou whose bounty fills my cup,
With every blessing meet;
I give thee thanks for every drop;
The bitter and the sweet.

"I praise thee for the desert road,
And for the river side;
For all thy goodness hath bestowed,
And all thy grace denied."

As a church, we ought to sing pæans of joy for the liquidation of the missionary debt, which, like Banquo's ghost, has risen so many times to trouble us. Above all, let us thank God for the signal manifestations of his presence in building up the church at home and abroad, in pouring out his Spirit upon the people, and in making the cross to triumph everywhere. "Oh, that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!" Let us manifest our gratitude to God not only in hymns and prayers, but also in relieving the wants of the widow and the orphan, in visiting the sick, comforting the sorrowing, and in cheering the faint.

DID YOU EVER SEE HIM?

He takes no religious paper because he is too poor to do so. Yet the trashiest kind of literature to the amount of ten times the cost of a church paper finds its way into his house every year. And he and his wife are wondering why their children, as they grow up, have no interest in the church, and are rapidly drifting away from it.

HANDSOMELY DONE.

On the fifteenth Bishop Keener purchased a very eligible block of ground in Ocean Springs, and presented it to the Methodist Church. Our house of worship will be removed thither in the near future.

FOOTBALL.

Two famous football contests took place last week—one between Harvard and the University of Pennsylvania, the other between Princeton and Yale. Commenting on these the Picayune says:

"The strength of the American universities to-day, like that of Samson, is in the shaggy and unkempt hair of the students. What, in the way of brains, may by chance be in their skulls, is not taken into the account of excellence of scholarship. There is, too, a large commercial advantage in football supremacy. What spirited and ambitious American boy would be willing to enter as a student in a college which has been ignobly defeated in the intellectual exercise of football? What father who has any pride in the mental possibilities of his young hopeful would send him to a school among a lot of dunces and muffs, who can not make a decent showing on the gridiron field? Books! Perish the thought. The Americans of the near future will find that they have got to fight their way through the world by knock-down and drag-out arguments. What they want is hard heads and muscle for a rough-and-tumble fight. Books? Leave them to the cripples and to the girls."

NEW BOOKS.

THE INTELLECTUAL SIDE OF JOHN WESLEY. By T. R. Pierce, D. D., Editor of the Texas Christian Advocate. At request of the Board of Education, M. E. Church, South.

The above-named work is a pamphlet of twenty pages, neatly printed by Barbee & Smith, Nashville, Tenn. It presents a phase of John Wesley's character which has not always been sufficiently emphasized. From a literary standpoint the work is strictly first-class. Its wide circulation among our people will enhance the already high estimation in which the great founder of Methodism is held.

WE MUST ENDOW OUR COLLEGES FOR WOMEN. By E. E. Hoss, D. D., Editor of the Christian Advocate, Nashville, Tenn. At request of Board of Education, M. E. Church, South.

As shown by the title page, the above named pamphlet of twelve pages owes its existence to the wisdom of our enterprising Board of Education. The subject treated is of the very highest importance. The author has performed his task admirably. In choice diction he presents cogent arguments in favor of the endowment of our female colleges. We take pleasure in giving it our hearty commendation. Let it be widely disseminated among our people.

NOTES.

Bishop Keener and family returned last week from Ocean Springs.

On the great clock of time there is but one word—Now.—Golden Rule.

Rev. Jas. Healey has been transferred from the Los Angeles Conference to the Pacific Conference, and stationed at Salinas, Cal.

Rev. W. E. Boggs has been transferred from the Little Rock to the West Texas Conference, and stationed at Travis Park Church, San Antonio.

On account of impaired health Rev. H. R. Singleton will ask for a supernumerary relation at the approaching session of the Louisiana Conference.

The New Orleans yellow fever refugees have returned; the discharged employees have been put to work; the wheels of commerce are again in motion, and everything is moving on about the same as if Yellow Jack had never shown his hideous face in our midst.

Miss Lucinda B. Helm died at the residence of Bishop Hargrove in Nashville on the sixteenth. Her efficient services as an official of the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society have made her name a household word throughout Southern Methodism. She was a woman of most admirable character.

Joy is a prize unbought, and is freest, purest in its flow when it comes unsought. No getting into heaven as a place will compass it. You must carry it with you, else it is not there. You must have it in you, as the music of a well-ordered soul, the fire of a holy purpose, the welling up out of the central depths of eternal springs that hide their waters there.—H. Bushnell.

***

Mr. P. K. Whitney, editor of the Fayette Chronicle, and Miss Fannie Rayner, daughter of Rev. B. S. Rayner, were married on the tenth in the Methodist Church, Rev. T. B. Holloman officiating. The church had been handsomely decorated and was filled almost to overflowing with friends of the happy pair. A most enjoyable reception was given at the parsonage by the ladies of the church.

The poetic effusion which we clipped recently from the Ram's Horn entitled, "Wanted a Preacher," caused one of our Louisiana brethren to put his poetic machinery in motion. The result appears on our first page. We heartily congratulate our brother on his successful venture into the realms where the muses dwell. We have known him some time as a consecrated Christian and a good preacher, but had never thought of him in connection with such sprightly Byronic versification.

It is a blessed truth that what we give to the Lord is ours forever. It is treasure laid up above that can never be lost or stolen. How often do Christians who are bent on accumulating property, and who use their possessions only for selfish purposes, see it swept away by fire, flood, or fraud, and lament their folly when it is too late. There is a famous picture in one of the London art galleries from which we may learn an instructive lesson, having been suggested by the motto: "What I spent I had; what I saved I lost; what I gave I have." The central figure of the picture is a dead man on his bier who had tasted most of the pleasures and triumphs of this life. But now all these have fled, and nothing remains except what he gave.

Rev. R. W. Vaughan, of the Louisiana Conference, will be married, Dec. 8, to Miss Roberta Pearl McClendon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. T. McClendon, of Lisbon, La. The ceremony will be performed in the Methodist Church of Lisbon, La., Rev. D. C. Barr officiating. We extend our heartiest congratulations. May peace, prosperity and happiness be their portion through life!

The following articles are especially noteworthy: "Our Educational System, Some Criticisms and Suggestions," by R. M. Smith; "The Scriptures in the Light of Archæological Discoveries," by M. B. Chapman; "The Province of the College," by A. C. Millar; "Sargeant S. Prentiss," by George J. Leftwich.

The New York Tribune states that the new railroad from Jaffa to Jerusalem carried more than twenty thousand tons of merchandise to that city last year; nearly a hundred drummers are in the Holy City, the river Jordan is now spanned by a handsome bridge, while steamers travel up and down the stream, and likewise traverse the often stormy waters of the Sea of Galilee.—Southern Methodist Review.

The distinction of being the first Indian woman to graduate as a trained nurse is due Miss Nancy Cornelius, of the Oneida tribe of Wisconsin. She has made for herself a most enviable reputation in this work. She was one of the most promising pupils in the school on the Oneida reservation, and was sent from there to the training-school at Carlisle, Pa. After spending a few years there she entered the Connecticut Training-school, and graduated from it in 1889.

Many a good intention dies from inattention. If, through carelessness or indolence or selfishness, a good intention is not put into effect, we have lost an opportunity, demoralized ourselves and stolen from the pile of possible good. To be born and not fed is to perish. To launch a ship and neglect it is to lose it. To have a talent and bury it is to be a "wicked and slothful servant." For in the end we shall be judged, not alone by what we have done, but by what we could have done.—Sunday-School Times.

The days of missionary hardship are by no means past. Those persons who think that the life of the missionary of modern times is one of comfort mixed with a few luxuries are sadly mistaken. A change has taken place in the general attitude of the pagan world toward the religion of the Christ, but there are mission fields to-day which have just as many stumps and rocks in them as any ever brought under cultivation by the gospel plow. Dollars are needed as much as ever to carry on the work—and so are prayers also.—Pittsburg Advocate.

During the progress of our Civil War the plans of the commands in the field were on more than one occasion seriously modified if not completely foiled by the interference of civilians at Washington. Some of these marplots were excellent men and good patriots, but they did not know anything about war. Unfortunately they imagined they knew all about it. In their own sight they were wiser far than the military men. This would not have made any great difference if they had not been able to interfere; unluckily they had both the power and the disposition, and they did interfere to the great injury of the country. It was not until General Grant determined that he would not allow any interference from any quarter with his plans that the Union army began to triumph steadily. The truth is that the man who knows "how it ought to have been done"—after the event, the man who can always do anything better than anybody else—is a nuisance, and needs to be suppressed.—Central Advocate.

By request, I send you a few items from our Missionary District Conference. Owing to the quarantine restrictions, we could not send them earlier.

We met at the Opelousas District Camp Ground, Sept. 8, 1897. We had hoped to have Sister Fannt LeRoy with us, but in this we were disappointed. Sister T. S. Randle presided in her usual enthusiastic way. Oh, that all our women would catch the fire, and we would have more live societies!

Rev. M. C. Manly preached the missionary sermon from Matt. ii, 11.

There being no delegates from other societies, we had no reports. In fact, I believe there are but three societies in our district. (Opelousas Crowley, and Lafayette, I think.) Bro. Blocker informed us that one had been organized on his work, but they did not meet now. Stir them up, brother, and let us know what they are doing. If there are other societies on our district, please report to Mrs. M. M. Hays (district secretary). This is sad, for there ought to be a W. F. M. S. in every church. When will our sisters awake to a sense of their responsibility in this great work of bringing the world to Christ! Sister Randle talked of the importance of having our Woman's Missionary Advocate more widely circulated. I am sure if our ladies would subscribe for our missionary periodicals and read them, then they could no longer remain indifferent to the joy of helping to send the gospel to those who now sit in darkness and the shadow of death.

Of course, we took up a collection, which we used to defray the traveling expenses of our own missionary girl, Helen Johnson, to Mansfield, where she is now at school preparatory to entering Scarritt Bible and Training school, next year.

Louisiana has no missionary in the field; but God has called this earnest, consecrated girl to "go for us." She must be fitted for the work. She is an orphan, and has no resources of her own; so she is peculiarly our own to care for and equip for the war. Five years ago she first felt the call; but, feeling her inefficiency, she hesitated. However, God gave her no peace, as she told us, till she yielded, and said she would go, if he would open the way. This he seems to be doing. Her tuition is given her free at Mansfield. Others have contributed something towards her board. Now, we, the missionary women of the Louisiana Conference, must care for this child of our love and prayers, till she is ready for the foreign field. Anyone desiring to contribute can send the amounts to Mrs. S. B. McCutcheu, Shreveport, La., marked "for the Helen Johnson fund," and she will see that it is forwarded to Mrs. Sligh in Manafield.

Our society in Opelousas is far from being what we desire it. Most, if not all, of our members pay their dues when called upon, but so few attend the meetings. However, we are not at all discouraged, and mean to press onward and upward till we stand before the great white throne, bearing our sheaves with us.

We are anticipating much pleasure and profit in having the annual meeting here next June. The next place for holding the District Conference is Morgan City; time to be fixed later.

Pray for us, and our dear missionary girl, Helen Johnson.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

It will be gratifying to the friends of Millsaps College to know that our sixth annual session has opened under the most encouraging conditions. We have one hundred and fifty students, and the indications are that we will enroll at least two hundred during the session. In view of the interruption and uncertainty occasioned by quarantine regulations, this is the best and most significant opening we have had in the history of the institution. The loyalty of our students, it seems to me, could not be surpassed. It amounts to the most enthusiastic devotion. Personal letters from our preachers and other friends, when we were walled in by quarantine restrictions, indicate the strong hold the college has on the confidence and affection of our people. Redoubled energy in behalf of the college at this time will make sure a splendid future. Students who contemplate entering this session should come at once. All the members of the faculty are in place and the work in every department moves off most satisfactorily.

E. M. F. COLLEGE OPENING.

This institution has had the finest opening in its history of thirty years. There are already more boarders and more day pupils than were ever in the college at any time, and more coming every day. There were seven new boarders yesterday and ten new ones the day before, and President Beeson has engagements to meet the train every day this week to bring in others. Every desk was taken in every room, and more desks had to be ordered to seat the pupils. More dining tables, silverware, etc.—in fact, more of every kind of furniture—had to be purchased. This in face of the fact that 30 or 40 boarders went to other colleges or remained at home on account of the delay and the yellow fever. If it had not been for the epidemic, the buildings with the new addition would not have held the pupils. As it is, President Beeson says that there is room for only about 30 more, and feels sure he will have them before the session is out. The success of this college, under the present management, is phenomenal.

The Conservatory of Music is a success beyond expectation. Already about 100 have been enrolled, and many more not yet examined. The opening concert convinced the town that no such talent has ever been in this section of the South before. The house was full to overflowing. There was not standing room for all, and many were turned away, unable to get even near the windows, yet the audience was quiet and attentive, enraptured with the sweet strains of music from the great pianist. The violinist, Prof. Chandron, of France, is one of the finest artists that has ever visited the South. So say those who have heard him. The vocalist is hard to excel in her line. There will be another grand concert by the Conservatory teachers soon.

The personnel of the student body this year is very fine. There was never such a fine set of young ladies gathered together in Meridian. Several colleges and States are represented here. We are glad to have such a college in our town and State. No wonder it is so well attended, having such an array of talent as teachers.—Meridian Daily Herald.

NOTICE.

The annual meeting of the W. P. and H. M. S. of North Mississippi Conference will be held at Winona, Miss., Nov. 27–30.

We trust there will be a full attendance. Existing circumstances prevented an earlier notice.

THANKSGIVING TOPIC.

THE THANKSGIVINGS OF ST. PAUL.

(II. Cor. ix, 15; ii, 14; I. Cor. xv, 57; Eph. v, 20.)

1. "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift," says Paul, referring to the work of God in his heart—to the changed heart and life. A pure, loving heart is indeed God's pre eminent gift to man. When we remember what God has done for us; how he has lifted us out of degradation and sin unto the fellowship of his Son, Christ Jesus; how he has given us the beauty of holiness for the ashes of innocence left by the fires of sin; how he has given us the life which we live by faith in the Son of God, that is independent of death, then our hearts go out in gratitude and praise for this "unspeakable gift." All things that come to us out of the bountiful munificence of God are subordinate to this. Although we live this life amid unfriendly circumstances, "thanks be unto God, which always causes us to triumph in Christ." Victory over sin, death, and the grave! It is a hard fought battle, "but thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

2. There are those who think that God pays us for being good by giving us physical prosperity, and punishes us for sin by sending adversity. This is not true; at least, not generally so. God sends the rain upon the just and unjust; also the storm, the earthquake, the pestilence. Prosperity and adversity are distributed without regard to moral desert. The slightest observation proves this. The worst man morally in a community may be the most prosperous, and vice versa. The Christian, with Paul, may thank God "for all things," "for all things work together for good to them that love God"—but to no others. Two lilies grow side by side. They have the same environment. The same sunbeams give them warmth, the same rain falls upon their petalled lips, the same black mud nourishes their roots, yet one is fragrant, white and beautiful, and the other is rank, yellow and ugly. The reason for this is not in the circumstances, but in the different life of the plants. So with human beings, surrounded by practically the same circumstances, the moral life transmutes them into beauty or ugliness. By the loving heart prosperity is transmuted into thankfulness and service, sorrow into sympathy, persecution and slander into forgiveness. The loving heart is the potent alchemy that transmutes not only the bright ore of prosperity, but the base metals of adversity into the gleaming gold of spiritual life. Blessed be God for loving hearts!

The League at Farmerville is growing in interest and membership, seven new members having been added the last two months. They have had a very interesting literary meeting on Hymnology, stressing the value of the Wesleys as hymn writers, and their hymns and the contents of our hymn book were also briefly studied. Dr. Tillett's very valuable annotated edition of our hymn book was the chief source of information.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE FOR THE COMING YEAR.

The Century Magazine, with its November number, enters upon its twenty-seventh year. During its long existence, by reason of its many notable successes, it has won an assured and commanding position. During the coming year The Century will maintain its exceptional position as a magazine of entertainment and as a leader in art and thought.

Its pictorial features will be notable, and it will command the services of the foremost artists, illustrators and engravers of this country and of Europe.

Nothing like a complete announcement of its literary features can be attempted now. Dr. Weir Mitchell, whose novel of the American Revolution, "Hugh Wynne," is the great success of the year, has written a new story for the present volume. It bears the piquant title: "The Adventures of Francois: Foundling, Adventurer, Juggler and Fencing-Master during the French Revolution." The tale is full of romance and adventure. Mrs. Burton Harrison contributes a new novel of New York life, called "Good Americans," in which contemporaneous social types and tendencies are brightly mirrored and described.

There will be a group of clever stories about horses and people who like horses, under the general title of "Gallops." "A Woman's Reminiscences of the French Intervention in Mexico" will be given in a series of graphic and highly picturesque papers by Mrs. Cornelius Stevenson. Further contributions to the interesting series of "Heroes of Peace" will be made by Jacob A. Riis, Gustav Kobbe, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps Ward, and others.

For the benefit of readers of The Century an unusual combination offer is made for this year. There has been issued "The Century Gallery of One Hundred Portraits," made up of the finest engravings that have appeared in the magazine, and representing a total expenditure of nearly $30,000. These are printed on heavy plate-paper, with wide margins, like proofs. The retail price of the gallery is $7.50, but this year it will be sold only in connection with a subscription to The Century, the price for the two together being $6.50.

I REMEMBER, I REMEMBER.

BY THOMAS HOOD.

I remember, I remember
The house where I was born,
The little window where the sun
Came peeping in at morn.
He never came a wink too soon,
Nor brought too long a day;
But now I often wish the night
Had borne my breath away!

I remember, I remember
The roses, red and white,
The violets, and the lily-cups—
Those flowers made of light!
The lilacs where the robin built,
And where my brother set
The laburnum on his birthday—
The tree is living yet!

I remember, I remember
Where I was used to swing,
And thought the air must rush as fresh
To swallows on the wing;
My spirit flew in feathers then,
That is so heavy now,
And Summer pools could hardly cool
The fever on my brow!

I remember, I remember
The fir trees dark and high;
I used to think their slender tops
Were close against the sky.
It was a childish ignorance,
But now 'tis little joy
To know I'm farther off from heaven
Than when I was a boy.

TAKING RESPONSIBILITY.

What is it that makes the difference in people about taking responsibility? This is a question which I have been revolving in my mind for some time; and so far have found no answer. I can see no reason why one member of a household should always have the little things to do, which contribute equally to the comfort of all; and yet how often it happens that in families where no servant is kept, some one member will always have the odds and ends of the work to do. I have in mind one family where all these little duties are invariably seen to by one member. They come no more in her particular line than in that of any other member, and yet she, patient soul, is the one who always does them; not because she thinks it just, but because she knows they must be done, and has learned by experience that if she doesn't do them, no one will. In the morning she is the one who opens the outer front door, straightens the door-mat, and opens the parlor windows. She puts the sitting-room in order, regulates the shades, puts away the old papers, and sees that the books are in proper places. The dining-room next claims her attention, and much the same process goes on there. In the evening, when the gas is lighted, or when she lights it, she has the curtains to draw and the blinds to close. A light in the upper and lower halls is as much a matter of convenience and safety to the others as to herself, yet they would all stumble up-stairs in the dark if she did not see to the light. When the groceries come in, she has them to put away in their proper places, else they would stand in the paper bags until used. When the weekly ironing is done, no one else feels responsibility about removing the clothes from the bars and putting them away.

It is she who keeps the waste-paper basket cleared, who sees that the refrigerator is kept sweet and clean. Unless she attends to closing the piano at night it would stand open for weeks, and yet it is not her instrument, and she seldom uses it. And so I might enumerate indefinitely the odd things she has to do. Does she like to do them? No more than one likes to be doing, all the time, work which "does not count." If one week in the month some one else would do them, she would willingly take the responsibility the other three weeks; for when there are so many weary rounds of housework, it is disheartening and depressing to know you will always find certain things waiting your doing. In every household there are these duties to be performed, but I hope that not in every one do they wait for one member to take the responsibility of doing them.—H. E. Branch, in Christian Work.

THROW THE REINS TO CHRIST.

An interesting story is told of Prof. Drummond. He was staying with a lady whose coachman had signed the pledge, but afterward gave way to drink again. This lady said to the professor: "Now this man will drive you to the station; say a word to him if you can. He is a good man and really wants to reform; but he is weak."

While they were driving to the station, the professor tried to think how he could introduce the subject. Suddenly the horses were frightened and tried to run away. The driver held on to the reins and managed them well. The carriage swayed about, and the professor expected every moment to be upset, but after a little the man got the better of the team, and as he drew them up at the station, steaming from perspiration, he exclaimed: "That was a close shave, sir! Our trap might have been smashed into matchwood, and you wouldn't have given any more addresses."

"Well," said Prof. Drummond, "how was it that it did not happen?"

"Why," was the reply, "because I knew how to manage the horses."

"Now," said the professor, "look here, my friend, I will give you a bit of advice. Here's my train coming. I hear you have been signing the pledge and breaking out again. Now I want to give you a bit of advice. Throw the reigns of your life to Jesus Christ." And he jumped down and got into the train.

The driver saw in a flash where he had made the mistake, and from that day ceased to try to live in his own strength.—The World's Crisis.

It is a renewer, because it makes new again. Old hair is made new; the gray changed to the color of youth.

A WOMAN'S IDEAL MAN.

Like every other woman, I have my ideal of manhood. The difficulty is to describe it: First of all, he must be a gentleman; but that means so much that it, in its turn, requires explanation. Gentleness and moral strength combined must be the salient characteristics of the "gentleman," together with the polish that is seldom acquired but in one way—by constant association with those so happily placed that they have enjoyed the influences of education and refinement all through their lives. He must be thoughtful for others, kind to women and children and all helpless things, tender-hearted to the old and the poor and the unhappy, but never foolishly weak in giving where gifts do harm instead of good. His brain must be as fine as his heart, in fact. There are few such men; but they do exist. I know one or two. Reliable as rocks, judicious in every action, dependable in trifles as well as the large affairs of life, full of mercy and kindness to others, affectionate and well-loved in their homes, their lives are pure and kindly.

It was once said by a clever man that no one could be a gentleman all around who had not knocked about the world and associated with all sorts and conditions of men, high and low, rich and poor, good and bad. Experiences like these are like the processes for refining gold. The man who emerges unharmed from the fire of poverty and its associations, and who retains his independent manliness in relations with those high-placed, must have within him a fiber of strength that is the true essence of manliness.—Mrs. Humphry, in The Young Man.

POSITIVE AND NEGATIVE.

"My aunt was always saying to me, 'Don't talk so loud; your voice gets shriller every day!'" said a pleasant-voiced friend. "I became so nervous and irritated under this chronic rebuke that my voice was more uneven and harsh than ever, and I hardly dared speak at home. At last I visited my cousins in L—— (they are noted for their sweet voices, you know), and then suddenly I noticed the wide difference, which I had never understand before, between a rough voice and a well-modulated one, and set myself, so to speak, to catch the trick of their intonations and their tones. In a month's time, really, I talked like a different girl. And when I came home my aunt said, 'Well, I am glad to see that at last my reproofs have made an impression upon you, Clara!' But they hadn't, you know—the only impression she made was to make me unhappy and nervous. I have never forgotten the lesson; and when I want my children to improve in any way I give them an opportunity to hear and see the right thing before I reprove them for not following it."—Harper's Bazar.

Teacher—"Billy, can you tell me the difference between caution and cowardice?" Billy—"Yes, ma'am. When you're afraid yourself, then that's caution. But when the other fellow's afraid, that's cowardice."

THE SECRET OF HAPPINESS.

The trouble with many is that they are seeking for the happiness of emotion and not the happiness of deeds. Happiness sought for its own sake, whether sought from Christ, or from the world, always eludes us. Christ gives us happiness as the government coins money, that it may be spent and not hoarded.

Take no less time than you already have taken, my friend, alone with God, with your Bible, on your knees. Nay, spend more in this way; but be sure to use every good impulse, every aspiration to a nobler, purer, more unselfish life.

Rise from your knees each morning with a settled purpose to make some one else happier, whether you are happy or not; to spend a sunshiny, cheery day, so that father, mother, brother, sister, or friend may catch the cheer.

Each day, when it is possible, find some one with more clouds in her life than there are in yours, and brush them away from her.

In short, transmute all your desires and aspirations for happiness and holiness into practical, tangible efforts to make some one else happier and better.

"Take down these saints and coin them into shillings," once said Cromwell, of the silver saints in a Catholic cathedral, "and send them about their Master's business." So we need to take down our lofty emotions from the niches they occupy, and send them on some errand of mercy and love.—Golden Rule.

SMALL THINGS.

Living to Christ in small things, and living for Christ every day, is the secret of large fruitfulness. A peach tree or an orange does not leap into a bounty of fruit by one spasmodic effort; an orchard does not ripen under a single day's sunshine. Every raindrop, every sunbeam, every inch of subsoil does its part. A fruitful Christian is a growth. To finish up a godly character by a mere religion of Sabbaths and sermons and sacraments and revivals and special seasons is impossible. A man can be converted in an instant, but he must grow by the year.

The tough fiber of the slender branch which can hold up a half bushel of oranges is very different from a little willow switch. It is the steady compacting process that makes the little limb like a steel wire. Such is a healthy and holy believer's life. Every honest prayer breathed, every cross carried, every trial well endured, every good work for our fellow-men lovingly done, every little act conscientiously performed for Christ's glory, helps to make the Christian character beautiful, and to load its broad boughs with "apples of gold" for God's "basket of silver."—The Examiner.

FAMILY COURTESY.

Probably one-half of the rudeness of youths of this day, that later in life will develop into brutality, is due to the failure of parents to enforce in the family circle the rules of courtesy. The son or daughter who is discourteous to members of the family, because of familiarity with them, is very likely to prove rude and overbearing to others, and very certain to be a tyrant in the house hold over which he or she may be called on to preside.

Carefully eschew all dissipation in the method of reading. Dissipation is the great snare of all study, whether secular or religious, in the present day. There is so much to read—such profusion of matter in every department of literature, nay, even in the public journals—that insensibly the habit is formed of skipping the dull, and sipping the interesting, and never honoring any book with a fair and thorough perusal. We must set ourselves in opposition to this habit if we wish to profit by devotional reading.—Thoughts on Personal Religion, by Goulburn.

WHAT BOYS SHOULD LEARN.

There are a great many things boys, as boys, should learn. And if they learn these lessons so well as never to forget them during life, they will prove of great help to them oftentimes when they need help.

Among other things boys should learn, these may be named:

1. Not to tease boys and girls smaller than themselves.

2. Not to take the easiest chair in the room, but it in the pleasantest place, and forget to offer it to mother when she comes in to sit down.

3. To treat mother as politely as if she were a strange lady who did not spend her life in their service.

4. To be as kind and helpful to sisters as they expect their sisters to be to them.

5. To make their friends among good boys.

6. To take pride in being a gentleman at home.

7. To take mother into their confidence if they do anything wrong; and, above all, never to lie about anything they have done.

8. To make up their minds not to learn to smoke, gamble, or drink, remembering these things are terrible drawbacks to good men, and necessities to bad ones. —Green's Fruit Grower.

WATER IN TYPHOID FEVER.

It has long been a strange traditional custom of physicians to withhold water from patients suffering from fevers and other diseases, even when burning with thirst. The Bacteriological Review, however, commends the practice of water drinking in typhoid fever, the importance of subjecting the tissues to an internal bath having, it appears, been brought prominently to the notice of the profession by M. Debove, of Paris, believed by some to have been the first to systematize such a mode of treatment. The practice of that eminent physician consists, in fact, almost exclusively of water drinking, his requirement being that the patient take from five to six quarts of water daily, this amounting to some eight ounces every hour. If the patient subsists chiefly upon a diet of very thin gruel, fruit juices or skimmed milk, the amount of liquid thus taken is to be subtracted from the quantity of water. The important thing is to get into the system, and out of it, a sufficient amount of water to prevent the accumulation of ptomaines and toxins within the body. Copious water drinking does not weaken the heart, but encourages its action by maintaining the volume of blood; it also adds to the action of the liver, the kidneys, and the skin, and, by promoting evaporation from the skin, it lowers the temperature.—Scientific American.

ALCOHOL, PAUPERISM, AND CRIME.

The relation of the liquor traffic to pauperism, crime and insanity, we have long known to be very close. A recent report of the Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics is devoted to an inquiry on that subject. In 1895, 58.3⅓ per cent. of 27,672 convictions were for drunkenness alone, or drunkenness connected with crime, and 31.54 per cent. for crime disconnected with drunkenness.

Again the report traces backward with the question: "Did the intemperate habits of the criminal lead to a condition which induced the crime?" The answer was affirmative in 50.88 per cent. of the convictions for crimes other than drunkenness. The intemperance of others led to conditions that induced the prisoners to crimes other than drunkenness in 42.78 per cent. of the cases questioned.

Of course, it does not follow that if there was no drunkenness there would be no crime. If this were so, we should have an easy road to cure social disease. Notwithstanding this, we must admit that if intemperance could be cured, a very considerable amount of crime would be banished.

As soon as you feel symptoms of a cold in the head, put a teaspoonful of sugar in a tumbler, add to it seven drops of camphor, and mix thoroughly; fill the glass half full of cold water, and stir until the sugar is dissolved. The dose is two teaspoonfuls every twenty minutes. This is an excellent remedy if used at the beginning of the cold.

A Pure Grape Cream of Tartar Powder.
40 YEARS THE STANDARD.

IT IS EASY TO TELL.

People are not apt to get anxious about their health soon enough. If you are "not quite well" or "half sick," have you ever thought that your kidneys may be the cause of your sickness?

It is easy to tell by setting aside your urine for twenty four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys. When urine stains linen it is evidence of kidney trouble. Too frequent desire to urinate, scanty supply, pain or dull ache in the back, is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder need doctoring.

There is satisfaction in knowing that the great remedy, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, fulfills every wish in relieving weak or diseased kidneys, and all forms of bladder and urinary troubles. Not only does Swamp-Root give new life and activity to the kidneys—the cause of trouble—but by treating the kidneys it acts as a tonic for the entire constitution. If you need a medicine, you should have the best. Sold by druggists; price, fifty cents and one dollar. So remarkably successful has Swamp-Root been that if you wish to Prove its great merit, you may have a sample bottle and pamphlet both sent free by mail. Mention CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The proprietors of this paper guarantee the genuineness of this offer.

For eighteen years I was not able to do any work, was confined to the house three years, often confined to the bed: took cold on the slightest exposure, eyes were weak and discharged a great deal of mucous, was deaf in right ear, suffered intensely with pain in head, had fainting spells, often thought would lose my mind, and was a misery to myself and friends. Eighteen months ago used Aerial Medication, in two weeks hearing was fully restored, Catarrh gradually subsided, and in six months was entirely cured. It has been one year since I used the treatment, the disease has not returned, and I feel like a new person.—MRS. KATE ELLEGOOD, 2221 Walnut St., St. Louis, Mo.

34 years ago I had risings in my ears, had Catarrh 30 years, hearing failed, for many years could not hear loud conversation two feet away, had continual roaring in ears, hoarseness, throat sore and dry, intense pain over eyes, and "stopped-up" feeling in my head. General health so impaired was not able to work. Used Aerial Medication in '92. It stopped the roaring pain and soreness, fully restored my hearing, for five years have been free from Catarrh.—WM. F. BOWERS, Howell, Ark.

"Whereas I was Deaf, Now I Can Hear."

At the age of 69, after having suffered from Catarrhal Deafness 20 years, am truly thankful to state that I am entirely cured by Aerial Medication; my hearing which had become so bad that I could not hear a watch tick, or conversation, is fully restored. I will verify this statement.—WILLIAM RITCHIE, Derby Centre, Vt.

The late Prof. Basil Manley, of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky, says of Aerial Medication: "I can cordially recommend its use." Write for fac-simile of this letter * * *

EX-ATTORNEY-GENERAL FORD

On Monday, Nov. 1, 1897, after a week's illness from the prevailing fever and heart trouble, borne with Christian fortitude, Gen. Thomas Swift Ford surrendered his spirit into the hands of his Maker. He was about fifty years old. After brilliant legal studies he married Miss Clarissa Rawls on Dec. 19, 1877, and from their union were born nine children—six girls and three boys.

The deceased had filled with ability and credit two important State offices. During eight years he discharged the duties of district attorney for the sixth judicial district, and during two years supplied the vacant incumbency as attorney-general, and was a member of the Lower House of the Legislature, and also represented the State in the last Constitutional Convention.

To his varied mental and social accomplishments Gen. Ford united many sterling traits of character that won for him the esteem and affection of a large circle of friends and numerous clients, who appreciated his skillful services at the judicial bar. Taking always a lively interest in all public improvements, which he manifested on several occasions, he succeeded in raising the standard of education given in the public school of Columbia, his native town, in Marion county.—Democrat-Ster.

Col. Ford's brilliant and successful career was due to his discretion early in life. At the age of eighteen years he graduated, with the first honors of his class, in Middlebury College, Vt. At or near that time he gave his heart and life to God in faith and love. He was a member of the M. E. Church, South, during his active life. As a Christian, he was devout, earnest, consecrated. His liberality was known and felt in every direction around him. The Methodist Church and High School at Columbia, Miss., owe to him chiefly their success. Many a poor boy was assisted by him in an effort to get an education. Many a young minister has felt the warm grasp of his hand, and caught inspiration from the magnanimous and magnetic Ford, with the assurance that he would help him through college. He has always been a leader in church work, and in his death all denominations feel that they are bereft of a friend and helper. Truly, a great and good man has fallen.

L. N. BROCK.
Scranton, Miss.

The following resolutions were adopted by Columbia Sunday-school, Nov. 7, 1897:

Whereas, God, in his wisdom, has seen fit to call from us Hon. T. S. Ford, one of our former teachers, and one who, for many years, has given of his talent and substance to our spiritual welfare; therefore, be it

Resolved, By the members of the Columbia Sunday-school, that while we deeply deplore the fact of his death, we bow in submission to the will of Him who is too wise to err and too good to do wrong.

Resolved, That we tender our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family, and commend them to the care of the heavenly Father in whom the deceased trusted so implicitly.

Resolved, That while we believe our loss is his eternal gain, yet our hearts are saddened because we shall see him no more in our Sunday-school and church, as expressed in a recent letter to a friend, was never realized.

W. F. FERRILL, for Com.

REV. D. I. PURSER.

The following resolutions were prepared by a committee appointed by the Y. M. C. A. at a recent meeting:

On the twenty-second of October, 1897, our beloved brother fell in the harness, at the post of duty and of danger. Away from the city at the outbreak of yellow fever, although unacclimated, he hurried back to share the peril with his people, and to condole with them in antipated sorrows. Aware of his exposure, he went as resolutely to his work as he had in the war faced shot and shell, content with the Master's will, if he must fall.

This association, of which he was a warm advocate and friend, an active and zealous member, composed of representatives of all branches of the Christian Church, and serving a common Lord and Savior, do, with the whole church, mourn the loss of a brother beloved, and an able minister of the New Testament; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while, as an association, we bow submissively to the will of Him who holds his own stars in his own hand, and whose royal prerogative it is to remove them as he may see fit from the earthly to the celestial sphere, we do deeply lament the loss suffered in his transmission, by the church general, his own denomination, his charge and family, and ourselves.

Resolved, That we will remember his wise and loving words to us at our entrance to our present home, in which he sketched for our young men the ideal character built along scriptural lines and rising from the twin foundation of the new birth and faith in the crucified.

Resolved, That his faithful life and heroic death furnished signal illustration of his fitly chosen theme, and shall be a constant inspiration to similar deeds of kindness and courageous devotion to duty.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with that branch of the church which has lost in him an eminent representative and wise counselor; the church, which laments its broken pastoral ties, and the family, which weeps the irreparable loss of a noble brother, affectionate husband and loving father, and commending each and all to the great Elder Brother's sympathy, we hope and pray the mantle of the selected Purser, with a double portion of his spirit, may, in accordance with the wish of the widowed wife and mother, fall upon her and his two fatherless children.

NEWSOM—MRS. UNA NEWSOM (nee Singletary) was born June 28, 1872; was married to Mr. Samuel Newsom, of Tangipahoa, May 5, 1892, and departed this life Sept. 16, 1897.

Hers was a brief, but beautiful life. From early childhood she began to develop those traits of character which made her the gentle, unselfish, accomplished woman that she was. Though always manifesting the characteristics of a Christian, she did not make a public profession of Christianity until after the death of her first babe, which was in May, 1895, from which time to her death she lived a faithful, consistent life. She was a loving wife, a fond mother, and a true friend. Those who knew her best loved her most. It was hard indeed to give her up, but God had said, "'Tis enough;" and though all that human skill could do was done to save her life, she passed away. She left a devoted husband, a little son and infant daughter (the latter has since joined her in the spirit world), a host of friends and loved ones to mourn her loss, but we sorrow not as those who have no hope.

May the God of all grace sustain the bereaved husband, and may the influence of that life he so fondly cherished ever be to him a beacon light guiding him into that blessed abode whither she whom he loved is gone!

Her friend and former pastor,
R. W. TUCKER.

SHARBROUGH—On Sept. 4, 1897, Bro. and Sister Frank W. Sharbrough, of Campbellsville, Miss., had born to them a sweet little baby girl. The children named her DORA, and became very much attached to her. She had also found a tender spot in the hearts of mama and papa, and all felt like home would be so lonely without her. Mama said she "felt like she had come to stay;" but God, in his wise providence, saw best to let them keep her only two months, and Nov. 3 took her to himself. We commend the bereaved to Him who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me."

CHRIST'S METHOD.

Ministers and Sunday-school teachers make a sad mistake when they direct their main efforts against particular sins, instead of striking at the source of all sins—a godless, unconverted heart. Make the tree good, and the fruit will be good. Many a drunkard, disgusted by his own loathsome vice, has made a solemn resolution to break off his evil habit, but has not gone the whole length of seeking a new heart and the mighty help of God. He has attempted to patch a new habit on an old heart; and even his total abstinence pledge soon tore out, and the rent was made worse. So with all kindred sins of falsehood, lechery, Sabbath-breaking, covetousness and the like. A man may be shamed out of certain public desecrations of God's day, and yet hide away a Sabbathless heart in his own house. An eloquent appeal may wring a contribution of money out of a stingy soul, but he will lock his purse the tighter the next time and confirm his covetousness. What such a man needs is the melting power of a new affection. If he does not give from a right motive, his money may do good, but he is no better for having it coaxed or extorted from him. Barnabas gave his land to the Christian Church at Jerusalem because he had already given his heart to Christ. During my fifty years' ministry I have never seen a sinner patched up so neatly that he looked and acted like a genuine Christian.

Christ's method of dealing with human character is the only thorough method. He says, "Behold, I make all things new." If any man be in Christ, and Christ in him, he is a new creature. The rotten garment has been discarded, and the complete righteousness of Jesus has been put on, so that the shame of a spiritual nakedness has been covered. How sharply Jesus clove to the root of the matter with Nicodemus! He does not tell the inquiring Pharisee to go home and reform certain bad practices, but he said, "Ye must be born anew." Conversion meant a new character. The young ruler was able to show some very bright patches of virtue, and expected to be praised for them; but when the Savior offered him the entirely new garment that cost self-denial, but would bring eternal life, the poor fellow went away with his old, patched robe, crestfallen and sorrowful. God has ordained the great principle that no partion of sin and no new nature can be obtained except through an acceptance of Christ, and regeneration by the Holy Spirit. The supreme gift of the Lord Jesus is a new character. The apostles never wasted their breath on a gospel of patchwork. Their twofold text was, "turn to the Lord," which meant repentance, and "cleave to the Lord," which meant a life of faith and obedience.—T. L. Cuyler, in Independent.

Going to ceremonies, and singing, shouting, praying and enjoying, are not religion. Indeed, they may be a hindrance to religious development. They may turn the thought from that which the soul needs. They may prevent meditation, and close Bible study, and private prayer, and watchfulness and self-sacrifice. They may beget pride and self-sufficiency. We know a young woman who, after a season at a Summer school, where boat rides and lawn tennis divided the time with lectures on philosophy, really felt that these features were the equivalent of a college education. She was mistaken. We know a young man who, after attending a convention at which there was much enthusiasm, could not endure the services of his own church, or teach in his own Sabbath-school, because of the prevailing coldness. He sinned against his own soul and his own family, as he afterwards confessed.—Herald and Presbyter.

CATARRH CAN NOT BE CURED
with LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they can not reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it, you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials, free.

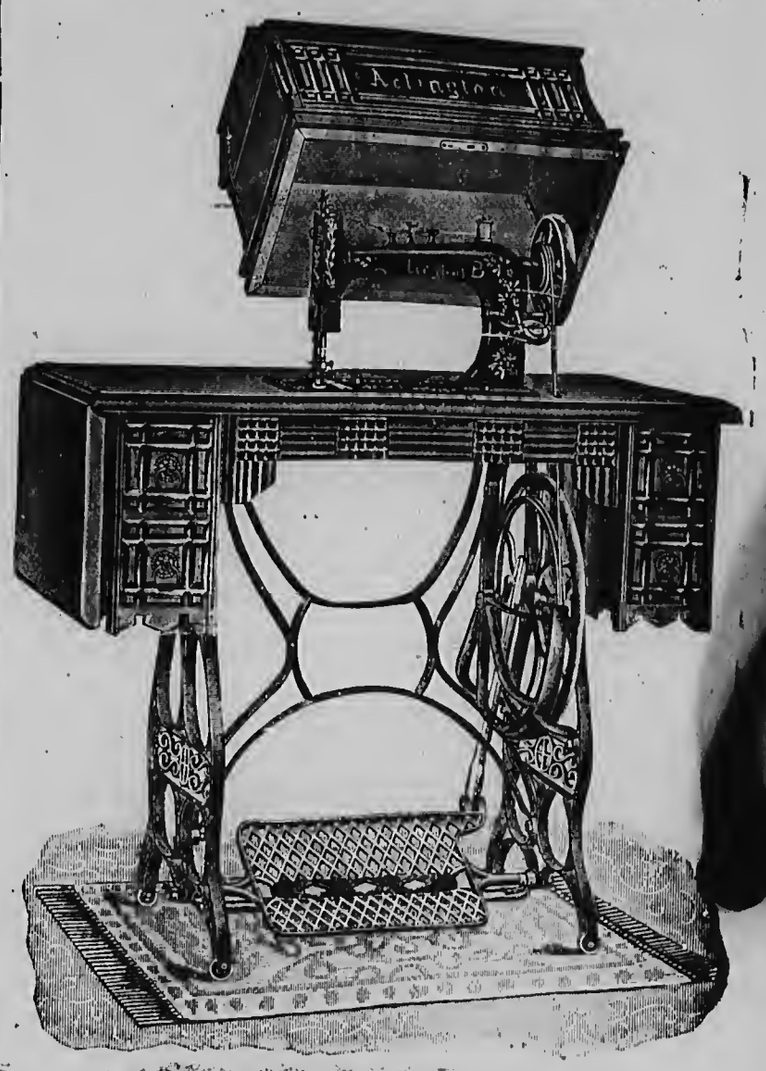
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.



The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take-up, convenient foot rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (two different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearing polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF THREADING—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell, without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

In explanation of Germany's action, it was stated that the occupation of the island was in retaliation for the maltreating of certain German missionaries.

Twenty million dollars is the sum which the French government proposes to devote to the Paris exhibition of 1900. Nearly $10,000,000 will be consumed by the construction of two palaces in the Champs Elysees, and those in the Champs de Mars, in the Esplanade de Invalides and on the quays. The bridges across the Seine are to cost $1,000,000, and the mechanical and electrical services another $1,000,000.

Some publishers are putting off Bibles on their subscribers which they claim are just as good as the Holman. There is no other as good. It has all the Oxford helps and the self-pronouncing feature besides. Every person, whether educated or uneducated, needs help in pronouncing Bible names. The Holman Bible gives you the pronunciation, not in an appendix where it has to be hunted up, but in the book itself wherever the name occurs. Paper and binding are excellent. See offer on our third page.

To Whom it May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mul-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of sores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. BLACK,

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. A CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY.

I read some months ago how one of your subscribers made money selling "non-alcoholic flavoring extracts." I wrote to the U. S. Fruit Co. for an outfit. I tried the flavors myself. They are in powdered form, and just lovely for ices, puddings, custards, cakes, candies, etc.

I canvassed around home the past six weeks and cleared over $26 a week; one day I made $8. I am going to work the surrounding towns this Winter. This is a splendid chance to make money. Every housekeeper wants these flavors, and most of them buy four kinds.

The flavors are perfectly pure, free from poison, and superior to the liquid extracts in every respect. I give my experience for the benefit of others who are like myself obliged to earn their living. A READER.

BE TRUE.

BY HORATIUS BONAR.

Thou must be true thyself,
If thou the truth wouldst teach;
Thy soul must overflow, if thou
Another soul wouldst reach;
It needs the overflow of heart
To give the lips full speech.

Think truly, and thy thoughts
Shall the world's famine feed;
Speak truly, and each word of thine
Shall be a fruitful seed;
Live truly, and thy life shall be
A great and noble creed.

LETTER FROM "GILDEROY."

This is one year that I have been entirely deprived of all the "kitchen cabinet" work. I am in a corner, away from all the main lines of travel, where a preacher, save the presiding elder four times a year, never comes. When he comes he tells me nothing. He looks wise, looks like he knew lots of things, but he keeps them to himself. He pumps me, or tries to, to find out what I think. I close up, too, and refuse to think for him—at least, to think out loud. He is in that corner, and it is his work, and he can do his own thinking and worrying. I am not burdened with that part of the work. I have been in the past burdened and bothered till I could neither eat nor sleep. He is in the "sweat-box" now, and let him sweat. I am sorry for him, and I pray for him, but I can't help him. If he can't get matters fixed, the Bishop will fix them for him. I do not know what prognostications the boys are making in regard to the appointments for next year. It does not matter much, for when the Bishop and his cabinet get done they will, perhaps, have smashed all the slates that have been made. "Kitchen cabinet" work is not nearly so intereating and exciting to me now as it used to be. As I grow older I am less inclined to guess at what may be. I am less anxious and excited about where I myself may go. All the worry I used to have was worth nothing. It did not amount to a row of pins. I do not want to go where I ought not to go, and I know nothing, or next to nothing, about the places to which I ought not to go, and absolutely nothing about where I ought to go. More and more am I perfectly willing to leave all this in the hands of God, in the hands of his agents for carrying on this part of his work. The Bishop and presiding elders are God's agents for fixing the appointments. I am confident the Bishop is a good man, and that he wants to do the right thing. I know all the presiding elders, and I know them to be honest, earnest, God-fearing men, who strive to do the best possible for each preacher and the best possible for each charge. I'd trust my case, character, purse or family to anyone of them. Fact is, I might trust my purse to anybody. There is not enough in it to tempt a thief. I know, just as well as I know my name, that each and all of these presiding elders are going to do their best to give the Bishop wise counsel. "But," says one, "they are men." Of course, they are; and I am glad they are men, good men. When I come to think of it, I am a man, too; and more, I am not half as apt to understand my own ability and adaptability to certain work as these men who have known me so long. They know me better than I know myself. So, when I commit this whole matter unreservedly to the Lord, to be transacted for me by his agents, why lie awake of nights bothering my brain about it? This would be holding back what I had, or profess to have, committed to my Master. Since I have grown older my presiding elders ask me what I want, or how I would like this or that; but no one of them ever got yea or nay out of me on this subject. I have no right, on account of my age, to pick my appointments, and I am not going to do it—not if I had the chance. The plan and economy of my church must not be upset for my accommodation. I am not an old man, but if I were, the Bishop and his advisers would carefully consider all that in arranging the work. I have noticed for long years past that men and women, as a general rule, do not know when they grow old. By the help of God, I am bent on one thing: not to superannuate in mind before I do in body. This happens to some preachers. They cease to study and swivel up mentally. After I am physically unable to travel I want to be mentally able to split hard theological knots. I have noticed that, as a general rule, the younger men often fall all to pieces about not getting a coveted place than the older men. This, however, is to be expected. It is one of the failings of younger men. I have noticed also that often the least competent men are the most ambitious about place and position. Modesty is a sure sign of greatness. As a rule, in religion and in the church self seeking and place hunting men come to no good end. It is right and religious to covet earnestly the best gifts, but it is foolish and sinful to be hankering after the best places. Any place where there are men, women and children to be saved is good enough for a man called of God to preach the gospel. There may be a poor support in some places, but the work to be done is just as great and important in one place as another. It brings just as much glory to God to save the soul of a poor, ignorant man as to save an educated, rich man. God is no respecter of souls. We set much store by some things that are of little worth or concern to our God. God rates me for my faith, my piety, my earnestness, my zeal for him and for souls, and for my love for and knowledge of his Holy Word. Some men rate me by the place I am at, by the money I have, by my dress, by the salary I get, by style, and by florid speech. GILDEROY.

"SOME QUESTIONS" ANSWERED.

In the ADVOCATE, of the twenty-fifth ultimo, Bro. L. E. Alford, of Rolling Fork, asks some questions which do not receive the attention their importance demands. He says: "What per cent. of the young men of the United States belong to some branch of the Christian church?"

I have in my library a book which should be in the hands of every Christian worker. It deals solely with this question. Its title is, "Dying at the Top." It is dedicated to the Y. M. C. A. of the United States, is published by W. W. Vansdale, 10 Arcade Court, Chicago, Ill., and costs: paper, twenty-five cents; cloth, fifty cents. In it I find this statement: "The National Committee of the Y. M. C. A. has sent out a printed statement, in which I find that but five per cent. of the young men throughout the land are members of the church; only fifteen out of every hundred attend religious services with any regularity, and that seventy-five per cent. never attend church at all."

The estimate is made on the basis of one-eighth of the population being young men. In 1890 the population of the United States was, in round numbers, 62,980,000. Thus, of the 8,000,000 young men in the United States, only 400,000 belong to the church, and 6,000,000 never darken a church door.

These are not the figures of a pessimist, but of one who has given years of study to this question, and gathered his facts from more than a score of States, through numerous thoroughly reliable agencies. Terrific as is this array of facts, every pastor who has studied his congregations for twelve consecutive months must say it is true. Here and there are noteworthy exceptions, but they are oases in the Sahara.

The first edition of this little book was brought out in 1887, or the first months of 1889; the second edition in 1890. In the Apology the author says: "The saddest thing about the work is, that it has told the truthful story of the whole land. Not a single person has arisen to deny its correctness, while from Maine to California, and from Oregon to Florida, letter after letter has come, saying, 'It is all true.'"

As to the causes of the church not getting hold of these young men, they are multitudinous; but I will not ask space here to mention them.

Let Bro. Alford, and all others concerned about the young men of our country, get this little book and read it. Let them study the question for themselves. Let them clip the daily papers for twelve months, and they will have an array of facts as startling as these given, and be in a condition to appreciate the cause and cure. B. F. LEWIS.

ORPHANS' HOME NOTES.

BY REV. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD.

Just as soon as the quarantine restrictions were removed we resumed our work of soliciting funds for the furnishing of the Home. The first place visited was where, on Sunday, Nov. 14, we had the privilege and pleasure of preaching to large and intelligent audiences. Notwithstanding the fact that Conference is near at hand, and there was much rounding up to do yet, a ready response in the shape of $75 50 was the result of the morning service. Rev. Joseph S. Oakley, my English friend and brother, is winding up his fourth year in great favor with his people. A handsome man with a warm heart and a very high conception of what is right, he will, in the future as in the past, make an impress for good upon every life with which he comes in contact. The young ladies, and also the teachers, of

EPWORTH COLLEGE

were out in "full force," both at the morning and night services, and also at the meeting of the League which we were called upon to address in the afternoon. Rev. J. W. Honnoll, president of the college, was absent in Arkansas, but his good wife was present to represent him. Bro. Honnoll has done a good work for the church. No man in the ministry has worked more faithfully and persistently. The presence of Rev. J. D. Cameron, the genial presiding elder of the district, added much to the interest of the service at night. He appears to be in good health, and is still happy in the work. The next town upon our list of appointments was

CARROLLTON, MISS.,

which place we reached Saturday evening, Nov. 20. Sister Reid Bingham was at the depot with her carriage to meet the agent and take him in charge, and it goes without saying that to be entertained in that home not only means kind attention and Christian courtesy, but an inspiration to do more and better work for Jesus in the future. Sunday dawned bright and beautiful, and large and appreciative audiences greeted us morning and night—the League service in the afternoon being also well attended. One hundred and five dollars and fifty cents was the result in dollars and cents of our visit to Carrollton. During our stay we also enjoyed the hospitality of Bro. and Sister T. H. Bingham, and Rev. L. M. Lipscomb and family. We met many other friends, prominent among which were Rev. W. H. Sanders and wife, of the Carrollton circuit. Leaving Carrollton Monday morning, we passed through Greenwood, Minter City and Clarksdale en route to the county seat of Quitman, whither we had been invited to preach and take a collection on Thanksgiving Day. The rain, however, prevented the large crowd and good collection which had been anticipated. Notwithstanding the mud and the darkness of the night, an audience greeted the agent at 7:30 P. M., and when all shall have been collected, the treasury of the orphanage will have enhanced in value to the extent of $25, because of our visit to Delen. We are indebted to Bro. G. C. Jones and his excellent wife (in whose home we were entertained), and also to the pastor, Rev. S. A. Brown, and family for many kindnesses. We thank God for the kind hearts and willing hands that are now at work, and pray that others may become interested and heartily co-operate in this "work of faith and labor of love."

On the Wing, Nov. 26, 1897.

Selections.

PULPIT FIRE AND POWER.

What is eloquence but truth in earnest? It is the mind's best words spoken in the mind's best moments. When God's truth gets full possession of a minister's soul, when all his sensibilities are aroused and his sympathies are in full play, when his soul becomes luminous until the interior glow blazes through every loop and crevice, when the whole man becomes the beaming impersonation of heaven-sent truth, then he is honestly and irresistibly eloquent. To this a great head is not always essential; a great heart is essential, and ever must be.

Where should we look for the most genuine realizations of eloquence but in the pulpit? Where is there less excuse for tameness, for heartlessness, for dull stupidity? Where can the strongest intellect find fuller swoop? Even a man of modern intellect ought to kindle when the Holy Spirit offers to furnish the fire. The ambassador of Jesus Christ has not only the loftiest of themes and the most powerful of motives, even the salvation of immortal souls, but his text-book is the most perfect of models. In it may be found everything that is most sublime in imagery, most melting in pathos, and irresistible in argument.

He may be always nurturing his soul amid those pages where John Milton, fed before those eyes which "had failed with long watching for liberty and law," beheld the gorgeous visions of paradise. He may even be amid the scenes which inspired Bunyan to his matchless dream and taught Jeremy Taylor his hearse-like melodies. Paul is ever at his elbow to teach him trenchant argument, John to teach him sweet persuasion; and a heart of steel must he have who is not moved to pathos in the chamber of heart-broken David or under the olive trees of Gethsemane. The Bible sweeps the whole circuit of human life, reaching up to the loftiest and down to the lowliest affairs of existence. The same divine pencil that portrayed the flashing splendors of the Apocalypse condescends to etch for us a Hebrew mother bending over her cradle of rushes, a village maiden bringing home the gleanings of the barley field, and a penitent woman weeping on her Savior's feet. What honest, earnest minister of God will hesitate to introduce into the pulpit a homely scene or a homespun character, a fireside incident or a death bed experience, or the familiar episodes of the field, the shop, the school room, and the nursery? If ever a man should cast off all manacles and speak with a holy boldness, it is the man who stands up in the name of Jehovah to utter the messages which the Holy Spirit puts into his lips.

Every true minister of Christ, whether addressing a cultured city assembly or a company of frontier men in a mining camp, ought to feel that he is surrounded by an unseen "cloud of witnesses." The light of eternity is playing about him, and right before him the judgment day, with its separation to the right hand or the left hand of the righteous Judge. His own hearers are to be in the innumerable multitude before the great tribunal. Perhaps their position there—either saved or lost—depends in some degree on the fidelity with which he shall present to them the only gospel that can save them. In view of such "witnesses" and such tremendous issues, how can any minister be listless or cold or careless or criminally indifferent? John Bunyan says that he went before his people always "carrying that first in his own conscience which he persuaded them to beware of." He was burning to save them from "everlasting burnings," and so ought every man to be who is set to be a watchman for souls. John Welsh, of Scotland, used to rise in the night and wrap himself in his plaid and pray earnestly for his flock. When his wife sometimes remonstrated with him he would reply, "O woman, I have the souls of three thousand to answer for, and I know not how it is with many of them." The preachers who enter the pulpit with that spirit will never lack power, and theirs will be the unfading crown which shall shine as the stars forever and ever. Happy is that minister who, as he lays down this brief article, can honestly say, "I am resolved that with the help of God my pulpit shall glow with that fire and be clothed with that power from on high."—T. L. Cuyler, D. D.

EXTRAVAGANT EXPECTATIONS.

A fair share of the unhappiness of life comes from extravagant expectations. Few of us find that reality exactly corresponds to our dreams. We discover that there is a seamy side to the work we thought we should thoroughly enjoy; that our friends are not quite the sort of persons we thought they were, and that the things we imagined would please us most lose some of their power to charm. This is the experience that makes cynics, pessimists, and that most disagreeable of all people, those with a grievance. But it is a fair question whether they are taking their early dreams too seriously. You say you were disappointed, but what right had you to build a castle in Spain and think that you could live in it? Moralists are always telling us not to be extravagant with our money. If we spend it too lavishly, we shall soon have none to spend. Would it not be a good plan for them to tell us, once in a while, how surely we may bankrupt our happiness by cherishing extravagant expectations, and then cursing our luck and having the sky of the soul constantly clouded by disappointment because things did not correspond to them? It would not be difficult to find a text for such a sermon. Is it not St. Paul who says something about the wisdom of not thinking of ourselves more highly than we ought to think, but of thinking soberly?—Great Thoughts.

READINESS.

This is the secret of success on a large scale. He who has carefully prepared himself is always ready. It is the failure to make thorough preparation that brings failure to many enterprises and to more lives. "What you do, do well," is a motto which, if adopted and rigidly adhered to, will lead any young man or woman to success. Improving spare moments in laying up stores of useful knowledge is another rule of equally great importance. "When," said Mr. Whipple, an intimate personal friend of Daniel Webster, "I was once walking on the beach at Newport with Mr. Webster, I asked him how it was possible for him to make so elaborate and powerful a reply to Mr. Hayne, when he had no time for preparation. 'No time for preparation!' exclaimed Mr. Webster. 'Let me tell you. Years before, when I was a young lawyer, with few clients to interrupt the tranquility of my office, I set myself to the careful and exhaustive study of the Constitution of the United States. I raised every question which I thought could be raised, and sought to settle it in my own mind. Among the questions which I considered was this one which Mr. Hayne raised in the debate. I gave long and careful study to it, and fixed my own opinions. When, therefore, this issue was suddenly forced on me, I had only to recall the arguments and conclusions of many years ago, and my speech was ready.' There was the secret of the great man's fame. By diligently improving his spare moments in a thorough study and mastery of that great instrument, he won the applause of the whole country, and was worthily named 'the expounder of the Constitution.'"—Religious Telescope.

CAUSE OF CHEERFULNESS.

Cheerfulness does not depend on one's circumstances or condition. It is a matter of one's spirit, not of one's possessions. A bright face and sunny looks are often seen on one who is in sickness or in bodily pain. They are often lacking in one who seems to have everything that heart could wish, in physical state or in outer surroundings. Many who have riches suffer more from a sense of poverty than many others who are penniless. Cheerfulness depends largely on how one looks at his lot and his possessions, not on what he has received from God. It is wrong to suggest that God is responsible for one's cheerfulness or despondency. God has given enough to every person to make him glad-hearted, if he will look at the things he has for which he ought to be grateful. God will not force a cheerful spirit on one who will not look at the bright side of God's gifts. It is for man to have that or to refuse it, as he chooses. If you are not cheerful now, in view of what you have or can have, you alone are responsible. No change of condition on earth or in heaven could in itself make you cheerful.—Sunday School Times.

A Bishop said to a young minister not long ago: "I am going to send you to a place where you will have a small congregation and but little pay, and yet I want you to know that I deem it a most important point. A school is there; you will have a chance to minister to young people in the formative periods of their lives. Some of them are out of the pale of the church, and others are from families in our own communion. You should deem it a great opportunity to minister to such a congregation, even though it may be smaller than that which you have been recently caring for. If you do your work well at the point to which I am about to send you, I am sure that, looking back upon it, and comparing it with other fields of labor, you will agree with me in my estimate of its importance." The principle thus impressed on the young minister is not changed at all in its urgency by the added fact that the minister was a Roman Catholic priest, and his superior who was commissioning him for the new post was the Bishop of his diocese. Special pains and care should be taken by every denomination which is represented in a college community to man its pulpit with the very best preacher that can be found. It is an inestimable privilege to speak, Sunday after Sunday, to a congregation made up in part of young and eager minds in quest of knowledge, and at the same time exposed to the unsettling and skeptical influences which are often, if not usually, associated with that quest. Every pulpit in a college town ought to be a throne of power.—Central Advocate.

THE YEARS.

BY S. S. CRYOR, D. D.

As ships that sail away upon the sea,
Bearing their treasures to some distant clime,
So sink our days beyond the mist of years,
That rolls above the ever-flowing stream of time.

"A shadow that declineth" says the seer;
A more than shadow in our lives are they;
A stream that, flowing onward, seeks the sea;
And in its rapid progress will not stay.

A dream, a flood, a tale that's lily told
By mariners are they who pray some camp-fire,
Whose flames make glowing shadows in the night,
Then slowly sinking into gloom expire.

An arrow cleaving silently the air,
Shot by some unseen hand with mighty power;
A post that swiftly flies away,
Bearing the message of a passing hour;

So pass the years, and on their bosoms bear
Treasures of love more dear than all beside;
White-winged ships that slip their moorings here
To glide away upon the ebbing tide.

We would not call these dear ones back to tears
To share the sadness of our lonely night;
Safe in the peace of God's eternal years,
They know no sorrow in that land of light.

THE SIN OF THE CHURCH—PART I.

BY LOVEALL.

Writers on criminology claim to have discovered that no two forms of crime are prevalent at one and the same time; that crime depends upon certain conditions, and each form of crime has its environments. Hence, those conditions favorable to the development of one form of crime do not encourage another form.

We have our epidemics of defaulting, lynching, suicide, murder, etc.; but no two of those have yet prevailed at one time to any considerable extent. And if two or more have been present at the same time, the circumstances which developed the one may, generally, be found not at all connected with another. Given conditions may lead up to one crime, and that crime may itself lead to another; but the first crime, if the conditions be known, will be always found to depend on environments other than those which lead up to the second.

If this theory be a correct one—and no one disputes it, so far as I know—then, why may we not look for a cause, or for causes, in all the unrighteous acts of men?

The suggestion that the cause of "all unrighteousness" is human depravity will not do, because human depravity is always present; but the crimes to which this depravity is susceptible are not always present. Some conditions must move that depraved nature to violence, and this is where the criminologists seem to have the best of the argument.

To avoid further discussion of these metaphysical questions, let it be stated thus: The depravity of human nature is generally, if not universally, moved to unrighteous acts by extraneous conditions. Envies and jealousies, fed and fired by evil gossipers, lead to fends, and those to murder. These envies and jealousies are born of some trivial (or great) conditions, and in these conditions the real cause of the murder exists.

This is true of all the sins which afflict the church within its membership. For some years I have been looking for the sin of the church, and the cause of it. Arson and burglary, murder and incest, drunkenness and theft, lying and defaulting, are not such sins as affect the prosperity of the church, or in any material measure retard its success. The one prevailing sin of the church to-day is "indifference." It is not universal, but it is general—an epidemic in the church, which has spread over the entire Christian community, from one end of the land to the other. It is in the ministry, and in the membership. The whole church of God is sick with indifference. If we can make a correct diagnosis of the trouble, and get at a correct understanding of its cause, we may be able to prescribe effectively for its cure and eradication.

There was a time in the history of Israel when indifference was upon all the people, who looked well after their own houses, but not after the "house of the Lord." "It is time for you, O ye, to build ceiled houses for yourselves, and let the house of the Lord go to waste." There had been a season of adversity to Israel, and in their great care for personal comforts they had lost sight of their personal responsibility to God, to care for his cause among men.

May it not be that the five years of depression under which the people have suffered is one of the causes which has lead up to this general indifference to all the obligations of church membership? Care for bodily comforts has been permitted to too much absorb the mind and occupy the hands. This has led to retrenchment at the door of the church. Going to church, praying and paying, are triplets which never part. The death of one is the death of all. Either may be sacrificed before the other; but when one is dead, all die. When these graces cease, there is not much left for the church. When one ceases, for any reason, to attend church, pray for its success, and pay for its advancement, one becomes about as indifferent as if one were dead. This cause has, perhaps, affected comparatively few people.

For the cause of indifference in another class, we must look to other conditions. It may be that ceasing to preach the doctrines of the Bible has infected a large class of people with indifference. If the Bible differs from any other good book, that difference is in the doctrines which it teaches—the being, attributes and perfections of the Father; the offices and work of the Son; the gifts and dispensations of the Holy Ghost; the future state, with its rewards and punishments, individual duty and responsibility to God, to men, and to the church. All these, and others, are cardinal doctrines, and to leave them out of your preaching is like leaving harmony out of your music. A ministry without these is a ministry to the heads, and not to the hearts of the people. For such a ministry very few men have adaptation. But any man, with clear head and pure heart, may minister effectually in these great revealed doctrines of God.

But suppose you have ability to minister to the heads of men. If you strike their fancy, and never run against their ideas, you will succeed. When you want them to pay, pray, or attend extraordinary services at your church, your hold upon them will be apt to slip. Beside, you offer them no more than they can get at the lecture, theatre, club, etc., and they become indifferent to so much work on the same line. God gave us his Book, with all there is in it, and if we expect to hold men to it, we must preach it—preach it in all its fullness of blessedness and terror.

But look again, for there are many indifferent ones who have not become so for the reasons last mentioned. We have, in our church, a very popular and much commended institution—"the nursery of the church"—which, on account of its mis-use and non-use, may have become the innocent cause of the greater part of the indifference at present so prevalent in the church.

At present it is a misnomer to call the Sunday-school "the nursery of the church." It might be—should be—but it is not. It is the nursery of indifference (as it is generally worked). So far as the children are concerned, it has come to take the place of the church for a few years, without any of the vows and attendant obligations of church membership. It is a competitor against the church for the patronage of the children. It takes them from the pews of our churches by engaging them for a few minutes on the Sabbath day—in a perfunctory way—releasing them from religious instruction for the remainder of the day. It teaches them to be frivolous in the house of the Lord by an indifferent discipline during the recitation hour. It teaches them to ignore and disregard church work by engaging them in other work than for the church. All our enterprises—missions, church extension, education, support of widows and orphans, ministerial support, and the like—are ignored by the average Sunday-school.

Can such a course produce anything other than indifference to everything belonging to church membership? Nay, more. Could a better plan to raise up a generation thoroughly inoculated with indifference be adopted?

(To be continued.)

INDIAN MISSION.

The Conference will soon be here, and hence what we do for the Indian Mission in Mississippi must be done quickly. We have not paid our missionary Choctaw half as much yet as we ought to pay him, and it is only a little over a month to the time of Conference. Bro. J. H. Holland, the white missionary to the Indians, says our Choctaw preacher, Bro. Jim Johnston, is doing about all he can for his people, and that he needs an overcoat, and also owes some on his pony he rides to preach to the Indians, and he also needs our help to support his family, as he is giving right smart of his time to the work.

Now, who will help us in this good work? Who will help to buy the overcoat and pay for the horse? And who will help pay his salary? Please send amounts to me at once, if you can, and if not, hand it to your pastor to be handed to me at Conference. Please do not forget or neglect this important work. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Please remember that these are truly God's poor.

Brethren and sisters, do not be afraid to put your money in the Lord's treasury. It will be safe.

Send as before—postoffice order on Hermanville, or registered letter to me at Hermanville, Claiborne county, Miss. I ask an interest in the prayers of God's people for the Indian Mission in Mississippi.

Yours for the salvation of all men,

A. D. MILLER.

Hermanville, Miss.

IN MEMORIAM.

Whereas, It has pleased God, in his all-wise providence, to pluck from earth our beloved sister, Mrs. J. C. Mimms, who, after ten weeks of painful, patient suffering died Nov. 5, 1897; therefore, be it

Resolved, By the members of the Arcola Sunday-school, that in the death of her to whom the tribute of these lines are offered the Sunday-school has lost one of its most earnest and punctual members, the M. E. Church has been deprived of one of its most efficient laborers; the place she has left vacant extends far beyond the home circle hallowed by her presence and teachings.

Resolved, That it is with no ordinary feeling of sorrow that we announce the death of dear Sister Mimms. We deeply mourn our loss, yet feel that our loss is her gain. We are confident that she has gone to that home

"Where no storms ever beat on that glittering shore,
While the years of eternity roll."

Resolved, That we tender her bereaved family, especially her true and devoted husband, our pastor, our heartfelt sympathy, who we know will look to the blessed Savior "who doeth all things well;" for she has gone out of the shadows of sadness into the sunshine of gladness, into the light of the blest.

Oh, hearts that are anguished and falling,
Oh, hands reaching out for a guide;
Her strength and her soft touch bewailing
From over the river's deep tide.
Comes that voice yet once more thro' the blossoms
Breathing clear for the lips that are dumb
That key note of her teaching and serving.
"Dear ones! occupy till He come."

Resolved, That a copy of the ADVOCATE be sent the family, and that these resolutions be put on the Sunday-school Minutes.

MRS. J. B. WILLIAMS,
MISS MARY RUSSELL,
DR. E. A. CHEEK,
Committee.

INDIAN MISSION CONFERENCE.

The Indian Mission Conference of the M. E. Church, South, for the year 1897 is past, and your scribe has been here for an entire Conference year, barring a short vacation in Mississippi at the old home during the early Summer. In this year I've seen every side of life in the Indian country, and believe I can make some estimate of our work in this section.

I have not changed my opinion that I first formed in regard to the greatness of the future of this country and the opening for our church in the Territory embraced in the Conference bounds. It is a great country of remarkable fertility and a breadth of resources unsurpassed in the whole breadth of this continent. It will at no very distant day be a State in the American Union, and when it is it will be one of the greatest.

The question is, What are we doing here? This country belongs to Southern Methodism before any other Christian church. We are stronger than any other; have more and better workers in the field than any other. For these reasons our responsibilities are greater than any other.

I wish, Doctor, you could have looked in on our Conference in Muskogee. It is a fine-looking body of men, about one hundred strong, exclusive of laymen and "on trial" men. There is much talent in the body, and our own Mississippi is represented by Brewer, Lovett, Butler, Atkins, Rogers, and others. Here is A. T. Galloway, familiar to Louisiana Methodists and others, readers of the ADVOCATE, in other years. The Conference is composed largely of men of talent, while their zeal is wonderful. These Methodist preachers will give the moral tone to the State that is to rise up from the ashes of the five civilized tribes that have been consumed by the march of modern civilization, with its sins of lust, debauchery, and greed. I believe they will do their work nobly, like men. There is abundance of reward for him who labors here as a true man should. It may not be just yet, but the laborer shall have his wages. Our church is in the front in the matter of education, with high-grade collegiate schools. This work is a most necessary one in view of the many "isms" that are abroad in this country. We are bound to educate if we are to hold our own, and the church has planned wisely and executed nobly in this mission field. A list of the denominations that are at work here is almost enough to make a man's head swim—the M. E. Church, the M. E. Church, South; the Protestant Methodist, Congregational Methodist, Missionary Baptist, Free-Will and Campbellite Baptist, and in this water class is to be placed the Godites, then the Old-School and Cumberland Presbyterians, Roman Catholic, Christian Crusaders, the Salvation Army, and some others of less importance. This is the spiritual "Klondike" to which many have come to prospect and to dig. In it all the M. E. Church, South, is in the lead, with more members, more schools, churches and preachers than any of the others, and is marching grandly forward to fit this people for free and independent citizenship, and give them a true civilization. I wish the church in the South and East could realize what we are doing out here.

But enough for this time.

KOREAN MISSION.

We have called attention to the Korean Mission; but in a recent letter from our corresponding secretary, Miss Sallie Smylie, she requested more written, as it is not generally understood in our Conference. We deem it very important that special emphasis be given, more especially as a means to enlist the attention and help from the young people and children, and a most important work replete with great encouragements. It is not confined to the children. Help from any source will be most gladly received. Mrs. J. P. Campbell, who is to inaugurate the work of the Woman's Board in Seoul, Korea, in reply to the request to take charge of this new work, wrote: "I am ready to do what seems best to the Woman's Board. God has most graciously revealed himself to me in a remarkable manner, and all I have and am I yield to his control." The Board appropriated $1000 to purchase a lot, $2000 to building, $750 to one missionary. A lot has been purchased, and before very long the mission home and school will go up in Seoul. The name of this new building will be decided by the children of the Conference society raising the largest amount of money towards its erection, and the chapel will be named by those giving the next largest amount. Will not the young people and children of the entire Mississippi Conference, whether members of the society or not, help, and claim one of these honors? Let every district secretary make strenuous efforts to this end. Great impetus may be given to the work of the young people and children, which is the most important work, we think, just now.

While en route to Shanghai, Mrs. Campbell wrote Mrs. Trueheart: "I have had time and opportunity for most helpful study. I think I have never enjoyed such a time of sweet, heavenly communion as on this voyage. Pray that my new life in the Orient, wherever it may be, may be lived as He directs. The home church has been especially laid on my heart in prayer. How beautifully the great ocean of His love has been illustrated on this voyage!" How sad the thought that the apathy of the home church is still such that the heart of another great worker is made so sad! Oh, that the Holy Spirit would move all hearts to consider most earnestly and prayerfully the salvation of the entire world! Let us glean all the good that is desired by our heavenly Father from our recent sorrowful visitation.

CULLINGS CONCERNING KOREA.

Review of Missions, 1896: "Korea, the country to which the eyes of the world are now directed, was opened to Protestant missionary effort by means of medical mission work. . . . The M. E. C. Mission in Seoul, Korea, has opened a new hospital and dispensary, in charge of John Busteed, M. D."

In October, 1879, Rev. C. F. Reid, D. D, went from the Kentucky Conference to Shanghai. In August, 1896, he entered upon his superintendency of the work of the Parent Board in Seoul, Korea. In Annual Report, Mrs. Trueheart said he was one of the most helpful missionaries our China workers ever had, and promises to help all he can in our new work. "Mr. Collier and his wife, formerly one of our missionaries, would hail with much pleasure our entering Korea, as would Sister Reid."

Of Korea she said: "The difficulties peculiar to China do not obtain in this little country. The Koreans do not seem so averse to innovations; are less conservative, if possible, with practically no religion, except ancestor worship, and thus give promise of being more speedily won for Christ than does Japan. The climate is salubrious, flowers abundant, resources unlimited."

W. M. A.: Korea has nearly ninety thousand square miles of territory, twelve millions of people, and is extraordinarily rich in natural resources. . . . At present the Protestant missionary force in Korea numbers about ninety workers, representing six different missions. Since the work began in the fall of 1884 the Korean Church has had a marvelous growth. The total number of converts to the various missions is about two thousand, and regular preaching is maintained at fifty different places throughout the peninsula. A Holy-Ghost native ministry is being raised up, and the outlook is of the brightest possible nature. . . . In former days the king's birthday was a time of festivity to the official and noble classes only, the common people having no part in its observance. Last year, when the auspicious day came around, the Korean Christians suggested that special prayer and thanksgiving services be held in the different churches in behalf of His Majesty. On the afternoon of the day a grand Christian mass meeting was held in the open air outside the city wall, and over three thousand Koreans were present. Addresses were made by high noblemen as well as by Christian missionaries, and great enthusiasm was manifested. Coming spontaneously, it impressed the Korean government in a most pleasant manner, and His Majesty was especially delighted. This is but a hint of the power which the Christian community possesses in modeling the national life. Korea must, and will be won for the Lord Jesus Christ.—Rev. G. H. Jones, in the Missionary Review of the World.

W. M. A., September, 1897: "Korea, the hermit nation, seems to be fast losing its character of isolation, since the heir-apparent to the throne is to be sent to America to obtain a Western education. His royal father has committed him for a series of years to the care of the Presbyterian Board of Missions. The prince is about twenty years old, and we can not but hope and pray that much good may accrue to his country, as well as himself, from this sojourn among us."

MRS. E. D. JONES.

DIVINE CONTROL.

The thought that God controls the great universe in which we live is at once sublime and overpowering. We move as insects in the atmosphere of his providence. He speaks, and we come into existence; he breathes upon us, and we vanish as the vapor in the sunlight. We appear to have a little authority, but it is limited and short-lived. We are in his hands who worketh all things after the good pleasure of his will. We may choose, but our choice can not be worked out independent of him. Daniel Webster once wrote to a friend: "I hope you have been able to bear prosperity with meekness and adversity with patience. These things are all ordered for us better than we could order them for ourselves. We may pray for our daily bread; we may pray for the forgiveness of our sins; we may pray to be kept from temptation, and that the kingdom of God may come in us and in all men, and that his will may be everywhere done. Beyond this we hardly know for what good to supplicate divine mercy. Our heavenly Father knows what we have need of better than we know ourselves, and we are sure that his eye and his loving kindness are upon us and around us every moment." The great master at the bar certainly knew well how to make a pious and devout exhortation.—Zion's Herald.

GIVEN FREELY.

The best things of life have to be given freely, not from a sense of duty. You never can measure out friendship; you never can tell how much a man ought to do for his country; you never can tell what he should do for God. There is always that overflow, that abundance, which is chiefly valuable for us and is valuable to God as it comes as the free-will offering of our hearts. You say of a certain person that he is just, implying you don't quite like him. You say of another person that he is generous, meaning that you do like him. It is because of that which he does beyond what he is obliged to do.

If there is any life where this applies with the utmost force, it is to the religious life. Your piety must make the cup overflow. If you do exactly your duty, and nothing else, your life is no comfort to you and little help to anyone else. You want something of joyousness and freedom in it, and then it tells.—Alexander McKenzie.

In the home of God, of which Christ speaks, we shall all find God. We shall find him always; find him without painful and wearisome search, we shall never lose him. In what ways God will make his presence perceived and felt by us, we can not tell. But to those of us whose chief trouble is that our vision of God is continually clouded, that our sense of his presence is dull and vague at the best, and is often lost altogether; that we are so wanting in love for other men and in spiritual perception that we fasten upon what is most imperfect in them, are vexed by it, irritated by it, repelled by it, instead of seeing in them possibilities of an infinite perfection . . . to those of us, I say, whose chief trouble it is that we seem to be living in a world where everything conceals God from us, it is a hope which kindles the heart to rapture that the time is coming when we shall live in a world where everything will reveal him. —R. W. Dale.

Have a mission in life. Be of some account. Do not court responsibility, neither shirk it when it is laid upon you. See God's hand in every movement, and note its bearing upon you personally. He has use for you somewhere, and often where you least expect. Fall in line with his will from time to time. He may not have a conspicuous place for you to labor, but he will bring out, if you follow his guidance and are faithful, your talents in the sphere where you can do the best for him and for others.

Praying and giving are appropriate and valuable adjuncts. Where they go hand in hand, as in the case of Cornelius, the one brings down answers of peace, and the other becomes a "remembrance in the sight of God." Grace, mercy and salvation come to the individual and his home, and go out thence in rich and saving blessings to others.

Whoever would govern a child must first govern himself. A word spoken hastily, a reproof given in anger, may be the beginning of alienation, or a lesson in passion, of which the unhappy fruits will appear long after.

"What shall I do for Christ?" asked a young disciple of Bishop Selwyn. The brief answer was, "Go where he is not and take him with you."

Some publishers are putting off Bibles on their subscribers which they claim are just as good as the Holman. There is no other as good. It has all the Oxford helps and the self-pronouncing feature besides. Every person, whether educated or uneducated, needs help in pronouncing Bible names. The Holman Bible gives you the pronunciation, not in an appendix where it has to be hunted up, but in the book itself wherever the name occurs. Paper and binding are excellent. See offer on this page.

To Whom It May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mul-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of sores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. BLACK,
Editor Christian Advocate.

A POOR PLAN IN SPEECH-MAKING.

It is a good thing to say what you mean, and to mean what you say. It is even a better thing to make those who hear you believe that you are doing this. It is worth your while to be careful not to say what you do not mean, and what no one who hears you will believe, or what they will be sure to find out is not so. For instance, if you are called on to speak at a late hour in the evening, at a public meeting, or at a banquet, or on any other occasion when it would seem that quite enough has been said already, do not preface your remarks by the statement that you will be very brief, or that you will not attempt an address or a speech, owing to the lateness of the hour or the fullness of preceding remarks. If you do this, you will probably speak longer than was expected of you, and longer than you yourself think. It will seem to others that you are trying to deceive them, and you will suffer from it. If, indeed, you are not going to speak long, show that by your brevity, but say nothing about it in advance. So, again, if you have to speak without preparation, do not tell of it at the beginning. It either will be evident before you get through, or it will not. Let your hearers find out the truth for themselves. There is no exception to the safe rule in these matters. It is always a loss to the speaker, and a cause of irritation to the hearers, to have time misused by prefatory statements that are quite unnecessary or are wholly false. Do avoid harming yourself and annoying others by such folly.—Sunday-School Times.

SERMON ILLUSTRATIONS.

A study of the illustrations used by Christ and Paul, and by nearly all eminent pulpit orators of the church, shows that in illustrating the thought of their discourses, whether spoken or written, they seized upon the simplest and most commonplace facts of every-day life. The world of nature, which all men perceive with more or less acuteness, has ever been a favorite field from which to cull flowers of illustration. The affairs of common life also have feathered the pointed shaft which went home to hearts and carried with it a truth which of itself would never have found lodgment there. As compared with the power of men who use such aids to their preaching, the man who uses improbable stories and far-fetched comparisons is but beating the air.—Pittsburg Advocate.

RECALLING THE SINS OF YOUTH.

In a bitter personal conflict between two Congressmen in debate last week, one, by innuendo, threw up to the other an offense committed thirty-four years ago, in his youth. We are not surprised to learn that when the accused man had frankly admitted the facts, and declared that he had made full restitution, and had been able there and everywhere to hold up his head among his fellows, he had the sympathy of his fellow members of the House. It would be strange if he had not had such sympathy.

The rule of justice and charity requires that when a man has confessed a wrong, repented of it, and made all the restitution in his power, he shall be forgiven. Of course, this does not interrupt the course of the law, where the wrong is a crime under its provisions; but it does control human actions. There is forgiveness with God, with man and with society, and it should never be withheld when the conditions of forgiveness have been complied with. He who calls up to the reformed man his former evil doings, or attempts to use them against him, is himself guilty of a great wrong. Especially if error has been committed in the inexperience of youth, is it unjust to recall it? It should be allowed to sleep in forgetfulness. As we hope for mercy at the hands of God, so should we grant mercy to our fellows.—Pittsburg Advocate.

A RACE FOR OR WITH ROMANISM.

A petition has just been presented to Parliament signed by forty thousand persons, complaining of the unjust exercise of patronage in the Church of England by her majesty's advisers. It points out that out of thirty-four home bishops of that church they have appointed twenty High Churchmen or ritualists, and not more than five evangelical clergymen. Under those circumstances, the Lambeth Conference, that has just adjourned, was unable to discuss our Lord's High Priesthood, or the real presence, the Lord's Supper, or the confessional. The organ of the Evangelical Alliance points out that such subjects would be like a bombshell thrown into the midst, and declares that there is no true unity in the conference, and can not be with such discordant material; and if uniformity should be evolved, it would simply crush what is evangelical.—New York Advocate.

LUNA IS REALLY DEAD.

That the moon is a dead planet has long been believed by astronomers. Certain French scientists were ready to cast doubt upon this belief, and were becoming agitated over signs of what they thought were rivers and plants on that planet, when the great Yerkes telescope came into play to settle the matter in favor of the old faith. This most powerful telescope, when turned upon the moon last week, failed to reveal to the eyes of two of the most experienced astronomical observers of the country any sign of air, vegetation, water, or other evidence of any kind of the existence of life. Each of the observers made his own independent observations, and both agreed exactly in their conclusions. The great instrument gave clearer views than had heretofore been had, and revealed more of detail on the face of the moon, but nothing actually new was added to our selenographers' charts.—Pittsburg Advocate.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. J. M. Beard, Mount Carmel, Miss., Nov. 20, 1897: "I have been quarantined in this and adjoining counties for two or three months past, but have been constantly busy holding revival meetings, which I believe I can say have in every instance been revivals indeed. Please say in the ADVOCATE that my address has been changed to 1327 Baronne street, New Orleans."

Rev. W. M. Williams, Gallman, Miss., Nov. 23, 1897: "Yesterday, at Bethesda, we buried Mrs. Fannie P. Enochs, wife of Capt. J. B. Enochs. Bro. W. B. Lewis assisted in the services. She was ready. A suitable notice will appear later. On the sixth instant we laid away in the grave the only son of Bro. and Sister B. R. Ford, J. B. Ford, who was nineteen years old and the joy of the home. We are moving along nicely. Our fourth quarterly meeting was very gratifying. Reported everything paid in full. This work has paid this year over $1300."

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Gunnison, Miss., Nov. 22, 1897: "Our women, led by Mrs. G. L. Wrenn, recently determined to do something for our Orphans' Home. The result was, they got a contribution of some kind from every family in the community. Jew and Gentile, saint and sinner, heartily contributed goods and money to the amount of $50 or $60. The women met and made a large box of clothing, such as children need, and the railroad company gave them free transportation for the box to Water Valley, Miss. Two little boys asked the privilege of putting a dime in each pocket of some coats they gave, with the hope that some orphan boy's heart would be made glad. God has been good to us during this year of severe trials. We have never experienced such a sense of the divine presence."

Rev. Robt. J. Harp, Lake Charles, Nov. 20, 1897: "There is an unusual demonstration of the power of the Holy Spirit in Broad Street Methodist Church, Lake Charles, La. The pastor and people have been working for months under many discouragements to bring about the conditions to make it possible for a successful forward movement. Dr. Leftwich is now with us and is preaching with great power and directness the essential doctrines of the gospel. The large audience-room has been well filled every evening; Sunday night many went away for want of room. The doctor uses no slang, no clap-trap, no sensational methods, but depends on the enduement of the Holy Spirit and the power of the truth. The city is greatly stirred; a number have been reclaimed; some have been converted; many professors, who when weighed in the balance found themselves wanting, have determined hereafter to come up to the Bible standard, and we are anticipating a great harvest."

THREE MEETINGS.

Our revival meetings at Ripley and Shuqualak, Miss., were fine, but the one at Stone, Ala., was one of tremendous power. It afforded me much pleasure to be with the good people of Ripley again. Bro. Wyatt, one of our most successful station preachers, is doing a grand work there. He, his cultured wife and sweet little girls are very much loved in Ripley.

Bro. Patterson has done a fine year's work on Hebron circuit. He has a royal people to serve, and they are so kind and thoughtful of their pastor. Nearly all of that section of rich country is owned and settled by good Methodist people. We found Bro. Tumlin tumbling. That man don't let any grass grow in his path. Bro. Tumlin is a consecrated man and full of zeal for the Master. He is a strong preacher, and looks well after all the interests of the Methodist Church. We have not found a man, anywhere, more popular as a pastor. The whole town is in love with him. His wife is also a fine Christian worker, and the people seem so fond of her.

We had the pleasure of meeting Bro. Randolph, and hearing him preach twice. He gave us two sermons of great thought and Holy Ghost power. He is very much elated over his new church. We believe it is now the nicest church in the Conference.

I pray the blessings of God upon the brethren, and hope to meet all of them at Conference.

Disease weaves its web around people a little at a time. They are not dangerously ill all at once. The beginnings of illness are mere trifles. First a little indigestion, perhaps; or headaches; or an occasional bilious turn. It is hard to realize how you are being tangled up in the strands of sickness until you are fairly caught.

Nearly all serious illnesses begin with some stomach or liver trouble, or with costive condition of the bowels. These functions have got to be put in good condition before there can be any recovery from any disease no matter what its name or nature, and it is because Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery acts directly upon the liver and digestive organs that it has such a marvelous effect upon all diseases of malnutrition.

It gives the digestive system power to assimilate nourishment and make good blood; it drives out bilious poisons; it creates the red, vitalizing, life-giving elements in the circulation; and builds up the weak and wasted places in every corner of the constitution.

Taken in conjunction with Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, it relieves obstinate constipation and keeps the bowels in a perfectly natural condition.

Mrs. Ella Howell, of Derby, Perry Co., Ind., writes: "In the year of 1894 I was taken with stomach trouble—nervous dyspepsia. There was a coldness in my stomach, and a weight which seemed like a rock. Everything that I ate gave me great pain. I had a bearing down sensation; was swelled across my stomach; had a ridge around my right side, and in a short time I was bloated. I was treated by three of our best physicians but got no relief. Then Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery was recommended to me and I got it, and commenced the use of it. I began to see a change for the better. I was so weak I could not walk across the room without assistance. I took Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and his 'Favorite Prescription' and one bottle of the 'Pleasant Pellets.' I began to improve very fast after the use of a few bottles. The physicians who attended me said my disease was leading into consumption. I had quite a cough, and the home physician gave me up to die. I thank God that my cure is permanent."

"BURIED BY BAPTISM."

Immersionists all sot much store by the two passages in Pani's writings (Romans vi, 4, and Col. ii, 12) where occnrs the expression, "buried with him in baptism," or "by baptism," assnming these to prove concinsively that true baptism mnst be by bnrial in a "liquid grave." When vanquished at other points they are almost sure to take refuge behind one or other of these snpposed bnlwarks.

Whatever these passages may teach incidentally about baptism, no one but a careless reader can presnme to say that the apostle is here argning upon the mode of baptism. Nothing is further from his purpose. As Paul never elsewhere touches upon the mode of baptism, it is exceedingly improbable that in these two instances he refers to a particnlar mode. Writing to the Christians at Corinth, some of whom boasted that they were baptized by Paul, others by Apollos, and so on, he says, "Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel." Nowhere else does he lay stress upon forms and ceremonies. Some, in order to make the passages in qnestion more favorable to their theory, leave the context ont of view altogether—a method of interpretation by which almost any heresy can be proved from the Scriptures. Of all the sacred writers, Paul was the closest reasoner, and in order to get his meaning, it is necessary to consider, not detached sentences and expressions, but whole chapters and subjects.

In the sixth chapter of Romans, Paul's evident aim is to show the folly and wickedness of continuing in sin after having, through baptism, as the outward sign of inward faith and purification, publicly renounced the devil and all his works, and thus become mystically dead to sin. The comparison is not, as some would have us believe, between Christ's bnrial and immersion as a mode of baptism, bnt between the real death, burial and resnrrection of Christ and the mystical death, burial and resurrection of the believer. The theme elncidated is the necessity of a holy life as the resnlt of having died to sin and risen to holiness through faith, baptism being the outward means, the external manifestation of the bnrial, or putting away of the body of sin.

According to the immersionist view, "buried" here signifies immersion under water—a literal baptismal burial. The great majority of the commentators, however, hold that the thing emphasized is not burial in water, but a figurative or mystical bnrial, or putting off of the "body of sin," which act is outwardly declared by means of the ordinance of baptism, the initiatory Christian rite, which is the badge of Christian profession and the symbol of purification. Immersionists endeavor to make the nature of the burial hinge upon baptism, whereas the context nnmistakably shows that it is determined by the abandonment of sin, baptism being merely consequent upon and expressive of this sin-bnrial. It is extremely unreasonable to snppose that the apostle, while dwelling upon the successive steps of Christian experience, upon the transition from sin to regeneration, typified by the death, burial and resurrection of Christ, should abruptly introdnce the snbject of immersion as a burial, thus passing without warning from the figurative to the literal. If grammatical construction means anything, the apostle mentions baptism only incidentally as the means whereby we are outwardly and ceremonially freed from sin and incorporated into the body of Christ, not for the express purpose of indicating the correctness or incorrectness of any particular mode.

The immersionists assume, then, that the ceremonial bnrial of sin can take place only through immersion, on account of a fancied resemblance between plnnging the body under water and real burial. Let us bear in mind, however, that it is the pntting away of sin, its entire rennnciation, of which the apostle treats, and that baptism is merely the visible sign of the bnrial of carnality, the real burial being effected by the joint operation of the Spirit of God and the human will. As in real burial the dead and putrefying body is laid away out of sight, so in the mystical burial of the believer effected inwardly by regeneration, and declared outwardly by baptism as the sign of faith and purification, the "body of sin" is formally and publicly consigned to a mystical tomb, from which it should never be raised.

The clause in Col. ii, 12, "buried in baptism," is immediately preceded by these words, "In whom also (i. e., Christ) ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ." From this it is readily seen that the burial here mentioned is explanatory of and in apposition with the circumcision spoken of in the preceding verse. The burial of the old nature publicly manifested by baptism is representative of the inward change wrought by the "circumcision made without hands," which is nothing more nor less than regeneration. To say that "buried" in this instance signifies "immersed," is to disconnect it entirely with the thought in the context, and make the clause in which it appears parenthetical and forceless. In this instance, as in the sixth chapter of Romans, it is in the highest degree improbable that Paul would use a figure to denote spiritnal purification, as is the case, and in the same connection speak of a literal water bnrial so called, which could have only a very remote bearing upon the subject under consideration, namely: the abandonment and removal of sin through faith in Christ.

As Dr. Whedon, in his Commentary, says: "This mystical bnrial would be accomplished with equal completeness, whether the rite of baptism were performed by affnsion or immersion. For (1) Christ was not buried at all, but temporarily deposited in a new tomb preparatory to burial. (2) A bnrial is as well symbolized by affnsion pictnring the covering over of the body as by immersion. The amount of water ponred npon the body can make no difference. So in the parallel passage in Col. ii, 11, 12, so minute a rite as circumcision is the figure of an entire 'putting off the body of the sins of the flesh.' (3) Immersion, even if it represented bnrial, does not symbolize the outponred baptism of the Spirit. Affusion represents both." Through snbmission to any form of baptism, then, whether sprinkling, pouring, or immersion, we become outwardly dead to sin, separated from it, and identified with Christ, who baptizes us with the Holy Spirit, "the earnest of our inheritance."

WISE ABOVE WHAT IS WRITTEN.

If certain current theories of Providence are correct, the silliest people on earth are the Christians. They are continually thanking God for temporal blessings and praying to him for a continuance thereof, when in fact God has nothing to do with these things. Since he set the machine agoing he has had nothing to do with it except to see that it does not stop. Let those accept such a theory who can. We prefer the doctrine of the good old Book, that the Lord God Omnipotent reigns—reigns over the forces of natnre and in the affairs of men—reigns in the interest of righteousness, and that whether we can see the how or not, all things shall work together for good to those who love him.

Persons sometimes talk as if they had only one talent, and at other times as though they had many talents. They are variable in their estimates of their powers, and one hardly knows how to take them when Christian service is demanded. If a pastor considers them as "one-talent" men and assigns them subordinate positions, their vanity is wounded and they are offended. On the other hand, if they are treated as five or ten talent individuals, they become very self-depreciative, and think they are asked to do more than they are able to do. They want the honor accorded to the gifted, both socially and ecclesiastically, bnt when it comes to a proportionate giving and serving, serious objections are raised and considerable grumbling is heard. Bnt Christ calls for work corresponding to our physical, mental and spiritual endowments as well as to social standing and pecnniary ability.—Presbyterian.

Stick to your own church. The acorn that will blow about from place to place by the autnmn wind never takes root. It is only when it sinks down and becomes imbedded that it loses its life in the earth to find it again in the growing tree.—Presbyterian.

TESTIMONY OF A COURAGEOUS PREACHER.

The growth of wealth and of luxnry, wicked, wastefni, and wanton, as before God I declare that luxnry to be, has been matched step by step by a deepening and deadening poverty which has left whole neighborhoods of people practically without hope and without aspiration. At snch a time, for the church of God to sit still and be content with theories of its dnty outlawed by time, and long ago demonstrated to be grotesqnely inadequate to the domands of a living sitnation—this is to deserve the scorn of men and the ourse of God! Take my word for it, men and brethren, nnless you and I and all those who have any gift of stewardship of talents or means, of whatever sort, are willing to get np out of onr sloth and ease and selfish dilettanteism or service, and get down among the people who are battling amid their poverty and ignorance — young girls for their chastity, young men for their better ideal of righteousness, old and young alike for one clear ray of the immortal courage and the immortal hope—then verily the church, in its stately splendor, its apostolic orders, its venerable ritnal, its decorous and dignified conventions, is revealed as simply a monstrous and insolent impertinence!—Bishop Potter.

THE LEADERSHIP OF CHRISTIANITY.

Many catchy expressions are heard in modern church life, snch as: "The changes necessary in the Christian system to meet the needs of the age!" "Christianity mnst keep up with the times!" They sound well in the papers, bnt do they mean anything? Is it true that Christianity loiters behind the age, following in the wake of the civil and social progress? Is it not true, indeed, that she is the pioneer of nineteenth century civilization and has "blazed away" for modern culture? The necessity for man's conversion is as apparent as when Jesus said: "Ye mnst be born again." The Holy Ghost never becomes antiqnated; the sword of the Spirit has as keen an edge to day as ever it had. The need is for men to wield it with old-time vigor. . . . The religion of Jesus portrays ideals in human conditions to which the world looks with longing eyes. Society will be np to date only when she incorporates in her life the principles of "the old time religion."—Rev. R. L. Patterson, pastor First Church, Keoknk, Iowa.

ABOUT APPOINTMENTS.

The College of Bishops of the M. E. Church (North) made the following deliverances at their session:

"The Bishops nnanimously agreed that nominal appointments, being of doubtful legality and also inexpedient for other reasons, should not hereafter be made.

"They also agreed, in view of the liability to a misapprehension of the facts and the intentions leading to a contrary course, that it is expedient to seek information concerning persons proper to be appointed presiding elders by private consultations only, and not in the open Conference.

"By order and in behalf of the Board of Bishops,

"EDWARD G. ANDREWS, Sec."

New York, Nov. 4, 1897.

"SPECIAL GIFTS"

A correspondent writes of one of our prominent Baptist ministers: "He once said to me that he did not know how to sympathize with people, bnt felt that it was his special gift to oppose error." "Such a gift," onr correspondent very aptly adds, "is dangerous, and often creates fancied error in order to gratify its power."—Religious Herald

And there is danger that a Methodist preacher may construe his promise "to drive away all erroneous and strange doctrine" to mean that he is to "drive away" at everything and everybody that is not in strict accord with his own peculiar notions.—Baltimore Advocate.

The great thing which a young man needs in a crisis of temptation is to declare for the right quickly. Leave no time for temptation to accumulate. . . . It often requires a great deal of character to do that; not only a religious principle; but a strong character back of that.—Austin Phelps.

We think that it is worth repeating: the man who really has the most holiness says the least about it.

Work is progressing on the great telescope for the Paris Exposition of 1900. Its objective—a thin convex, with a long focal distance—will be 51 inches, by far the largest yet attempted, the Yerkes glass (40 inches) standing next. The Alvan Clark Company of Cambridge is making it. The tube of the telescope will be 180 feet long. The image will be received on a mirror and reflected to a screen so arranged that 600 people can see it at the same time. With this glass the surface of the moon, for investigation purposes, will be brought within one mile of the earth.—Zion's Herald.

Blessed is the man who has the gift of making friends, for it is one of God's best gifts. It involves many things, bnt above all is the power of going ont of one's self and seeing and appreciating whatever is noble and loving in another man.—Thomas Hughes.

By close observation of onr rising young men, we have been led to slyly snspect that it is not best to reach the pinnacle of greatness in one or two years. Better plod along awhile and still have in yon a great deal of ontcome.—Texas Advocate.

Next week our readers will be regaled with another of Miss Belle Kearney's delightful letters of travel.

The Thanksgiving sermon at Carondelet Street Church, by Rev. S. S. Keener, was strong, spiritual, and edifying.

Rev. J. E. Buck, of the North Mississippi Conference, has been transferred to the Southwest Texas Conference, and stationed at Amphion, Texas.

Our correspondent, Col. Loveall, will probably do what some other correspondents have recently sought to do and failed—stir up a controversy.

Bishop Galloway has not yet reached home. The quarantines kept him away until his Conferences came on; first the Memphis, then the North Georgia.

Rev. Patrick Henry Fontaine, of the Louisiana Conference, has been transferred to New Mexico, and stationed at Hagerman. He will leave for his new field about the last of December.

Miss Maria Marvin, daughter of our deceased Bishop Marvin, is doing much for the cause of Christ in missionary work outside of her duties, in the Wolff Cuban Mission, at Tampa, Florida.—Wesleyan Advocate.

A song in heart is better than a grand piano in a gilded parlor. Real riches can not be counted out in coin. We are rich in what we are. People are troubled because they live in back streets, bnt the alley is as near heaven as the avenue.—Dean Hodges.

The New Orleans Preachers' Meeting was honored last Monday morning with the presence of Rev. Mr. Edbrook, of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, of this city, and Mr. Sherrard, secretary of the Y. M. C. A., each of whom came upon an important mission.

"Do we need two Epworth League Secretaries—one for field work and another for the editorship of the Era?" was the question discussed at the New Orleans Preachers' Meeting last Monday. The discussion was one-sided. Not a single voice was lifted in behalf of a dual secretaryship.

At the recent session of the Northwest Texas Conference, Rev. Walter Spence was expelled from the ministry and membership of the church on a charge of heresy. So says the Texas Advocate. Which one of the devil's heretical fads has caught the brother the Advocate does not inform us.

The case of Mrs. J. D. Wilson against the Vanderbilt University in a suit for damages to recover for the death of her husband who fell through the elevator at the Vanderbilt Building some months ago, was concluded in the Circuit Court to-day by the jury bringing in a verdict of $7,500 in favor of Mrs. Wilson.—St. Louis Advocate.

A letter from Rev. R. E. Rutledge, bearing date of Nov. 22, brings us the sad intelligence of the death of Mrs. Fannie Cottrell, wife of Rev. T. B. Cottrell, of the Mississippi Conference, which occurred at their parsonage home at Lake City, Miss. Her death was peaceful and triumphant. We sympathize deeply with our brother in his affliction.

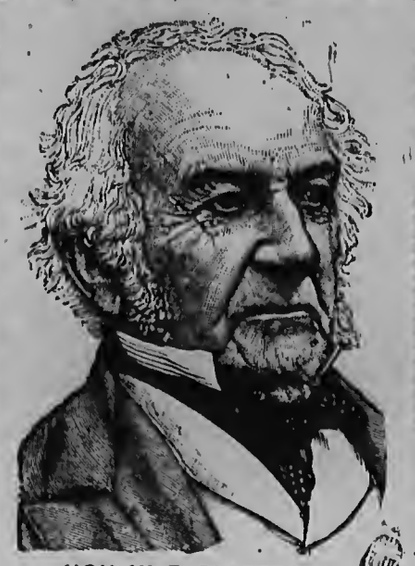
A subscriber who is a man of more than ordinary intelligence, and who is quite a prominent citizen in the section in which he lives, in renewing his subscription, says: "I find great enjoyment and profit in reading the ADVOCATE. It is one of the best religious papers in my knowledge." This is a sample of the tone of many letters recently received. We are glad to receive these words of commendation. We are thereby encouraged. We expect to make the paper still better as time rolls on.

In the Nashville Advocate, of Nov. 25, an article appears credited to "Rev. S. T. Willis, A. M., in the Ledger," which contains the following: "There are bnt three sections in which Thanksgiving Day is not officially recognized. These are Alabama, Louisiana, and Mississippi." Rev. S. T. Willis ought to inform himself before he goes into print. We can not speak for Alabama, bnt as to Mississippi and Louisiana, he is wide of the mark. How long it has been since Louisiana began to recognize the day officially we can not just at this time say; bnt in Mississippi every governor for many years has issued a Thanksgiving proclamation annually.

If your minister is not quite up to the mark, the more is the reason why yon should stand by him. Were he a great scholar, and an eloquent pnlpit orator, and the possessor of social gifts and graces, he would get along without your support. But if he is simply a good, plain man, not capable of producing sensational effects, but still doing his duty as he sees it to the best of his ability, he needs all the help that you can give him. We beg you not to weaken him by talking in such a way as to bring him into contempt and reproach before the community. Your thoughtless words, spoken without the definite intent to do harm, may be productive of very damaging consequences.—Nashville Advocate.

The eminent divine who wrote the following had discerned the spirit of the present age: "Not long ago a minister was certain of honor because he belonged to the clerical order and wore the clerical garb; as the saying goes, people respected the cloth. Bnt this is rapidly passing away. Respect for ministers who are worthy of the name is not, indeed, passing away; it was never greater than it is at present. But people no longer respect the cloth unless there is a man inside of it. If a minister is to be loved and revered, he mnst be able to dispense with all artificial cubits added to his stature, and coming down among men and standing side by side with them on his bare feet, allow his manhood to be compared with theirs."

Pnt the church paper at the head of your periodical list. It is surely unwise to cut off that paper and leave off the family little chance to get in touch with the great enterprises and movements of the church to which they belong. How can they be intelligent church members nnder such circumstances? It is especially important that they should be informed about their own work. It marches in the van. It does not belong to the reserve corps. It is on the line of battle where that line has been pushed farthest toward the enemy. Its movements mnst be prompt and steady. Its companies must move together. If it were a body of skirmishers, there might be room for much independent action on the part of each soldier. But this is the van of the army itself, and its success depends upon its unity of action. Each soldier mnst know something of what his fellows are doing. You must keep posted if you would be a good Methodist in these days.—Central Christian Advocate.



HON. W. E. GLADSTONE.

THE GREATEST OF LIVING ENGLISHMEN FOR THE FIFTH TIME PAYS THE YOUTH'S COMPANION THE COMPLIMENT OF SPEAKING THROUGH ITS COLUMNS TO THE PEOPLE OF AMERICA.

TO give more than is promised has always been the practice of THE COMPANION. The two hemispheres have been searched for attractive matter for the Volume for 1898, and the contributors for the year include not only popular writers of fiction, but some of the most eminent Statesmen, Scientists, Educators, Explorers and Leaders of Industry.

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION

For all the Family. 52 Times a Year.

The following partial list of contributors suggests the many fascinating features secured for next year's volume:

Distinguished Writers.	Story-Tellers.
RIGHT HON. W. E. GLADSTONE.	RUDYARD KIPLING.
HON. THOMAS B. REED.	OCTAVE THANET.
THE DUKE OF ARGYLL.	I. ZANGWILL.
HON. HENRY CABOT LODGE.	MARY E. WILKINS.
HON. JUSTIN McCARTHY, M. P.	W. D. HOWELLS.
HON. GEORGE F. HOAR.	FRANK R. STOCKTON.
LILLIAN NORDICA.	MRS. BURTON HARRISON.
PROF. N. S. SHALER.	HAYDEN CARRUTH.

And more than one hundred others.

A new Companion is issued every week in the year, and each number contains an amount of reading-matter equal to that in a 12mo volume of one hundred and seventy-five pages. Few books can be found that have the variety, interest and value that characterize THE COMPANION. See Important Offers below.

12-Color Calendar FREE to New Subscribers.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS who will cut out this slip and send it at once, with name and address, and $1.75, will receive:

Monumental Records.

THE GREATEST SPECIAL PERIODICAL OF THE DAY.

ITS SCHOLARLY REPORTS AND SUPERB ILLUSTRATIONS DO FOR THE PAST WHAT THE MOST PROGRESSIVE NEWSPAPER DOES FOR THE EVENTS OF THE DAY.

Monumental Records has its Correspondents in every field where ruins mark the Civilizations of the Past. These men are photographing and giving the results of the excavations which are being carried on by the great Exploration Societies, Museums, and Governments of the World, and the greatest explorers are its friends and promised contributors.

Monumental Records interests old and young; it appeals to the scientist and attracts the reader who is influenced through the imagination. Its presentations of the past come to some as a fairy story—a romance; to others as a scientific dissertation and a truthful record of the older civilizations. The scientist needs it because it is a record of fact. The Biblical student must have it because many of the discoveries bear on the historical records of the Bible. All interested in the development of man will find it an invaluable help.

Inscriptions are translated by the most eminent scholars.

To bring the wonderful Past before the intelligent masses of the Present, the subscription price of MONUMENTAL RECORDS is put at the cost of production. A year's subscription is only $1.50, its size is 10½x14 inches to admit of the most ample illustration and photographic reproductions are from originals, and the paper is the best manufactured. Taken in every way, there is no monthly published in any language that surpasses MONUMENTAL RECORDS.

It has already on its paid subscription list (it has no other) many of the most prominent men of this country. Those sending $1.50 for 1898 will receive the November and December Numbers of 1897 free; or the November and December numbers will be sent on receipt of fifteen two-cent stamps or a four months' subscription for fifty cents.

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, By the members of the fourth Quarterly Conference of Louisville circuit, North Mississippi Conference, of the M. E. Church, South, that we adopt this method of showing our appreciation of the faithful work done by our beloved presiding elder, Rev. J. H. Mitchell, the last four years as presiding elder of this, the Durant district, during which time he has discharged his duties faithfully as a servant of God and as an officer of the church, using his earnest efforts to build up the church and advance the cause of Christ.

Resolved, That we heartily recommend him to his new field of labor with the prayer that the fruits of his labors may be choice and abundant, and we extend to him our earnest desire for success, following him with our sympathies and prayers wherever his lot may be cast.

By order of the Quarterly Conference. W. J. NEWSOM.

Nov. 21, 1897.

We endorse all the proprietors say about the merits of Salvation Oil. It is the greatest cure on earth for pain. 25 cents.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

I wish to give public expression to our gratitude for kindness extended our people during and on account of our recent affliction—we can hardly call it "pestilence," for the fever was of so mild a type, or the treatment of physicians and nurses so well adjusted, that only two per cent. of deaths to cases occurred. Our beloved Methodist, Dr. R. J. Turner, treated about two hundred and fifty persons from every class and condition. Only one of these died, and he was nearly dead when the Doctor was summoned—a victim of dissipation. What other town or physician can show such a record? This moves us to gratitude unspeakable to the Father of mercies.

His human agents have also sent us good help. First came the voluntary offering from Bro. N. B. Harmon, of "West End," Meridian. In money he sent us $53.50; also a trunk and a box filled with substantial clothing. Generous boxes of this kind have been sent us by thoughtful and philanthropic people at Shubuta, through Mrs. Mary Stovall; and from Port Gibson, through Mrs. Ellen D. Drake. This will shelter many a form otherwise exposed to chilling winds. We received also $10 from the Methodist Sunday-school of Magnolia, Miss., through their kind superintendent, and $5 from Mrs. Alice G. Drake, of Baton Rouge, La., and $4 from Bro. D. P. Bradford, of Newton, Miss. All these amounts have been carefully dispensed for groceries and medicine to the most needy of every sect and color by our true sister of charity, Mrs. E. J. Turner, and myself. After these voluntary offerings began, and the great suffering of many became apparent, an interdenominational "Ladies Relief Society" was organized, and appeal was made through the secular press to aid their efforts. Many liberal responses have been made to their treasury, all which is being duly acknowledged by their president, Mrs. J. V. Toulme. To this association I handed $5, sent direct to me from Mr. Louis D. Freese, of Edwards. Coming from a place so deeply afflicted, we were especially touched—even to tears of gratitude. May God bestow on these, and all whose liberality abounds out of deep distress or poverty, every blessing noted in II. Corinthians viii and ix! Mrs. Capt. Moore, of Port Gibson, knowing the heart of childhood, besides her part in "the box," sent $4 to represent "Santa Claus" to the poor children. It will be used at our Mission Sunday-school (Harmon Chapel) in due time. For all these benefits we can only say, "Thank God and good people." As a thank-offering some of ours (Catholic and Protestants) send off to day $27.60 to Dr. A. E. Clay for the Waifs' Home at Beauvoir, which I had the pleasure of collecting.

Must defer account of our Thanksgiving service, etc.

Yours most gratefully,

J. P. DRAKE.

Bay St. Louis, Miss., Nov. 26, 1897.

A SEASON OF GRACE.

(The following should have appeared three or four weeks ago, but was inadvertently omitted.)

MR. EDITOR: It may be of interest to many of the readers of your paper to hear of the gracious season of grace our town has enjoyed for the past three weeks in the Methodist Church, conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. H. Shumaker, assisted by Rev. Theodore Copeland, of the North Alabama Conference.

It is considered by many to be the most sweeping revival our town has ever experienced. There have been upward of thirty conversions, and twenty-five additions to the Methodist Church.

Some of the conversions were remarkable in the extreme. Men who were considered the most hopeless were converted and began praying in public, and the spirit of the meeting was of such power that the leader could call on any Christian or new convert and have them lead in prayer. Little children of tender years would instantly lisp the name of Jesus.

We feel that a great work has been done. Our beloved pastor, Rev. J. H. Shumaker, has gained a great hold upon this people. This is his first year with us, and under his leadership our church has been remodeled at a cost of $1,600, and this of itself has been a stimulus to our meeting, and while our pastor has been the prime mover in preparing the church and people for the Word, too much praise can not be given to our young Bro. Copeland, who by his earnest appeals and entreaties captured all hearts. His mission will long be remembered by this people.

TREASURER OF BOARD OF MISSIONS.

The death of our Treasurer, Thos. B. Holt, rendering it impossible to proceed with business, it became necessary to take immediate steps to supply his place. At a meeting of the Board, by the call of the President, on the eighteenth instant, Mr. George William Caln, for several years assistant bookkeeper, was elected Treasurer, to fill out the unexpired term. Mr. Caln is a competent accountant, has an experience of nearly eight years in this department, and has a very thorough acquaintance with the business of the office. He comes of good Methodist stock, and is conversant with the policy of the Board in its administration of missions. The constant presence and counsel, moreover, of one of the Secretaries insures such adjustment of the office work that neither delay nor embarrassment need occur. All communications and remittances intended for the Treasurer should hereafter be sent to the Board of Missions, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Nashville, Tenn. It is important that this direction be strictly adhered to.

Subscriptions to the missionary debt are being paid promptly. Let the remittances continue to be sent in. There is light ahead.

GRENADA COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE.

I am gratified to report that our school is in a fine growing condition. We have already matriculated 48 boarders, and others are expected in the next few days. Grenada is showing her loyalty by giving me the best patronage I have had since my connection with the college. The school is already better than any previous year except last year, and the prospect is that we will have for the Spring term about as many as we can accommodate. Our health could not well be better, and the religious spirit prevailing is even above our usual high standard.

THE EDUCATIONAL COLLECTION.

The session of the Louisiana Conference having been postponed about three weeks, the preachers will have that much more time to devote to gathering the Conference moneys. We hope the brethren will pay due attention to the educational collection. We are doing a great work in educating preachers and preachers' sons free of tuition. The church ought not to allow the college to give outright fifty dollars a year to each of these students. The money comes out of the teachers, and they are not able to give that amount. This will be particularly heavy on them this session, because the proportion of free students to pay students is much larger this year than it has ever been. The statement may astonish some of our friends, but it is true, that at this writing thirty per cent. of our students are preachers and preachers' sons. It is nothing but fair that the church should help us bear this burden. There is really such a thing as "riding a free horse to death." If the preachers will emphasize these few facts, we feel confident our people will respond liberally.

THE CHILDREN'S ROOM.

How peaceful at night
The sleeping children lie!
Each gentle breath so light,
Escaping like a sigh.
How tranquil seems the room, how fair
To one who enters softly there!

Whose hands are those unseen,
That smooth each little bed?
Whose locks are those that lean
Over each pillowed head?
Whose lips caress the boys and girls?
Whose fingers stroke the golden curls?

Whose are the yearning eyes,
And whose the trembling tear?
Whose heart is this that cries,
Beseeching God to hear?
Whose but the mother's, in whose face
Love shows its sweetest dwelling-place?

Here hopes in beauty bloom,
And heaven sends down its light,
Which lingers in the room
Where mother says, "Good-night."
Soft treading by the sleepers there,
Her very presence seems a prayer!

THE INNER LIFE OF TENNYSON.

That the discipline of sorrow, pain and conflict is necessary to the noblest triumphs of art, literature and religion, quite as much as intellectual culture, capacity and toil, the recently-published "Life of Tennyson" reminds us anew. The troubled years of his early manhood were, in most respects, the antipodes of the comparatively tranquil, prosperous and honored latter half of his life, and yet of this contrast few outside the circle of his most intimate friends were aware till now. True from childhood to his native instinct and predestined vocation as a poet born, he was not to reach his divinely designated goal but through much tribulation. The story now recited by filial reverence to the listening ears of the world is as much an apocalypse as a memorial, and is chiefly interesting for the light it throws on the poet's inner life and on those circumstances and conditions which were mainly contributory to the making of the man.

The world has long shown an appreciative acquaintance with Tennyson's poetry. It has known next to nothing of the strange and trying experiences which brought depth of soul and clearness, quickness and breadth of spiritual vision to the poet, fitting him to be the true and trust-worthy interpreter of the best life, thought and purpose of his age.

Shadow more than sunshine fell upon the threshold of his life. One of twelve in a poor country clergyman's family, he could claim no more than his share of parental affection, solicitude and aid—though happier is the child who is cradled amid the ennobling and refining influences of a scholarly home than the child who is early dazed by the vulgarizing glitter of irresponsible wealth. His first ventures in that department of literature in which he was to shine for half a century as "a bright particular star," brought him few friends, little money, and still less encouragement. Early meeting the woman designated by Heaven, as he believed, to be the companion of his life and toils, he waited for her with uncomplaining hope and patience for more than ten weary years. At thirty-five he found himself by bad investment involved in financial ruin. Crest-fallen, crushed, the victim for a moment of a dire despair, his great physical strength—the envy of his fellow-collegians at Cambridge—at last succumbed to disaster.

Then suddenly the clouds parted and the sky above his head grew clearer than ever. An influential friend interceded on his behalf with the administration of the time. Sir Robert Peel, then prime minister, had never heard of Tennyson, but was induced to read his "Ulysses." Being impressed by the beauty and power of the poem, and having at his disposal a pension of £200 a year, he gave the bounty of the state to the man who by his timely sympathy was to survive financial misfortune and physical breakdown to celebrate in song for half a century those very principles of political freedom, justice and integrity which were so dear to the heart of the great statesman and for which he sacrificed so much.

Though from this point—about 1844—the path of the poet's outward life lay more in the sunshine, material prosperity, fame and honor never effaced the deep marks of the early self-restraint, struggles and disappointments. That discipline gave him self-mastery, self-poise, and a firm and sure vantage-ground from which he interestedly, but calmly surveyed the social, political, intellectual and religious movements of the eventful generations through which he lived. He sang of freedom and immensely aided by his song, as Whittier did, the popular enfranchisement which is perhaps the most notable feature of the century whose annals his name adorns. He rejoiced in every step of genuine progress, but hoped that reverence and religion might not be left behind in the rapid march of truth and science.

This simple, but profound faith in the eternal and unseen was reaffirmed, as occasion offered, to the end of his days. In later life he expressed himself amid the confidences of the family circle thus: "Yes, it is true that there are moments when the flesh is nothing to me, when I feel and know the flesh to be the vision, God and the spiritual the only real and true. Depend upon it, the spiritual is the real; it belongs to one more than the hand and the foot. You may tell me that my hand and my foot are only imaginary symbols of my existence, I could believe you; but you never, never can convince me that the I is not an eternal reality and that the spiritual is not the true and real part of me." "He spoke," adds his biographer, "with such passionate earnestness that a solemn silence fell on all as he left the room."

The man who in his works as a poet was one of the most notable embodiments of the century's culture, was in his inner life and convictions one of the noblest examples of its faith and religious fervor.—Zion's Herald.

Sweetness and Light.

Put a pill in the pulpit if you want practical preaching for the physical man; then put the pill in the pillory if it does not practise what it preaches. There's a whole gospel in Ayer's Sugar Coated Pills; a "gospel of sweetness and light." People used to value their physic, as they did their religion,—by its bitterness. The more bitter the dose the better the doctor. We've got over that. We take "sugar in ours"—gospel or physic—now-a-days. It's possible to please and to purge at the same time. There may be power in a pleasant pill. That is the gospel of

TACT AN ELEMENT OF POLITENESS.

The well-bred person always avoids doing anything to embarrass others in his company; and, more, whenever anyone does something contrary to "good form," he will undertake to divert attention from the mistake made, and to relieve the one making it of any mortification that might otherwise ensue.

At a dinner-party of ladies given by a prominent society leader of New York, one of the guests seemed not to know the proper use of finger-bowls, which fact became noticeably evident when she proceeded to drink from the one near her. Observing what had happened, yet appearing not to do so, the hostess followed the example of her guest, and also drank from her finger-bowl. That act was a most admirable exhibition of tact, as well as true Christian charity.

At a certain breakfast, a guest upset a cup, and its contents soiled the cloth. A neighbor quietly placed a vase of flowers over the stain and thus hid the blot with beauty.

When General Lee surrendered to General Grant at Appomattox, the latter, in order not to humiliate unnecessarily the great general making the surrender, declined to accept his presentation sword, by simply adding this to the terms, "All officers to retain their side-arms." Robert Louis Stevenson, the noted author, has given currency to this interesting anecdote illustrating the happy faculty of "dextrous tact." On one occasion, when Wellington chanced to meet Marmount, many years after the battle of Salamanca, the agreeable and courteous French marshal inquired of the duke what might be his opinion of the battle; whereupon his grace gracefully replied, "I early perceived that your excellency has been wounded."

Though the instances above given relate to people of high military and social position, they have a meaning and should afford most valuable lessons to those of us in the so-called humblest walks of life. Numberless opportunities present themselves every day for us to do deeds of love, courtesy, and kindly consideration akin to those above cited, thereby obeying the divine injunction: "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise."—Peninsula Methodist.

AT BED-TIME.

Don't nag the little ones when the bed-time hour comes. Make it bright and bonny as if it were the happiest place to go to—Slumber-land—at nightfall.

Some mothers are unwise enough to bring up the unpleasant things that have occurred during the day. Summing up, as it were, the short-comings, the mistakes and wrong-doings that the little ones have unfortunately committed during the day. It is a sad thing to see little ones going to bed with tears in their eyes and sad faces, and mothers, with frowns on their faces, giving good-night kisses in a sort of protesting way as if the little ones were not worthy of them. Don't read or tell sad stories or exciting ones to children as bed-time stories; better even nonsense stories than such. But there are always sweet bits of child-life to tell that are helpful and leave a happy thought in the heart.

"O, mama, I am so glad," said a child, who had asked for a good-night story, "that the little girl got her doggie back; if the dog catchers had taken it, I could not have slept a wink, I should have been so sorry."

And the little one, satisfied as to the way the pretty story had turned out, closed her tired eyes and went to sleep. A little bed-time frolic with papa, who is rarely seen these times except about the bed-time hour, is a healthful, cheery thing for the little ones as well as for big man papa. Fathers see but little of their children. They are off to business early in the morning, and they do not come home until it is nearly sleepy time for the children. It is a rare treat to have a frolic with papa.

The sorrows of little children are pathetic in the extreme; so many of them we meet among the poor with marks of care on their young faces, even their smiles are sad ones. Bed-time for such is devoid of all the attractions of the children of the more fortunate ones.

Weary they lie down on uncomfortable beds, the harsh tones of the overworked mother the last sound they hear as they close their eyes. And many times are they awakened by the angry tones of a drunken father coming home in the dark hours of night, and jumping frightened from their beds, they go off to hide themselves from his powerful hand. And yet, how often we read of touching exhibitions of such ill-used children's love and unselfish devotion to those wicked parents.

A great problem, and as yet an unsolved one. How can we make the bed-time hour for those neglected children happy and bright?

THE OLD LOG CABIN.

It is only shallow-minded pretenders who either make distinguished origin a matter of personal merit, or obscure origin a matter of personal reproach. Taunt and scoffing at the humble condition of early life affect nobody in America but those who are foolish enough to indulge in them; and they are generally sufficiently punished by public rebuke. A man who is not ashamed of himself need not be ashamed of his early condition. It did not happen to me to be born in a log cabin; but my elder brothers and sisters were born in a log cabin, raised among the snow-drifts of New Hampshire, at a period so early that when the smoke first rose from its rude chimney and curled over the frozen hills, there was no similar evidence of a white man's habitation between it and the settlements on the rivers of Canada. Its remains still exists. I make it an annual visit. I carry my children to it, to teach them the hardships endured by the generations which have gone before them. I love to dwell on the tender recollections, the kindred ties, the early affections, and the touching narratives and incidents which mingle with all I know of this primitive family abode. I weep to think that none of those who inhabited it are now among the living; and if ever I am ashamed of it, or if ever I fail in affectionate veneration for him who reared it, and defended it against savage violence and destruction, cherished all the domestic virtues beneath its roof, and, through the fire and blood of a seven years' revolutionary war, shrunk from no danger, no toil, no sacrifice, to serve his country, and to raise his children to a condition better than his own, may my name, and the name of my posterity, be blotted forever from the memory of mankind!—Daniel Webster.

A PERFECT CHAIN.

The only way to make a perfect chain is to fashion each separate link with skill and care as it passes through our hands. The only way to have a year at its close stainless and beautiful, is to keep the days as they pass all pure and lovely with the loveliness of holy, useful living. If we live each day well, all our life will, in the end, be radiant and beautiful.

"Hours are golden links, God's token
Reaching heaven; but one by one
Take them, lest the chain be broken
Ere the pilgrimage be done."

HOUSEHOLD HINTS IN MEDICINE.

Physicians constantly see patients who would be horror-stricken at the idea of being devoted to the whisky or brandy bottle, but who seem to think that there is no possible harm in resorting to wines of cocoa or kola with or without other ingredients. In many instances these wines contain such a large quantity of alcohol that in addition to the stimulating effect of their medicinal ingredients they produce an effect equivalent to that induced by a drink of whisky. They should therefore be employed only under the direction of a physician, and should a physician order them the prescription calling for them is not to be renewed excepting under his advice.

The same objections exist against the employment of those preparations of bromides and caffeine which are utilized under different combined names in the treatment of headache, and very much the same objection exists, too, against many of the so-called headache powders or tablets which are now placed upon the market for the use of the unwary. It is true that they do relieve headache in many cases, but they should be used with caution. You should remember that a headache is a symptom, not a disease, and that it is a symptom of many diseases, ranging all the way from so serious affections as Bright's disease and brain tumor to the headache due to lack of sleep. The removal of the symptom "headache" in a person suffering from Bright's disease may give such temporary relief that the patient will ignore the condition of his kidneys and go to a physician only when his state is so serious that his headache can not be put aside by these means, and when it is perhaps too late for him to gain any benefit from treatment. In many instances of nervous headache, quiet, rest, a suitable amount of sleep, and a proper regulation of the diet are what the patient needs, and using headache powders is simply postponing the evil day, with compound interest to pay in the end.—H. A. Hare, M. D., in The Chautauquan.

AFTER THE EPIDEMIC.

BY MRS. L. CRARY SADLER.

(Written and published after the epidemic of the yellow fever in 1867 at Pensacola, Fla., and republished by request.)

After the epidemic,
Out in the graveyard there,
Is many a new-made hillock
At home is a vacant chair.
No more shall the dearly loved one
Sit there at the evening prayer.

The gray-haired sire is weeping
As he thinks of the absent one;
Under the sod in the graveyard
Low lies the much-loved son;
Under the sod is the casket—
The jewel to heaven is gone.

Out in the graveyard olden
There's many a little hill;
At home is an empty cradle,
Unrocked is the corner so still.
The dear little thing that was in it
Will greet you on Zion's hill.

The mother's tears are falling;
Though the baby's life was brief,
It was loved as well as any
That lies under the Autumn leaf.
Up there in the "mansions many"
Will end the mother's grief.

Another mother is pressing
Her fatherless babe to her breast;
Hot tears down her lips are coursing
As she thinks of the husband at rest
Out there in the graveyard olden,
Up there in the land of the blest.

After the epidemic
How dark seems the earth, how cold!
The wailing winds of the Autumn
Are dropping the leaves of gold,
Covering up the hillocks
Out in the graveyard old

After life's dream is over,
And shadows all flee away,
We'll meet again the dear loved ones
In the land of eternal day.
Up there will they see their Redeemer,
And praise him for aye and for aye.

INSTITUTIONAL CHURCH WORK.

There is much being said and written upon institutional churches in our city work to interest the non-church goers, as well as to benefit those who do attend church services. Most of these descriptions, however, involve real outlays of money in buildings and appliances that the average country pastor finds beyond his reach. There are, however, a few phases of it which any pastor may introduce to his own and others' advantage. There is in every church a certain amount of unused talent which, if not employed, will sooner or later disappear. Suppose, for instance, there are persons in your membership or congregation who can teach instrumental or vocal music, drawing, shorthand, typewriting, etc., who are not dependent upon them for a livelihood, nor will conflict with others who are so dependent, by gratuitously teaching them, employ such and assign them to some room of the church, where, on a night that will not conflict with other services, they can exercise their talent on classes made up of persons of all ages and of all persuasions, who would like to be so instructed. We have had for over a year shorthand classes so instructed.

We propose to organize a singing school and other departments after our revival is over. We have also opened a reading-room, where the various magazines and religious papers taken by our people are deposited after they have read them, where others, not taking them, can have the opportunity of reading them. In this way even those who do take magazines can have access to those they don't take, the pastor being especially favored because he is the custodian of them all the week. We have also introduced a paper exchange table at the door of the church, where religious papers can be deposited by persons who are done with them, and others have the benefit of what is ordinarily destroyed. Tracts also can thus be distributed, a good supply being on hand for revival services, and persons urged to take and read them. These are only a few of the many ways for interesting and holding the young to the church, the older people availing themselves also, in a measure, of the same means of improvement.—Peninsula Methodist.

Dr. Felix L. Oswald, in The Forum, says: "The friends of reform have at last recognized the truth that the 'temperate use' of alcohol is but the first stage of a progressive and shame-proof disease, and that moderation and repudiation failing, we must adopt the motto of 'Eradication.' We must direct our blows against the roots of the upas tree, and there is no doubt that the sharpest, if not cheapest, tool would be the general enforcement of prohibition. The penalties of a severe prescriptive law would sap the basis of the poison-traffic by making its risks outweigh its profits, especially the profits of catering to an ever-decreasing demand, for the very means used to evade those risks would also diminish the perils of temptation to thousands of young men of that class owing their ruin less to innate depravity than to the evil influence of an obtrusive example. The army of topers would die out from want of recruits wherever the causes of intemperance are limited to the temptations of the rum-shop, with its garish splendor and its sham promises of social pleasures."

AT REST.

MISS LUCINDA B. HELM,
Manager and Editor of "Our Homes," the Organ of the W. P. and H. M. S.

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 16.—Last night, at the residence of Bishop R. K. Hargrove, Miss Lucinda B. Helm died of heart disease. She was a daughter of ex-Gov Helm, of Kentucky, a prominent leader in the mission work of the Methodist Church of the South.

Previous to the meeting of the General Conference of the M. E. Church, South, in 1886, Miss Helm, in response to Bishop Hargrove's call, had used her pen to arouse Christian women to aid in the construction of parsonages in destitute places, and suggested to the Board a Women's Department of Church Extension for this purpose. The plan she had formulated in consultation with Dr. Morton was regarded wise, and adopted. She was selected for the first General Secretary, and conducted its affairs almost single-handed against much indifference and opposition. More and more she realized that this was only one step into the broad fields of "home mission" work open to women. It was through her influence, with little encouragement save from Bishop Hargrove, against objections and objectors, that the General Conference of 1890 enlarged the scope, extended the powers, and modified the name of the organization, so that it became the "Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society," as it appears in the Discipline. Great success has already crowned this movement, which gives large promise of increased usefulness and extending power for good. While "Named Loan Funds" are being created, it would have been singular neglect to overlook Lucinda B. Helm—a name that must ever be linked with the foundation of this society, and with the struggle and triumphs of its early history. The society is raising this fund. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord; that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

MRS. FLORENCE E. RUSE,
Conf. Cor. Sec. W. P. and H. M. S., La. Conf.

HILLSMAN.—WILLIAM HILLSMAN was born in Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 10, 1845, and died in New Orleans, July 2, 1897, after a prolonged illness. He married Miss Anne L. Schroeder, Dec. 14, 1865, with whom the Lord blessed him with four children, all of whom survive him. He became a member of the Moreau Street M. E. Church, South, the year after his marriage, and the following year was appointed a steward and Sunday-school teacher in its communion, both of which offices he continued to fill with usefulness and distinction until a short period before his death. Indeed, he magnified his calling as a Christian worker in many directions, having been class leader for several years, and having organized and conducted one of the most successful mission schools in the city for even a longer period of time. In carrying on this work he was liberal to a fault, literally spending and being spent for the cause he loved so much. He had host of friends both in and out of the church, and especially among the ministers of the gospel, whom he delighted to honor and serve. In his young life, as a soldier in the Southern Army, he had been flagrantly wild and reckless, but no sooner did he enlist as a soldier of the cross than a great change occurred, and he became a meek and lowly exemplifier of the patience and doctrine of his Lord. In his last illness he was frequently visited by Bros. Scarlock, Reed, and the writer, and constantly witnessed a good and even bright confession, his last words being, "I am nearing the haven." He literally passed out of "great afflictions into a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." J. M. BEAUN.

BOBB.—Bro. HALSEY BOBB, son of Seymour H. and Mrs. A. A. Bobb, was born in Warren county, Miss., near the city of Vicksburg, on the sixth of January, 1871, and died on the sixteenth day of May, 1897, aged twenty-six years and four months. He became a member of the M. E. Church, South, during the Fall of 1893, under the pastorate of Rev. W. M. Stevens.

"Hal," as he was universally called, was a noble specimen of young manhood, and was loved and highly esteemed by all who knew him for his unobtrusive, moral deportment. He was courageous and unflinching where duty was evident. He was a young man of positive convictions, and, when necessary, did not hesitate to do that which was manly and right. He died a Christian, and in favor with God, having often stated to the writer of this tribute, during his long illness, that he could fully trust Christ for salvation; and when the final hour came he fell on sleep calmly and peacefully, without a struggle. He now slumbers sweetly in "God's acre" at old Wesley Chapel, awaiting the resurrection of the just in the sweet by-and-by.

Farewell, dear boy, but not forever. We shall meet again in the home of the pure and good. W. W. HUSEY.

Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.

The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take-up, convenient foot rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-bruider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearing polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF THREADING—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell, without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Chesterfield, Ind., has been almost wiped off the map by an explosion of eighty quarts of nitro-glycerine, which had been placed in an open field.

W. D. Hoard, ex-governor of Wisconsin, said in a recent address in St. Louis that the great trouble with this country is that it is long on politics and short on patriotism.

County Attorney Miller, of Wyandotte, Kan., recently delivered an address to the convicts, in which he started out by saying: "I am glad to see you all here to-day."

J. Q. A. Fellows, the distinguished jurist, died in this city on Nov. 28. He was an ardent lover and admirer of Masonry, and climbed to distinguished honors in the brotherhood. He was a 33d degree Mason, and is a past grand worshipful master of the Grand Lodge.

General Wade Hampton will devote his time to an important military book which has been long a cherished plan of his. It is entitled "The History of the Cavalry of the Army of Northern Virginia."

Thanksgiving Day was observed generally in this city. All denominations joined in the day's observance. The Salvation Army spread a bountiful repast for a thousand persons, and distributed clothes among the needy guests.

The twenty-eighth annual meeting of the National Board of Trade will be held in Washington, beginning Dec. 14. This association is composed of many of the most prominent Boards of Trade and commercial organizations in the country.

For what is believed to be the first time in the history of this government, a woman is acting as its representative abroad. Secretary Sherman approved the other day the request of J. Adolph Guy, consular agent of the United States in Elmunston, N. B., for two weeks' leave, and appointed Emma Hart to act as consular agent during his absence.

The Philadelphia Board of Education will probably establish in connection with the public high schools a "school of commerce," where pupils will be taught the branches—chiefly geography and modern languages—fitting them to engage in the work of developing foreign trade. Particular attention will be given to the South American field.

There sailed from this city, last week, the British steamer "Monarch," with the largest cargo of freight which has ever left this or any other American port in a single vessel. The "Monarch" is a sister ship of the steamship "Milwaukee," which sailed from here a few weeks ago with what was probably the largest cargo on record up to that time. The cargo of the "Monarch" consisted of 22,535 bales of cotton, 60,000 bushels of corn, 11,200 sacks of cotton-seed meal, and 29,068 pieces of oak staves.

The officials of the American Board of Foreign Missions have issued from Boston a statement containing a reply to the assertion that "it takes a dollar to send a dollar to the heathen." The officials' statement asserts that 92 1-2 per cent. of all the receipts of the Board go directly to missions abroad, while only the remaining 7 1-2 per cent. is needed to cover the expense of collecting, transmitting, etc.

The grand jury, after long deliberation, has presented a special report in which it made most serious and damaging charges against Dr. S. R. Olliphant, president of the Louisiana Board of Health, and declared him no longer deserving of the public confidence. He is charged with having, in connection with another party, patented the apparatus used in the fumigation of vessels and property made at the expense of the State (and the brain work of others), the sale of which was offered to and refused by the national government.

FOREIGN.

Since the establishment of a cremation society in France, 20,000 bodies have been cremated in Paris.

Over three hundred Americans and a few English persons celebrated Thanksgiving Day in London at a banquet.

The German invasion is seriously occupying the attention of the Japanese government, and the representatives of Japan abroad have been instructed to ascertain the positions of the powers.

The death is announced by English papers of Mr. Joshua Northrup, of Bradford. He is said to have been the oldest Methodist local preacher in the kingdom. He was born on March 19, 1799, and preached from 1820 to last July.

Last Wednesday the deadlock which has prevailed for some time in the Austrian Reichrath, blocking legislation and leading to disorder and tumult in the Chamber, culminated in what was probably the most shameful disturbance which has ever disgraced a legislative assembly. The uproar was such that the president of the Chamber was compelled to suspend the sitting, and upon his departure from the hall there was a pitched battle upon the part of the contending factions for the possession of the tribune of the presiding officer, resulting in broken heads and a general scrimmage.

A CHRISTIAN'S EXPERIENCE.

Having read numerous accounts of persons making money easily, prompts me to give my experience. During the past few years I have tried selling various specialties. Dish Washers being included, but usually met with failure until I tried the Mound City Dish Washer. Since taking up this work I have made from $100 to $150 per month, and only worked part of the time.

It requires little or no ability to sell the Dish Washer, as it is only necessary to show it in operation to make sales.

If any of your readers desire a profitable and genteel employment, I would strongly recommend the business of selling these Dish Washers. Ladies can do the work as well as men. No experience is necessary.

You can secure full particulars and get a start in the business by writing to the Mound City Dish Washer Co., St. Louis, Mo.

TOPIC FOR DECEMBER.

THE CHURCH OF ST. PAUL.

DEC. 5.—ITS UNITY OF LIFE AND HOPE.

(Eph. iv, 4-6.)

1. "I am the vine, ye are the branches," said Christ. There is unity of life in every branch, twig, and leaf. Christ is the head and heart of the church. He sends the life blood pulsing to its every part. As the hand, the foot and the eye are different members with a common life, so the different denominations draw their life from the same source, even Jesus Christ. He pours his blood into the arteries of the church, thus giving his life to it.

2. "There is one body." The different churches are not different bodies, but members of the same body, each filling a special demand and exercising a peculiar function. Each has its special sphere of operation marked out by the differences among human beings. There are affinities, human as well as chemical. Among the denominations of the Christian church a man will surely find one with which he may heartily unite.

3. "One Spirit." He is the one Agent of salvation, the one Guide and Teacher of the church. We are born of the Spirit unto the church, all having his nature limited or modified by the peculiarities of the church to which we belong.

4. "One hope" of goodness, eternal life, and heaven is found in the church. There may be minor points of difference, but these constitute its comprehensive hope.

5. "One Lord"—Jesus Christ. All agree here. "One faith," not in the sense of creed, but as an attitude of receptivity toward God and Christ. "One baptism," not in mode, but as the sign and declaration of allegiance to Christ. "One God and Father of all," only different because of the difference of his children.

HERE AND NOW.

BY ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

Here in the heart of this world,
Here in the noise and the din,
Here where our spirits are hurled
To battle with sorrow and sin—
This is the place and the spot
For the knowledge of infinite things,
This is the kingdom where Thought
Can conquer the prowess of kings.

Wait for no heavenly life,
Seek for no temple alone;
Here in the midst of the strife
Know what the sages have known;
See what the Perfect One saw -
God in the depths of each soul,
God as the Light and the Law,
God as beginning and goal.

Earth is one chamber of heaven,
Death is no grander than birth,
Joy in the life that is given,
Strive for perfection on earth;
Here in the turmoil and roar,
Show what it is to be calm;
Show how the spirit can soar,
And bring back its healing and balm.

Stand not aloof or apart,
Plunge in the thick of the fight;
There is the street and the mart,
That is the place to do right.
Not in some cloister or cave,
Not in some kingdom above;
Here on this side of the grave,
Here should we labor and love.

Correspondence.

SALT LAKE CITY, GREAT SALT LAKE, AND THE MORMONS.

There is no place in the Union as unique in every particular as Salt Lake City. It is made so by a peculiar people—the Mormons—whose strange religious faith sets them apart from all the rest of the world. Driven from the States on account of their repugnant doctrines, they found a refuge in the desert of Utah, which they have transformed into a modern garden of Hesperides. The city sits at the base of the Wasatch Mountains, the breath from whose cool summits invigorates and strengthens. The streets are very broad and smooth, shaded by numerous trees and rendered attractive by handsome homes and business blocks. Temple Square is the centre of religious life, and the leading object of the admiration of both Mormon and Gentile. Here are found three magnificent structures. First and always the Temple, that wonder of architectural beauty and splendor. It is made of pure white granite taken from a canyon in Utah. It was forty years in process of erection, and cost almost $6,000,000. With the exception of a Catholic cathedral in New York, it is the most superb house of worship in America. The Tabernacle is a mammoth building almost circular in shape, and having the appearance of a gigantic turtle upon the outer side. Its seating capacity is between seven and eleven thousand, the great gallery holding nearly as many as the main floor. The wonderful organ is made entirely of Utah wood. The choir, composed of 500 voices, is wholly voluntary. The acoustic properties of the Tabernacle are exceedingly rare, but in attempting to speak when it is not full of people, makes it very difficult on account of the distinct and startling echoes. The Assembly Hall is an elegant building, like an opera house upon the inner side and a beautiful cathedral upon the outer. These three structures are within one enclosure; a huge wall shuts them out from the busy street, and around the Temple is a strong iron fence, beyond which the foot of a Gentile is not allowed to enter. None but the saints go into the sacred precincts. During the years that the Temple was being built the priests, in order to keep up the courage of the Mormons and stimulate them to greater zeal and activity in raising money for its completion, told them that as soon as the Temple was finished the Lord would come and occupy a room in it. When the last touches had been given, and the Temple stood an assured reality, and the Lord did not come, Elder Woodruff, president of the State Church, said he had a revelation from God that he was offended because the Gentiles had been allowed to gain a foothold in Utah, and that Christ would not appear. Further, that the wrath of God could be appeased only by unceasing work to evangelize the world. They are now sending out their missionaries by the thousand; some of them boys not out of their teens. By this means, and the thorough organization of the church in every branch, Mormonism is growing tremendously. It can not be realized or appreciated by those who are far removed from its centre, or who have never been given an object-lesson of its strength.

While I was in Salt Lake City the Annual Conference of the Mormons was held. Men and women poured into the Tabernacle day after day from the most remote corners of Utah and adjoining States. Some conception of the vastness of the movement was gained when I saw that great auditorium packed from door to door at a morning business session. Imagine what it would be at an evening meeting. At this Conference the elders and bishops and other high church dignitaries occupied the three rows of seats that stand one above another in a semicircle facing the main body of the edifice. Without introduction one man after another arose and addressed the people. At the close of each harangue the speaker would say: "In the name of Jesus Christ. Amen!" and all the audience would answer, "Amen." During this especial Conference the burden of each orator's effort was to inveigh against the priesthood being criticised by the church members. "When that begins," said one mighty in authority, "then comes darkness and death to Mormonism." Their leading thought, however, was that the revelations of God to a people must be given by human agencies; and, secondly, these agencies must be beyond all cavil. Elder Merrill said, "The Bible is good, and the Book of Mormon is good, but give me the living oracles of the church." Apostle Taylor then took up the song, beginning with Noah and going on down to Joseph Smith, to prove that the written Word was insufficient through which God could reveal himself to the world. "Other churches have the Word given by men; ours is given by direct revelation. Joseph Smith had this revelation, and it has been given to us ever since!" cried one of the enthusiasts.

The Mormon Church is supported by tithes, each man and woman contributing a certain portion of their income or earnings, and the church has become very rich through it. Another mode of increasing the treasury is by baptisms for the dead. There are priests who are always officiating in the Temple, and thousands of baptisms are performed every day. Some people are baptized hundreds of times. At each baptism a sum of money is paid for the ceremony, and the issuance, by degrees, of the tormented soul from hell assured.

The Mormons are devoted pleasure-loving people, and all their pursuits in that line are sanctioned by the church. Their dances are always opened with prayer, the Bishop usually officiating on the occasion. The Church and State are closely united in Mormonism. No man runs for a political office who is in any way connected with the machinery of the church, unless the church approves. In Salt Lake City the functionaries of Mormonism have their offices in a large building in the business section of the town, and here, too, are found the tithe-houses. For years the Mormons were not regarded as Christians by the outside world. They speak of this bitterly. Christ is recognized prominently in their worship, but usually upon the same basis that Joseph Smith is. This incident will explain volumes. A little Mormon girl, returning from Sunday-school one Sabbath day, was accosted by a Gentile lady, and the following conversation occurred:

"Do you like to go to Sunday-school, dearie?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"What have you been studying lately?"

"I have just been learning about Moses and Jesus Christ. Now we are going to study about Joseph Smith."

The whole structure of Mormonism was conceived of and carried into execution by shrewd, cunning men. Joseph Smith is canonized among the Mormons, and his fame sounded through successive generations as a prophet from God. Brigham Young's statue occupies a conspicuous position in the leading street of Salt Lake City, and his praises sung by the Latter Day Saints. His process of hoodwinking was gigantic. At one time it is said he issued a manifesto that he had received a revelation from God to the effect that only a certain sort of tree should be planted by the Mormons in Utah, and he had these trees in his nursery. At once all the faithful cut down their trees and ordered others from President Young's. When the new trees were three years old he had another revelation that God was again displeased with the variety, and desired a different kind. Once more the trees were all cut down, and a sort entirely unlike the others ordered from Brigham Young's nursery. This occurred three times, the orders all being made on Brigham Young's nursery. He reaped a goodly harvest from the credulity of the people. A second story similar to this is told of the president. When the saints had accumulated thousands of heads of hogs, Brigham Young said it was declared to him in a revelation from God that no swine should be used by the Mormons; but Brigham, in the generosity of his soul, sorry to have his brethren suffer the loss, bought up all the hogs and sold them at a fabulous price to the emigrants passing through Utah on their way to the far West. In addition to all these statesman-like manenvres, Brigham Young added to his wealth by seven breweries. When the law was enforced abolishing polygamy there were 1500 Mormons in jail at one time in Salt Lake City, both men and women. If a child were born in a polygamous marriage, but made its advent in another State, it and its parents were free if the infant was kept away from Utah for three years. This was called "outlawing a child." In the first stages of the Edmunds-Tucker enforcing act many hundreds of children were "outlawed," but since Utah has gained Statehood polygamy is practiced more openly by those who had contracted plural marriages in the earlier years of the movement.

The wonder and glory of Utah is Great Salt Lake. This marvel in nature "covers an area of 2300 square miles." Its depth is seldom greater than twenty feet, but at the deepest point it is sixty feet. Its waters are as clear as crystal, and the sand at the bottom, which is plainly seen, is a grayish white. There are several islands in Great Salt Lake, and the mountains are round about it. A storm upon it, or a sunset, is a sight calculated to fill one with awe and admiration. At a point upon the outer edges, where the desert joins the lake, the waters have been cut off by a piece of land divided into a great square. The dry air quickly evaporates the moisture, leaving shining beds of salt glistening in the light. Heavy rollers drawn by horses are passed over those; then the crystalline mass is shoveled up, put into sacks, and placed on the cars, which run close to the fields of salt, and shipped to the outside world. Saltair is the name of a mammoth bath house built out in the waters of Salt Lake. To this huge pavilion thousands resort every Summer to enjoy the exhilarating effects of a float on Salt Lake. "Going down into the water" here can hardly be called a bath, as the water is so densely impregnated with salt that one's body is borne up lightly like a cork; and if the head and feet are not submerged, can glide over the face of the sea like a fleck of down. The finest saloon in Utah is at Saltair. It is run by leading Mormons. Up to twenty-six years ago the Latter Day Saints were undisturbed in their desert retreat, but since the mining interests have grown so important in Utah, the State has become settled by hordes of Gentiles, until now, really, the population and appearance of the country is very much like other localities, except that underneath the surface the Mormons still have their hold upon material prosperity and religious power.

BELLE KEARNEY.

ORPHANS' HOME NOTES.

BY REV. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD.

Our last letter was written from the Mississippi Delta, whither we had gone to visit several points and take collections. What a wonderful country it is! Three months ago they did not expect to make any cotton in some localities; now in those very places the land is yielding more than a bale per acre. From Belen we drove to Coahoma to take train for to fill an appointment for Sunday, Nov. 28. An intelligent and attentive congregation waited upon our ministry at eleven o'clock, and responded to the amount of $58.50 to our appeal for the Orphans' Home. The League service in the afternoon was well attended, and nearly all those present participated. During the time allotted us we endeavored to impress upon each member the many advantages and opportunities afforded the young people of our church to-day. By special request of the pastor (Rev. W. C. Harris) we agreed to deliver at the night service our lecture on and were highly gratified to note the very close attention and apparent appreciation of the congregation which greeted us at this hour. Bro. Harris is a strong preacher, and has failed not to declare unto these people "the whole counsel of God." We are under many obligations to him and his good wife for their kind treatment during our stay in their parsonage home. Monday morning found us aboard the train again with our face turned eastward. At Rosedale we met Bro. Myers, who handed us $7 for the orphanage. Reaching Greenville, we found Bro. J. E. Thomas at the depot to meet the agent. "It is the evening for the ladies' prayer meeting," he said, and so directly to the church we went. I was appointed to lead and speak of the "Home." Of course, Sister A. B. Finley was present, and what a prayer she offered! It touched our hearts, and was a real inspiration. What a benediction such women have ever been to a pastor and to the church! They are the "salt of the earth." Her eyes sparkled with delight as she read me a list of sheets, quilts, etc., now ready for shipment toward the furnishing of the Orphans' Home. Thomas talked much about his which has recently spent nearly $300 toward the furnishing of rooms "down-town" for young men. Here it is hoped influences may be set in motion that will save many a "wandering boy."

EPWORTH LEAGUE,

During our trip to the Delta we met the presiding elder, Rev. Jno. W. Dorman, of whom we heard many good things. He is "instant in season and out of season"—in fact, he seems not to know anything about "out of season," for he is continually "on the go." He is arranging for the purchase of some very desirable property in Greenville, to be used as a district parsonage. Leaving Greenville, Tuesday morning, Nov. 30, we reached Winona about 11:30 A. M., and went at once to the church, where the ladies of the were holding their annual meeting. Mrs. J. B. Stone, wife of the faithful presiding elder of the (Winona) district, was presiding, and this is sufficient to assure our readers that everything was being done "in order." Many delegates were present, and much interest was manifested in this important work. The reports from the various auxiliaries showed much work done during the past year. The agent was introduced and asked to represent the orphanage, which we were assured would continue as in the past to receive the consideration and support of these Christian women. Bros. Stone, Dye and Ritchey were present to do all in their power to help "these women" who are laboring "together with us in the gospel."

Upon our arrival at Water Valley we found many letters and a number of remittances. We mention specially the letter from Rev. R. O. Brown, pastor of the church at stating that, as a further response to our former appeal, one good brother had offered to give as a

FREE-WILL OFFERING

$50 toward the furnishing of the "Home," while still another proposed to give a pair of Poland China pigs and a Jersey heifer. Many letters are now before me referring to bedding, etc., that is now in transit. More money is needed, and we pray that those who have "this world's goods" and read these lines will heed the call and help now.

When this letter greets the readers of the ADVOCATE the Conference (North Mississippi) of which this scribe is a member will (D. V.) be in session at Oxford, and our work as agent of the Orphans' Home will have come to a close. We, therefore, take this opportunity of expressing our appreciation and returning our heartfelt thanks to the preachers and people throughout the State for their hearty co-operation in this work, and for their thoughtfulness and very kind treatment of me personally.

Delightful memories of this year's peregrinations will ever linger to stimulate and inspire us until we reach "that land of pure delight, where saints immortal reign."

"Our friends on earth we meet with pleasure,
While swift the moments fly,
Yet ever comes the tho't of sadness,
That we must say good-bye."
. . . . . .
"We'll never say good-bye in heaven, we'll never say good-bye,
For in that land of joy and song, we'll never say good-bye."

Water Valley, Miss., Dec. 2, 1897.

DELHI DISTRICT.

I have closed my fourth round of Quarterly Conferences except the Lake Providence and Waterproof. These were postponed on account of quarantine. We will close our year fairly well under the circumstances. The general assessments on this district are far beyond the ability of the people to pay at present. Contending, as we do, with the oft-repeated overflow, we are not able to keep that part of the work organized. We have, during last year and this, added to the work in Madison and Tensas parishes several old appointments, some of which have not had a pastor for seventeen years. Bro. P. R. Knickerbocker deserves great credit in extending this work. We are ready to take in old Jordan's Chapel with the Waterproof work during the next year. We will then have our Mississippi front, from Lake Providence to Vidalia, supplied with the gospel as before the war. Bro. T. R. McClendon (the hero among the heroes of the district) has about finished two new churches on the Oakley and Vidalia charge. These churches are no country shabs, but well built, of good materials, about 60x35 feet, and well finished. They will be ornaments to the neighborhoods in which they are built.

My preachers have all been true to their calling. Our health has been splendid. I think the postponement of the session of our Conference will add seventy-five per cent. to our collections. Indeed, if our Annual Conferences were held in March (the ending and beginning of the financial year in Louisiana), we would have the opportunity of gathering while the crop is in the hands of the reapers. We would also enter upon our new year's work in the cheerful Spring, do effective work from beginning to end of the Conference year, and I candidly think come up to Conference with full collections all along the line, and increase in building up the spiritual interests of the church.

A STUDY IN FIGURES.

We have before us the Minutes of the California Annual Conference and the Pacific Annual Conference. These Minutes contain the matured reports of all the pastors in these Conferences, and, therefore, the best data from which to make conclusions. We confess to great surprise, and at the same time to great encouragement for our church on this coast. We take San Francisco as an example. The M. E. Church has ten churches in this city. We have only one, and yet there was a larger net increase in this one church the past year than in all the ten churches of the M. E. Church. There was only a net increase of 64 in all these ten churches combined. There was a net increase of 68 in our one church, and the pastor did not lench Centenary before the last of November, thus giving him only ten months in which to work. He has already received 17 since Conference, making a net increase of 85 in eleven months. Besides, we do not owe a dollar, whilst the indebtedness, as reported on these ten churches, is $49,254. It was $51,890, as reported in the Minutes for 1896—a decrease of only $2,636 the past year. Even Central Church, of which Rev. Dr. Dille was pastor, does not report a dollar paid on its debt of $10,000. In 1895 Dr. Dille reported 128 probationers. This year he reports a net increase of only 65. What became of the 128 probationers of the previous year, who ought to have been received into full connection after six months, and what became of the additions by certificate for 1897? We are reminded just here of the great wisdom of our church in abolishing the probation system.

But let us continue this study in the Minutes of the two churches. Our Conference reported no decrease in membership. The M. E. Conference reports a decrease for the past year of 967.

There is not an indebtedness of more than $10,000 on our entire property in the Pacific Conference. They report an indebtedness of $171,804, and instead of paying off, there is reported an increase of indebtedness to the amount of $4,067. Their entire membership is 16,031, including Chinese, Japanese and Swedish—in other words, at least one dollar per member annually to pay the interest on their church debts.

Now, we mean no unkindness in these comparisons. We pray God's blessing upon our brethren of the sister church. What we do mean is to encourage our own people, and to stop the mouths of croakers. Is it not wonderful how steadily the M. E. Church, South, has grown, and how manifest has been its conservatism in the matter of avoiding debt? We may not go as fast as some people, but we are going surely and soberly. In the city of Los Angeles there is an immense indebtedness on their chief church; on ours not a dollar. In San Diego they owe $50,000; we have a perfect gem in our new church and parsonage, and no debt. Shall we not thank God and take courage? And will not other people learn that there is to day no church in California more prosperous than ours, and certainly none in better financial condition. The people will respect us for this wise management of our affairs, and seek our altars for themselves and their families, escaping in these hard and crucial times the bondage of old and increasing church debts. Again we say that our people have everything to encourage them, and nothing to depress their hope and faith. Let us go forward, trusting in God and the divine mission he has given us into all the world.—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

LITTLE KINDNESSES.

BY SUSAN COOLIDGE.

If you were toiling up a weary hill,
Bearing a load beyond your strength to bear,
Straining each nerve untiringly, and still
Stumbling and losing foothold here and there,
And each one passing by would do as much
As give one upward lift and go their way,
Would not the slight reiterated touch
Of help and kindness lighten all the day?

If you were breasting a keen wind, which tossed
And buffeted and chilled you as you strove,
Till, battled and bewildered quite, you lost
The power to see the way, and aim and move,
And one, if only for a moment's space,
Gave you a shelter from the bitter blast,
Would you not find it easier to face
The storm again when the brief rest was past?

There is no little, and there is no much;
We weigh and measure and define in vain,
A look, a word, a light responsive touch
Can be the ministers of joy to pain.
A man can die of hunger walled in gold,
A crumb may quicken hope to stronger breath,
And every day we give or we withhold
Some little thing which tells for life or death.

THE SIN OF THE CHURCH - PART II.

BY LOVEALL.

In these lines I will presume to offer a few suggestions remedial of the wrong outlined in the former paper under the above caption. This I will do with a perfect knowledge that all the remedies will not be named, as all the causes were not named in the former paper. Such as are considered leading causes and remedies have been and will be named. Whatever indifference has resulted from a want of doctrinal preaching can be remedied by the pulpit, and by it only. Not that men should be always blowing the fires of perdition into the faces of men, or always cajoling them with the rapture of heaven, but reverently, and in the fear of God, show to the people the rewards and punishments suited to their conduct and character in this life. Faith is for justification, but good works is for judgment; and as there is no justification without faith, there can be no heaven without good works. Regenerate persons are "created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath ordained that they should walk in them," and everyone "must receive according to that he hath done, whether it be good, or whether it be bad." It is thus that men "work out their salvation" (already begun in justification) "with fear and trembling before God."

The pulpit should ring this in the ears of the people till they realize it and act upon it. There may be murmuring and protests, but "preach the Word" is the order given to every minister of the gospel. As a cure for the evils of "hard times," we have a standard remedy laid down, as the mind of Him "who healeth all our diseases" (of a spiritual sort) sees best for us. I will not mar this divine prescription by copying it, but let the reader see the original—Malachi iii, 10, 11. There it is. Serve God with what you have, and he will give you more!

For the Sunday-school question we have no such direct instructions in the Bible, and must search through reason for a remedy for this (in my opinion), the chief source of indifference in the church. The real evil seems to lie in the present law of the church, the practical effect of which is to divest the pastor of control in the Sunday-school. The school is under the control of a superintendent elected by the Quarterly Conference, and held responsible to that body for his official duties. Hence, any interference with the administration of the Sunday-school would be a step between the officer and the court of trial, in case of failure to meet the demands of the Conference.

Favoritism should have no place in any department of church work. Consecrated men and women should be secured as teachers, if possible. If not, then the whole school should be thrown into one class, and taught by the pastor, or some one appointed by him for that purpose. Where suitable teachers can be had, the school should be graded, and scholars advanced from lower to higher classes. In every case the one controlling idea should be the salvation of the scholars. The moments occupied in recitation should be scrupulously decorous, and all other movements as free and easy as possible. Order even in the social aspects of the school should be the watchword, while pleasure and profit should be held out to each scholar.

Whether or not these ends can be reached with an elective superintendency, is a question not so easily answered. Interference with the personal or official duties of another is not often pleasant or profitable. For this reason the pastor is not free to come in and advise or direct the superintendent. He is the creature of the Quarterly Conference, and not of the pastor; therefore, it is not polite nor right for the pastor to take charge of the section and assignment of teachers, nor of the organization of classes, and of missionary societies, and the like, for he is not the superintendent, and he who is is not amenable to the pastor for his conduct.

In this one matter the church has departed from the idea of official correlation which obtains everywhere else in the church. The General Conference appoints all who work under its direction, the Bishops appoint all their co-workers, and the pastors should do the same in order to secure the greatest effectiveness in their labors. The mere fact that the pastor nominates the candidate for the office of superintendent goes for nothing, as the election by the Quarterly Conference at once takes the matter out of the pastor's hands, and places it in the hands of the Conference so electing.

The remedy for the inefficiency of our Sunday-schools seems to me to be in the restoration to the pastor the right to appoint superintendents, and in this personal representative himself direct all the affairs of the Sunday-schools of his charge.

REMINISCENCES OF REV. E. W. YANCY.

The stationed preacher at La Grange in 1836 was a faithful pastor, and cared for the young converts as only such a pastor can. He discovered that two young men and myself felt that we were called to the ministry, and carefully instructed and encouraged us, and urged us not to draw back, but go forward. At the close of the year I. L. G. Strickland was sent to La Grange. The year was not specially marked in church work. During the year 1838 the La Grange station and the La Grange circuit united in the establishment of a camp ground five miles from town, and began the meeting on the twenty-third day of August. The Quarterly Conference was held on the twenty-fifth of August, and Wm. A. Cobb and myself were licensed to preach, and recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial. The third young man spoken of refused to obey the call, backslid, and I lost sight of him. My license is dated "Aug. 25;" "signed in behalf of La Grange station by D. C. McLeod, presiding elder of the Memphis district." I have the copy yet. I was twenty years and four days old. The Conference, at the close of the year, met at Huntsville (if my memory serves me right). Wm. A. Cobb and I were admitted, and I was appointed junior preacher under E. J. Williams on the Paducah circuit, Paris district; Thos. Joiner, P. E. When the time came to start to my circuit I found a horse hitched at the gate, with saddle on, ready for me. I learned that Bro. Davis had collected the money and bought them for me. I found Bro. Williams just such a man as a young preacher needs to sympathize with, encourage and help him. I can't say that I met more hardships that year than are common to young preachers. I found the presiding elder firm, but kind, and ready to help me in any way he could. This was one of the happiest years of my life. Neither my colleague nor myself had a day of sickness. We had revivals at nearly all the preaching places, and held two camp meetings. There were a number of local preachers on the circuit who did much efficient work. The Conference convened in Nashville, October, 1839, Bishop Andrew presiding, and I was transferred to the Arkansas Conference, and at the session of that Conference, held at Batesville, I was appointed to Little River circuit, Monroe district (in Louisiana). I reached my circuit Dec. 27, and found it had twenty-three appointments, and requiring 250 or 300 miles travel to go round. I preached my first sermon at Jones' "Bunker Hill" the first Sunday in January, 1840. I found the circuit embraced part of five parishes, with two in Avoyelles, which, on account of the difficulty of crossing Red river, I was compelled to drop. My appointments were finally reduced to eighteen per month and 250 miles travel. On the thirteenth of July I was attacked with fever while in the pulpit, and, as I was ignorant of the treatment of fever, and had no physician, I did not regain my health during the year, though I made several attempts to fill my appointments. The General Conference met in May, 1840, and that part of Louisiana west of the Mississippi river, belonging to the Arkansas Conference, was transferred to the Mississippi Conference. At the close of the year, my health being so much impaired, I located. In 1843 I was employed by W. G. Gould, P. E., to assist the preacher in charge on the Little River circuit. He assigned to me the northern end of it, and called it Columbia. In 1850 I was admitted into the Louisiana Conference, and appointed to the Bœuff Prairie circuit for the year 1851. In 1852 I served the Harrisonburg circuit. At the end of this year I was discontinued at my own request. December 19, 1858, I was ordained deacon by Bishop Paine. In 1859 I supplied the Centerville circuit; in 1861 the Dugdemonia circuit. At the Conference held at Alexandria, in the latter part of that year, I was again admitted into the traveling connection, and appointed to the Columbia circuit, and served it in 1862 and 1863, and the Centerville circuit in 1864 and 1865. At the Conference held at Mansfield, I was ordained elder and appointed to Columbia circuit. In 1867 I served Columbia and Harrisonburg; in 1868 I served Harrisonburg; in 1869 Centerville; in 1870 Centerville, with a portion of the Trinity circuit. In 1871 I served the Trinity circuit. At the close of that year, at the Conference held at Monroe, I was superannuated, and sustained that relation till 1884, when, at my earnest request, I was made effective, and appointed to Centerville and Jena circuit; but my health was not sufficiently restored for me to do full work, and at the next Conference I was again placed on the superannuate list. Superannuation has never meant quiet to me, but I have done as much as I was able in preaching and working with the pastors where I live. One year supplied a small circuit; at another appointment on a circuit.

WANTED—A PREACHER.

(A private letter to the Bishop from Steward Lovegood, of Shady Dell circuit.)

Dear Bishop, we're a humble folk
Down here at Shady Dell;
And feel a little hesitance
Our needs and wants to tell;
But Conference is drawing near,
Our preacher has to move;
So we write about the man you'll send
To serve the charge we love.

The salary, true, is not so large,
The parsonage is small,
The meetin' houses are not fine,
And not a steeple tall;
But our folks love their preachers,
And love the church of God,
And try to walk the heavenly way,
The path our fathers trod.

Of ready cash we little have,
But with the Lord we share,
And many things that preachers use
From barn and store we spare;
And so our preacher "gets along,"
Nor ever lacks for food;
The women folks, they help his wife—
She says they're "mighty good."

Some never pay—I spose 'tis so
'Mongst richer folks than we—
And from this class the grumblers come
Who want salvation free.
Perhaps we none do all we can,
But we find this is true:
That when the preacher does his best,
The people try to, too.

But, Bishop, that's the earthly side,
And not the first to view,
For him who's "called of God to preach"
And spread the gospel true.
We've aged saints and tender lambs
Who need his loving care,
And sinners lost and weary ones
Whose load he'll help to bear.

We want a man who thinks of this
More than of fame or ease;
Whose heart is set on Zion's good,
And not himself to please.
Gentle in spirit, warm in love,
Ready to do his part
To raise the fallen, cheer the faint—
"After the Lord's own heart."

He need not be a scholar wise,
Nor eloquent in speech;
But one whose voice and life can show
"This Jesus whom we preach."
He'll win our hearts, he'll bless our lives,
And this we want to tell:
If you have such a godly man,
Send him to Shady Dell.

BAPTISTS PROTEST AGAINST CLOSE COMMUNION.

One of the most noteworthy events in denominational history occurred last week in the proceedings of the Baptist Congress, which met for its fifteenth annual session in Chicago. It is significant of the trend of thought in that body that the subject of open communion should be put upon the program as a regular topic for discussion. The attitude maintained by the denomination in the United States, until recently, has been that the question was settled beyond a doubt, and was not, therefore, debatable. That American Baptists are moving slowly, but inevitably to the position maintained by their English brethren who practice open communion, is clearly shown by the deliberations of the body at Chicago. The subject was handled in a thoroughly frank and fearless manner. The subject, "Is Baptism a Prerequisite to the Lord's Supper?" admitted of no equivocations. Dr. O. P. Gifford, of Buffalo, so well and favorably known in this city, read a carefully prepared paper in which he unreservedly advocated open communion. From the Chicago Times-Herald report we present the following:

"Rev. Dr. Gifford read the only paper on the subject, and argued from beginning to end against the close-communion view. His remarks were listened to with breathless attention, and more than ever when he drew a parallel between circumcision and baptism, and concluded with the following summary of his argument: 'In the closing verses of the second chapter of Romans, Paul argues that disobedience to the law cancels circumcision, whereas the Gentile without the law, keeping the righteousness of the law, has his uncircumcision counted for circumcision. For circumcision write immersion. Immersion profiteth nothing to him who breaks the law of the new life in Christ Jesus. His immersion is reckoned unimmersion. But the unimmersed man who keeps the law of life, to him his unimmersion is reckoned immersion. "He is a Jew which is one inwardly, and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter, whose praise is not of men, but of God." He is a Christian which is one inwardly, and immersion is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter, whose praise is not of men, but of God. If immersion is prerequisite to the Lord's Supper, it is also prerequisite to the entire Christian life, as it was in the morning of Christianity's day. If unimmersed men can assume Christian prerogatives in everything except the Lord's Supper, without flagrant impertinence, I can not see why their presence at the Lord's Supper, even in a Baptist Church, is an impertinence. Under the changed conditions I conclude that immersion is not a prerequisite to the Lord's Supper, neither is any form of invitation scriptural.'

"Dr. Gifford's paper was enthusiastically applauded, and before the orthodox had fully recovered from the shock, they received another in the extemporaneous address of Rev. Dr. R. H. Conwell, of Philadelphia, who argued against the principle of close communion from the other leading principles of the Baptist faith. He said it is a cardinal principle of Baptists that every man has a right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience. If that is true, there is a sacred region of independence which the church should not invade, and which it should not desecrate with its mandates. The logic of this situation compelled him to say that if a man thinks he has been baptized, no one has a right to forbid him the table. He then argued to the same conclusion from the design of the Lord's Supper. Its sole use was as a remembrance of Christ, especially in his passion and in his sacrifice for sin. Anyone, therefore, who could spiritually appreciate and remember these facts was entitled to commune. He then took the Baptist principle that every believer is a priest as much as the minister, and argued that, therefore, the minister has no right to exercise a priestly function by debarring anyone from the Lord's table. Finally, he claimed that the doctrine of close communion implies baptismal regeneration, which is opposed to Baptist principles. In his close Dr. Conwell said that when a Baptist minister met him and his old mother at the Lord's table, and welcomed him, but spurned his godly mother, in spite of her faith and holy living, it was simply 'soul persecution.'

"Theodore M. Banta, a layman of Brooklyn, said that he read a few days ago in the New York Examiner that 'open communion was as dead as Julius Cæsar,' and he had come all the way from Brooklyn to the Congress to attend the funeral. Then he said: 'I glory in the fact that I am an open communionist. I have been a Baptist forty years. For sixteen years of that time I was a close communionist. Then I got troubled about it, and got a large collection of close communion documents and read them and they made me an open communionist.' Mr. Banta complained that the close communion Baptist ... prescribed a ceremonial prerequisite to the Lord's Supper, while the Methodists did not, and read from the Methodist Discipline the invitation given at the Supper. Finally, he contended that the object of the Supper was the remembrance of Christ, and anyone who wanted to remember him was welcome to the Supper."

Addresses were also made in favor of the traditional American Baptist idea, but all the reports of the proceedings indicate that the Congress was emphatically in sympathy with open communion. It must, it will, be so, for nothing can stand in this enlightened Christian age, in any of the denominations, which does violence to plain scriptural teaching and to the mind and spirit of Christ. He who came to declare the great truth of human brotherhood never could have intended to build this Baptist wall of partition between Christian disciples. Profoundly loving and admiring this great sister church as we do, we devoutly rejoice in the evidence of a change that shall remove the last and only barrier that disturbs our fellowship.—Zion's Herald.

RESERVE POWER.

No engineer plans a machine or a bridge or a boiler that is just large and strong enough for the work required. There is always provision for a larger load or a higher pressure than the builder expects ever to be used. Such reserve power in human character is a possession much to be desired. Young people especially are apt to neglect this element in themselves and in others. There are quiet Christians about us whom we do not appreciate, because no great occasion has yet called out their finer qualities in a conspicuous way. They have plenty of reserve power waiting for the emergency when it will become necessary. Such people contrast unfavorably on first acquaintance with those who show their whole depth to every casual acquaintance, but time proves true worth. Reserve power of character is to be accumulated in just the ways that all Christian growth must be maintained—by prayer, study of the Bible, and daily Christian self-denial. If our ordinary prayers are perfunctory and superficial, when there arrives a great crisis in our lives we are not prepared for it, and find ourselves, to our own dismay, unacquainted with God; our wills are not subject to the will of Christ; we are not masters of ourselves. "Fair-weather Christians" are of little use in a storm. The reserve power so necessary for strong Christian character is not always the sort that expresses itself freely in speech. It is not necessarily the most fervent exhorter whose moral courage is greatest. This is not a matter of prayer meetings and church services so much as it is of steady, consistent Christian living at home, doing humble duties faithfully, and serving God year in and year out. When the emergency call comes, such people are the ones to be depended on.—Standard.

There is a class of hoarders who, when they die, have a kind of repentance, and they leave their wealth to public institutions. There is no grace in such a gift. The man who makes it releases his grip on his millions only when he has to.—Andrew Carnegie.

If you must form harsh judgments, form them of yourself, not of others; and, in general, begin by attending to your own deficiencies. If everyone would sweep up his own walk, we should have clean streets.

When I try to make myself an infidel, I fancy I feel the hand of my mother on my head and her voice sounding in my ear as she taught me to say, "Our Father, who art in heaven."—John Randolph.

To argue that a man may take wine, and retain a right frame of mind, is as bad as to argue that he may take poison and not die.—Seneca (the Roman Philosopher).

HONESTY IN PRAYER.

Our prayers should be frequently examined to see whether we are asking for what we really want, or only for the things we have an idea we ought to want. There is too much of this unreality and practical dishonesty current both in the closet and the public prayer-room. People sometimes get into quite a glow of pleasurable devotional excitement as they pray; their imagination works fluely, they have a good flow of language, become somewhat heated with their own rhetoric; and as the fine phrases roll tripplingly off the tongue they ask for things which they would not only be much astonished to receive, but actually sorry, in their cooler moments, to get. What we sincerely desire, we shall be willing to pay the price for; and there is always a price attached—that is, a condition. If we want to sit on the right hand of Jesus, we must be willing to drink of his cup. There is much more of poetry than of piety in some prayers. They sound well, but the Lord who knows the heart, does not find satisfaction in them. "Lip prayers are lost prayers." "Don't cry cream, and live skim-milk."—Zion's Herald.

A GOOD CREED.

Creeds have their uses and abuses. Harm is done when the mind is fettered by them in its search after truth, and when healthful theological progress is impeded. Good is done when needful barriers are erected against dangerous error, and solid platforms are built on which can stand those who have united for furthering the interest of humanity. Creeds should be short and simple, promoting unity in essentials, but affording full liberty in things less important. What is the matter with one like the following? "The world is growing better; I can do something to hasten that growth; I will do all I can." That has to us a very healthful, invigorating sound. It stirs to action, and makes action hopeful. Let us everyone take hold to bring in the brighter days.—Zion's Herald.

During his earthly ministry our Lord "went about doing good." This is the record of the Scriptures concerning him. Those who are his true disciples have imbibed his spirit and eagerly imitate his example. This has been so from the beginning of Christianity; it is so to-day more universally than ever before. Never in human history were so many earnest hearted, consecrated men and women devoting themselves to the world's need. Sometimes it seems as though but little real progress has been made; sometimes earnest workers, on behalf of righteousness, feel that their labors are almost in vain. But they are just as much mistaken as was the old prophet who fled from the face of Jezebel, and in the silence and solitude of the desert asked God to take him out of the world. It is the duty of the child of God to cultivate an optimistic spirit. It will never do for one whose Father is the owner of all things to go around with clouded brow and fearful heart. The progress of truth and righteousness seems very uncertain to us, but that is because we can not see the end from the beginning. God is in his world, and he will bring his purposes to pass.—Central Advocate.

It is a sin for a Christian to be cheerless and forbidding to those in the home, the church, or the world. If anything should bring good cheer, it is the consciousness of forgiven sin and of useful work for our fellows and for God. A long-faced, sour, repulsive Christian gives the lie to every plank in the Christian platform.—Baptist Standard.

A good life is the best sermon a man can preach. Beautiful living is the most eloquent of all preaching; every one ought to preach by faithful practicing.—J. R. Miller.

The secret of life is not to do what one likes, but to try to like that which one has to; and one does come to like it—in time.—Dinah Mulock Craik.

There is something wrong with our soul's health, if we have no appetite for any kind of Christian work.—Ram's Horn.

Conceit is to nature what paint is to beauty; it is not only needless, but impairs what it would improve.—Alexander Pope.

A BEAUTIFUL SERVICE.

When it was known that there was no longer any danger of a yellow fever visitation, upon the recommendation of the preachers of the city, the mayor of Meridian proclaimed a day of special thanksgiving. So on Monday, Nov. 15, the city hall was crowded with Jews and Gentiles, Catholics and Protestants, and a great thanksgiving service was held. The Episcopal preacher presided; the pastor of Central Methodist Church made a prayer; the Cumberland Presbyterian preacher read a lesson; the Jewish rabbi led the responsive reading, reading of Psalms cxv, cxvi, and cxvii; addresses were made by Capt. S. B. Watts, our Methodist layman, and Mr. L. A. Duncan, a Baptist layman, and Rev. J. E. Jones, pastor of First Presbyterian Church; and a collection was taken for the fever sufferers. Close by me on the rostrum sat Father Vally, the Catholic priest, who sang with us from the Methodist hymn book as if accustomed to it, and Dr. Wilner, the Jewish rabbi, who, although silent when Coronation was sung, joined heartily with us in singing Bethany.

About $250 were collected and sent to the needy, besides numerous boxes of groceries and clothing. Everybody, I think, was truly grateful, everybody seemed happy in the service, and I am sure the unique and beautiful service left a lasting impression for good upon all who attended. That such a service can be held in a city of the South where conservatism has prevailed from the beginning, indicates the approach of the millennium.

Hundreds of dollars have gone out of Meridian to aid those stricken by the plague in the various sections visited. On one Sunday in September, when a great many of our people were refugees, and the congregation was consequently reduced very greatly, I called for a collection for this purpose, and got $10 in few minutes. Our people are really grateful, considerately grateful for the providence that has protected us this year of pestilence.

THE YOUNG MEN.

The subject that Bro. L. E. Alford has brought before the minds of the readers of the ADVOCATE is one of great importance. I don't think a more important subject could be brought out for consideration than that of "How to Secure the Safety of the Young Men." Bro. Alford may rest assured that he is not alone in being interested in the welfare of the young men of our country, for I have given the subject a great deal of thought for a man of so limited experience as mine.

It is a deplorable fact that the majority of the young men that I know are being led captive by the devil. By reference to the church registers of the churches that I serve, I observe that a very small per cent. are even members of the church, and we are aware of the fact that many of those who are members are not Christians. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

I suppose that about thirty per cent. of the young men that I am acquainted with are members of the different churches. I notice that quite a number of them fail to go to preaching at all. It seems that the church is falling to get hold on them as she should. Why this is I am unprepared to say. It seems that young men who are sinful are allied together, and, this being a fact, I think if we could only win the leaders among them for Christ, we could use those that are won in bringing the others into the fold. Another successful way of bringing the young men to Christ, I think, is to marshal all the armies of Christ against the many temptations that are daily confronting the young men. If we could get the young men's contemporaries of the opposite sex to fully realize the force of their influence over the young men, and get them to exert much energy in trying to bring the young men to Christ, this would wonderfully aid in securing a more promising future for many of them.

We would be glad to see something from some of our senior brethren on this subject.

W. A. TERRY.

Pine Run, Miss., Nov. 26, 1897.

A western traveler who carried a large sum of money was lost on a prairie. He came to a log house, and asked for shelter. The husband was absent, but the woman's face seemed to him forbidding. His confidence was not increased when the rough-visaged husband returned, armed with hunting-knife and rifle. Upon retiring, he determined to keep awake and guard his money. But when he saw the man take down a well-worn Bible, with the words: "My dear, we will have prayers," he decided that it was safe to sleep.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. Thos. J. Upton, Zachary, La., Nov. 26, 1897: "We had a delightful Thanksgiving service here yesterday. Sermon by Rev. Patterson, of Baton Rouge. We have ordered the paint and expect to paint our parsonage before Conference. Have had a very delightful year and some success. We have had forty-three accessions to the church this year, and I think the church, too, has been strengthened spiritually. If, in the providence of God, your correspondent should be returned, he will be among as kind people as are to be found in Louisiana; and if he should be appointed elsewhere, his successor will have as pleasant a charge as any man in the Louisiana Conference, and will be highly appreciated by his people if he but do his duty in the spirit of his Master. God bless the people of Zachary charge."

Rev. J. H. Foreman, P. C., Trenton charge, Miss., Nov. 26, 1897: "In some respects this has been a very pleasant year with us, and, to some extent, a profitable one. We have held seven protracted meetings, and was assisted by the following brethren: W. M. Sullivan, P. H. Howse, R. A. Sibley, Carley and Lane, and our faithful and efficient presiding elder was with us two days at Trenton, much to the delight of all that heard his sermons. All these brethren did faithful, good preaching, and God honored their ministry in saving souls. Twenty accessions to the church. We have six appointments, six good churchhouses, and a good parsonage located at Trenton. I think our collections will be in advance of last year. God has been very good to us this year. To him be all the glory. Amen. Brethren, pray for us."

Rev. J. D. Harper, Mansfield, La., Nov. 26, 1897: "We have just closed a three weeks' meeting here. Rev. J. M. Brown was with us part of two weeks, and Rev. Mr. Curry, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, also labored with us much of the time. Both of these brethren did us fine work. The teachers and some of the young lady students at the college and a number of members in turn labored earnestly with us. Results: Eleven accessions to the church, as many conversions, and the church much revived and quickened in spiritual life. Several of the girls at the college were converted—a good recommendation for church schools. The drouth here is equal to last year. Financial depression great. But we thank God for mercies received and success in his service, take courage, and trust him for the future."

Rev. H. B. Vandenburg, P. C., Hecla, Miss., Nov. 30, 1897: "We have had some accessions on Eastabuchie circuit, but this does not indicate all that has been done. There have been gracious revivals of religion at each church (with perhaps one exception). We have several prayer meetings, also Sunday-schools. Many of the members pray in public and have family prayer. The third Sunday in this month we organized a new church at Rawls' Mineral Springs, six and a half miles west of Hattiesburg. Methodism has never before been planted here, and we begin under very favorable circumstances. The leading members are prominent citizens of the community. Rawls' Springs is on the line of the survey of both the Mobile and Kansas, and Gulf and Ship Island railroad, and is destined to become a prominent place, as the waters are well known to have healing powers for certain diseases, and is already quite a resort in the Summer. I simply mention this to show that with proper management our church ought to prosper."

Rev. G. D. Anders, P. C., Greensburg, La., Nov. 19, 1897: "The fourth Quarterly Conference of the St. Helena charge was held at Darlington Church the fourth Saturday in October. I am sure that I have never witnessed a more profitable meeting. Bro. R. W. Tucker, the presiding elder, was on hand and did some of the best preaching of his life. His sermon on Sunday night, on future punishment made a profound and lasting impression for good. Bro. Tucker is held in very high esteem by the people of this charge. This has been a profitable year with us. About seventy-five have joined the church and we have had many bright conversions. Bro. J. N. Tucker, of Bewelcome, Miss., assisted me in two meetings, and his preaching was of a character that reached the people, and many bright conversions was the result. Bro. John A. B. Jones, of Magnolia, Miss., was with me at two of my appointments and proved to be the right man in the right place. He completely captured my people. Bro. William Powell, a local preacher, was with us in one meeting and rendered valuable service. The low price of cotton brings the cry of hard times, but still we are hopeful that most of the claims will be met."

Rev. J. H. Mitchell, P. E., Durant, Miss., Nov. 25, 1897: "We are rapidly closing our fourth year on the Durant district. Looking back, we mark gratifying growth, for which we are profoundly grateful to God. The membership has increased about five per cent., and we trust there has been a corresponding growth in the spirituality of the people. There has also been increase of interest in the Sunday-school work. . . . Contributions to all the institutions of the church have been increased from twenty-five to fifty per cent. . . . Fifteen new houses of worship have been built, and many more improved. These houses have been built where they were very much needed, and they are very much better than anything they have ever had in the communities where they are erected, and, therefore, they indicate substantial growth, and to my mind are prophetic of better times for the church. . . . To the thirteen parsonages that were here four years ago we have added two more, and some of the thirteen have been made much more comfortable and attractive by improvements and repairs. . . . The debt of fifteen hundred and seventy-five dollars that we found upon the district parsonage will be reduced to one hundred or one hundred and fifty dollars. We are disappointed to have any debt at all on it, but quarantine this Fall has made it impossible to raise it all. In addition to the amount raised on the debt, we have expended for improvement and furnishing of the parsonage more than two hundred dollars, so that our successor will find a good house here. . . . While we mark growth, this is only the beginning of what might be, for this territory is largely undeveloped. I do not know a more prosperous country in the State than that occupied by the Durant district, and neither do I know a better class of people; but they do not know yet their powers for good. . . . Whatever success we have had has been possible only by having had the faithful co-operation of as noble and self-sacrificing band of pastors as any presiding elder ever had the privilege of laboring with, and a host of true and tried laymen that have ever stood by us in every good work. . . . God bless the pastors and the laymen of the district. They have ever been kind and patient towards their inexperienced presiding elder. We haven't had a jar. Then their hands and hearts have ever been thrown open wide to us, and they have made us feel at home, and we have spent many pleasant and, we hope, profitable hours in their homes. . . . I always thought I loved preachers and their families, but since I have been thrown with them in my present capacity, I love them more than ever; . . . Many of this good people I will never see any more on earth; but may we all meet in heaven!"

In the old days of the Christian martyrs it was not unusual for the savage Pagans to cast innocent women into a den of lions, to suffer horrible agony and fear before death finally came to their relief. In this Christian age and this land of civilization tens of thousands of women daily suffer the slow torments of approaching death. They do this because of a false delicacy frequently inculcated by their mothers.
There is a marvelous medicine for women that cures all weakness and disease of the distinctly feminine organism. It acts directly on the delicate and important organs concerned in maternity and makes them strong and healthy. It is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It allays inflammation, heals ulceration and soothes pain. It gives rest and tone to the tortured nerves. Under its magic influence the headaches and pains in the back and sides, the dragging and burning sensations, the nervousness, weakness, lassitude and despondency that result from so-called female weakness are banished. It fits for wifehood and motherhood. Taken during the period of solicitude, it banishes the usual discomforts and makes baby's entry to the world easy and almost painless. It insures the new comer's health and an ample supply of nourishment. Thousands of women have testified to its marvelous merits. All good druggists sell it.
Mrs. Ursula Dunham, of Sistersville, Tyler Co., W. Va., writes: "My baby is now nearly a year old. After she was born I had local weakness. I could not stand up. I took three bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and it has cured me. I can now do all my work."
Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure It is better to do mending while the damage is slight, than wait until the whole structure is ready to fall. Constipation is the one, all-embracing disorder that is responsible for many other diseases. Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure. They never gripe. One little "Pellet" is a gentle laxative, and two a mild cathartic. They are tiny, sugar-coated granules. Nothing else is "just as good." A permanent cure.

—Selected.

Fine talk is good, but fine performance is far better.

Beware of dissipating your powers; strive constantly to concentrate them. —Goethe.

Only he who has the spirit of Christ can do the will of Christ.—Joseph Parker.

There is nothing so strong or safe in any emergency of life as the simple truth.—Dickens.

It does not take a hero to drift with the multitude and cry out, "Hurrah for our side."

Love's sweetest meanings are unspoken: the full heart knows no rhetoric of words.—Bovee.

The opiates most largely used these days are not those that are sold in the drug stores, but those which silence a noisy conscience.

Those who neglect to seek the Holy Spirit, and thus grieve him, err in thinking they are rightly waiting for the Spirit.—Churchman.

Every man's task is his life-preserver. The conviction that his work is dear to God, and can not be spared, defends him.—R. W. Emerson.

Some people read about the Bible and make that a substitute for reading the book itself. This is like reading a bill-of-fare as a substitute for eating.

There are no songs comparable to the songs of Zion, no orations equal to those of the prophets, and no politics like those which the Scriptures teach.—John Milton.

A carrion crow with feathers, however disgusting he may be, is a very useful animal, but a carrion crow-crow wrapped in human entiole and seated on the tripod of a religious (?) paper is a public nuisance. We beg pardon of the feathered bird for the comparison.

Love has a thousand modes and forms, all of which may be consistent with reality and truth. It may come like the burst of morning light, kindling the whole soul into new life and radiance; it may grow inaudibly and unknown, until its roots are found to be through and through the heart, entwined in its every fibre; it is unreal and false only when it is a name for some form for selfishness.—Peter Bayne.

THE DUTY OF FORGIVENESS.

There is frequent occasion for the exhibition of a forgiving spirit. Every now and then somebody—it may be a friend, a relative, a neighbor, or an enemy—is sure to offend us in word or in act. Whether the offense be intentional or otherwise, there is a strong tendency to brood over the supposed grievance, and to entertain hard feelings against the one who has injured or slighted us. Misunderstandings easily occur, but are slow and difficult to be cleared up. "Trifles light as air," sometimes, alas! are sufficient to separate friends and put kinsmen at bitter enmity with each other, for some are so suspicious in their nature and exacting in their demands that it is well-nigh impossible to keep on good terms with them. Then, too, whispering tongues can "poison truth" and generate strife where no just cause exists. How many quarrels could be averted and how many differences adjusted if only those concerned would calmly and fairly hear both sides of the case, and manifest a conciliatory spirit! When did ever grievous words fail to stir up strife?

In almost every community there are people, some of them professing Christians, who nurse grudges against neighbors, or perhaps relatives, or church members with whom they have had misunderstandings. In the majority of instances both parties to a difficulty are more or less in the wrong. Few, indeed, are they who are willing to forgive and be forgiven!

However just one's grievance or real the injury suffered, nothing is so calculated to destroy one's happiness and peace of mind as grudge-bearing. A man may be surrounded with comforts and luxuries, and wear distinguished honors, and withal be a stranger to joy because of the presence of malice or envy in his heart. The wicked Haman, shortly before his downfall, spoke to his wife and friends of the glory of his riches and of the great honor King Ahasuerus had bestowed upon him. "Yet," said he, "all this availeth me nothing as long as I see Mordecai, the Jew, sitting at the king's gate." His hatred was a root of bitterness that suffered him not to rest. And so it is with every man who cherishes a spark of hatred or malice in his bosom. So long as it remains it will mar his peace and drive away the Spirit of God.

People who fancy they can be Christians, and at the same time cherish malice in their hearts, are deceiving themselves. They know not what manner of spirit they are of. Nothing is more foreign to the spirit of Christ than a spirit of unforgiveness. The Master has plainly declared, "If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." If the Lord is merciful to pardon our manifold iniquities and frequent backslidings, shall we not bear with the few offenses which some fellow-mortal has committed against us? To hate is indeed human, but to forgive is divine.

While John Wesley was journeying to America in the same vessel which carried Gen. Oglethorpe, hearing an unusual noise one day in the General's cabin, he entered to inquire the cause, on which the angry warrior replied that he had met with a provocation too great to bear. A rascally servant had drunk up all his wine, for which deed the General proposed to have the offender tied hand and foot and sent to the man-of-war, saying that he never forgave. Mr. Wesley remarked with great calmness: "Then I hope, sir, you never sin." The General's anger, it is said, cooled immediately, and he forgave the servant on the spot.

Many, doubtless, in this day wish the command read as it was claimed by some in the olden time: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy." But Jesus says: "Love your enemies; do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you." Again, it is written: "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" There is no surer test of love to Christ than readiness to forgive and do a kindness to those who have maltreated us. Nor is there a surer way of winning them to be our friends. If any are in doubt on this point, let them try the efficacy of kindness, and great will be their astonishment at its magic power.

To forgive an offender, to love an enemy, is an impossible task without the grace of God. It goes against the grain, and costs a mighty struggle, but with the help of Christ it can be done. It has been done millions of times. He is most like Christ who goes furthest to forgive, who is readiest to extend the olive branch.

Bishop Galloway, in "Modern Missions," narrates the following remarkable example of forgiveness which came under the observation of Rev. Mr. Taylor, a missionary to New Zealand: At a farewell service shortly before Mr. Taylor's return to England, some years ago, during the administration of the Lord's Supper, one of the communicants suddenly rose, very much agitated, and returned to his seat. After a short while he became more composed; again went to the altar, and partook of the sacrament. When questioned afterwards as to his strange conduct, he said that immediately upon kneeling at the sacramental board he found himself beside a man who several years before had killed his father and drunk his blood, and whom he had sworn to kill on sight. As soon as he realized by whom he was kneeling, all this came upon him with terrible force, and he felt that he could not remain where he was. On reaching his seat he seemed to hear a voice, which said: "Hereby shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." This made a deep impression upon him, and at the same time he thought he saw a vision of Christ on the cross, saying: "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do." Then he received strength to return to the altar.

There is many a church whose spirituality is lowered and whose progress is greatly hindered by reason of the fact that some of its members are at outs with each other. Let every believer beware of being a stumbling block on such account, for the Lord will not hold him guiltless. Unless Christians are in love and charity not only with each other, but with all the world, they can not be accepted of God. "Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."

A NEW AND NOBLE FORM OF PHILANTHROPY.

Some of our readers have doubtless seen elsewhere accounts of the recent opening in New York City of a new humanitarian institution built and controlled by Mr. D. C. Mills, a millionaire, who has risen from humble beginnings to his present station. It is a palatial, attractive and well-appointed hotel, located in the heart of the down-town region of New York, for the especial accommodation of the self-respecting poor, at rates within their means, and is known as the Mills Hotel No. 1, it being Mr. Mills' purpose to erect several such buildings in other parts of the city.

This ten-story building is complete in every feature of its furnishing and construction, and cost $1,000,000. The exterior presents a very handsome appearance, being built of Indiana limestone and white brick, and is very artistically and tastefully decorated. It is divided into two parts, each in the form of a hollow square, the separate buildings being connected by corridors. In the interior of each square is a beautiful court, with a variety of tropical and other plants.

All the floors above the second are devoted to sleeping apartments, which number fifteen hundred and sixty-four. The rooms are just large enough for a bed and a chair, hooks and a shelf being provided over the foot of the bed for clothing. Each room is furnished with an enameled bed, springs, hair mattress, feather pillow and hair pillow, all of the best quality and faultlessly clean. There is free circulation of the air in each room, owing to the fact that the partitions between the rooms extend only to within a foot and a half of the ceiling. The smallness of the rooms might seem objectionable, but, as the hotel is furnished with bright parlors, an attractive lounging-room, a reading-room supplied with the best current literature, and also a well-stocked library, the guests suffer no inconvenience on that score.

The price of a night's lodging in this palatial hotel is only twenty cents, which entitles the guest to a private bed-room, to all the privileges of the library, reading-room, hot and cold baths, soap and towels being furnished, and to the brilliantly lighted parlors provided with games, etc.

In the basement is a large restaurant, in charge of an experienced chef, where well-prepared food is served at marvelously low rates. An excellent and abundant meal can be had for ten cents, a small order being given the same attention as a larger one. Neatness and elegance characterize everything.

A laundry is also connected with the hotel, the charges at which are in keeping with the other accommodations. Those not able to pay for laundering are provided with facilities for doing it themselves.

Mr. Mills' aim is to provide accommodations where men with but little means can live comfortably, healthfully and cheerfully, at a total cost of from $3.50 to $4 per week. He disclaims having founded a charitable institution, though he expects much good to result from the helpful character and wholesome surroundings of the hostelry. He is wise in not allowing liquor to be sold on the premises.

An institution like this that helps men to help themselves, and that cultivates self-respect and habits of self-support, is, after all, the most practical charity.

In speaking of the enterprise, which is expected to be self-supporting from the start, Mr. Mills said: "No, I do not design this for poor men. There are no poor men in this country, if they have health and good habits. Their income may be limited for a time, but they have capital. The only poor man in America is the man who is sick or has bad habits."

It is to be hoped that other capitalists in other cities will follow Mr. Mills' example in the erection of hostelries for the benefit of wage-earners. There is great need of such philanthropic enterprises. He who helps to make the poor comfortable, independent, and self-respecting, and endeavors to throw around them wholesome and elevating influences, is indeed a public benefactor.

MEETING OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

The Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE met on Wednesday, Dec. 1. All the members were present except Rev. W. B. Lewis, who was kept at home by a death in his flock. The present incumbent was re-elected editor and publisher for a term of three years, ending Jan. 1, 1901.

A re-election at the hands of a body of men of such high character is an expression of approbation and confidence which we highly appreciate and which we shall endeavor to merit by a faithful discharge of the duties which the position involves. We promise to do what in our power lies to make the paper a blessing to every home in which it enters. We ask the hearty co-operation of all our preachers and all our subscribers in an effort to extend its patronage and thus increase its power for good.

The report of the Publishing Committee has been unavoidably delayed until next issue.

NOW IS THE TIME.

The present is an opportune time to extend the circulation of the ADVOCATE. What better work can a preacher do than to put such literature into the homes of his people? Where can such an adjunct to true pastoral work be found? How can the people be interested in the great enterprises of the church unless they are informed? and how can they be informed otherwise than by reading our church papers? The people who can be relied on for intelligent and enthusiastic support of all our institutions are those who read our periodicals. An increased circulation of our church papers is universally admitted to be a desideratum of the times. This increase, if it ever comes, will have to come through the efforts of our preachers and our leading laymen who are wise enough to see the perils of ignorance and the priceless value of information concerning the great movements in the kingdom of God.

The Richmond Advocate and the Baltimore Advocate are soon to be consolidated. Rev. H. M. Hope has been elected assistant editor.

A NEW BOOK.

WHAT A YOUNG BOY OUGHT TO KNOW. The first book in a Self and Sex series to Men. By Sylvanus Stall, D. D. Vir Publishing Co., 144 Hale Building, Philadelphia. Price, $1.

This little book handles a difficult subject in a delicate way. It is scientific, but can be understood by a child, and is as readable as a fairy story. For purity, clearness, and intensity this little volume is without a rival in literature of its class. Indeed, it constitutes a class by itself. It is indeed what boys ought to know—the failure to know which has been the cause of many sorrows and pains and penalties. After being taught the sacredness of his own body in such a sensible and satisfying way, a boy will be repelled, rather than attracted, by the vulgarity of the street. There is universal need for a book of this kind, and it should be read not only by every boy, but by every man, preacher, mother and teacher in the country. It would be well if there were a fund to enable the public schools to place this book as a free gift in the hands of every boy as a standard of pure manhood. It is suited to be placed in the hands of a young boy as soon as his inquiring mind seeks information concerning the origin of life and being. This book will safeguard and save the boys who have hitherto been left to learn from vicious companions sacred truths in an unhallowed way. The circulation of this excellent book should be as universal as the need which has inspired its author to write it.

THE CHURCH PAPER.

"Apropos of the statement made last week that not one-half the members of our official boards are subscribers to any Methodist paper, is the assertion of a member of the New England Southern Conference that he is serving a church in which not one member of the official board is a subscriber to any denominational paper! Is it surprising that the faithful pastor of a church so officered has received for his six months' service, on an average, only 74 cents per day?"—Zion's Herald.

We have copied the above, not to show the delinquencies of Methodists in "cultured" New England, but to show the importance of a wider circulation of our church paper. It may be that there are churches among us where there is not a subscriber to any denominational paper. Where such is the case nothing can be expected but indifference to all the interests of the church. One of our progressive pastors remarked to us not long ago: "I find that the most willing workers and contributors among my people are those who read the church papers. They have an intelligent appreciation of the needs of the church, and a lively interest in its welfare."—Baltimore Advocate.

There is no humbug like the religious humbug. A man has been going over the country preaching what he is pleased to call with much emphasis and reiteration a "free gospel." He receives no salary, takes no collections, and makes no appeals. But when he has given this assurance again and again until his hearers have been wrought up to a great pitch of mingled curiosity and sympathy, he proceeds to explain how the people, everywhere he has gone, under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, have quietly slipped great rolls of money into his pocket, and great bags of silver into his valise, until he could hardly walk for the load. This is all told very innocently, and his innocent admirers, thankful for the suggestion, conclude that it is the will of the Holy Ghost that they should go and do likewise. A great many people who are now admiring this man's wonderful faith will realize when he is gone that it was only a wonderful trick.—Baltimore Advocate.

Col. Robt. G. Ingersoll, the brilliant agnostic, is drawing smaller audiences than formerly, and his lectures get more condensed notices in the daily press. The market for his wares is on the decline. Hitherto one man has been sufficient for all this country to supply the demand for popular lectures against the Bible and Christianity, and he has made a fortune out of it. It looks as if his successor in the lecture field, if he shall have one, will find hard work to earn a decent living out of it.—Midland Advocate.

The "Watchman," the leading organ of the Baptists in the New England States, says: "Baptists sometimes animadvert upon the Methodist itineracy, but as a matter of fact Methodist ministers, on the average, stay as long with one church as their Baptist brethren. It is difficult to locate the responsibility. Probably it should be about equally divided between pastors and congregations. But wherever the blame belongs, it is not a good sign." All this we have often thought about. The Methodists who are inclined to quarrel with their system because it works occasional hardships would do well to move cautiously before they consent to change it.—Nashville Advocate.

The Interior says: "Do you occasionally reflect how dreadfully prevalent the lying habit has become? The virtue of truthfulness is not valued as it ought to be. . . . it requires some moral courage to be truthful at all hazards, but the lying habit is as cowardly as it is mean." One of the debasing characteristics of the Chinese is their lying and practicing deception in matters of business, and it looks as if the American people were copying after them, both in business and in politics, especially in the latter. If you do not believe it, just take and read the rank partisan papers of two opposite parties for three months.—Religious Telescope.

A telegram from the North Georgia Conference, sent by Dr. R. J. Bigham, Secretary of our General Board of Education, informs us that the Conference gave $1,526 for the Haygood Memorial Hall. This amount, with what was contributed by the Virginia and Western North Carolina Conferences, swells the amount to something near $20,000. The North Georgia also raised nearly $3,000 for Wesleyan Female College. Georgia will stay in the lead—Nashville Advocate.

NOTES.

Rev. C. B. Carter has been appointed to Collinsville, Texas.

The Alabama Conference will convene on the fifteenth, Bishop Galloway presiding.

We greet our readers this week with new type on the third page. This completes the work of renovation. Within the last two years we have supplied every page with new and handsome type.

Felicity Street Church will pay all its assessments in full. It will send its popular pastor to Conference with a light heart and a full pocket, with a confident expectation of his return for another year.

Our churches, as is usual at this season, are thinking about the kind of a preacher they want for the next year. Some of them express their thoughts in verse, as will be seen by referring to our second page.

Trinity College, Durham, N. C., after struggling through nearly half a century of poverty, has now a property value of $400,000, and is one of the most prosperous colleges in the South.—Richmond Advocate.

Under the wise leadership of Rev. J. R. D. King, Cockrum charge, North Mississippi Conference, has had a year of great prosperity. One hundred and nine new names have been added to the membership, and there has been a very marked improvement along spiritual lines.

For some months past it has been repeatedly asserted through certain papers that there was much rottenness in high circles in the North Georgia Conference. As a result of these publications, at the recent session of that Conference committees were appointed to investigate the character of Rev. J. W. Heit, D. D., Rev. E. R. Cook, and Rev. T. T. Gibson, the two first-named being presiding elders, and the last a station preacher in Atlanta. After a most thorough investigation not a single fact could be established that militated against their moral character. This result was to be expected. We suppose very few persons, except those with whom the wish was father to the thought, ever believed that there was any foundation for these charges. Our people have learned to put little confidence in the statements of the Bohemian press, even though it dons ecclesiastical robes.

Monumental Records.

THE GREATEST SPECIAL PERIODICAL OF THE DAY.

Monumental Records has its Correspondents in every field where ruins mark the Civilizations of the Past. These men are photographing and giving the results of the excavations which are being carried on by the great Exploration Societies, Museums, and Governments of the World, and the greatest explorers are its friends and promised contributors.

Monumental Records interests old and young; it appeals to the scientist and attracts the reader who is influenced through the imagination. Its presentations of the past come to some as a fairy story—a romance; to others as a scientific dissertation and a truthful record of the other civilizations. The scientist needs it because it is a record of fact. The Biblical student must have it because many of the discoveries bear on the historical records of the Bible. All interested in the development of man will find it an invaluable help.

Inscriptions are translated by the most eminent scholars.

To bring the wonderful Past before the intelligent masses of the Present, the subscription price of MONUMENTAL RECORDS is put at the cost of production. A year's subscription is only $1.50, its size is 10½x14 inches to admit of the most ample illustration and photographic reproductions are from originals, and the paper is the best manufactured. Taken in every way, there is no monthly published in any language that surpasses MONUMENTAL RECORDS.

It has already on its paid subscription list (it has no other) many of the most prominent men of this country. Those sending $1.50 for 1898 will receive the November and December Numbers of 1897 free; or the November and December numbers will be sent on receipt of fifteen two-cent stamps or a four months' subscription for fifty cents.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE NOTES.

All the friends of our college have been glad to hear of the splendid opening. So far more than one hundred and sixty-five young men have applied for admission. The Freshman class is the largest in the history of the college. It numbers 56. Each session the percentage of students in the college proper has increased. This session three fourths of our students are in collegiate departments.

In the peculiar circumstances of our postponed opening, it may not be too late to account for our professors during the Summer vacation. President Murrah was always present wherever the interests of the college called him. He attended many of the District Conferences, and took his rest superintending work on buildings and grounds work—which was going on during all the Summer. Profs. Swearingen, Moore, and Ricketts also had part in the work of canvassing for new students. Profs. Moore and Ricketts gave several weeks to special instruction, while Prof. Swearingen visited his mother, who lives in Georgia. Dr. and Mrs. Mackenfuss spent an enjoyable vacation in Europe, visiting the most important points of interest. Prof. Hanner went to his home in Tennessee, but got back in time to have part in the canvassing. Prof. Weber was engaged in studying in the Johns Hopkins and Peabody Libraries.

Our friends who come to Conference will notice many improvements on the campus. Several of the cottages have been put into thorough repair. Many new roads and paths have been laid out, making every part of the campus readily accessible. Between the Asbury and Williams Homes a large plat has been leveled under the superintendence of Prof. Swearingen to be used as tennis courts.

The librarian is daily expecting a large shipment of books. On his way home from his European tour, Major Millsaps, always having the college in mind, stopped in New York long enough to spend $500 in books for the library. A shipment of apparatus is also on its way to the laboratories, Dr. Mackenfuss having ordered $200 worth of additions to his well-selected stock.

It is expected that Bishop Wilson will spend in Jackson the time between the adjournment of the North Mississippi Conference and the holding of the Mississippi Conference. The Bishop has promised to deliver during the time he is in Jackson a series of lectures before our students. The subject of the lectures can not yet be announced, but we can promise to any visiting brethren who may be able to be present a rich intellectual treat.

The students of the Department of History have resolved themselves into the Millsaps College Historical Society. Prof. J. P. Hanner was chosen president, with Mr. T. M. Lemly, vice-president, and Mr. J. A. Teat, secretary. The society will hold monthly meetings, and besides hearing papers from its members will have invited speakers to discuss questions of interest to students of history. Bishop Galloway is expected to address the society at its next meeting on some phase of the history of Mississippi. The State Historical Society (with headquarters at the University of Mississippi) will be revived in the near future. On this occasion a full program of interesting papers will be offered. Dr. Mayes, dean of the Law Department, and Prof. Weber, of the English Department, have been invited to have part in the program.

The College Y. M. C. A., under the zealous presidency of Mr. Robt. Ricketts, is one of the strongest powers for good in the college community. The association begins its work full of encouragement. Special effort will be made to improve and beautify the commodious quarters in the main building, which have been set apart for the association.

The readers of our publications are requested to use Salvation Oil for any and all pains. It is a sure cure. 25 cents.

TOPIC FOR DECEMBER.

DEC. 12.—THE CHURCH—ITS UNITY IN DIVERSITY. (Eph. iv, 11-13.)

Sickness again compels us to take advantage of the work of others. We clip the following from the Nashville Advocate:

The "Unity in Diversity" of the church is manifest in the fact that though there are diversities of operations—many methods and many men for carrying on the work—all is for the self-same purpose: "the perfecting of the saints, the work of the ministry, the edifying of the body of Christ."

1. There are divers orders of ministers:

(1) Apostles. Men sent on important business. The title was applied particularly to the first ministers of our Lord Jesus Christ, selected by him as his companions, to be witnesses of his words and works, and, above all, to be witnesses of his resurrection. The office of apostle, with its peculiar distinctions and functions, ceased with the death of those selected by our Lord, including St. Paul, who, though coming in after the resurrection, was selected by the Lord in person. The apostles have had no successors in office.

(2) Prophets. The word here is not to be understood in the same sense as applied to the "prophets of old"—men whose chief office was to foretell future events. They also declared the counsel of God, and warned and exhorted the people. The "prophet" to-day is the preacher. He has no commission to look into the future, no authority to tell what shall come to pass. His business is to preach the gospel, and warn men to flee the wrath to come.

(3) Evangelists. This title was applied to a small class who acted under the authority and direction of the apostles—a class that might be called vice apostles. "As they were directed to ordain pastors or bishops in the churches, but had no authority given them to ordain successors to themselves in their particular office as evangelists, whatever it might be, they must be considered as but temporary officers in the church." (Watson.) Literally, "evangelist" means the "bringer of glad tidings." The modern meaning, everyone understands to be, one who goes from place to place to promote revivals of religion.

(4) He gave also "pastors and teachers"—under shepherds of the flock whose business it is to look after the spiritual and temporal interests of local churches. In these classes may not only be included the pastor proper, but also all who have any sort of spiritual or teaching function. In the early church "the catechists, who drilled the convert into the history of Jesus and other elementary truths of Christianity, were very probably these teachers." (Whedon.) Among Methodists the class leaders and Sunday school teachers may justly be called "pastors and teachers."

Happy Homes

..AND THE..

Hearts that Make Them;

Or, Thrifty People and Why They Thrive

BY

SAMUEL SMILES,

AUTHOR OF SELF-HELP, CHARACTER, DUTY, THRIFT, ETC.

CAREFULLY REVISED WITH ADDITIONAL MATTER BY CHAS. A. CASKELL, A. M.

A beautifully illustrated book of 644 pages, cover stamped in gold, marble edges, size 8vo, red cloth. Probably no books of the same general type were ever written that have so much interested and inspired to worthy action the various classes to whom they were addressed, as have the productions of SAMUEL SMILES. The marked interest which attaches to MR. SMILES' productions is chiefly due to his happy use of biography. Readers who tire of extended biographical histories find here groups of the wise and distinguished of earth, each giving testimony to the various principles the author wishes to inculcate. The interest excited by the novel arises solely from our interest in the lives and struggles of men and women. They are interesting biographies; but much more interest should attach to lives actually lived and conquests actually made, provided they are produced with equal care. The home is the epitome of society and government. The application of these principles to every member of the home—the importance of their inculcation in the home, where character is chiefly molded—and the value of such lessons in making every home what it may be and should be, has dictated the title,

"Happy Homes and the Hearts that Make Them."

REV. W. C BLACK, 512 Camp St., New Orleans, La.

FREE! Until Jan. 15.

The late Rev. W. E. Penn, the noted Evangelist, to Mrs. W. H. Watson, New Albion, N. Y.:

Dear Madame: I have used Dr. Moore's treatment, have tried it, and know it to be just what he says it is; was cured by it and have remained so eight years; have known of many others being cured of the very worst cases. By all means get it. Yours truly, W. E. Penn, Eureka Springs, Ark., May 24, '94.

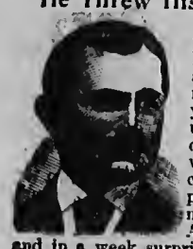
Am 72 years old, suffered from Catarrh over 25 years, was almost entirely deaf. Four years ago used Aerial Medication, which I regard one of the most useful discoveries of this age. Since have suffered but little. My hearing was and is still restored, can hear ordinary conversation and preaching. Rev. Dr. Potter, of this city, has been signally blessed by this treatment in the cure of throat affection.—REV. C. R. PATTISON, Eustis, Fla.

"Whereas I was Deaf, Now I Can Hear."

At the age of 69, after having suffered from Catarrhal Deafness 20 years, am truly thankful to state that I am entirely cured by Aerial Medication; my hearing which had become so bad that I could not hear a watch tick, or conversation, is fully restored. I will verify this statement.—WILLIAM RITCHIE, Derby Centre, Vt.

Had catarrh ever since I can remember, often avoided company on account of it; throat was dry and sore, the least change in the weather gave me cold; dull pain over my eyes caused a stupid and drowsy feeling; ears began to ring, in a short time my hearing failed, became so deaf could not hear one talk unless they were close to me, and spoke very loud. Used Aerial Medication eight weeks, hearing was fully restored, roaring and pain stopped, and was entirely cured of Catarrh. I do not see why anyone should suffer from Catarrh or deafness when there is such a good cure as this.—MISS CARRIE BOWERS, Rousville, Pa.

He Threw His Slate Away.



In 1869 I had typhoid fever, which left me with Catarrh and totally destroyed my hearing; for 25 years I could not understand a word, or hear a steam whistle, and had to carry a slate so that people could talk to me. In '94 I obtained Aerial Medication and in a week surprised my friends by throwing my slate away, could begin to hear; in two weeks could hear loud conversation; in three months could sit by the church door and fully understand every word that was spoken. The wonderful cure astonished my friends as well as myself, for three years my hearing has been perfect and I am entirely free from Catarrh. —EDWARD E. WILLIAMS, Lead, S. D.

See Special Free Offer Below.

For eighteen years I was not able to do any work, was confined to the house three years, often confined to the bed: took cold on the slightest exposure, eyes were weak and discharged great deal of mucous, was deaf in right ear, suffered intensely with pain in head, had fainting spells, often thought would lose my mind, and was a misery to myself and friends. Eighteen months ago used Aerial Medication, in two weeks hearing was fully restored, Catarrh gradually subsided, and in six months was entirely cured. It has been one year since I used the treatment, the disease has not returned, and I feel like a new person.—MRS. KATE ELLEGOOD, 2221 Walnut St., St. Louis, Mo.

Am 82 years old, hearing began to fall 20 years ago. For eleven years could only hear loud sounds, could not hear conversation, had continual roaring in head, and sense of smell was entirely destroyed. Used Aerial Medication in '94, it did its work with the greatest satisfaction—the roaring ceased, discharge from head and throat stopped, hearing improved and for four years have been able to hear ordinary conversation and preaching. Sense of smell entirely restored, and cured of Catarrh and no indication of its return.—G. J. QUICK, Media, Illinois.

Deaf Forty Years.

Had Catarrh in a very bad form forty years, which greatly affected my eyes, almost entirely destroyed my hearing, was confined to the house a great portion of the time, and coughed almost continually. Used Aerial Medication in '94, which fully restored my hearing; my eyes are well and I am entirely cured of Catarrh; can work and feel better than for forty years.—JOHN GARRIS, Flatbrookville, N. J.

"SHE IS IN HEAVEN."

BY CHARLOTTE ELLIOTT.

She is in heaven! That thought alone
Should chase the grief that clouds thy brow;
'Twas said from her Redeemer's throne,
"Thine joy can ne'er be broken."

She is in heaven! How sweet the phrase!
Yet its high import who can tell?
Here like a glimmering beam it plays,
Of light, of joy ineffable.

She is in heaven, to form a link
Between thy heart and worlds unseen,
That then, when nature's powers must sink,
Faith's holier virtue may be seen.

She is in heaven! When thou art faint,
And wouldst thy weary race were run,
Think that the voice of that loved saint
Whispers, "The prize will soon be won."

SERVED THEM RIGHT.

A LESSON FOR BOYS TO HEED.

George M. Pullman, who died recently in Chicago, left an estate estimated as worth not less than $7,000,000, and all of it was made by his own "brain and brawn," as he began life as a poor boy. In order to be a successful business man he had to practice diligence, perseverance and strict economy. He was a hard worker and looked after his vast interests with a very close eye. He had four children, two boys and two girls. The girls married and left the old home, but the boys, being the younger, remained under the paternal roof. They are now grown to man's estate, and for the first time in life, doubtless, begin to see where they have "missed it."

Being the sons of a rich man, they seemed to think that all they had to do was to contrive to spend what their father labored to gain. Often the father remonstrated with the boys about their "fast" ways, but to no avail, as they thought they knew more than he did. Seemingly, all they cared for was to get hold of their father's millions and then they would show this nineteenth century people how to live. But the father, it would seem, had thought of this, and seeing no chance to make anything out of the boys, decided to checkmate them in their prodigal plans. A short time before his death he made a will, and here is what he says in his will about these boys:

"Inasmuch as neither of my sons have developed such a sense of responsibility as in my judgment is requisite for the wise use of large properties and considerable sums of money, I am painfully compelled, as I have explicitly stated to them, to limit my testamentary provisions for their benefit to trusts producing only such income as I deem reasonable for their support."

And the amount which he deemed reasonable for their support is an income of $3,000 a year, each. $75,000, at 4 per cent., will yield $3,000 a year. So the boys are to receive an income from about $150,000, while the girls are given outright several millions. The boys alone are to blame. They refused to hearken to the wise counsel of a loving father, so they must bear the fruit of their own folly.

There is a sad commentary in this which our boys and young men could well take to heart. Whenever a boy absolutely refuses to learn of his father and will none of his counsel, you can most certainly say he is on the downward path to destruction.—Piedmont Banner.

A SECRET OF SUCCESS.

Charles Dickens the younger, writing in The North American Review, says of his father:

"Whatever he did he put his whole heart into, and did as well as ever he could. Whether it was for work or for play, he was always in earnest. Painting the scenes for a toy theatre, dancing Sir Roger de Coverley at a children's party, gravely learning the polka from his little daughters for a similar entertainment, walking, riding, pie-nicing, amateur acting, public reading, or the every-day hard work of his literary life—it was all one to him. Whatever lay nearest to his hand at the moment had to be done thoroughly. Speaking through the mouth of David Copperfield, my father described his own way of life with perfect accuracy when he said:

"'I never could have done what I have done, without the habits of punctuality, order and diligence, without the determination to concentrate myself on one object at a time, no matter how quickly its successor should come upon its heels. Heaven knows I write this in no spirit of self-laudation. My meaning simply is, that whatever I have tried to do in life I have tried with all my heart to do well; that whatever I have devoted myself to, I have devoted myself to completely; that in great aims and in small I have always been thoroughly in earnest. Never to put one hand to anything on which I could throw my whole self, and never to effect depreciation of my work, whatever it was, I find now to have been my golden rules.'"

THE POWER OF A SMILE.

A young man was once confined in a darkened chamber by a long and painful illness. The inmates of the house were distant relatives, and seemed to think that they were doing their whole duty toward the friendless youth by allowing him to remain there. They seldom went into his room; and his attendant was a sad-faced old woman who never smiled.

The young man became despondent and resolved to commit suicide. While he was writing a note telling his reasons for ending his life a knock was heard upon the door and a sweet faced lady entered. She was a neighbor, and hearing of his illness had sought him out.

She smiled so sweetly that even before she spoke the young man gave up the idea of the crime which he had contemplated. She spoke a few encouraging words to him, and when she placed her soft hand upon his hot forehead in a motherly way he broke down and sobbed like a child. She smiled again and knelt in silent prayer by his bedside, with the sweet love-token by which God spoke to him still glowing upon her bright womanly face. In that holy silence all his bitterness of soul left him, and there came an intense desire to seek and find Christ. The repentant one felt the presence of God's Spirit, and his hungry soul cried out for rest and peace. Ere the smile faded from the upturned face of the Christian woman the loving Savior had entered the open door of the seeking soul. In a week's time the young man left the dim chamber of pain and went out into the great world to do the Master's work.—American Messenger.

LIFE'S LITTLE DAYS.

One secret of sweet and happy Christian life is learning to live by the day. It is the long stretches that tire us. We think of life as a whole, running on before us. We can not carry this load until we are threescore and ten. We can not fight this battle continually for half a century. But really there are no long stretches. Life does not come to us all at one time; it comes only a day at a time. Even to-morrow is never ours till it becomes to-day, and we have nothing whatever to do with it but to pass down to it a fair and good inheritance in to-day's work well done and to-day's life well lived.

It is a blessed secret, this living by the day. Anyone can carry his burden, however heavy, till nightfall. Anyone can do his work, however hard, for one day. Anyone can live sweetly, patiently, lovingly, and purely till the sun goes down. And this is all that life ever really means for us, just one day. Do to-day's duty; fight to-day's temptation, and do not weaken and distract yourself by looking forward to things you can not see and could not understand if you saw them. God gives us night to shut down the curtain of darkness on our little days. We can not see beyond. Short horizons make life easier, and give us one of the blessed secrets of brave, true, holy life.—Golden Censer.

GOOD THINGS TO LEARN.

Learn how to tell a story. A well-told story is as welcome as a sunbeam in a sick-room.

Learn to keep your own troubles to yourself. The world is too busy to care for your ills and sorrows.

Learn to stop croaking. If you can not see any good in this world, keep the bad to yourself.

Learn to attend strictly to your own business. Very important point.

Learn to greet your friends with a smile. They carry too many frowns in their own hearts to be bothered with any of yours. —Exchange.

ON GOOD NATURE AND FIRMNESS.

Do not be all sugar, or the world will suck you down; but do not be all vinegar, or the world will spit you out. There is a medium in all things; only blockheads go to extremes. We need not be all rock or all sand, all iron or all wax. We should neither fawn upon everybody like silly lapdogs, nor fly at all persons like surly mastiffs. Blacks and whites go together to make up a world, and hence on the point of temper we have all sorts of people to deal with. Some are as easy as an old shoe, but they are hardly ever worth more than the other one of the pair; and others take fire as fast as tinder at the smallest offense, and are as dangerous as gunpowder. To have a fellow going about the farm as cross with everybody as a bear with a sore head, with a temper as sour as verjuice and as sharp as a razor, looking as surly as a butcher's dog, is a great nuisance, and yet there may be some good points about the man, so that he may be a man for all that; but poor soft Tommy, as green as grass and as ready to bend as a willow, is nobody's money and everybody's scorn. A man must have a backbone, or how is he to hold his head up?—but that backbone must bend, or he will knock his brow against the beam.—Spurgeon.

IN EXPRESSING OPINION.

It may happen to some of my readers sooner or later they will be put in a position to express an opinion or vote on some Christian work or worker. Let me advise you:

1. Keep still till you have good judgment.
2. Form your judgment out of facts.
3. Let your faith have full play.
4. Be careful and bright when speaking.
5. Don't expect everyone to think as you do.
6. Remember God may lead others where he has not led you.
7. Keep your mind open for enlightenment.
8. Don't spend all your life voting—save some to help execute the plan.—C. H. Yatman.

THE SMILE OF GREETING.

Why do we not always smile whenever we meet the eye of a fellow-being? That is the true recognition which ought to pass from soul to soul constantly. Little children in simple communities do this involuntarily, unconsciously. The honest-hearted German peasant does it. It is like magical sunlight all through that simple land, the perpetual greeting on the right hand and the left between strangers as they pass by each other, never without a smile. —Helen Hunt.

A teacher, lecturing her class on character, asked: "This house is built or constructed of what?" "Bricks," was the instant reply. "How many?" No answer. "How many did the builder lay at once?" "One." "Was he careful how he laid it, or did he just let it slide in wherever it happened?" "Oh, he was careful!" "Suppose he had left out one once in awhile?" "The building would have been insecure." "Well, you are building characters for eternity—'soul houses,' a great preacher calls them—and you must lay each habit, each lesson, each good act and kind deed with which you are building this character, with more care and more precision than the mechanic laid his bricks; for your house, your temple, will exist forever."

A father was weeping at the bedside of his little daughter who lay sick and near to death, and the strange question came from her lips and was repeated until some reply must be made, "How much do I cost you every year?" After a sum had been named, he said, "Why do you ask?" "Because, I thought maybe you would lay it out this year in Bibles for poor children to remember me by." With a heart swelling with emotion he kissed the cold brow, and replied, "I will, my child," and after a pause added, "I will do it every year, that you may draw others after you to heaven."—Missionary Review.

If men will be willing to test the Bible by its fruits, there can be no escape from the conviction that that is a good tree; it does not bring forth any corrupt fruit. It produces the most satisfactory results wherever it is properly and thoroughly applied. People who test the Bible by this rule will never be disappointed.

The mistake is often made of supposing that if you push one object you are hurting another, as for instance, if missions have a large place in the church, the pastor's salary will not be paid, or if foreign missions is pressed, state missions will not be cared for. Or if the Sunday-school work is pressed, the mission work will suffer. All of this goes on a totally wrong conception of the philosophy of missions and of human life. Nothing would help more toward pastoral support than liberal contributions to missions, while liberal support to the pastor is likely to turn to the advantage of missions.

Life is strewn with goodnesses if we only note and enjoy them. No day is so dark but what some rays of hope and joy illumine the sky. It is poor philosophy, as well as bad grace, to allow the passing discomfort to deprive us of the sweetness, relish, delight, and helpfulness of multiplying comforts.—Presbyterian.

Our safety is in having lofty ideals in constant labor to secure their realization. Let the getting of money be a man's ideal, and he will of necessity grow toward the dust.

Let no knowledge satisfy but that which lifts above the world, which weans from the world, which makes the world a footstool.—Spurgeon.

THE ADVANTAGES OF REST.

There is no better preventive of nervous exhaustion, says an exchange, than regular, unhurried muscular exercise. If we could moderate our hurry, lessen our worry, and increase our open-air exercise, a large proportion of nervous diseases would be abolished. For those who can not get a sufficient holiday, the best substitute is an occasional day in bed. Many whose nerves are constantly strained in their daily avocations have discovered this for themselves. A Spanish merchant in Barcelona told his doctor that he always went to bed for two or three days whenever he could be spared from his business, and he laughed at those who spent their holidays on toilsome mountains. A hard-worked woman, who has for many years conducted a large wholesale business, retains excellent nerves in an advanced age, owing, it is believed, to her habit of taking one day a week in bed. If we can not avoid frequent agitation, we ought, if possible, to give the nervous system time to recover itself between the shocks. Even an hour's seclusion after a good lunch will deprive a hurried, anxious day of much of its injury. The nerves can often be overcome by stratagem when they refuse to be controlled by strength of will. —The Voice.

If people would wash out their mouths twice or three times a day with an antiseptic solution, there would not be near so much sickness. In the last ten years I have never had a cold, sore throat or fever, and I ascribe this immunity solely to the fact that I follow this plan rigidly. There are any number of proprietary antiseptics that are excellent for this purpose, but many more simple agents that are as good or better. One of the best of these latter is carbolic acid. A very weak solution of this gargled and held in the mouth two or three times a day will work wonders. Immediately after using one will find that the mouth feels cleaner. I believe that a great majority of the common throat and lung troubles come from the lodgment of disease microbes within the mucous membranes of the mouth. The free use of antiseptics will kill these germs.—A St. Louis Doctor.

A TOWN IN SADNESS.

Just as we were finishing our dinner, last Saturday, the boiler of our town mill, owned by Mr. John Woodward and his son, Frank, exploded, fearfully scalding and bruising eight persons—five whites and three negroes. Mr. Frank Woodward, his uncle, James Hemphill, and one of the colored men died by six o'clock that evening. The five whites injured were: Mr. John Woodward, his son, Frank; his little grandson, Roy Blair; his nephew, Mott Woodward, and his brother-in-law, James Hemphill—all people of good standing, and had many friends. The whites, though badly scalded, are improving. It is doubtful about the recovery of the colored. Two aged and feeble sisters, who were dependent upon a brother for support, are now deprived of that earthly help; a young wife, married to her fond Frank eighteen months ago, is left heart-broken, desolate, and sad, and our entire town in mourning. Of course, the poor colored folks had many loved ones, who sustained a real loss, and have many sympathizers, both among their own color and the whites.

May this awful affair, which can not be described by either tongue or pen, be sanctified to the good of this community!

THE VOICE OF GOD.

There are times when a conviction of a divine call to some particular work is our secret joy and strength. The duties to be discharged may seem to others trivial, even menial, in their character. But this may be the error of a careless observer. Only let our souls be stirred by a secret impulse, and let us feel that this is a voice from above calling to sacrifice, then will everything seem to be invested with solemn dignity. Each incident of the passing hour, under ordinary circumstances so devoid of interest, will be in harmony with the divine purpose in the attainment of a desired end. Even seeming disappointments will have their mission. That which is often called defeat will be only a method of conquest for the soul truly alive unto God in his holy service. In view of this, the only way for the believer to live is in the constant willingness to accept life as it is meted out in the providential ordering, without anxiety as to final results, being always diligent in the discharge of present duties, however insignificant they may appear to men.—New York Advocate.

The Wesleyan Advocate cites some cases of what it calls "unfair dealing:" "In a few instances, when accounts have been sent to subscribers who are in arrears, they have written back, 'Stop the paper—not able to pay.' Or, 'I only subscribed for one year, and won't pay.' As to the first excuse, we say, How would it look to make such a reply to your grocer or dry goods merchant? In the second, we say, Why did you not order your paper stopped, instead of taking it out of the office for a year or two, and then refusing to pay for it?"

People seem to be very much alike in all sections of the country, since that is just the way a few of them do in our territory. They have no word of complaint until a bill is sent them; then they get very pious, turn up their noses, and some of them assert they never wanted the paper anyway. And these people who take a paper year in and year out, and then, when asked for the money, tell the postmaster to have it stopped, they don't want it, think they are Christians, but they are fearfully mistaken. The Bible condemns such in strong, unmistakable terms.—Central Advocate.

Man's true worth consists not in what he seems to be, but in what he is. Professions alone will not prove a passport to heaven; it requires the accompaniment of the Holy Spirit. There must be that awakening of truth in the heart of man which manifests itself in the every-day life.

Christian educators may feel a solid satisfaction in the fact that the spirit of the religion of Christ is always favorable to true intellectual as it is to all other development. The gospel not only saves souls, but also tones up minds and engages in reasoning processes. Bishop Hendrix, writing not long ago in the Homiletic Review on "The Partnership between Religion and Science," throws down this sarcastic challenge: "Look where Christianity has not been proclaimed, and find, if you can, the press in its glory, the lyceum at its best, and institutions of learning the most renowned of all the world. What great scientific discoveries are every year given to the world from Africa and China! What astronomical observations are reported from India! What astounding experiments in physics and chemistry telegraphed from Arabia! What charming style marks the rare poems loaned from the shores of the Bosphorus!" Truly Christianity is peerless not only as a religion, but also as a regenerator of the mind.—New York Observer.

Many churches in quiet towns and neighborhoods are no stronger or larger than they were fifty years ago. The Word of God has been preached, the sacraments have been administered, the influence of the truth has been continuous in the region. People have come and gone, but the number at no time has been large, and the membership of the church has been correspondingly small. And yet from such churches has gone one young men after another to become ministers and missionaries, and to fill places of importance and distinction in the world. We could give the names of scores of churches, never large at any time, which have given ministers and missionaries in numbers not approached by the larger and wealthier churches. It is not for nothing that these little churches live.—Herald and Presbyter.

FORD.—BENJAMIN HILLIARD FORD was born Dec. 29, 1835, and died in Starkville, Miss., April 15, 1897, at the residence of his son-in-law, Rev. R. A. Burroughs, presiding elder of Columbus district, North Mississippi Conference. He had been a faithful and consistent member of the M. E. Church, South, for many years. Bro. Ford was a loyal member of the church of his choice. He heartily endorsed its polity and its doctrines, attended upon its meetings, responded to its claims, and supported its institutions with his means and by his influence. Soon after he became a member of the church he erected a family altar, and kept it up during the remainder of his life. A year or two after joining the church he was elected a member of the Board of Stewards, and in this position served the church for a number of years. He was a man of fine social qualities, of warm sympathies, a good conversationalist, and a genial companion. He loved the association and fellowship of his preachers and of all good people. In other years the writer was frequently associated with him in the work of the church, and often a guest in his home, and can bear witness to his love and fidelity toward the church. The hospitalities of his home were dispensed with unfeigned cordiality, and shared often by the weary itinerant preacher.

During the last years of his life, having broken up housekeeping, Bro. Ford made his home with his son-in-law, Bro. R. A. Burroughs. But he was of too active a temperament and too energetic to remain idle, and he engaged in the work of Bible distribution. In this work he continued for some eight years, canvassing a number of counties and selling many thousand copies of the Word of God. During the year before his death he made a thorough canvass of Oktibbeha county, laboring with marked zeal and success, visiting eighteen hundred families and selling eleven hundred copies of the Scriptures.

Bro. Ford was steadfast in his devotion to the church, and his religious experience grew on and matured to the close of life. Only a short time before his death he said to Bro. Burroughs, "All is well; I want to die." He did not desire to linger in failing health and strength, and become a burden to his friends. His passing away was in accordance with his desire. Having retired as usual at night, it was discovered next morning that his spirit had ascended up to God. He had "fallen on sleep." T. C. WIER.

CLARK.—Died in Point Coupee parish, on Nov. 7, 1897, Mrs. F. S. CLARK, aged seventy-three years and seven months. Mrs. Clark was a Miss Rochelle, of East Feliciana parish, and came to Point Coupee parish before the war, locating in that part of the parish known as the Cane-Brake.

Sister Clark was one of the charter members of the Cotton Wood Church, on the Plaquemine and Gross Tete circuit, organized by this writer twenty years ago. She and old Bro. Sharborough were the lights of the church and the community. She was a woman of sterling character, remarkable for her common sense and Christian integrity. God's law with her was absolute, and her highest happiness was realized in submission to his will. As a wife, she was to her husband a true "helpmeet" in all the struggles of life, and the instrument in the hands of God to lead him to Christ. As a mother, wise, patient, tender and faithful, rearing her children in the fear of God; her home a well-regulated household, where many a weary itinerant found shelter, food, and cheer.

This writer first met her twenty-two years ago. She was then a Methodist, and "Christ was formed in her heart the hope of glory." She was the mother of eight children, men and women to-day who verify the word, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." Her last words were, "Jesus, keep me near the cross."

She was buried by the side of her husband, Ben. F. Clark, in the yard of Cotton Wood Church. T. K. F.

ALEXANDER.—MARY L. ALEXANDER (nee Bullen) was born in Fayette, Miss., Sept. 23, 1835. She professed religion and joined the M. E. Church early in life. On Nov 5, 1861, she was married to Rev. G. W. Alexander, of the Holston Conference, and made her home at Knoxville, Tenn., till the Fall of 1863, when she and her husband moved to Mississippi. For more than thirty years she lived at Phœnix, Yazoo county, Miss., and died here on Nov. 20, 1897, leaving her aged husband and one daughter behind.

She was a ripe sheaf for the heaven'y garner. After a dying message of love to her daughter she lisped in death, "It is well." Her life went out and her soul went home to God. "Our people die well." She was a living example of a prudent, pious Christian.

Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.

The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take-up, convenient foot rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearing polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF THREADING—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell, without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

OUR OFFER.

To anyone, not now a subscriber to this paper, who will send us $19, we will send the machine and the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE one year. The pains of rheumatism should be reminded that a cure for this disease may be found in Hood's Sarsaparilla. The experience of those who have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla for rheumatism, and have been completely and permanently cured, prove the power of this medicine to rout and conquer this disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the One True Blood Purifier, and it neutralizes the acid which causes the aches and pains of rheumatism. This is why it absolutely cures when liniments and other outward applications fail to give permanent relief. Be sure to get Hood's.

AMONG THE MORMON WOMEN AT SALT LAKE CITY.

It had been the wonder of my life how any woman could enter a polygamous marriage. When I arrived in Salt Lake City, and met some of the leading women of the Church of the Latter Day Saints, and talked with them about their religion and home affairs, I realized the motive power that had induced them to be wedded to men who either had other wives, or would take unto themselves others. The majority of the women of the elder set were converted to Mormonism in their early years. Marriage and motherhood were held up as requisites by which to attain unto eternal life, and the greater sacrifices a woman makes in these lines, the greater will be her exaltation after death. They entered polygamy from an intense religious enthusiasm, actuated by the same promptings that leads a nun into the convent, or a martyr to the stake. This principle is still rife in the hearts of the better classes of Mormon women; but as the years have gone by, and the power of the church increased, of course, there were thousands of women who entered polygamous marriages from baser motives. I expected to find a dull, grovelling lot of people, in whom the animal was ever to the front. My amazement was unbounded as woman after woman was introduced who was the very acme of refinement and intelligence, and often of beauty. One of the foremost leaders of thought among the Mormon women is Mrs. Emiline D. Wells, who edits a paper in Salt Lake City, and is a devoted club woman. She has represented the women of Utah in the National Council of Women, and appeared before congressional committees to secure measures for the advancement of her people. Mrs. Wells was educated in Massachusetts, and when in her teens she accepted the Mormon faith, and crossed the plains with other pioneers in the days of the noted exodus. She has the keenest order of intellect, and is an ardent advocate of every tenet of Mormonism. Like any other business personage, she has her office in the city, and is as full of affairs as the most stirring man in the blocks about her.

Dr. Martha Hughes Cannon is famous as the first woman in the world who was ever sent to a State Senate to represent the citizens of a commonwealth. She has served two years in the Legislature of Utah, and has two more yet before her. Dr. Cannon is a woman with a history, and a striking one. Prior to her marriage she studied medicine under physicians in Salt Lake City; then went to Ann Arbor, where she graduated in '80, and afterward entered the University of Pennsylvania. Going from Ann Arbor admitted her at Philadelphia, where she got the degree of D. S. One hundred and twenty-five men started in the auxiliary course with Dr. Cannon, but only five of these and herself graduated. This was in '82. She was the only woman who had entered the coeducational department in the university open to women. On her return to Salt Lake City, Dr. Cannon became resident physician of the Deseret hospital, which position she held for three years, having outside practice as well. At the close of that period she became the sixth wife of Mr. Angus M. Cannon. Dr. Cannon's husband is president of the Salt Lake stake of Zion, the term "stake" among the Mormons meaning a parish or diocese, and president of the High Priest Council, which is the ecclesiastical court of jurisdiction. Each stake has this council. President Cannon, besides being a church functionary, is a business man, having a large mining interest. In the political campaign for State senator President Cannon ran against his wife, Dr. Martha Hughes Cannon, and was ingloriously defeated, as all the world knows. She represented the silver Democracy, and received a handsome majority of votes. Before the siege for office came on she advised her husband not to oppose her, predicting failure for him, but he persisted. His defeat is said to be the bitterest pill he has ever been called on to swallow.

There are a number of other prominent Mormon women practicing medicine in Salt Lake City besides Dr. Cannon. Among these is Dr. Romania Pratt, who is considered a brilliant woman and able physician.

At a reception given by Mormon women in a Mormon woman's home in Salt Lake City, I met typical Mormon women of every degree. The house in which the reception was held is an elegant structure, with stained glass windows and rich furniture; every curtain and carpet and picture in exquisite harmony. The hostess was a woman of wide culture. She had traveled extensively in this country and abroad, and was the very essence of high-bred grace and polished manner. Her five daughters, dressed in perfect taste, and having inherited their mother's gentleness and attractiveness, helped to do the honors of the occasion most beautifully. On leaving the reception I said to a Mormon woman who accompanied me, "You don't mean to tell me that our hostess is one of many wives of some man, do you?"

"Oh, yes," was the quick, cheerful reply. "She is the second wife of her husband. The first lives not far from here in an adjoining street."

Among other noted Mormon women whom I met in Salt Lake City was Mrs. Zina D. Young, one of the nineteen wives of Brigham Young. She is a vivacious and charming old lady about sixty five or seventy years of age. She is called "Aunt Zina" by the Mormons. "Aunt" is a title of love and respect given to all the elderly women among the Latter Day Saints. In the home of Mrs. Zina D. Young I was shown the celebrated painting of Joseph, the prophet, which hangs in a room filled with portraits of Brigham Young and other apostles and evangelists of the Mormon Church. The home of "Aunt Zina" is a very unpretentious little cottage situated on a quiet street.

Prominent features of Salt Lake City, hardly second in interest to the Temple and Tabernacle, are the dwellings of Brigham Young called "The Beehive," and the Lion House, where he kept his many wives, and the palace of Amelia, his favorite wife, that stands on the opposite side of the street. The latter has been confiscated since the abolition of polygamy, and the Beehive and Lion House have also passed into other hands; but it is understood that the wives who are still living are all well provided for, as President Young left a large fortune. The younger Mormon men and women do not enter into polygamous marriages, but it is said on incontrovertible authority that polygamy is still practiced by the older people who had gone into plural marriage before the Edmunds-Tucker law went into effect. Numbers of Mormon women are rearing large families of children without any visible husband, not only in Salt Lake City, but in towns in the States adjoining Utah, and these women are held in high repute among the Mormons, thus showing that they are regarded as legally wedded.

When I was going to Salt Lake City the train stopped at a wayside station for the passengers to take supper. I saw a pretty girl about thirteen years of age standing near the platform selling glasses of milk from a large tin bucket she carried on her arm. She had a winsome face, and I opened conversation with her, asking first, "Are you a little Mormon girl?"

"Yes," was the demure reply.

"Have you many brothers and sisters?"

"Quite a number."

"How many wives has your father?"

"Two."

"Does he live with both?"

"Yes."

"Which is your mother?"

"The first."

"Do you like the other one?"

"Yes, of course; why shouldn't I?" she demanded with blazing eyes and a disdainful snap of her bucket top. She marched away, cutting off conversation with the inquisitive stranger for evermore. Poor little thing! She had the fire and loyalty of the usual Mormon woman, and of every other woman who believes in a cause, whether it be right or wrong, and has to suffer for it.

The women of Utah have the ballot. They are citizens. They are equal before the law with their fathers and brothers and husbands, and they exercise the privilege to the fullest degree, going to the polls regularly, and holding official positions in a lady-like, matter-of-fact way. The men office seekers go to the women requesting their support in their candidacy, and in every other way is recognition made of the fact that women are a tremendous political power in Utah.

SECOND ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF MERIDIAN DISTRICT LEAGUES.

The Meridian District Leagues held their second Annual Conference at the South Side Church, of Meridian, on Nov. 30 and Dec. 1 and 2, 1897. The president, Rev. A. T. Bell, conducted a very interesting consecration service Tuesday night, Nov. 30. C. C. Dunn, Esq., delivered the welcome address; Rev. R. H. Barr responded.

Wednesday morning new officers were elected as follows: Rev. H. G. Hawkins, Meridian, Miss., president; Miss Lula Simmons, secretary; first vice president, Mr. D. S. Harmon; second vice-president, Mr. W. D. Hawkins; third vice president, Miss Lillian McCormick. After the election of above officers they were immediately installed. Some committees were appointed by the president, the most important being on "Sabbath Observance." Papers full of bright thoughts on League work were read by delegates. Papers and discussions, and reports from the Devotional Departments of Leagues, constituted the afternoon session of Conference.

The weather being bad, the Conference did not meet again in regular session until Thursday afternoon, but there was preaching Wednesday evening by Rev. G. H. Thompson, and Thursday morning by Rev. R. H. Barr.

At the Thursday afternoon session the committee's report on Sabbath Observance was read and accepted. After accepting this report some talks were made on the importance of doing something to cause less Sabbath work in railroad circles, which ended by the appointment of the following committee to present this subject of Sabbath observance to the Annual Conference, to be held at Jackson: Committeemen—Rev. R. H. Barr, Bros. N. B. Harmon and D. S. Harmon.

The Literary Department was discussed, papers were read, and reports made from this department.

The Conference was exceedingly interesting and well attended Thursday evening, although the weather was unfavorable. Wide-awake leaguers read splendid papers; enthusiastic talks made by members; experiences were given, resolutions were adopted. Place of next Annual Conference was decided to be West End Church, Meridian, Miss., and the Conference requested the council to fix the date about July 4. The delegates and visitors were sorry to bid farewell to the wide-awake South Side leaguers and friends who so kindly entertained them. May God, in his wisdom, send heaven's richest blessings to the pastor, the League, and homes of South Side!

WE MUST HAVE AN ENDOWED COLLEGE FOR OUR DAUGHTERS.

Why must we have it? It is generally supposed that colleges for girls, with their boarding departments, their departments of music and other arts, generally classed as "accomplishments," and their faculties composed of teachers less costly than our colleges for boys require, may be run without endowment. So they may be; but what is the result? We can not, by such an arrangement, get work in any wise comparable to that done in our endowed colleges for boys. Every president of a girls' college knows this to be so, and very keenly feels the disadvantage of his position. Let us thoroughly understand this.

A college president must be a man of piety, loyalty to the church, learning, teaching, tact, and governing ability. Such a man we want for any of our colleges; but the president of a girls' college must, in addition, be a man of fine business tact, a good drummer, a skilled advertiser, and must have money. Is it possible to find all of these conditions met in one man? I have known of two who approximated these conditions: W. W. Smith, of Virginia, and H. F. Johnson, of Mississippi; and Dr. Smith insists upon the necessity of a liberal endowment for his Randolph Macon Woman's College. It generally happens that, when a Board of Trustees undertakes to get a president for a girls' college, failing to find this rare, all-round man, they ignore some of the first-named requisites, and take some man because he has business tact and money. They can not do otherwise. Furniture and pianos must be bought, and they have no money. The new president must have it, and he must be "a hustler," or the Methodist girls' college in the next town will get all the girls. So it is that the girls' college has the very poorest chance in the world to get a capable president. But suppose these difficulties are finally surmounted, and the right man—one out of ten thousand—is at last found. The Board makes a term lease of the college to him. With a sigh of relief each member of the Board washes his hands of the whole college business, leaving the president absolute monarch in that college realm. He makes up his faculty, having carefully counted the dollars in hand and in prospect, and having surveyed the field from which his patronage must come.

There are three other Methodist colleges for girls in the Conference, besides others that claim and get Methodist patronage; and then there is that fine State college at Columbus. He must put into his faculty attractions to draw girls to his college. He must do it, or lose his money and his reputation as a college man. He must have a Conservatory of Music and Art. "They all do it;" so must he. He must have some costly professors with foreign names and conservatory records, whether they have religion or not; and it can not be expected that these gentlemen from over the sea are Methodists. He must have an elocution teacher and physical culture instructor trained in the Delsarte or some other popular method, and an art teacher who is up to date in "impressionism," or some other late fad. For these teachers he must pay well; but he must have them. Ordinary graduates of girls' colleges will do for teachers of mathematics and Latin, and almost anybody will do for English work. These teachers will cost him very little. He must have cheap teachers for these, for he can not spare enough from Prof. Berlin's salary or Madam Delsarte's to pay for a high-priced teacher of such things as English, Latin and mathematics. We need not blame the man, because he can not help himself.

The college term opens after two months of laborious advertising, some of which twinges his conscience sharply, and the girls who come are hardly as many as the poor man expected; but out of these he must make money enough to meet the large demands of this costly faculty and these elaborate equipments. What must be done? There is but one thing to be done: he must stress music and art and elocution. He must do it, for these are the branches for which he can get most money; and he must have money. So professor and madam are put on exhibition, and all the girls "go wild" over them, and persuade papas and mamas until nearly every girl in college takes music, art, or elocution. None study Greek; a few study some Latin. The bright girl in the senior class smiles at the efforts made by the sweet girl graduate who tries to teach trigonometry, because she can neither explain the problem nor solve it. Poor child, she never learned much of mathematics when she was at college, for her teacher could not teach it; but she must try to teach it, because she is poor, and needs the little salary she is getting. The teacher of English gives a "smattering" of our mother tongue; the teacher of science enables the girls to get the eel of science by the tail; but the music is well taught, and the work in elocution is superb.

What is it all worth to the girl who graduates? She comes out either with full accomplishments and no education, or with health permanently ruined. No girl can make a first class musician, a good artist, and a scholar. Music, art, elocution, mathematics, Greek, Latin, French and English can not all be learned by any one girl in four years without ruin to her health. Generally the poor thing comes out with a degree called M. E. L. and a fair education in music, marries before two years, and never touches a piano again. Thus time and money are thrown away, and all in order that a struggling college may live. A woman enters life poorly prepared for its realities; robbed of an education by a system which is striving to run four unendowed colleges instead of one with an ample endowment. Are we, of the Mississippi Conference, who have created and who foster such a system, guilty in this matter? Are we not really parties to one of the saddest of all robberies? The poor child knows no better; her parents are deceived. They do not know that if they do not oppose stoutly the glamour of "the attraction," the persuasion of president and teachers and the allurements of the fashion thus created, that the poor child will either be killed by overwork or sent home uneducated. I speak from the depths of bitter observation and bitterer experience. Who is to blame for all this? The system is to blame. But who is responsible for the system? We are. We have created it, and we maintain it.

What is such a college as this worth to the Methodist Church? Out of a faculty of fifteen or twenty only the president and a few of his cheaper teachers, three or four, belong to the Methodist Church. If Prof. Berlin ever hears the music in the local Methodist Church, he sneers at it, and the girls hear the sneer; and a sneer from such an oracle outweighs all the syllogisms of an Aristotle. If Madam Delsarte ever attends a service in the church, she criticises the pose of the man in the pulpit, because it is not Delsartian, and she now and then suggests: "Oh, if the president would just let me give a few waltz motions, or a few dance figures up-to-date, it would be so nice; it would make you so graceful; but, alas! he is a Methodist, and he dare not." The rhetoric class is told that there is not a respectable piece of poetry in the Methodist hymn book. What is the result? Sweet girls out of Methodist homes and churches learn in a Methodist college to look upon the Methodist Church as something below the ideal of present-day civilization. I am not mistaken here. The president may have prayers and lecture the girls; he may have some brother hold meetings for them once a week; may have the pastor come in and help a little; may compel them to go to church once every Sunday (or even twice); but the sneers and criticisms, innuendoes and example of non-Methodist (and sometimes godless) teachers will outweigh all the perfunctory performances which generally bear the name of prayers and services in college; and remember four or five for Methodism against twelve or fifteen opposed to Methodism are unfortunate odds for a Methodist college. What are such colleges worth to Methodism? Are they worth the money we have invested in the land and buildings of the colleges? Let the thoughtful Methodists of Mississippi answer.

I do not mean that all of these conditions have yet ever existed in any one of our colleges, but they have existed in cases more or less isolated, and the tendency of our system is to produce all of those conditions in each of them. I do not mean to lay any blame on the men and women who are presidents of our colleges for girls; I have been one of them. I know that they must fall into the drift of this system, or must fail. We, the rank and file of Mississippi Conference Methodism, are to blame for it. We have created this system, and we maintain it. We have put these men and women into their positions, and we demand of them that they shall succeed, and they can only succeed by doing what we have elected them to do. They know too well and too sadly that this is not an overdrawn picture. They deplore it, but they can not help it. That some of them have made heroic efforts to counteract this tendency is not unknown to this writer. The efforts put forth by my beloved brother, the Rev. J. W. Chambers, to give us a first-class college, with Methodist teachers only, are by no means unappreciated. If he but had an ample endowment behind him, what an ideal institution he would give us! But, alas! alas! he can not escape altogether the downward pull of our ruinous system.

Now, common honesty demands that we do one of two things: either give up the education of our girls to the State, or endow one of our colleges for girls, putting it on an equal footing with Millsaps College. We can not endow four, but we can endow one, and thus put it under the control of a Board of Trustees elected by the Conference, and keep it thoroughly Methodist. It is wrong to put a Methodist girls' college under the monarchy of one man, and then demand of that man that he get all the money out of it he can, or else surrender his monarchy. That is just what our system is doing. Let us have a college for our daughters with a salaried president and salaried Methodist teachers, all elected and supervised by a Board of Methodist trustees elected by a Methodist Conference—a real Methodist college for girls! There is but one way to have it: we must raise an endowment. We can do it, and we must. Who will start it with fifty thousand dollars?

H. WALTER FEATHERSTUN.

BE TRUE.

Thou must be true thyself,
If thou the truth would teach;
Thy soul must overflow, if thou
Another soul wouldst reach;
It needs the overflow of heart
To give the lips full speech.
Think truly, and thy thoughts
Shall the world's famine feed;
Speak truly, and each word of thine
Shall be a fruitful seed;
Live truly, and thy life shall be
A great and noble creed.

AN EXPERIENCE.

"No, no; I can not give up! I must not yield to this inertia. I fill too important a position—the president's—to yield to sickness now. When commencement is over how gladly will I rest!—but now I must rally."

With this soliloquy I shook off the lethargy that, creeping over me like some mysterious spell, benumbed my energies, and commenced dressing for school; but nature rebelled. Will power failed to conquer physical disability, and I fainted. My hostess, who was a physician's wife, summoned her husband. He administered a potion and proscribed rest.

"How preposterous!" I querulously dissented. "You know that is impossible. My mind will work. I can not dismiss my duties from my thoughts. I am preparing the highest classes in the college for examination. You are aware of the contest between our college and the seminary. They are putting forth efforts to surpass us. It is a test! my reputation as a teacher; the credit of the college is involved. Can you not patch me up for work for a short period, for a fortnight?"

"Perhaps; but it might mean a serious illness."

"I'll risk it. I'll take the responsibility and meet the consequences. It is so important. Surely your medical skill will enable you to fight the foe for that short period," I pleaded with insinuating flattery. "Will you? Try."

"Well, you must be quiet now, and let that medicine take effect. After that we will consult about the future. You are threatened with a malignant case of fever. Care and prompt remedies may avert it, but recklessness just now would precipitate it, and I would not answer for the consequences."

"It would go a great way towards tranquilizing me if you would only promise."

"I will. Now go to sleep."

They left me, and I determined to be quiet, but my mind would not be controlled. My thoughts rambled through the sciences, wrought out problems in mathematics, and roved through the fields of English literature. My capacities seemed enlarged, my comprehension quickened, my exegesis of the lessons was lucid. I believed that I could teach as I had never taught before. I felt better. "Surely," I thought, "the doctor's diagnosis is incorrect. There is no necessity for this enforced idleness. It is late, but there is much yet to be done, and so much depends on me." I arose and dressed, but again that death-like nausea seized me, a buzzing as of a saw-mill deafened me, all turned dark, and I fainted. The doctor was aroused and angry, gave me an opiate, and departed with maledictions dire upon such willfulness. I slept profoundly for some time, and awoke feeling refreshed and well. There was no trace of pain or languor.

"Well, I will continue this farce," I thought, "to please any temporizing doctor. I am not sick, only tired. His medicine has revived me. My brother can not go through this day's tasks without me. Editor, publisher, president, with that trustees' meeting this afternoon—and then those classes!—he can not play teacher, too. If we should fail, how that seminary would exult! Oh, I know I can do it. I will go to his aid." I succeeded in dressing this time, and, exultantly tying my bonnet ribbons, drew on my gloves and reached for my parasol, but I never grasped it. I heard a crash, but felt no pain. When I awoke to consciousness my brother, the physician and several friends were gathered about my bed, with serious faces.

"I can not answer for the result of this last rash act," the physician was saying. "Her fever is very high. It would have been a serious attack with every care and precaution. I warned her, but she was persistent."

"Shall we pray with you?" asked my brother tenderly, as I opened my eyes and gave him an intelligent glance.

"Yes," I replied. "Ask God to heal me and give me strength for my duties."

"If it is his will. You are very sick, and may not recover, but you are not afraid to die?" he half queried, half asserted. "You have been an earnest Christian from your childhood, zealous in God's cause, and now you have the assurance that all is well?" he continued, as I made no reply.

"I do not want to die. I have so much to do. So many are dependent on me for help. Ask God to make me well." They knelt in prayer, but I never heard their petitions. I seemed floating away. Myself, my spirit arose above my body and hovered over it, surveying it with the calm indifference one beholds a cast-off garment. I watched them curiously, but without emotion, as they arose from their knees and went towards the corpse. I saw them straighten the stiffening limbs, clasp the pale, cold hands upon the unresisting breast, and close the lids above the sightless eyes. They sang a song:

"'Let music charm her last on earth,
And greet her first in heaven.'

"'Our loss is her gain.' Doubtless her pure spirit is winging its way to glory and to God, and while we stand here lamenting, she is rejoicing with the angelic hosts who bear her home to heaven."

"That is the way with you preachers," my spirit commented. "If one has gone to church, performed their religious duties, and lived an outwardly blameless life, you preach them into heaven; but the angels have not come for me, nor do I know that I am on the way there. Ah, if I could unseal those dumb lips, I'd tell them that I realize, as never before, 'Without holiness no man can see God.' How differently things appear in the light of eternity from what they seem on earth! Our valuation is not appraised by self-interest here. How truly he declared, whose vision opened on both worlds at once, 'What shall it profit a man to gain the whole world and lose his own soul?' What to me now is earth? How insignificant its petty plans and purposes! A few moments ago I was absorbed in ambitions hopes and schemes for successful life, but they have vanished like the midnight's dream, and seem as valueless as the withered flowers of a departed reminiscence."

Without effort, drawn by a power irresistible and as imperceptible as gravitation, I sailed upward. The ceiling was no obstruction, and I passed gently from the place where lay the casket that once imprisoned my freed spirit. The sun was shining with that sad and solemn light that seems peculiar to the death-chamber and forever after haunts the memory of the living. A gentle breeze swayed the trees that fringed the sidewalk of the town, and birds warbled in their branches as they built their nests. How lovely looked the earth! "Blessings brighten as they take their flight." And I realized how "God saw that it was good." Heedless of the pent-up sorrow of that stricken cottage, busy workers hastened to and fro. Street peddlers cried their wares, and eager customers jostled one another on the crowded walk. The hurried air of the busy season pervaded the town. Friends who had been united with me in business and social relations in life were speeding away, oblivions of the life so lately intermingled with their own. So soon forgotten! "Sic transit gloria mundi." But the brisk activity disturbed not the calm that hushed my soul. The scene recalled the days of childhood, when I had beguiled the passing moments watching the workers of an ant-hill piling grains of yellow sand upon the mound about their home. The reckless haste and rushing to and fro, pausing, and touching one another with their antennæ, as though communicating plans; consulting gravely whether the mound should be piled higher, or the harvest seeds stored up for coming Winter; aimlessly picking up and dropping burdens that were quickly resumed, apparently, as aimlessly again. How like the seething masses, I thought, in their mad haste to gather the golden sands of mammon, indifferent to the real treasure which "moth can not corrupt, nor thieves break through and steal!" Oh, could I only return to the inhabiters of earth, and tell them how worthless seemed their strife for power and applause, their vain ambitions, petty toil for mammon! But they would not hearken, for, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead."

As I floated on and upward earth passed in review beneath me. Like some fairy vision evolved by the kinetoscope, the whirling world displayed the beauteous islands of the sea, enriched by nature and improved by man; the cultivated fields of Europe, with its cities, towers and grand castles, mosques and minarets; the toiling multitudes of China, and away, everywhere, the busy strife of worldliness, the worship of the golden god, Mammon. Earth revolved in increasing distance until the globe became a ball, the ball rapidly lessened to a speck, and that speck vanished in illimitable space. There was no firmament, naught but an indescribable element of vastness, and I, an atom, floating in its midst. But as I was borne ever upward and onward a light appeared in the dim distance, faint at first, as the earliest breaking of a star upon the evening sky, almost imperceptible, but twinkling into brightness as you watch its coming. Larger and lovelier grew the visitor, glowing like Venus in the far-off sky. Swiftly—growing more beautiful—it advanced, golden rays like the disk of some bright sun enveloping it in halo as it came like the lightning's shaft, until the star, the glowing sun, flashed into view—a glorious being robed in sunlit brightness. From the quivering wings scintillated sparks of rainbow hue. The countenance, serenely beneficent, expressed love in all its lineaments. The voice was musical, soft and low, as it seemed to breathe communication rather than to utter words.

"Whither art thou going, young immortal?" The query seemed to penetrate my being, and clouded my spirit, as the slight shaking of crystal water disturbs a sediment and bedims its clearness.

"That question would be more appropriate from me to you, as I am the stranger here," was my response. But the sweet complaisance of the gentle Being was unruffled by the implied censure.

"Have you your passport?" was asked in accents soft as a zephyr's sigh.

"Passport!" I exclaimed in astonishment. "I did not know that one was required. In the world from which I have just come, going from one government to another passports are required, but I never heard that one was necessary for this."

"Did you not have the Scriptures, and did not the priests of God make known to you the fact?"

"No exegesis that I ever heard taught that, and I have searched the Scriptures, but never found it there."

"Only two places are prepared here for the denizens of earth: 'Mansions in the Father's house' for those who have a passport; the world of banishment for the unprovided."

"I am not suited for companionship with the wicked. When I was on earth I avoided evil; I always sought association with the pure; I hated sin and shunned the sinner. How could I endure eternity with those with whom I never had fellowship? I worshiped God, was a member of the church, 'was full of good works and alms-deeds.' I do not deserve to be cast out from the kingdom of righteousness."

"You say you were full of good works; can you give me one? I will take it to the portals of paradise and see if it will gain you admittance."

"Oh, yes; 'their works do follow them,'" I answered gladly, and turned to a snowy mound that, hitherto unheeded, had moved beside me. I drew aside the unsullied covering and caught up the topmost work, "Leading Souls to Christ." I was glad that it was first, for I believed it would be most effective. It was with a feeling of self-complacency that I raised the pure, white work; but across its spotlessness was traced in characters of blackest soot, "Self-seeking." I quickly thrust aside that deed and picked up "Mission Work." Dazzlingly pure it had seemed to me on earth, but on its inner fold was written, "Vainglory." God had accused the Jews of robbing him in tithes and offerings. I had tithed my income and scrupulously paid my dues; then practiced self-denial, that my offerings might be increased; and I thought, surely, this is pure, but "self-righteousness" stained its surface. I shunned the penetrating gaze that seemed to read my inmost soul, and constrained a verdict from myself, as one after another I laid aside the blemished works that had seemed so fair on earth, until, despairingly, I cast away the last, and, self-condemned, confessed: "I thought that I had brought many good works, that the Master might have 'much fruit,' but they are defiled, and with consciousness of its justice I pronounced my own sentence."

"Send me to my place," for the purity of the glorious One before me penetrated my inmost being like a consuming fire, and created an intolerable anguish that filled me with an intense desire to escape his presence.

The outspread wings drooped slowly and covered up the brightness that oppressed me, and an infinite compassion dimmed the radiance with a solemn haze, like a sun eclipsed at noon-tide, as I awaited banishment. Oh, the anguish of those moments! A life-time of agony seemed concentrated in their bitterness: "Almost, but lost!" And that without reprieve. Eternity! Even suicide, balm for the most miserable, was denied me. I could not endure the presence of infinite compassion, for had I not failed to secure his extended mercy? I would have shrieked in mad despair: "Lost! and forever lost! No remedy!" But utterance was denied me. The stillness of eternal death hushed all expression. I realized how impossible was heaven for the damned. This pure presence was a torture. I longed for escape, even if it must be regions of eternal woe. That would be a refuge from the ineffable purity that seemed to blaze through my being with consuming fire and light up every plague-spot of sin. I writhed in ecstacy of suffering, and though I breathed no word in the Spirit's more expressive communication, besought the Holy One to send my soul away.

"I can yet do one thing for you," communed the Infinite, his effulgence brightening with the glad tidings, "for there is good in you, though blemished."

"What can it be in this world of finalities?" I asked, in the unbelief inseparable from the carnal mind, that struck the ministering priest before the altar dumb. "As the tree falleth, so it must be," and revelation commands, "He that is filthy let him be filthy still." Whence, then, is this help possible?

God's compassion is only equaled by his forbearance. How truly wrote the Psalmist, "Thy gentleness hath made me great." "Be not faithless, but believing. Go back to earth, and when you come again, bring your passport with you."

I opened my eyes. The sorrowing group were still about my bed. "She has passed the crisis," was the doctor's comment. "The fever is broken. With care she will recover."

"Thank God!" fervently exclaimed my brother. "Thank God," echoed my own heart. For many years I sought the passport. I listened to the pulpit orator, but he failed to point out. I sought it in the learned researches of the theologian, but he knew it not. In creeds the wisest formulated by human wisdom, it was not there. I turned to God's Word, and on my knees asked enlightenment from "him who giveth liberally and upbraideth not," and the Holy Spirit whispered, "The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth from all sin." Hallelujah! Glory to the Infinite! His passport is delivered, signed, and sealed. Now, "death, where is thy sting, and where thy victory, boasting grave?" Works can not 'ope the pearly gates, but the passport signed by Jesus' blood, and written in his name, delivered by the witness of the Holy Spirit, shall prove my sesame.

SKETCH OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH FROM ITS ESTABLISHMENT IN BRITAIN, WITH A BRIEF COMPARISON OF CATHOLICISM AND PROTESTANTISM.

(Read in the Epworth League of Grenada Collegiate Institute by one of the pupils.)

Tradition says that Christianity made its way into Britain as early as 52 A. D. If so, it crept in so silently that nothing certain can be found of its advent except in monkish chronicles. The first church, it is said, was built at Glastonbury. "Here," according to Fuller, "the converts watched, fasted, preached and prayed, having high meditations under a low roof, and large hearts within narrow walls." At first their new religion attracted no notice, but as it continued to spread it caused alarm.

The Roman emperor represented the power of God on earth, and to him every knee must bow. The Christians refused this homage, and put Christ first. So the Roman emperor, Diocletian, resolved to root out this pernicious belief. The first martyr was Alban, who refused to sacrifice to Roman deities, and was beheaded at Hertfordshire, twenty miles northwest of London. Five hundred years after the Abbey of St. Albans rose on the spot to commemorate him who had fallen there.

After the Romans we find the Saxons, or English, invading Britain. Some of the English tribes, through their greed for gain, sold their own children into bondage. Being exhibited for sale in the Roman Forum, they attracted the attention of the monk, Gregory, and he resolved to send missionaries to convert the Saxon race. Upon his becoming head of the church in 590 A. D., he sent Augustine, with a band of forty monks, to Britain. It seemed that Providence had prepared the way for their work through the marriage of Ethelbert, King of Kent, to Bertha, a French princess, who had become a convert to Christianity in France. It was through her influence Ethelbert was induced to receive Augustine. This meeting resulted in the conversion, not only of Ethelbert, but also ten thousand of his subjects, before the year passed.

Augustine built the first monastery at Canterbury, in which to train missionaries to carry on this work. Gradually the pagan faith was dropped through the earnest efforts of these early missionaries. These monasteries were educational, as well as industrial, centres, and to the monks we are indebted for many works on church history. But the work of Christianity did not stop here; it took the side of the weak, the suffering, and the oppressed. It shielded the slave from ill-usage, and secured for him Sunday as a day of rest. More than this: it extended a powerful political influence. The synod held at Whithy, in 664, consisted of bishops, monks, and priests from hostile tribes; yet they were all members of the same church, and manifested a spirit of true religious unity. The monasteries, upon accumulating wealth, sank into idleness and luxury. They were destroyed by the Danes in 871 A. D.

In answer to the prayer of the panic-stricken monks, "From the fury of the Northmen, good Lord, deliver us," Alfred was raised up to defend them. He brought about many reforms, which were pushed on by Dunstan, and later by Gregory VII. The instruments relied upon by Gregory for carrying out his plans were excommunication and interdict. Excommunication divested the king of all power, and released his subjects from their oath of allegiance. Interdict was directed against state, and prohibited all religious services. No bell could be rung, no marriage celebrated, no burial ceremony performed. These spiritual punishments rarely failed to bring the offender to speedy and abject confession. The Popes claim that St. Peter founded the church at Rome, and was given the keys of the kingdom of heaven. Thus infallibility conferred upon Peter is held to be transmitted to his successor in the holy office. This power extended over the State as well as the Church, and was one of the many causes of the Reformation.

The invention of printing was another powerful agency in bringing about this religious movement. The press scattered broadcast over Europe the writings of men who had begun to doubt the scriptural authority of many of the doctrines and ceremonies of the Roman Catholic Church. Foremost among the doubters was Martin Luther, a monk with wide reputation for learning and piety. Luther's writings were condemned, and he was to be carried to Rome as an heretic if he did not recant what he had written. Although some wished to deliver Luther to the flames upon his refusing to recant, he was protected by his friends, chief of whom was Frederick. In spite of strenuous efforts to suppress Luther's doctrines, they gained ground rapidly. The action of the Diet pronouncing Luther an heretic and an outlaw was protested against by Reformers; hence the name Protestants.

Time will permit only this brief mention of the origin of Protestantism. Yet a most profitable lesson can be gleaned by a comparison of the doctrines taught by these two branches of the church. The Catholic Church teaches that prayers must be offered to the Virgin Mary and the saints as intercessors between God and us; the Protestant Church holds that Christ is our one and only mediator, and our prayers must be to him. The shrines, rosaries, statues of the Virgin Mary, also those of Christ and the saints are held in holy reverence by Catholics; Protestants teach this to be a violation of God's commandment: "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of anything that is in heaven above, or that is in the waters beneath the earth: thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them."

Forgiveness of sins, by confession to priests, is one of the strongest doctrines of Catholics. "Whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven," being interpreted absolution by the head of the church. The power of the Catholic Church lies largely in the influence that the priests possess over the members through the confessional. Protestants believe that God alone has power to forgive sins. The Catholic Church holds that the elements of Eucharist are changed into the real body and blood of Christ, whereas Protestants take the holy sacrament of the Lord's Supper in loving remembrance that Christ died for them. Catholics teach the infallibility of the Pope; Protestants believe that only God is sinless.

Catholics believe this passage from St. Matthew, "Whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come," justifies them in thinking that sins are forgiven in purgatory. Protestants believe that this life is given us "to work out our salvation," and that there is no pardon after death. Catholics believe that holy relics are amulets against evil; Protestants, that Christ is their refuge in times of danger.

Protestants, with the blessed advantages of superior doctrines, may still learn from Catholics the beautiful lesson of reverence. All true Catholics keep a sacred silence in the church, for they believe that Christ is present bodily in the Eucharist. Should not Protestants, who believe Christ to be present in spirit, remember: "The Lord is in his holy temple; let all the earth keep silence before him"?

Selections.

There is among Methodists too great an ignorance of the distinctive doctrines of their church. We heard a very cultured lady say a few months ago: "I am a Methodist. I could not tell you why to save my life." We trust that there are not many like this lady in this respect. People who are ignorant of the distinctive doctrines of their church simply because they do not care anything for them, would be altogether out of place in the iron age of our Zion's history, when devoted men swam rivers, climbed mountains, and braved the terror of wild beasts and human foes to proclaim the doctrines of God's Word as interpreted by John Wesley. We think that a preacher is laboring under a grievous mistake when he says, "I have no time to preach doctrine." No church can be strong spiritually whose members know little of and care little for the doctrines of their church.

There is on the part of many an ignorance of the polity of the church. Only a few comparatively know our discipline. They can not explain our Conferences, our orders, and our offices. This ignorance, for obvious reasons, begets weakness.—North Carolina Advocate.

If there is any kindness I can show my fellow-being, let me do it now, let me not delay it, or permit myself to be hindered; he or I shall not pass this way again.

There is nothing useless to men of sense; clever people turn everything to account.—La Fontaine.

"THE LEAGUE THE FUTURE CHURCH."

[A paper read by Miss Alice Brogan before the Meridian District Epworth League Conference, Dec. 2, 1897.]

We often think of the church as a vast piece of machinery, or as a great organization, or as a mighty army. It moves the nations and shapes the events of history, and we talk about its greatness, its grandeur and its power. In one sense, it is all of these, and yet we must remember that it is more than these. It is God's great piece of machinery; but that machinery is composed of thousands of bits of wood, and iron, and brass, each shaped to fit exactly the place it fills, each so placed that without it the great wheels would slacken their speed, and the whole come to a standstill. The usefulness of this great machinery depends upon whether each little piece of wood, or iron, or brass, is in its own place, upon whether each one is shaped exactly right. If there is even one little screw loose, the progress of the whole may be very much retarded, or it may be stopped entirely.

Just so the progress of the church depends on whether or not each member does his duty. Each member is like one of the bits of machinery, fitted for his place only. The place may be large, or small, but unless it is there, and in its place, all goes wrong. So there is a work for each member of the church. Each one should strive to know the place God would have him fill, and then fill that place to the best of his ability, knowing he only can fill it. If he should find that his work is seemingly very unimportant, that should not lessen his zeal as to its accomplishment. All can not fill the high places, and the least thing done for the Savior is not unnoticed. And as each little screw is necessary to the successful working of the machinery, so it is necessary that each place in God's vineyard be filled, however apparently insignificant that place may be.

It is a grand organization; but that organization is composed of men and women who live individual lives, thinking their own thoughts, praying their own prayers. The necessity of the church, as an organization, is for men and women who know how to guide. Incompetent leaders is one cause of the disturbances which hinder the work of the church. How few there are capable of leading a social meeting of the church or of guiding or managing the affairs of the church!

It is a mighty army, but that army is made up of Christian-soldiers, each of whom must fight his own battle as well as those of the church. And in order to fight these battles, he must be brave and courageous. "Be strong and of good courage." The army takes its character from the individual soldiers; if the soldiers be cowardly, the army can not be brave. Undoubtedly one of the greatest difficulties the church has to contend against in our day is that so many of her members are not serving as active soldiers in the fight; they are like the pieces of machinery which are not in their places, they are out of gear. How few, comparatively, of them can be relied on for prayer either in the home, or by the bedside of the sick and dying! These defects the Epworth League is intended to rectify, and already bids fair to supply. Already numbers of our young Epworth Leaguers are enthusiastic and skillful workers in all departments of active church work, and the separate pieces are falling into their places in the machinery, leaders are being trained for the organization, soldiers are being drilled in their regiments, and the army is become a solid phalanx of brave, dauntless warriors for the Lord Christ.

It seems a needless thing to say that the children of to-day will be the men and women of twenty years hence; that the Epworth League of the present will constitute the officials and prominent members of the church when the present generation of officers shall have passed away. And with the training of the League in devotional work, in literary and doctrinal study, and in charitable deeds, these young people as they grow up and still advance in all these directions will naturally be sought out for prominent positions in the church. The stewards and trustees, the superintendents and teachers, the visitors and collectors of the future, are now enrolled in our Epworth Leagues, under training for their Master's service. The membership of the church at large will then be well qualified for duty of every kind, and be able to fill each his place in an acceptable manner, which perhaps was almost impossible for his parents.

Thus it is evident that the League of the present will be the better and more fully equipped church of the future. Recognizing this fact, let us each determine that we will always be at our post of duty, and like the brave soldier who in the face of opposition wins his way, step by step, to the enemy's fortifications, let us manfully press on in our spiritual warfare, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith.

THANKSGIVING AT BAY ST. LOUIS.

Our people had much to thank God for in the mildness of the yellow fever among us, and the wonderful success with which our local physicians and nurses treated the disease. This was specially true in our own church circles. On the twenty-fourth of November friends began early, and continued till late, "sending around" good things to the "parsonage." We had enough and to spare. Some of the presents were peculiarly touching, coming from sources whence they sprang. We re-invoke Heaven's blessings on them all. Thursday (the twenty-fifth) was ideal as to weather, though hardly cool enough for sharpening the appetites. At 10 A. M. a good congregation assembled in our church to unite in praise to God and to listen to his Word expounded from a genuine Thanksgiving text. The altar-place, organ and pulpit were decorated with the finest collection of beautiful roses I ever beheld, mostly from the gardens of Mrs. J. V. Toulme. It formed a picture worthy of an artist's brush. A nice collection was taken for the "Waifs Home"—the full amount of which has been already reported. We feel encouraged. J. P. BLAKE.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. H. G. Hawkins, South Side, Meridian, Dec. 1: "We recently held a revival meeting at South Side. Seven were received by profession of faith and several by certificate; and the interest increased to the close. Revs. R. F. Witt and R. H. Barr did the preaching, and our people regretted that they could not stay longer. South Side and Poplar Spring are both growing some."

Rev. S. H. Whatley, Rosedale, La.: "Our fourth Quarterly Conference disclosed the following facts. 1. That our presiding elder has been faithful. 2. That our people are loyal, and have paid in cash and subscription every dollar of the connectional assessments and $21.50 to the debt. 3. Through a gift from J. A. Matirne and wife, this charge has a permanent home for the preacher. 4. We have lost by death 3 members; 7 received; 5 infants baptized; 5 subscribers to NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, 1 to Nashville, 1 to Texas, 7 to Pentecostal Herald, 2 to American Outlook."

Rev. W. T. Woodward, Simesport, La., Dec. 2, 1897: "Notwithstanding the high water in the Spring, and an exceedingly hot Summer, yellow fever in the early Fall, we have been enabled to do a very good year's work. Painted two churches at an expense of $278.85. Improvements on parsonage, $50. Lights added to two of our churches costing $33. Have paid the pastor in charge, $368; to presiding elder, $54.20. Incidental expenses, $90.90. Additions by profession, 8; by certificate, 4; baptized infants, 7; baptized adults, 4. Secured a lot of land in the town of Markesville on which to build a church. Part of the money promised; secured ten subscribers to the ADVOCATE."

Rev. Irvin Miller, Assistant P. C., Carthage circuit, Dec. 3, 1897: "I am now on my last round on the part of the Carthage circuit that I served last year as assistant preacher in charge, and am serving again this year. It has been a delightful year to me. I have never served a better people. Congregations have been large all the year, especially so at Singleton and Rocky Point; not quite so good at Liberty, owing to measles in the early part of the year, and other sickness later on. We had gracious revivals at Singleton and Rocky Point. The protracted meeting at Liberty was a failure owing to so much sickness in the community. I have taken in twenty members during the year, all at Singleton and Rocky Point. I failed to get any ministerial help in my protracted meetings, except at Liberty, when Bro. Murdock McDonald assisted me with some able sermons, which were well received. We have built a new church at Singleton, and it was dedicated on the second Sunday in November. Members of other denominations are regular attendants at all my appointments."

Rev. P. R. Knickerbocker, P. C., Tallulah, La., Dec. 7, 1897: "We are just closing a very eventful year. We were completely submerged by the overflow for six weeks, and had hardly time to breathe before the Yellow Jack was on us, and remained in the parish for another six weeks. But in it all and through it all we have been abundantly blessed of God. Through the overflow we went around in skiffs, and the people came out in skiffs, so that we had as good audiences as ever in spite of water. During the stay of yellow fever in our midst we held right on, missing only one service. At the beginning of last year, when we took charge of this work, we had only nine members in the whole work. We now have sixty. Received ten new members this year. We have just closed a powerful revival here, resulting in seven additions to the church and some fifteen conversions. A great many prominent people here who had never taken a stand for Christ did so publicly. Financially, we are in good shape, with only sixty members. We expect to come to Conference with everything in full. Pastor's and presiding elder's salary, with Conference collections, amounts to $1200."

Rev. Jno. B. Kent, Covington, La., Dec. 6, 1897: "Our fourth Quarterly Conference was held last Saturday. Our worthy presiding elder, Dr. John T. Sawyer, was with us and preached on Sunday to the edification of all. This section, as is well known, was not affected by the recent scourge like other places; in fact, it was a great thing for this town and parish, as it sent thousands of people here who otherwise would not have come. But our cause got but little out of it, as there were exceedingly few Protestants among the number, and some of them did not attend church. However, there was one way in which we reaped a feast. Dr. Black's family were among the refugees, and we failed not to press the Doctor into service when visiting his family. It is due him to say that he captured our people from the first. His lecture on 'Genesis and Geology,' delivered for the benefit of our parsonage, was pronounced by all to be the greatest thing of its kind ever heard in these parts. Any brother desiring the services of a lecturer could not do better than secure Dr. Black. On his last trip over here the Doctor, by special request, gave us his famous sermon on the 'Immortality of the Soul.' I will not attempt to describe it. The fact is, I was held so spellbound for more than an hour that I hardly knew when I was in the body, or out of it, but I am inclined to the latter opinion. Let me hear it again."

Rev. L. J. Jones, P. C., Raleigh, Miss., Dec. 2, 1897: "Our second year's work on Raleigh circuit will soon be numbered with the things of the past. We have had a remarkable year. We have had our church-houses made anew, and on the seventh of October, at about ten o'clock at night, our parsonage burned to ashes. The fire is supposed to have caught from the flue. We resolved at once to rebuild. We assessed every member of Raleigh Church what we thought they could pay, and we did not leave out the preacher in the assessment. All have and are paying up promptly. We have our parsonage pretty well advanced; have one brick chimney completed, another one on the way; the parsonage about covered, partly ceiled, and by the ringing or sounding of the hammers we think we will eat dinner in the parsonage on Christmas. Our losses were heavy, but they could and would have been more so if it had not been for the good people of Raleigh. We feel thankful for the $14 stove furnished by Rev. W. W. Simmons and others. Other brethren have been mindful of us to self and parsonage. A. J. Mayres, $8; R. S. McLaurin, $10; Rev. C. G. Andrews, $10; Rev. J. T. Nicholson, $2.75. We have only two dollars in the treasury. We wish to order the doors, shutters and lights as soon as we can. We want to pay for the lumber. (We have paid part on lumber.) We are praying and expecting some of our friends that we have written to to respond. Others that we have not written to will please read this and help us. Oh! how thankful we would be to anyone that will aid us in rebuilding a home for the preacher that may be sent to serve these good people during the year 1898. I appeal to my friends to help. If you can send a little assistance, we will have a nice parsonage. God bless you all."

Nervous
People wonder why their nerves are so weak; why they get tired so easily; why they do not sleep naturally; why they have frequent headaches, indigestion and
Nervous Dyspepsia. The explanation is simple. It is found in that impure blood feeding the nerves on refuse instead of the elements of strength and vigor. Hood's Sarsaparilla feeds the nerves pure, rich blood; gives natural sleep, good digestion, is the true remedy for all nervous troubles.

When a man neglects his health for a day he marks two days off the calendar of his life. When he neglects his health for two consecutive days he marks four days off his life's calendar. And so on. That's about the ratio, and it doesn't take many days to cross off an entire year. And yet men recklessly neglect their health for weeks at a time. It is the easiest thing in the world for the average man or woman to get good health and then keep it. It only needs a little stitch here and there. The big, dangerous maladies that threaten life are only the culmination of the little illnesses that are neglected.
If when a man feels "knocked-out," "out-of-sorts," "run-down," overworked or overworried he will resort to Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery he will soon feel bright, strong and vigorous again and able to combat all the big maladies in the doctor-books. Moreover the "Golden Medical Discovery" is a sure and speedy cure for some of the most dangerous diseases. It cures 98 per cent. of all cases of consumption. It cures nervous prostration and exhaustion. These are not mere assertions. Thousands of grateful men and women have testified to the facts, and hundreds of their names, addresses and photographs are printed in Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser.
"I used Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for torpid liver and indigestion, and obtained permanent relief," writes J. A. Williams, Esq., of Mill Brook, Washington Co., Tenn.
Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser has had a larger sale than any other book of this class ever offered the public. This book of 1,008 pages with 300 illustrations, is full from cover to cover, of practical advice on health matters. ANNUAL REPORT OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

The Publishing Committee takes pleasnre in reporting to the patronizing Conferences that their organ, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, is in a better financial condition than for twelve years past. Throngh the midst of many disastrous influences dnring the year now closing the pnblisher has piloted the ADVOCATE, moving along serenely and calmly, making a goodly exhibit, showing a living salary for the editor and pnblisher, a payment towards the liqnidation of an old debt long dne by the paper, and a fine list of cash subscribers. The year opened with the northern portion of Louisiana suffering from the effects of a protracted drouth of eight months, which crippled all forward movements in that section; then came the high waters and overflow in portions of the ADVOCATE's territory. Hardly had the waters snbsided and things come to their normal condition when the paper was thrown ont of its office by fire, entailing loss of work and many inconveniences. After two months' waiting the paper was again in fnll blast in its new office, having shaken off its dnst and ashes, when, lo! the pestilence came npon the whole territory, doing more damage than drouth, water and fire, bottling the city up, stopping all business, and cutting off all communications with the country; the quarantine folly of many portions of the neighboring States paralyzing all bnsiness and keeping the snbscribers withont their papers for several months. Dr. Black, by skillfnl management, has safely piloted the paper throngh all the financial shoals. If the craft scraped the bottom, none ever knew it by word or look; but he has gone on his way as if he was in a land-locked haven, riding the waves calmly. Papers come and papers go (into financial collapse), bnt the ADVOCATE goes on forever. There have been many papers started, running for awhile, corruscating throngh the heavens like meteors; then pale away and go the way of all insolvents. The friends of the ADVOCATE get alarmed, and sometimes excited, bnt after awhile the dear old ADVOCATE is shining on like a fixed star, all alone in her glory. It is distinctly the property of the church; given a domicile, rent free, by the Lonisiana Conference; ordered and controlled to the minntest detail, the size of the type, form of the paper, etc., by the committees of the patronizing Conferences. Only three other papers in the whole connection of Sonthern Methodism are so thoronghly church property as yonr ADVOCATE; therefore, it shonld command the most hearty snpport from onr pastors and membership. Let ns be hearty and loyal in the snpport of this, our paper; and if objectionable in any form, take the right means to remedy it by instructing yonr committee members —not by private criticism beforo yonr pastoral charge, or canvassing for other papers held responsible by nobody and amenable to no Conference. For it to live in and thrive in the midst of the wreck of many other papers, and throughso many financial straits, shows its clientele is loyal, devoted, and faithful, in spite of what may be urged to the contrary by disloyal pastors and disgrntled members.

During the reading of this report there are many who feel they could snggest many emendations, which would greatly improve the ADVOCATE; bnt how many could have rnn it safely throngh this difficnlt year of disasters? Then remember the Master's words, "The life is more than meat." It has come as regnlarly as the retnrn of the seasons to yonr hearth-stones, bringing a message of no nncertain sonnd to yonr families week after week.

During the administration of the present pnblisher a debt made while Bishop Galloway was editor and Mr. Jamieson was pnblisher, which had grown to twelve hnndred and fonrteen dollars, has been redneed to six hnndred and fonrteen dollars, and this balance is to be extinguished dnring the next two years. In order to get this debt paid off, and to get hold of some necessary property bonght by Dr. Black from the former pnblisher, the oommittee departed from their nsnal rule of only letting the contract for one year, and made it for three years. It is advantageous to the patrons of the paper in that it makes it snre in its polioy and uniform in its stand, as well secnring the paper its ontstanding note. It is more advantageons to the pnblisher in fitting np his office for ontside work, and in pnrchasing material for the paper. If at any time dnring this contract there may be dissatisfaction on either side, it can be annnlled by giving a three months' notice; so the committee is perfectly safe in this arrangement.

This could be made a paper surpassed by nene, and eqnal to any in onr connection, by the pastors and membership of our church rallying to it, and rolling up the snbscription list to ten thonsand. Why not do it, and demand a yearly bonns from the pnblisher for onr Conference claimants—the widows and orphans of those who have fallen in the heat of the fight? Bnt with onr pastors and people not giving this, the lowest nnmber of patrons the paper onght to have ont of more than ninety thonsand Methodists in the three patronizing Conferences, how can your Publishing Committee make large demands of the pnblisher?

The editor has been very conservative in his editorial management, however, taking a bold stand against that sport which is tnrning onr boys into thngs and roughs—the inter-collegiate football games, that onght to be pnt ont and down by every religious college in the connection.

The following resolutions were passed by the committee:

Resolved, That after carefnl examination of the bnsiness and editorial management of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, we, the Publishing Committee, are pleased with the wise and snccessfnl management. The work of Dr. Black is specially to be commended, in that he has been confronted by nnusnal difficnlties growing ont of the yellow fever and quarantine.

Resolved, That we most earnestly oommend the paper as the official organ of the patronizing Conferences, and that we urge onr preachers to make all possible efforts in the interest of its circnlation, and that we urge onr people to take and read it.

The need of a bold and strong paper in this city, and among the Sonthern Methodists of Mississippi and Lonisiana, a defender of our institntions, that stands for all our ministry and membership as well as the spread of the great fundamental doctrines of conversion, the witness of the Holy Spirit, trne godliness and hnmble holiness, as distingnished from a vannting and sonr holiness that tabooes and decries all who do not believe in certain theories, goes withont saying. Snch the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE can be made. Then let ns enter into this enterprise determined that it shall be.

We thank those earnest and loyal patrons for their past devotion to the paper, and ask their hearty cooperation for the fntnre, and nrge onr pastors, both the loyal and the lnkewarm, to rally to the paper, and make it one of the best in the whole connection.

S. S. KEENER.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

We spent a few days last week in attendance upon the North Mississippi Conference at Oxford, arriving in time for the opening. En ronte we stopped a few honrs at Jackson, and had the pleasnre of meeting Bishop Galloway, who had jnst reached home after an absence of five months. He is in exeellent health, as is also Sister Galloway. We had a few words with Major Millsaps who, with his family, has but recently retnrned from an extensive Enropean tonr, and with Bros. DnBose, Jones and Gnnning.

On arriving at Oxford we were so fortnnate as to be able to engage "Gilderoy's" facile pen to report the proceedings. The session was harmonions and pleasant. The brethren seemed cheerfnl and happy. Financial reports were better than we had anticipated. Qnite a number of spectators were in attendance upon the Conference sessions each day. The attendance upon pnblic worship at night was snfficient to crowd the spacions anditorinm. We heard sermons by Drs. Boswell, DnBose and Bolling, all of which were good, as was also the missionary address of Dr. H. C. Morrison. There were afternoon services each day at the Baptist Chnrch, bnt onr engagements were snch as to prevent onr attendance. Bishop Wilson's manner of condncting bnsiness was snch as to give nniversal satisfaction. Dr. Standifer makes an admirable Conference host. The brethren gave ns a oordial reception. It is onr jndgment that the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE has a stronger hold upon the North Mississippi Conference than at any previons period of its history.

With onr affable friend, Dr. W. B. Mnrrah, we were delightfnlly domiciled in the home of Col. and Mrs. H. A. Barr, whose cordial hospitality and genial companionship we mnch enjoyed. They are Presbyterians, bnt we could not have felt more at home under a Methodist roof.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

The twenty-seventh session of the North Mississippi Conference was opened in the Methodist Chnrch in Oxford, Dec. 8, by Bishop A. W. Wilson. The Scripture lesson was read and hymn No. 218 snng. The Bishop then led the Conference in fervent prayer. Rev. J. S. Oakley, secretary of the last session, then called the roll, and an nnnsnally large nnmber of the preachers and lay delegates answered to their names. Rev. J. S. Oakley was elected secretary, and Revs. R. M. Evans, G. H. Lipscomb and T. B. Clifford were chosen assistant secretaries. The honrs for meeting and adjonrning were fixed for 9 A. M. and 12:30 P. M.

The nsnal committees were appointed as per the nomination of the presiding elders.

Commnnications from the Pnblishing Honse, Secretary of the Board of Missions, Chnrch Extension, the Board of Edncation, from Paine and Lane Institnte, Sunday-school Board, Epworth Leagne Secretary, from Woman's Department of the Missionary Society, from the Scarritt Bible and Training-school, Special Appeal from the Woman's Missionary Society, Secretary of the Board of Trnstees of Millsaps College, the Grenada Collegiate Institnte, and Epworth College, were read and referred to the appropriate Boards and Committees.

Rev. H. D. Howell, of the Mississippi Conference, and the pastors of the Baptist and Presbyterian Churches were introdnced.

The names of those on the snperannnate list were called and referred to the Committee on Conference Relations for the same relation. For the present W. A. Dollar and J. D. Newsom were left effective.

The names of the presiding elders were called, and each made a brief report and the character of each passed. The names of the preachers in the Sardis, Grenada, Winona, and Durant and Colnmbns districts were called and the character of each passed.

Rev. H. C. Morrison, Missionary Secretary, and Rev. W. T. Bowling were introdnced to the Conference.

After annonncements the Conference adjonrned with benediction by the Bishop.

The anniversary of the Board of Missions was held on Monday night in order that Rev. H. C. Morrison, Secretary of the General Board of Missions, might have an opportnnity to address the Board and Conference. The secretary and treasnrer were not ready to report, so Dr. Morrison proceeded with his address. The address was broad, comprehensive, eloqnent, and wonderfnlly spiritnal and snggestive. At the close a volnntary offering was made, and the amonnt raised will be reported later by the treasnrer.

SECOND DAY.

The Conference met at the appointed honr, and the religions exercises were condncted by Rev. R. G. Porter; the Bishop in the chair. The roli was called, and a few brethren not present yesterday answered to their names. The Minntes of the last session read and approved.

The following yonng men were received on trial: J. R. Wilson, Sardis district; Robert S. Lawson, of the Grenada; W. T. Browning, of the Colnmbns, and W. R. Williams and E. A. Tucker, of the Corinth district.

Rev. H. M. DnBose, of the Mississippi Conference, and Chancellor J. H. Kirkland, of the Vanderbilt University, were introdnced, and Dr. Kirkland proceeded to present the claims of the great institution over which he presides.

James E. Cnnningham, R. A. Tucker and R. A. Dnke were continned in the class of the third year.

H. L. Spraggins, C. H. Spraggins, J. M. Moose, R. A. Bradley, J. H. Rogers, P. E. Dnncan and J. H. Dorsey were elected to elder's orders.

W. G. Bnrks was continned in the class of the third year.

J. R. Wilson, R. S. Lawson and J. D. Simpson were elected local deacons.

Rev. W. F. Rozell, once a member of this Conference, bnt who surrendered his credentials some years ago, had them restored to him.

S. A. Brown, G. A. Klein, J. W. Raper, J. J. Garner, C. P. Moss, W. L. Anderson and S. B. Cox were admitted into fnll connection.

S. A. Brown, C. P. Moss, W. L. Anderson and S. B. Cox were elected to deacon's orders.

B. P. Patterson and J. R. Countiss were passed to the class of the fourth year. W. T. Rogers remains in the class of the third year.

A resolntion in regard to the importance of circulating good literature provoked qnite an animated discnssion.

The characters of all the preachers were examined and passed.

After the report of the Committee on Pnblic Worship and the nsnal annonncements of the Boards and Committees, the Conference adjonrned with the benediction by Rev. R. M. Standifer.

THIRD DAY.

Conference convened at the regnlar honr, with the Bishop in the chair. Religions exeroises condncted by Rev. Jno. Ritchey. Minntes of the last session read and approved.

Rev. J. B. Mitchell was admitted on trial in the traveling connection.

Rev. W. G. Bnrks was located at his own reqnest.

The class for admission into fnll connection, Rev. S. A. Brown, G. A. Klein, J. W. Raper, J. J. Garner, C. P. Moss, W. L. Anderson, and S. B. Cox, were called to the chancel to assume the vows of consecration. The Bishop's address was one of great depth, breadth and power, and prodnced a profonnd impression on the class, the Conference, and the large audience present.

Revs. C. N. Terry, J. W. Bates, J. M. Hampton, W. R. Rainey, W. S. Harrison, J. T. Cnnningham, S. A. Ellis, S. B. Carson, A. J. Jones, Joseph Johnson, J. W. Poston, J. D. Newsom and T. L. Foster were granted a snperannnated relation.

Rev. J. D. Newsom was reqnested to preach a semi-centennial sermon at onr next session.

"Where shall the next session be held?"

Answer—"At Aberdeen."

The Conference entered upon the election of delegates to the General Conference. On the first ballot Rev. W. B. Mnrrah, D. D., was elected clerical, and Dr. R. W. Jones lay delegate.

Report 1 of the Board of Missions was read and adopted.

The Board of Colportage made its report, and recommended the continnance of Rev. G. W. Bachman in this work. The report was adopted.

Conference adjonrned with the benediction by Dr. Snllivan.

FOURTH DAY.

Conference convened at the appointed honr with Rev. S. M. Thames in the chair. Religions exercises were condncted by Rev. D. L. Cogdell.

Minntes of last session read and approved.

Bishop Wilson came in and took the chair.

The Conference then resnmed where it left off yesterday, and after an unnsnally large number of ballots the following additional delegates were elected to the General Conference: Clerical—Rev. Jno. W. Boswell, D. D.; Rev. J. S. Oakley and Rev. T. W. Lewis. Rev. S. A. Steele, D. D., and Rev. W. T. J. Sullivan, D. D., reserves. Lay delegates elected—Hon. W. R. Trigg, A. H. George and G. J. Leftwich. Alternates—J. B. Streater and G. B. Jones.

The report of Committee on the Sabbath was read and adopted. The Snnday-school Board then made its report. Rev. J. C. Atkins, D. D., Snnday-school Secretary, addressed the Conference on onr Sunday-school work and pnblications. His address was of a very high order. The Treasnrer of the Snnday-school Board made his report on Children's Day fnnd, which is $250 larger than last year. The report of the Committee on the Spiritnal State of the Chnrch was read and adopted. Report of the Committee on District Conference Records was presented and adopted.

A memorial to the General Conference in regard to some verbal changes in onr ritnal for the office of baptism was read, discnssed and adopted.

The report of the Committee on Books and Periodicals was read and adopted. Dr. J. W. Boswell stated that Rev. E. E. Hoss would be present on Monday to address the Conference.

The Joint Board of Control made a report as to the Orphans' Home at Water Valley, now ready to be opened.

The Committee on Temperance reported and the report was adopted.

Annonncements were made for preaching in the several chnrches of the city on Snnday, which this scribe failed to get.

The memorial service was held on Satnrday night, Rev. T. W. Dye in the chair. Religions exercises condncted by Rev. R. A. Bnrronghs.

The memoir of Rev. J. A. Braswell was read by Rev. J. F. Evans; that of Rev. J. T. Howell and of Rev. J. W. Lnter by Rev. T. W. Dye. This service was followed by an address by Rev. S. A. Steel, D. D., on the Pioneers of Methodism.

SUNDAY.

After a sermon by Bishop Wilson the following traveling preachers were ordained deacons: B. P. Patterson, J. R. Conntiss, and J. H. Rogers. The following were ordained local deacons: J. R. Wilson, R. S. Lawson, T. H. Haynes, and J. D. Simpson.

After a sermon at night by Rev. S. A. Steel, the following traveling preachers were ordained elders: H. S. Spraggins, C. A. Spraggins, J. M. Moose, J. M. Bradley, J. M. Deavenport, P. E. Dnncan, and T. H. Dorsey.

SIXTH DAY.

Conference met at the appointed honr with the Bishop in the chair. Religions exercises condncted by Rev. J. F. Evans. Minntes read and approved.

The Epworth League Board made its report. Report No. 2 from the Board of Missions. Treasurer of the Board of Chnrch Extension made his report. Board of Edncation reported. The Joint Board of Finance reported and divided ont the fnnds.

Dr. Hoss, editor Nashville Advocate, arrived and addressed the Conference in behalf of that paper.

Resolntions of thanks to the citizens of Oxford, the several churches of the city and to railroads were adopted.

Statistical secretary reported, and the report was adopted. Report of Committee on Bible Canse was read and adopted. Pending this report, Rev. J. W. McLanrin addressed the Conference in behalf of this great cansc. By resolntion the Conference ordered an assessment of $1250 for this noble work.

The Conference adjonrned to meet at 2 o'clock P. M. Dr. W. T. J. Snlli van led the religions exercises at the afternoon session. Minntes read np to date. The Bishop then asked, "Where are the preachers stationed this year?"

Monumental Records.

THE GREATEST SPECIAL PERIODICAL OF THE DAY.

ITS SCHOLARLY REPORTS AND SUPERB ILLUSTRATIONS DO FOR THE PAST WHAT THE MOST PROGRESSIVE NEWSPAPER DOES FOR THE EVENTS OF THE DAY

Monumental Records has its Correspondents in every field where ruins mark the Civilizations of the Past. These men are photographing and giving the results of the excavations which are being carried on by the great Exploration Societies, Museums, and Governments of the World, and the greatest explorers are its friends and promised contributors.

Monumental Records interests old and young; it appeals to the scientist and attracts the reader who is influenced through the imagination. Its presentations of the past come to some as a fairy story—a romance; to others as a scientific dissertation and a truthful record of the older civilizations. The scientist needs it because it is a record of fact. The Biblical student must have it because many of the discoveries bear on the historical records of the Bible. All interested in the development of man will find it an invaluable help.

Inscriptions are translated by the most eminent scholars.

To bring the wonderful Past before the intelligent masses of the Present, the subscription price of MONUMENTAL RECORDS is put at the cost of production. A year's subscription is only $1.50, its size is 10½x14 inches to admit of the most ample illustration and photographic reproductions are from originals, and the paper is the best manufactured. Taken in every way, there is no monthly published in any language that surpasses MONUMENTAL RECORDS.

It has already on its paid subscription list (it has no other) many of the most prominent men of this country. Those sending $1.50 for 1898 will receive the November and December Numbers of 1897 free; or the November and December numbers will be sent on receipt of fifteen two-cent stamps or a four months' subscription for fifty cents.

CONFERENCE NOTES.

Rev. H. M. DuBose, D. D., has a warm heart, a big soul and a smiling face.

The preachers all have on good clothes and carry cheerful faces—all men of faith and courage.

Rev. W. M. Hamner, of the Memphis Conference, was with us for a few days to the joy of all the brethren.

The sermon of Rev. S. A. Steel at the Presbyterian Church was a finished production and a feast of fat things.

W. A. Gunning, a lay delegate to both of the Conferences in Mississippi, was circulating freely among the brethren.

The wife of Rev. A. P. Sage died in Starkville during our session, and the Conference sent a telegram of sympathy.

This scribe heard only three sermons, all strong and edifying, but glowing reports reach him of all the sermons preached.

Bishop Wilson says less in the chair and pushes business faster than any Bishop that ever presided over this Conference.

Rev. H. D. Howell, of the Mississippi Conference, is enjoying the association and companionship of the friends of his earlier years.

Dr. Hoss, editor of the Nashville Advocate, came on Monday morning and addressed the Conference on the subject of the Christian Advocate.

Rev. J. W. Chambers, president of Whitworth Female College, is present and circulating freely among the brethren. He is always welcome here.

Notwithstanding the flood in the Spring, the drouth in the Summer and the quarantine in the Fall, the collections are about equal to last year.

Rev. M. L. Burton, of the Mississippi Conference, a fair sample of the preachers of the Mississippi Conference in good looks, was present contesting for the palm here with Rev. J. S. Oakley.

Bishop Wilson's sermon on Sunday, on the Spirituality of Worship, was one of great breadth, depth, clearness and intense spiritual power. It was attended by the unction of the Holy Ghost.

Why throw away your money for every new cough syrup, when you can buy that standard remedy, Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup?

GONE HOME.

Our hearts are sad. We buried Bro. D. O. Nugent yesterday. He was the Sunday-school superintendent at White Chapel. He had been an official member of the church twenty-five years. He was caught in a cotton gin, and cut in about twenty places. He lived about thirty-six hours. Pray for us.

H. S. JOHNS.

Bayou Chicot, La., Dec. 6, 1897.

NOTES.

Bishop Keener has been rather feeble of late, but is now growing stronger.

Rev. C. A. Spraggins, of the North Mississippi Conference, has been transferred to Texas, and stationed at Lancaster.

In order to make room for the proceedings of the North Mississippi Conference, we leave over our editorial and two or three communications which had been slated for this week's issue.

Rev. Christian Keener, who has been afflicted for several years, is rapidly growing worse, and it is probable that he is near the end of his earthly pilgrimage.

Rev. J. A. Braswell, of the North Mississippi Conference, died on Monday, the sixth. Bro. Braswell had but very recently joined the traveling connection, but had shown himself a diligent, earnest, faithful minister.

Sister Sage, wife of Rev. A. P. Sage, of the North Mississippi Conference, died on Saturday last. She was a most excellent Christian woman, whose death will be deeply deplored by a large circle of friends in the various localities in which she has lived.

Miss Belle Kearney has returned from her nine months' journey to her home at Flora, Miss., where she will remain during the winter. Miss Jessie Ackerman, a W. C. T. U. worker of national reputation, will be with her during a large part of the season.

Sister Mounger, wife of Dr. E. H. Mounger, of the Mississippi Conference, died at her home in Brookhaven on Saturday last. She was a woman of admirable character. Hosts of friends in various parts of the State will be saddened by the news of her death. We deeply sympathize with our brother in his sore bereavement.

Prof. Albert Marvin Herget, of the Louisiana Industrial Institute, at Ruston, was married, on the twenty-sixth of November, to Miss Mary Divine Coleman, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. S. K. Coleman, of Canton, Miss. We extend our heartiest congratulations to the happy pair and wish them unalloyed felicity through life.

Rev. P. H. Fontaine preached his farewell sermon to his flock at Carrollton last Sabbath, and will take his departure for his far-off Western field on Wednesday, the fifteenth. Under his efficient leadership Carrollton has met all claims for the current year. His flock part with him with regret. Quite a surprise was given him a few evenings since by the presentation of a handsome overcoat and other valuables. The preachers bade him an affectionate farewell on Monday morning at the Preachers' Meeting.

Preachers who have been moved by the itinerant wheel should notify us at once if they wish to get the ADVOCATE promptly.

Rev. N. E. Joyner, of Monterey, Mexico, was a welcome caller at the ADVOCATE office recently. He was on his way to Moss Point, Miss., to visit his parents. He will return to his charge about the thirtieth.

From a letter received from Bro. A. S. Lutz we make the following extract which will be read with interest by all our people:

We are in the midst of a gracious revival in the Methodist Church at Jackson, La. Nearly all of the students of Centenary College have become professed Christians. Prof. Tom Carter is doing all the preaching.

We are having much sickness. Two of our boys, Henry and James, sick with typhoid fever. One has had it 30, the other one 23 days. Our youngest one, Osmond, is also quite sick. We fear he has same fever. Pray for us.

H. P. LEWIS.

Carthage, Miss., Dec. 6, 1897.

We sympathize with our brother in his affliction, and pray that his loved ones may be speedily restored to health.

TO THE PASTORS OF THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

We urge upon you to bring up the full assessment for our superannuated preachers, and widows and orphans. If the full assessment is paid, it will give only a meager support; and when it falls short, it puts a hardship upon those who have borne the heat and burden of the day. Let us bring up this collection, though all others fall short. As "Our Beloveds" don't have a chance to give to this cause in a congregation as we of the rank and file, they may hand it over to the Joint Board direct. Everyone should give something to this cause. Thanks to Dr. Sawyer for his disinterested and earnest exhortation on this cause.

Second: Each pastor will turn to Paragraph No. 137 in the Discipline, read it over twice at least, and do what it enjoins fully and conscientiously, and give the Joint Board all light possible in each case. Do not fail to do this and then at the Annual Conference get up and publicly criticise the action of Joint Board of Finance, as one brother did a few years ago.

CATARRH INHALER FREE!

Only one person in fifty cured by the old method of treating Catarrh, now everywhere condemned.

The New Scientific Catarrh Inhaler of Dr. Worst's mailed free to all Readers of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

CURES BY INHALATION

And is the latest, up-to-date method for curing Catarrh, Colds in Head, Bronchitis, Sore Throat, Headache, and is indorsed by all leading physicians.

Air is the only agent fine enough to reach the air cells of the head and respiratory organs. It was the agent that carried the disease there, and must be the one to successfully remove it. Vapors, Sprays, and atomizers are all dangerous, and nature never intended them for the windpipe and instantly repels them.

NATURE'S OWN REMEDY.

It is the one remedy successfully treating these diseases with the air we breathe, and the only one that has sufficient merit that any manufacturer ever had enough confidence in, to send to the public on trial, to be paid for if satisfactory.

THIS IS WHAT THOUSANDS OF PEOPLE SAY WHO USE IT.

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 30, 1897.
Dr. Worst:—"I find the Inhaler the greatest thing I ever used. I have had Hay-Fever for 10 yrs. and never had anything to give me such relief."
MISS ERVIN, 1714 Cambridge St.

Crown Point, N. Y., Nov. 16, 1897.
Dr. E. J. Worst, Ashland, O.
Dear Sir.—Have given the Inhaler 3 days trial for a stubborn cough that has resisted all medical treatment heretofore. The beneficial effects of the Inhaler was almost instantaneous, relieving cough at once. I believe this little invention is a God-send to the afflicted. I will see what I can do, and write you a little later in regard to an agency. Please find enclosed $1.00. Very respectfully,
B. F. BEVINS.

Odessa, Mo., Oct. 18, 1897.
Dr. Worst. Dear Sir:—"I will say that I have cured one case of Catarrh with your Inhaler that was under the doctor's hands for four months. I have cured my own Catarrh in my head, and Rheumatism, and have not a pain or an ache in my body at this time. All who have used the Inhaler say it is the best medicine in the world for Catarrh. You will find an order for another dozen which please forward and oblige. W. C. DANNALSON.

A. H. Dooly, White Water, Kans., says: "I consider its value far above its cost."

J. N. Burdette, Willard, W. Va., says: "I can hear my watch tick for the first time in 12 months."

Isaac Miller, Clay City, Ind., writes: "Your Catarrh Inhaler has cured me sound and well."

Chinkiang, China, July 17, 1897.
Dr. Worst:—"I have received the Inhaler and have used it for a month and is doing me good. My case is Catarrh of long standing. I will remit in American postage stamps through a friend in America." Rev. A. LYDENSTRICKER, Missionary.

Sherpsburg, Md.
"I have used one of Dr. Worst's Catarrh Inhalers and received more good than from anything I ever used." JOHN E. OTTO.

Harrisburg, Pa.
The Inhaler received all O. K. I have found nothing yet to equal your Inhaler. Enclosed find one dollar." WM. B. OHR.

Robert Halford, Mt. Lebanon, N. Y., says: "Can recommend it as the best I ever used."

Mrs. Kate A. Wert, Winnebago, Minn., says: "Never had anything to do me so much good."

I have thousands of similar greetings on file in my office. Every one is delighted who receives the Inhaler, and can't say too much in its favor. Its immediate magical effects upon the mucous membranes and air passages of the head in allaying pain and all abnormal conditions, captivates every one, and all are loud in saying that its real value is far above its price.

SPECIAL OFFER. I will for a short time mail to any reader of THIS PAPER my new Scientific Catarrh Inhaler with medicine for one year, on three days' trial, free. If it gives satisfaction send me $1.00, if not, return it. Send for it now, as this notice will not appear again. Address,

Happy Homes

..AND THE..

Hearts that Make Them;

Or, Thrifty People and Why They Thrive

BY
SAMUEL SMILES,
AUTHOR OF SELF-HELP, CHARACTER, DUTY, THRIFT, ETC.

CAREFULLY REVISED WITH ADDITIONAL MATTER BY CHAS. A. CASKELL, A. M.

A beautifully illustrated book of 644 pages, cover stamped in gold, marble edges, size 8vo, red cloth. Probably no books of the same general type were ever written that have so much interested and inspired to worthy action the various classes to whom they were addressed, as have the productions of SAMUEL SMILES. The marked interest which attaches to MR. SMILES' productions is chiefly due to his happy use of biography. Readers who tire of extended biographical histories find here groups of the wise and distinguished of earth, each giving testimony to the various principles the author wishes to inculcate. The interest excited by the novel arises solely from our interest in the lives and struggles of men and women. They are interesting biographies; but much more interest should attach to lives actually lived and conquests actually made, provided they are produced with equal care. The home is the epitome of society and government. The application of these principles to every member of the home—the importance of their inculcation in the home, where character is chiefly molded—and the value of such lessons in making every home what it may be and should be, has dictated the title,

"Happy Homes and the Hearts that Make Them."

GETTIN' RELIGION.

BY IDA GOLDSMITH MORRIS.

I ain't much on religion, nor prayer meeting beside,
I've never jined the church as yet, nor ain't been sanctified;
But a tender sort of feeling draws me nearer to the skies,
Since I got a peep of heaven through a pair of trusting eyes.

Time was when nothing moved my thoughts above this sinful world;
No preacher's words could stir me up, in wrath an' fury hurled;
But lately I've been drifting nigher to the better land,
And the force that leads me upward is a little dimpled hand.

Seems like the bad thoughts sneak away, with that wee chap hard by;
And cuss-words that were handy once won't come when he is nigh;
Facl is, it sort o' shames me to see those clear, blue eyes
Look at me (when I'm gettin' riled) in pity an' surprise.

I don't know much of heaven or angels an' such things;
But, somehow, when I picture 'em, it ain't with harps an' wings;
But with yeller curls, all tangled, an' tender eyes that shine,
An' lips that's soft an' loving, like that little chap of mine.

Then, when he folds his dimpled hands, in his little bed at night,
An' whispers, "Now I lay me," why, thar's something ails my sight,
An' my throat gits sort of husky when he blesses me, an' then
I'm dead sure I've got religion by the time he says, "Amen!"

— Louisville Courier-Journal.

THE TEST OF A GOOD BOOK.

A favorite professor used to say: "The best test of a piece of good literature is the number of times you can read it over without wearying of it." Experience has proved his wisdom. The great books of the world, those universally acknowledged to be the greatest ever written, are those which can be read over and over again, not only without wearying, but with fresh interest each time. Comparatively few novels will bear this test. When we have once mastered the plot of a book by Mrs. Holmes, Augusta Evans Wilson, Marian Harland, and similar writers, what remains? Can we read the book over again at once and get more enjoyment out of it than at first? Very likely the first reading of them affords more intense fascination than does one of Dickens' novels. But every time we read Dickens, or Scott, or Thackeray, or others of their rank, we find some beauty which at first escaped our observation. That is what gives them their rank. How disappointed I was in the first reading of "Vanity Fair!" I could not take the slightest interest in it, and only read it for the sake of a friend who requested it; but how much more pleasantly disappointed I was a few months later, when, picking it up and opening it at random, I became so enchanted that I could not leave it until I had re-read every word. I knew the plot, so that was not the charm. I enjoyed now getting acquainted with the people.

The place of a book in literature has nothing to do with the amount of information it contains. Our school arithmetics and grammars are all information and not at all literature. But a book is valuable to me for its moral and spiritual outlook, for the beautiful thoughts I find in it, for the broader view it gives me of life and duty and beauty, for its help in bringing me into closer relationship with all that is good and beautiful and true.

If a book is full of good, beautiful thoughts, such as I want to copy into my note-book, then I want to read it again and again, to get at the meaning of all that is in it. The secret of the unfailing life of the Bible is the fact that its contents are never exhausted. We always find in it something beautiful to think about.

Therein lies the greatest test of a good book—its ability to make us think. Biography and history can not but do this. But a history of dry events does not so easily compel our attention to their meaning as does a masterpiece like "Macaulay's History of England." The fact that it is a masterpiece of literature as well as a good history depends upon just that subtle quality, that it makes us think, and upon the perfection of its language.

Few good books use really poor language. Words are the dress of the author's thoughts. A good writer does not use tawdry, flashy language, any more than a lady wears tawdry colors and flashy, cheap jewelry.

Poetry is peculiarly helpful in thought suggestions, perhaps because a poem can not describe all, but can only suggest and leave our imaginations to fill the picture. Rhyme and rhythm do not make poetry. There must be a real thought. Perhaps the best test of the value of a poem is our ability to commit it to memory and to continue to find pleasure in repeating. Poems may be memorized while at work, and their repetition when too busy to learn new ones will keep the mind from many petty worries.

A pretty sure test of a book's value is to read it aloud to several persons—if possible, older persons. If it will not bear this test, it is better in the fire.—Selected.

The Same Old Sarsaparilla.

That's Ayer's. The same old sarsaparilla as it was made and sold 50 years ago. In the laboratory it is different. There modern appliances lend speed to skill and experience. But the sarsaparilla is the same old sarsaparilla that made the record—50 years of cures. Why don't we better it? Well, we're much in the condition of the Bishop and the raspberry: "Doubtless," he said, "God might have made a better berry. But doubtless, also, He never did." Why don't we better the sarsaparilla? We can't. We are using the same old plant that cured the Indians and the Spaniards. It has not been bettered. And since we make sarsaparilla compound out of sarsaparilla plant, we see no way of improvement. Of course, if we were making some secret chemical compound, we might.... But we're not. We're making the same old sarsaparilla to cure the same old diseases. You can tell it's the same old sarsaparilla because it works the same old cures. It's the sovereign blood purifier, and —it's Ayer's.

Hygiene.

COFFEE AND ITS USES.

When there are in a community epidemics of typhoid fever, cholera, erysipelas, scarlet fever, and the various types of malarial fever, which are transmitted almost entirely through the medium of food and drink, coffee is a valuable agent, and may be used as a drink instead of water.

It is a valuable agent in assisting in the digestion of food, and aids the blood in taking up more nourishment than it would without it.

It quickens the circulation of the blood and respiration.

It is also stimulating and refreshing (due to the caffeine it contains).

In tiding over nervousness in emergencies, it is a sovereign remedy.

Taken in the morning before rising, minus cream and sugar, it acts in many cases as a superior laxative (probably from the hot water contained in it).

As a stimulant and caloric generator in cold weather it is one hundred per cent. ahead of whisky or other liquors.

NANSEN'S TESTIMONY.

Do you envy Nansen's robust health? Then listen to what he says about the use of stimulants and narcotics. His testimony is supremely valuable because he does not speak from mere theory, but from very real, arduous, and prolonged experience, his splendid physical condition being the best possible evidence of the soundness of his conclusions. Dr. Nansen states in a Belgian journal that his experience has led him to take a decided stand against the use of stimulants and narcotics of all kinds, and he took no intoxicants with him on his recent expedition. He says it is obvious that one can get nothing in this life without paying for it in some way or other, and that artificial stimulants, even if they had not the directly injurious effects which they undoubtedly have, can produce nothing but a temporary excitement, followed by a corresponding reaction. Stimulants, with the exception of chocolate, which is mild in its effect and at the same time nourishing, bring practically no nutritive substance into the body, and the energy which one obtains in anticipation by their use at one moment must be paid for by a corresponding exhaustion at the next.—Standard.

Epworth College

(Formerly MALONE)

Is located in Holly Springs, at the intersection of the Illinois Central and Kansas City, Memphis and Birmingham Railroads, and has always been noted for the health, culture and refinement of its people. Ten passenger trains come and go every day, except Sunday, when we have eight.

We shall continue to work under the auspices of the North Mississippi Conference, and pledge ourselves to use every effort in behalf of those entrusted to our care that they may be developed into educated, polished Christian women.

BOARDING DEPARTMENT.

Pupils boarding in the College have the personal attention of the President and his wife, who, together with the teachers, strive to make their stay while here as pleasant and profitable as possible.

An abundance of substantial food is furnished; ample time given at each meal for everyone to be satisfied, and President's family, teachers and pupils all fare alike. Special attention is paid to their manners and morals at all times, and every effort is made to impress them with the necessity of constant growth, physically, mentally and morally.

We board at $11.00 per month where they take their meals regularly at the table; extra charge when the meals are carried to their rooms, and extra servant hire. This includes pupils and teachers.

No incidental fee is charged unless something is destroyed, and in this case the cost of the article is charged to the party who destroys it.

THE DEAD LINE.

There is a general tendency in some quarters of America to force ministers who have passed fifty years of age to retire from the active work. It is contended that efficiency and usefulness are impossible after this limit is reached. The churches are demanding younger men. A half century is a positive disqualification. This strikes us as extremely arbitrary. We do not believe any man ever reaches intellectual maturity until he is at least sixty years old. The best sermons we ever heard preached fell from the lips of men over sixty, and in some cases seventy or more. This thing of arbitrarily superannuating ministers at fifty is absurd. We believe that work long after this period is, oftener than otherwise, the best work done for Christ. The following extract ought to show that age is not necessarily a barrier to fine intellectual work:

"Let no man think achievement is not for him simply because the family record sums up his years to a threatening total. 'The sixties,' said Rabbi Jacobi to his young braves, 'have all the twenties and forties in them.'

"Cato learned Greek at eighty;
Sophocles
Wrote his grand Oedipus, and Simonides
Bore off the prize of verse from his competers
When each had numbered more than four-score years,
And Theophrastus at fourscore and ten
Had but begun his 'Characters of Men.'
Chaucer at Woodstock with the nightingales
At sixty wrote the 'Canterbury Tales.'
Goethe at Weimar, toiling to the last,
Completed Faust when eighty years were past."

If history records with the performances of men whose years numbered threescore or more. "My Cid, with the fleecy beard," driving the Moors from Spain; Dandolo, Doge of Venice at ninety and storming Constantinople at ninety-four; and in our own time Von Moltke at seventy conducting a campaign unparalleled for brilliancy and result in the history of war. These are feats of arms. Would you search other fields? In science there are Darwin and Spencer and Pasteur and Lister, and, if you go back a little, Sir Isaac Newton, who could name a discovery for everyone of his eighty-five years. It was Voltaire who said that if all the great men of all ages could be assembled in a congress, Sir Isaac Newton would be chosen to preside by unanimous consent. In literature and art the names of those who in advanced years won imperishable renown are legion. Everybody can recall their names. Milton wrote his great epic when nearly sixty. Michael Angelo at eighty won the triple crown for excellence in painting, sculpture and architecture. Browning at seventy-seven wrote his most characteristic poem, and Tennyson at eighty-one gave to the world the most exquisite of his lyrics.—The Churchman.

OUR DEPENDENCE ON BODILY CONDITIONS.

We are affected more than we dream of by the very state of the atmosphere. The great Dr Alexander was once asked "If he had the full assurance of faith." He replied, "Yes, except when the wind is in the east." When Elijah lay down under the juniper tree and wished that he might die, he was suffering from physical prostration, and God had prepared food for him, and the angel said, "Come and eat." You will mark the tenderness. He did not say, "Can this be Elijah?" No. This was not the time to preach to him; this was the time to care for him physically. "Come and eat, for the journey is too great for thee." What comfort there is in that sentence, "The journey is too great for thee." It gives us such an ideal view of God. We feel that he sees the journey that is before us as well as the way we have come, and wants us to be prepared physically for it. Oh, what it would be to many who read these words if they only believed that God cared whether the journey was great or not! I am compelled to believe that so many never realize that God cares whether they are tired or not. Would it not make a difference if we believed he cared for us? Well, he does, and he would have us rest always in his love.—Margaret Bottome, in Ladies' Home Journal.

A CLERICAL DREAM.

The pastor dreamed that his church was a stage-coach at the foot of a hill, up which, in the absence of horse-power, it fell to his lot to drag it up.

Some of his officers and members bade him be of good cheer, for they would all help. He should guide the tongue; some of them would turn the wheels, others push; and so, together, they should get it up the hill.

For a while the heavy coach moved slowly, but surely up. After a time, however, its weight seemed to increase, till the pastor, bringing the vehicle to a stand on the first ridge, and turning the tongue to prevent its slipping down, ran to see what was the matter. All the helpers, tired of turning wheels and pushing, had jumped into the coach and were sitting inside!

The pastor can not drag the coach up all alone! If all will take hold, the heaviest coach will move up the roughest hill.

Pastors have been encouraged to attempt great things, and then have been left when half way up the hill.—Episcopal Recorder.

POSTELL—On the morning of Nov. 5, 1897, the death angel entered the home of Dr. H. L. Sutherland, at Oxford, Miss., and bore to the realms of light the pure spirit of his mother, MRS. REBECCA A. POSTELL. She was a daughter of the late Mr. Hugh Lewis, a wealthy planter of Madison county, Miss., and was born May 8, 1826. Her first husband was Mr. Benj. Sutherland, and her only son (and offspring) is Dr. Hugh Lewis Sutherland, a noted physician of Bolivar county, Miss. In early life she united with the M. E. Church, and was a devout, consistent Christian. She literally obeyed the command, "Be ye given to hospitality." She and her husband, Capt. E. C. Postell, who preceded her to their heavenly abode Feb. 13, 1894, spent a great portion of their united lives ministering to the needs of their church.

Of a lovely disposition, she was all that wife, mother, friend, could be—a perfect woman! Her character was cast in a mold of heroism and endurance that is the heritage of but few, and made her equal to all the emergencies of life.

During her last illness she bore suffering which was extreme with great fortitude, and spoke of death's approach with equanimity, for she was ready.

"One by one they pass through the strife;
Through the waters of death they enter life,
One by one.
To some are the waves of the river still
As they ford on their way to the heavenly hill;
To others the floods run swift and wild,
Yet they reach the home of the undefiled,
One by one."

RAGAN—Mrs. L. C. RAGAN (nee Craig) died at her home, Clarence, Natchitoches parish, La., on Nov. 29, 1897. She was born Feb. 1, 1867; was converted and received into the church at the age of eight, and entered into the experience of entire sanctification something over a year ago. Shortly after her marriage with Bro. W. A. Ragan, ten years ago, she removed to the present home of her family. At that time there was no Protestant Church in the neighborhood, and great wickedness prevailed. Largely as the result of her prayers and work, a neat Methodist Church was built and dedicated, with a membership of four persons. In June, 1891, the Lord honored her efforts by sending a powerful revival of religion, in which some of the most substantial people of the neighborhood were converted, her own husband among the unmber. There is now a membership of eighty, characterized by unusual zeal and piety. She had the affairs of the church much at heart, and her work in its behalf was marked by tact and wisdom as well as zeal. She leaves a husband and six children. We shall miss her sadly, but we know that God knows best. With truth it may be said, "She hath done what she could." JNO. C. SLIGH, Pastor.

GODBOLD—In memory of little IRVIN GODBOLD, aged three years and two months.

On Oct. 19, 1897, God, in his goodness, saw fit to pluck from this earth dear little Irvin, who had spent only a few short years to brighten the home in which he was so dear. Parents and loved ones, remember that God has a purpose in all that he does; and while your hearts are grieved, submit to his kind will. He has called little Irvin to heaven, where he will know sorrow, pain, nor disappointment. The same God that said, "Suffer little children to come unto me," also said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven;" and while he is not here, he is in heaven, and with his little hand he is beckoning papa and mama to come; and if you are faithful to every duty, some day, only a short while, you shall see your little angel in heaven.

May God's choicest blessing rest upon the dear loved ones, and this prove the strongest tie binding them from earth to heaven! Farewell, dear Irvin, for only a short while.

AUNT BELLE.

SELLERS—JAMES CICERO SELLERS, aged three years and twenty-six days, died near Moss Point, Miss., Nov. 16, 1897, after an illness of nine days.

How sad to the fond parents and friends of this interesting child is the folding of the busy hands, the stopping of the restless feet, and the silencing of the musical voice! But the very vision is that have drifted over their pathway are lighted with a glorious light. They know their darling is safe. No more physical pain; no taint of sin upon his redeemed spirit; nothing before him but an eternity of happiness. May the loved ones be sustained and comforted by the Divine Spirit!

A FRIEND.

KENDALL—GEORGE CARAWAY KENDALL, son of Fielding and Margaret E. Kendall, was born Jan. 11, 1897, and died Aug. 31, 1897, aged seven months and twenty days.

"A precious one from us has gone,
A voice we loved is stilled,
A place is vacant in our home
That never can be filled.
God in his wisdom has recalled
The boon his love had given;
And though the body slumbers here,
The soul is safe in heaven."

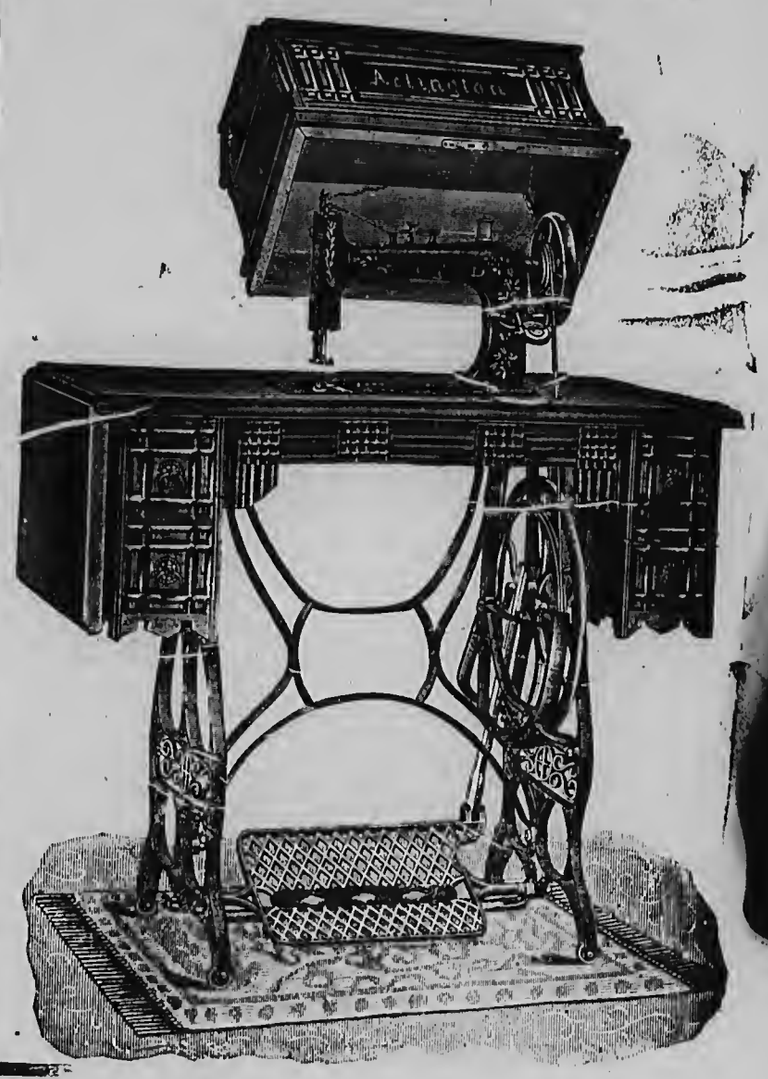
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.



The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take-up, convenient foot rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearing polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF THREADING—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell, without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Seven hundred Chinamen in San Francisco have professed conversion and have joined the Salvation Army.

Typhoid fever is on the increase in New York City, according to the records of the Board of Health.

It is expected that the City of New York will be obliged to issue $40,000,000 of new bonds next year for public improvements.

Governor O'Ferrall, in his message to the Virginia Legislature, recommends the enactment of a law which will impose a fine of $200 upon each 1000 inhabitants of each city and county for permitting a lynching to occur in their midst. He also recommends that the officers of the law who wink at or permit their prisoners to be taken from them by a mob shall be subjected to the most rigid punishment.

A hurricane struck Point-a-la-Hache, La., on Dec. 13, doing much damage.

The annual average by decimal periods of the benevolent contributions of the Methodist Episcopal Church from 1840 to 1890 has risen from $108,200 to $2,304,900, and the average per member from 13 cents to $1.02.

A committee of five of the Ohio Federation of Labor, to whom was referred for early report the subject of the influx of foreign labor, reported a recommendation to have Congress asked to exclude foreign labor for ten years.

Fifty Mormons arrived at New York recently from Scotland. It is said by those who profess to have information that only five of the whole number are converts, the other forty-five being the missionaries who were sent over to make proselytes.

Christian Scientists in Racine, Wis., object to the teaching of physiology in the public schools, on the ground that physiology is a study in the science of life, and that in case their children were taken sick, it would prevent, in a large measure, their recovery.

The annual meeting of the National Board of Trade has taken place at Washington, D. C. This organization is maintained by the leading commercial exchanges and Boards of Trade in the United States, all the large cities in the country being represented in the membership.

Although but a few days have elapsed since the "long session" of the present Congress opened, that body has already got to work in earnest. The only measure of special interest to Louisiana which has yet been introduced is the dock bill, which provides for the construction of a steel floating dock at Algiers, to cost $750,000, and capable of lifting a vessel of 15,000 tons displacement. The bill carries an appropriation of $500,000 for the commencement of work. At this session Congress is also to be asked to deepen the channel through South Pass, as well as provide for the care of the jetties after the expiration of the contract with the Eads Company.

The latest champion of the irrepressible Salvation Army is that most eloquent and versatile American, Chauncey M. Depew. At the recent ordination of Mrs. Maud Ballington Booth, at Carnegie Hall, in New York, Dr. Depew took the platform to say publicly that he believed in the Salvation Army, because he believed that religion was a good thing for everybody.

Mrs. Annie L. Diggs has been appointed State librarian for Kansas. She will have charge of the State Law Library, one of the largest in the West, as well as of the general library. Considerable opposition to her appointment was made by certain lawyers, on the ground of her sex, but the judges of the Supreme Court declared that a woman could do the work just as well as a man.

FOREIGN.

At the recent elections for the London School Board, eight Indy candidates were returned, three of them at the head of the polls in their respective districts.

All the forces of General Sir William Lockhart, the British commander on the Indian frontier, have been withdrawn to the Bara valley for the Winter. Thus the largest and best-equipped force ever assembled in India has failed and the whole work will have to be repeated in the Spring.

The German-Chinese difficulty is practically settled. The governor of Shan Tung province has been removed from office, but will not be any further degraded. No monopoly of mines and railroads is conceded to Germany, but that country is given preference. Finally the area immediately surrounding Kiao Chau Bay is set apart exclusively for Germany. China yields on all other points.

The refusal of Canada to agree to the abandonment of pelagic sealing, even for one year, has unfortunately greatly complicated the seal problem. The treaties with Russia and Japan providing for the stoppage of pelagic sealing for the time being, and for the protection of the seals, are of little practical value without the consent of Canada, or, more properly, of Great Britain, to the arrangement.

Miss Sallie Smylie, Nov. 6: "We went to the country in September, during the time of the strict quarantine here. I was well rested and anxious to begin work, but had not been idle all the time. Two new auxiliaries have been organized on this district this quarter, one of which I am specially proud, as one of our good missionary workers organized it. Miss Mabel Kendal is teaching in the adjoining country, and, finding no society there, organized it. We feel very proud of her, and miss her from our church in Meridian very much. She is a good church worker.

"I do hope we will be able to make a good report this quarter. Our district secretaries have not been able to visit any for the fever, and will have to use greater efforts the remaining time. I do not believe there has been forty dollars raised for the McNemar fund. It should be stressed.

"I have written to each district secretary to have her societies observe the Week of Prayer. I hope each one will. We (Central Church, Meridian) have made arrangements for it, and a public meeting for Thursday night."

She is discouraged about the work among the children, as there are so few auxiliaries. She has made efforts by writing, but deems it necessary that visiting and organizing should be done. As we have before quoted, "The door of millennial glory has a child's hand on the latch." Shall we not labor that the intelligent, educated young people of this generation lift the latch, spread wide the door to usher in this glad day? We trust that each district secretary realizes the imperative need of this branch of our work, and that each adult auxiliary will be so impressed with its importance that a committee will at once be formed for this special work, and efforts extend to places where there are no adult auxiliaries. Send out the Little Worker, and other literature, that an intelligent interest be aroused in advance of other efforts. Make the best selection possible for lady managers.

Mrs. Lizzie Norsworthy, Capitol Street Church, Jackson, Nov. 17: "At the last meeting of W. F. M. S., I was elected item gatherer. . . . The auxiliary is in a flourishing condition. We have about forty members, and constantly growing. We never fail to meet monthly. The average attendance is from seventeen to twenty. The society did not even fail to meet regularly during the quarantine of six or seven weeks.

"We have raised forty dollars during the quarter. We raised thirty dollars for special fund, ten dollars for Miss McNemar, and twenty dollars to make Mrs. W. L. C. Hunnicutt a life member.

"During the month of December our society expects to have a missionary rally, and a special sermon on missions. Our district secretary, Mrs. R. R. Parker, was with us at our last meeting. We are always glad to have her with us, and hear her good words of encouragement."

Editor W. M. Advocate, November: "Please renew your subscription to our Woman's Missionary Advocate. You can not conduct your work successfully without it. Do not depend upon hearing articles read from its pages at your monthly meetings; do not depend on reading your neighbor's copy. You should see for yourself what the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions is doing with the money you help to contribute. Our work can not prosper unless the Woman's Missionary Advocate is sustained. Receipts have been very light all through the Spring and Summer. Will each one who has not renewed do so at once, and send one new subscriber? Friends, we beg you to come to the help of the Woman's Missionary Advocate."

We were pleased to find the following resolution in Nineteenth Annual Report, W. B. Meeting, 1897: "That we respectfully recommend that a fraternal messenger be appointed by this Board to meet and confer with the Executive Board of the Parsonage and Home Mission Society as to methods of conducting the work of these bodies so as to conserve the interests of both." Miss M. L. Gibson was appointed fraternal delegate. MRS E. D. JONES.

SITUATION WANTED.

A thoroughly competent and experienced bookkeeper desires a situation. Address A. E., ADVOCATE office.

WANTED.

Twenty Girls at 5-Cent Cotton Rates.

The Chickasaw Female College, at Pontotoc, Miss., on account of the low price of cotton and the damage done by yellow fever, that it may extend the greatest good to the greatest number, will take 20 girls at $10 per month each. This will include good, wholesome board in college building, furnished room, lights, fuel, washing and tuition in the Literary Course.

This is one of the oldest institutions in the State, in one of the best and most healthful towns and sections in the South, free from malaria and all epidemics. Building, an elegant brick structure. Faculty, experienced specialists. Vocal and instrumental teachers, conservatory graduates of long experience. Art and elocution teacher unsurpassed. Course of study, high. Instruction, equal to the best. Present term most flourishing, over eighty pupils, and increasing weekly. Location in North Mississippi, in hill country. Daily mails, telegraph and telephone connection. No safer or better place in the South. Write for catalogue.

Address J. A. MONROE, A. M.,
President.

Pontotoc, Miss.

BACK TO THE OLD HOME.

Special low rate tickets to points in the Southeastern States will probably be sold by the Texas and Pacific Railway Company from all points on its line Dec. 21 and 22, the same as in former years. It should be borne in mind that passengers have the choice of three gateways via this line in going back to their old home for Christmas and New Year's, namely: New Orleans, Shreveport, and Memphis. If you contemplate making the trip and want to know the cheapest and best way, write to Mr. E. P. Turner, G. P. and T. A., T. & P. R'y, Dallas, Texas.

THE ADVENT.

BY REV. A. B. WARWICK.

He comes, the Prince of Glory comes,
By prophets long foretold;
In love and matchless grace he comes,
His grace and love t' unfold.

His loftiest throne of radiant light,
His majesty supreme,
His everlasting power and might
He leaves, man to redeem.

He comes not in the pomp of earth,
Nor seeks its vain renown.
His majesty and royal worth
And power are all laid down.

Though King of every rolling sphere,
He takes the humblest place,
And discipline the most severe,
As servant of the race.

But Godhead can not be confined
Or held in walls of clay;
Its glory draws the human mind
Beneath its sovereign sway.

So now this Prince of royal birth
Sits on the throne of love,
Stronger than all the powers of earth,
Higher than heaven above.

THE NEVADA DESERT, SIERRA NEVADAS, AND SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

Of all the American deserts, the one extending through Nevada is the dreariest. For hundreds of miles nothing is seen but a blinding stretch of alkali, so white and glistening as to produce the illusion that one's eyes are gazing on vast bodies of water with the glare of the sun upon them. In other places the surface is covered with scoria, evidences of volcanic action long since extinct. The particles look like black lava, differentiating from the size of a grain of sand to a ponderous house. Finally the surface of the earth changes, breaking into hills and dales, and showing plots of grass and trees along the sides of streams. After riding 555 miles from Ogden, Utah, we find ourselves in the charming town of Reno, which is one of the centres of business life in Nevada, and is interesting as being the junction for the great Comstock mines and as the seat of the State University. The latter is in a flourishing condition under the able management of President Stubbs. Soon after leaving Reno we pass into the magnificent fastnesses of the Sierra Nevada, glimpses of whose glories are seen between the boards of the innumerable snow-sheds that blur its views for an interminable distance. Forests of pine line the sides of the mountains, and at their base lie enchanting lakes—Donner, Tahoe, Webber and Independence—glinting like beds of crystals in the sunlight. Eventually the summit of the range is reached; then we begin our descent, and in a short while we find ourselves speeding through the extensive plains of the Sacramento Valley, the productive wheat section of the State, diversified in appearance by mammoth live oaks, and about night-fall we land at the capital of the wonderful State of California. After a short visit to the progressive city of Stockton we turn our faces toward the south, passing through the San Joaquin Valley, the widest in the West, then ascending the Tehachapi heights, crossing the desert of Mohave, and rolling at last, O joy! into the midst of palm trees and orchards, and realizing that one of our life dreams was being accomplished. We were in Southern California, the Italy of America! It is all that the pens of enthusiastic writers have represented. A land where vegetation is always green, where flowers ever bloom, where the heat of Summer never debilitates, nor the cold of Winter blights. The mountains are seldom lost sight of, tipped with snow and draped with exquisite colors; the valleys are laden with groves of oranges and every other variety of fruit that can possibly be found in a semi-tropical climate. The beaches and harbors and ocean views are among the finest in the world. Palaces fill the cities and star the plains and hill-sides. Comfort has seated herself, and Peace and Happiness walk hand in hand together. Southern California is as near paradise as any section of this mundane sphere can ever be. Los Angeles is beautiful. It has the stir of a large city united with the quietude of a village. On all sides the most superb residences are being erected, and from the display of wealth on every hand one forgets that the cry of "hard times" is singing its piteous tones in the ears of an agonized nation. Everything is forgotten by the wayside traveler save that life, for once, is sweet, and the sunshine and balmy air are a benediction directly from the hand of God. Los Angeles is well called "the city of the angels." Pasadena is a neighboring rival. More beautifully situated than its twin sister, if that is possible, and equally elegant. The best element of the East has settled in it, and the vast wealth of many of its millionaires poured into its lap. Pasadena is a great educational center, and is noted for being one of the largest cities in the United States that is not cursed by the open saloon.

Santa Monica is one of the famous Summer resorts of Southern California, but its inhabitants insist that it is equally fine for Winter. It is right down by the sounding deep, where the roar of the waters is everlastingly sounding through one's brain and the limitless ocean is ever before the eye. A place in which to "come apart" from all the world and be still with God. Here, too, in Santa Monica is every evidence of wealth and culture. The gold of the earth and the genius of man transforming a barren waste of shore into a blooming bower of gorgeous loveliness. Hedges of geraniums, hedges of fuschias, wildernesses of roses, forests of oleanders. O rare Santa Monica!

San Diego is the most historic place in Southern California, and the most interesting. It claims the best climate and the finest bay in the world. San Diego is reposeful and romantic to the last degree, and full of an inexpressible beauty. Standing upon an eminence to the rear of the city, a royal scene is spread before us. To the right is a sweeping mesa; to the left the mountains and table-lands of Old Mexico; at the feet lies the bay sparkling in the radiant light, beautiful as the Bay of Naples and as calm; beyond lies Coronado peninsula and the island upon which stands the largest hotel on the continent; then the grandeur of the Pacific bursts upon us in all its wondrous glory and sublimity. A few miles from San Diego is found Old Town, a quaint little village of adobe ruins, celebrated principally as the spot where San Diego was first planted and as the scene where "H. H." founded her popular work of fiction. The ancient church is shown where Ramona was married, and the same old bells that rung out their deep-throated message on that imaginary day as well and cheerily as they had summoned the faithful to worship in the early times of Spanish Catholic possession. Two quaint, elderly English people have a bazaar at Old Town, and sell all sorts of curios made from the olive trees near the old mission several miles in the country, and exhibit to the delighted antiquarian bullets and other military relics found after Stockton's bombardment. In connection with their curiosity shop this old couple manufacture olive oil. They took us out to the house, where all the apparatus was, and showed us how the olives were preserved for table use, how they were crushed between the loaves of the press, the juice extracted, and the oil made. Southern California is rich in old missions. A number of these are plainly seen from the cars in different parts of the country. Tourists visit them in hordes, and the most fashionable form of architecture is in the mission style. Beatrice Harradin winters occasionally a short distance from San Diego, and the home of Modjeska is not far from Santa Ana. The ride from Los Angeles to Santa Barbara is as fascinating as that from Los Angeles to San Diego.

The same old story: Splendid mountains and fertile valleys, picturesque villages and rolling plains, and the ocean, with its towering billows heaving landward and the seething surf dashing in foaming white caps upon the shore. Santa Barbara is shut in by the mountains that fold it to their hearts, but the sea is not far away, nor the canons, nor the hundred and one other attractions that go to make it headquarters at all seasons for the strangers that crowd within its gates.

Time and strength would fail to attempt to describe the many other alluring nooks in Southern California. They will have to be visited in order to be fully understood and appreciated. Southern California is delightful, not only for its natural advantages, but for the culture and superiority of its inhabitants, and for the rapid advancement they have made and are constantly making in all the arts of the highest known civilization. Christianity is firmly imbedded in the minds of the people, and philanthropy is on a solid basis. It is the ideal refuge for the invalid who is wooed back to health and strength, the haven of rest for "the weary and heavy laden"—a heaven for the old, who can walk softly through all the days and go gently down into their last sleep. It is a land where the spirits of the beloved is, where round about "our restlessness" abides "His rest."

BELLE KEARNEY.

FROM ARIZONA.

The run from San Bernardino, Cal., to Prescott, Ariz., via the Santa Fe railroad, a distance of 500 miles, is one long continuous stretch of sand and sage-brush. At Barstow you not only see the dry, sandy bed of the Mojave river, but also the place where it loses itself in the dreary sands. Later on you cross the sullen and treacherous Colorado at the Needles. Here you leave California, and after another long run you arrive at Ash Fork (a place without an equal). For hours, that seem uncommonly long, you wait to get a south-bound train. Finally your patience (or impatience) is rewarded, the "A. P. A." is announced, and you go aboard. Soon you find yourself gliding again by sage and sand, but the monotony is varied by mountain and some pines. This continues till an Eastern passenger remarks, loud enough to be heard over the car: "I don't see anything like a farm since we got into Arizona. I wonder how the people live." At which a territorial resident replies: "We don't make much crops, stranger. We live on the climate." The Easterner is silenced, but continues to gaze at the untillable landscape, and later catches his breath as he suddenly gets a glimpse of the front of our train, snake-like, rushing madly down a precipitous incline of trestle-work so high that he becomes dizzy; or he hears the labored puff, puff, and realizes the fact that we are on a steep up-grade, and that two engines are straining themselves to the utmost to pull over. In the gloaming the way-worn traveler sees lights twinkle in the distance and outlines of houses appear. He hears the sound of martial music, and rouses up to find we are at Fort Whipple, a military post established by Uncle Sam. The sound of cannon and drum, and the proximity of so many blue-capped and coated soldiers, is deemed a necessary protection to the whites against the Apaches. After a short stop and a shorter run our train sweeps into Prescott, where we are warmly greeted and kindly received by the little band of Southern Methodists here.

Just at this place I am led to exclaim, What will scientists not accomplish! We have the telegraph, the telephone, the phonograph, and many other wonderful graphs. Recently we read of a long-distance typewriter, and of transmitting messages without the use of wires. We Americans have come to a point where, if we feel the need of an invention, and give it a name, presto! some one has put this want, name and all into a practical invention. In view of this, then why not a telegraphoscope? You go to a telephone office (for the two instruments must be near together) and state your want. The deft manipulator of the new instrument makes proper connections, and then rings up Prescott. You gaze into the instrument and at once behold a city of 3,000 inhabitants, lighted by electricity, and picturesquely located on hill and hollow, with a dark background of mountain and pine, and a creek threading its way through the city to the valley beyond. As you continue to look you will see more rocks, and bigger rocks, and rocks more fantastically piled than anywhere else, unless it be, perhaps, in the Grand Canon of the Colorado. Save a few window plants and the pines out on the mountain, nothing green is visible—no grass, or gardens, or shrubbery. You take a view of the surrounding country from the nearest peak. Again you behold sand, rocks and mountains. Involuntarily you exclaim with Bro. Oakley, "This is indeed the wild and woolly West!"

In Arizona in general, and Prescott in particular, they say there is more sunshine to the square inch the year round than in any other spot in America. I believe this to be true. Prescott is between five and six thousand feet above the sea level, so it has a dry, pure, rare atmosphere. So much is this the case that the heart beats more rapidly and the breath is shorter than in lower altitudes. Some ordinary mortals can not stand such "elevated purity," and become nervous, sleepless wrecks; hence we may look forward to the next Conference session with anxious anticipation. Arizona is coming more and more to be sought after as a health resort in pulmonary diseases.

The resources of the Territory are chiefly in cattle and mines. Much of the beef consumed in Southern California is shipped from here. I am told that the Salt River Valley is well watered and an agricultural district, but in the main farming is not extensive. Almost everything is shipped in. Lard, ham, flour, from Colorado or Kansas City; dry goods from the East, molasses from New Orleans, and fruits and vegetables from California.

WHITWORTH COLLEGE.

We have always been proud of Whitworth. For over forty years she has stood as the embodiment of all that is noblest and best in the development of a perfect womanhood.

Her faculty has challenged the respect of the Conference and the State, and her graduates have justified the highest expectations of her friends. To-day the alumnæ of Whitworth are scattered from Maine to California, from Minnesota to the Gulf, and everywhere are dispensing a refining and elevating influence. Urged on by the impetus of a godly, solid foundation in the first principles of an education, they have attained to the chief places in the church, in the school, in the professions, and in the community.

With a full knowledge of the abundant success of her past labors, as an eye-witness I do not hesitate to say that never in all her past history has she been better prepared to give to the world consecrated, educated women. Every department is in the hands of a skilled teacher, whose years of successful experience guarantee the best results. Whether in music, art, elocution, or the essentials of a college training, Whitworth stands prepared to give you the best.

Gratifying alike to the friends of Christian education and the special friends of Whitworth has been the double achievement of its present management, viz.: reducing expenses to the minimum, and making the requirements for graduation of the highest possible character.

The growth of patronage under this double stimulus has been most encouraging. Preachers and laymen alike have begun to realize that Whitworth does do the work she proposes to do. The wonder is that anyone in reach of such advantages should be satisfied to go without them.

This article would be incomplete if no reference were made to the material improvements of the property.

Beginning with the transformation of Margaret Hall, building after building has been repaired, improved and enlarged until the most comfortable home for girls in all this Southland has been provided at Whitworth College.

A glance into the bright, cheerful faces of the one hundred boarding pupils, another into their neat, comfortable rooms, gives a perfect demonstration of all that we have said.

The people of Brookhaven and the church have a great school, worthy of the Methodism whose endorsement it enjoys.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The railways of Mississippi will give special rates to members, delegates and visitors attending the coming session of the Mississippi Annual Conference. Each visitor, member and delegate should procure a certificate from the agent of the railway selling ticket. Members and delegates will please study the schedule of the railways on which they expect to reach Jackson, so as to avoid night arrival. The Illinois Central has a double daily service, with morning and afternoon extras to and from New Orleans. The west bound A. and V. arrives at 10 A. M. The east bound A. and V., the Little "J," and the "Valley" trains all arrive at about 7 o'clock P. M. Committees will meet these and the daylight Illinois Central trains, but no committees will meet the midnight or before daylight trains.

Members coming in on Tuesday or Wednesday morning will please give me due notice.

CROWLEY, LA.

Dr. W. M. Leftwich left for his home yesterday, after preaching twenty-five sermons for us—the best series that it has ever been our privilege to hear. The work done has been a great blessing to this people. His sermons were strong and deep, clear and convincing. Doubts disappeared, mysteries were explained, and the standard of the Christian life raised to a higher plane than ever before. He laid a good foundation and built thereon such as would abide. About twenty five professed saving faith, and the Lord's people were "strengthened, stablished, and settled." He is a true evangelist, a pastor's helper indeed.

NOTICE.

To the Members of the Mississippi Conference, Soon to Meet in Jackson, Miss:

DEAR BRETHREN: Rev. A. B. Nicholson, a superannuated member of our Conference, will have for sale at our approaching session "Two Epistles," by the Rev. W. P. Andrews, formerly of our Conference, now of the Pacific Conference. This little book, highly endorsed by "Gilderoy" and others, costing only thirty cents, will not disappoint you. You may not approve of everything in it, but you will enjoy reading it, and approve the spirit in which it is written. You will see that in more senses than one Bro. Andrews belongs to the Pacific Conference. There is not an irritating sentence in the book. The author's heart was evidently full of love when he wrote it. It is refreshing in these days of strife, when so many are throwing firebrands, to read such a book as this. Its tendency will be to allay controversy and promote peace. By purchasing from Bro. Nicholsen you will help an old veteran who needs the help the rapid sale of this book will give him.

THE MISSISSIPPI ORPHANS' HOME.

The papers of last week announced the fact that the Board of Directors of the Mississippi Orphans' Home had elected Rev. M. L. Burton, of the Mississippi Conference, to the position of manager and agent of the institution. To those who know the fidelity, zeal and administrative ability of Bro. Burton, this action will insure the success of the Home as far as the labors of the manager can secure success. The remaining element of success is to be furnished by the generous and loyal co-operation of the Methodists of Mississippi. The purpose of this note is to request pastors who may at any time during the year have taken up collections for the Orphans' Home to bring the amounts to Conference, and to remind local Epworth Leagues of the importance of promptly paying their part of the $1,000 pledged to the Home by the last State Conference.

NOTICE.

Class of the third year of the Louisiana Conference will meet the committee, in pastor's study, Crowley, La., Jan. 4 (Tuesday), 1898, at 7:30 P. M. The following is the schedule of examinations: Pope—Tuesday, 7:30 P. M. Porter—9 A. M., Wednesday; Watson—2 P. M.; McTyeire—7:30 P. M. Examinations written. Bring paper, pens and ink.

J. M. HENRY, for Com.

IMPORTANT.

To the Preachers and Delegates to the Louisiana Conference:

Will the presiding elders please send me a list of the lay delegates from their respective districts and of all others who expect to be present at Conference? Let the brethren make any special requests concerning entertainment at once, that there may be as few changes as possible at Conference.

AN APPEAL TO THE CHURCH AUTHORITIES.

I take it that no one who has any regard for his reputation for inteiligence and candor will forfeit it by asserting that the second blessing theory of entire sanctification is not the doctrine of the Methodist Chnrch as tanght by its highest and best authorities. Tho quotations which foiiow settle that question beyond dispnte. We qnote from John Wesley first as the best uninspired authority to which wo can appeal. The question at present is not as to the scriptnralness of the doctrino (that will be considered further along), but whether or not it is Methodistic. If the anthorities we shall refer to did not know what Methodist doctrine is, it is vain to appeal to others.

Mr. Wesley ssys: "In 1729 my brother Charles and I, reading the Bible, saw we conld net he saved without hcliness, followed aftor it, and incited others so to do. In 1737, that this holiness comes by faith. In 1738 we saw likewise that men are justified befcre they are ssnctified." Again, Mr. Wesley, in speaking of sanctification, says: "Within five weeks five in our hand recoived the second blessing." At another time: "This morning one found peace, and one the second hlessing." Writing to a lady, he says: "You have evidently recoived the socond blessing, properly so called."

Mr. Tyernan, in his life of Wesiey, says that Christian perfection was generally known and spoken of as the second blessing in early Methodism.

Mr. Wesley, in two sermons, entitled respectively, "Sin in Holiness," and "Repentance in Beliovers," proves the existence of inbred sin in the regenerate, and hence makes necessary the second work of grace. These two sermons are embraced in the course of study prescribed for our yonng preachers by the authority of onr Bishops. The doctrines contained in them are approved by the highest anthorities of the Methodist Church.

Watson's Institutes are also in onr conrse of study, and he says: "We have already spoken of justificati on, adoption, regeneration, and the witness of the Holy Spirit, and we proceed to another as distinctiy marked and as graciously promised in the Holy Scriptures. This is entire sanctification, or the perfect hoiiness of believers; and as this doctrine, in some of its respects, has been the snbject of controversy, the spiritnal evidence must be appealed to and examined."

Mr. Watson claims this perfect holiness is to be attained first by believers; second, that it is as "distinctly marked" as justification, regeneration, etc. Bnt if it be distinct from these and snbseqnent to them, it must be a second work of grace. Again he says: "That a distinction exists between a regenerate state and a state of entire and perfect holiness will be generally ailowed." (Part II., page 544.)

Now, my contention ia, that entire sanctification is distinct from and subsequent to regeneration, and I have introdnced Wesiey and Watsou to prove that it is good Methodist doctriue, and hence that onr church is committed to the defense of the second-blessing theory of sanctification. In so far as my contention depends npon these two witnesses, I have made good my claim. But there are other Methodist anthorities nearer home, and nearer onr own times, that we wish to consult as to what our church teaches on this qnestion.

Dr. Ralston says in hia "Elements of Divinity": "Wheu we are justified we may, from that honr, go on to perfection; and whenever we comply with the conditions prescribed in the gospel—that is, whenever we exercise the reqnisite degree of faith, be it one day or ten years after onr conversion—that moment God wili cleanse us from ali unrighteousness." Agaiu he says: "Perfect hoiiness, entire sanctification aud perfect iove are synonymons terms, ali implying the same as Christian perfection, and denote a gracious attainment higher than is implied in rogoneration." (E. D., pago 461.)

Dr. Clark says: "I have been twenty-three years a traveling preacher, and have been acqnainted with some thousands of Christians dnring that timo who were in different states of grace, and I never, to my knowiedge, met with a single instance where God both jnstified and sanctified at the samc time."

We qnote from Wesley again: "Bnt we do not know of a single instance in any place of a persou receiving in ono and the same moment remissicn of sins, the abiding witness of the Spirit, and a new and cieau heart"—plain account. He further says: "I cau not, therefore, by any means, receive this assertion that there is no sin in a believer from the moment he is jnstified. First, becanse it is contrary to the whoie tenor of Scripture. Second, becanse it is contrary to the experience of the chiidren of God. Third, because it is absolntely new; never heard of in the world till yesterday. Fourth, becanse it is naturally attended with the most fatal consequences; not only grieving those whom God has not grieved, hut perhaps dragging them into everlasting perdition."

Bishop Hedding says: "Regeneration is the heginning of pnrification. Entire sanctification is the finishing of that work."

Bishop Foster says: "The merely regenerate are not sanctified; they are not entirely free from sin; they are not perfect in love."

Dr. Miley says: "Indeed, the attainahieness of sanctificatiou according to this definitely wrought doctrine (second blessing), as above stated, is a truth which lies in the soteriology of the Scriptnres as a whole."

Dr. Tigert also says: "We have never been wedded to the mnch-ridicnied phrase, 'second blessing,' but we have always contended that, better than any other phase, it sums np the essentials of the Wesleyan and scriptural doctriue."

Besides, all of our hymns, from Nos. 407 to 451, teach the doctrine of entire sanctification distinct from, and snbseqnent to, regeneration. Every traveling Methodist preacher professed faith in the doctrine before admission into Conference by awering affirmatively the foiiowing questions: 1. Have yon faith in Christ? 2. Are yon going on to perfection? 3. Do you expect to be made perfect in love in this life? 4. Are yon groaning after it?

Who are the heretics—those who preach as Wesley tanght, or those who ridicule his doctrine? To qnote the many texts of Scripture in proof of this doctrine wonld reqnire more space in the ADVOCATE than can be accorded me; hence I will conclude this article without entering into the scriptural argnment. Mnch more could have been qnoted from the same anthorities, and from others, if it had been necessary to prove that the second-bleasing theory of entire sanctification is the doctrine of the Methodist Chnrch. But those who will not beiieve it on the strength of the evidence already adduced wonld not believe it thongh "one rose from the dead."

D. G. W. ELLIS.

PAUL'S "THORN IN THE FLESH."

MR. EDITOR: In yonr iasne, of Oct. 7, which only reached me to-day—owing to quarantine restriotions—I find an article headed "Paul's Thorn in the Fleah," in which its anthor, Rev. F. D. Vau Valkenburgh, takes me to task because I said, in a former letter, that "God is not more considerate of people in our day than he was to St. Paul, whom he refused to deliver from the 'thorn in the flesh;' assnring him that, My grace shall be snfficient for you."

From the above and its context thia astnte theologian "infers" that I intended to oonvey the idea that the aforesaid thorn was some miserabie, dirty habit, suoh as Mr. Van considers the use of tobacco to be; and he then proceeds to prove to his own satisfaction that Paul'a trouble, from which he desired and sought help, consisted, not in any besetting sin of his own, but in the persecution and maltreatment of himself by his enemies, etc.

Now, I do uet purpose wasting time by making an extended reply to Rev. Van. I do not presume there is a child of ten years, of ordinary intelligence, who, after reading what I said, would ever dream that I had any idea of classing "Paul's thorn" among the ordinary vices and weaknesses of humanity in our day. Some theologians have thought it possiblo that the thorn was a scolding wife—a much more probable solntion of the question than the one snggested by my critic. If Rev. Van has correctly diagnosed the case, Paul would hardiy take piace among those he talks about in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, who were stoned, sawn asnnder, tempted, and were slain with the sword; others were tortnred, not accepting deliverance that might obtain a better resnrrection. Those were the people of God that preceded the apostle of the Gentiles, and yet Rev. Vau wants to make believe that the man whose whole life was made up of persecntion, snffering, toil and trial, and who was ready to lay down his life at any time in the service of his Master and Lord, that this man besought the Lord thrice for deliverance from the petty persecntions and trials he names—"Paul's thorn in the flesh!"

Whatever the thorn may have been, of one thing I am snre, and that is, it was not an affliction that caused him to strain at a gnat of self indulgence in a comforting habit while swallowing, with ease and without greasing, the camel of self-righteonsness and spiritnal crankiness.

If God is taking away the appetite for sin or evil of any kind in one day, why did he not, as a being of infinite love, justice, mercy, and compassion, take the inclination to eat the apple out of Adam's heart, and thereby prevent the necessity for the sacrifice of his only begotten Son for man's redemption? He did not do it then, and he don't do it now. But he is always ready to help, by his grace, a wanderer into the right way, and to keep the steps of thonsands in the road.

"BURIED BY BAPTISM."

If my memory is not at fault, every book I ever read on baptism says: "The early fathers used the words 'baptism' and 'regeneration' interchangeably, or syuonymonsly." And they quote one of the early fathers as saying: "We learned this nse of these terms from the apostles themselves." If all this be trne, then may we not read, "Buried with him in regeneration," or "by regeneration?" This is the very thing the apostle is talking abont in Romana vi and Col. ii. He represents the regenerative man as dead nuto sin and alive unto God. He onght not, and must uot, live any longer in sin. Before, or as soou as, one is boru unto God he dies nnto sin. The birth of the new man is the death of the old man. This anggestiou of the early fathers of the church was helpful to me when I was a boy worrying over these hard passages. It may help others.

If the word "baptism" means immersion, and nothing else, then why shonld Panl use the word "bnrial" in connection with it? To hold on to "bnrial" as teaching mode is to give np the modal meaning of the word "baptism." I am sure Panl never wonld have said, "Bnried with him by bnrial," or "in burial;" nor would he have said, "Baptized with him in baptism," or "hy baptism."

If "baptism" meana "bnrial," and "burial" meaua "baptism," theu there is no use for both words in either of these passages. If to die unto siu is to be born unto God, theu each passage is perfeotly clear aud oousistent with the context. "Baptismal regeneratiou" is as old as the hills, aud, perhaps, it grew out of the custom of some of the fathers in speaking of "regeneration" and calliug it "baptism," or of "baptism" aud oalliug it "regeneratiou." This form of speech goes back as close to the apostle as we cau get. Those who have trouble of mind on this subject might do well to look into this matter. GILBERGY.

Correspondence.

FROM REV. T. B. HOLLOMAN.

After a prohibition of ten weeks we were agaiu permitted to look into the face of the old friend whioh has made its weekly visits to onr home from my earliest childhood. The authorities of our city prohibited the coming of anything from yonr city as long as there was danger of bringing in any infection into onr midst; and hut for the extracts from the NEW ORLEANS contained in the St. Lonis and Nashvilie Advocates, we wonld have been ontirely ignorant of tho operations of onr hrethren in onr own State. Only a private letter or a teiegram, calling for help, was all that wo received. As evidence of their gratitnde, every call was heartily and liberally responded to by our people. Now that the clonds have passed away, and we have time for delihorate thonght, we can see some things that were done in onr haste, which, after matnrer deliberation, might not have heen done. The bitter recollections of 1878 no doubt caused the seeming unnecessary restrictions adopted. While the type of fever was of such miid natnre as to dispel or mitigate the fears of many, yet no community was willing to take any risks. The idea of a whole town being in the hands of the nnrses was of itself enough to excite dread, even though none had died.

One thing, I am persnaded: the system of quarantine, as conducted this season, can and onght to be differently regnlated. More nniform laws, more systematic enforcement of those iaws, and greater confidence among those executing the laws. Neighborhood against neighborhood, county against county, towns against each other, and even the very counties in which they are situated, has led to much confnsion and unnecessary expense, to say nothing of the hardship to our State at large. Every commnnity held the right to enact laws of its own, and thus much conflict and confusion arose. Thus we have had an exhibition of that "inhumanity to man" which has been a reproach npon our civilization and a biush to our Christianity. If the national government does not take hold of the matter of quarantine, it is to be hoped that the Gnlf States, by some kind of conference, may secnre snch co-operation at such times as wiil largely alleviate the hardships and expenses of maintaining qnarantine against infected points. But I have drifted from my original intention when I began this letter.

It was my purpose to expreas my gratitude at the return of my old friend. I am pleased at the new dress in which it appears. The type can now be enjoyed hy its oldest reader, for while I have not yet been forced to snpplement the strength of the optic nerve, I confess that I am not indifferent to the size and clearness of the letters on the printed page. Donbtless we have missed much by not receiving the ADVOCATE; and if yonr stock of back nnmbers is not exhausted, we wonld be glad if yon would send them to ns.

Finding myself at liberty to mingle with the ontside world again, I took a rnn to other parts for a few days, and on my trip took in our capital city, where I had two sons at Millsaps College, one of whom was shut up in that place during the weeks of shot-gun reign. Arriving at night, I made my way to Williams Hall, where I found, with my own sons, several yonng men nnder the care of that most excelient Christian woman, Mrs. Cook, enthnsiastically arranging for a year of hard work with puzzling probiems, and digging at difficult roots. As it was the night for the meeting of one of the literary societies, I made my way to the hall and became a boy again as my thoughts ran back to my alma mater in the Old Domiuion. The hour prevented my seeing much of the grounds and buildings, but I saw enough to be convinced that the president had not been idle during the weeks of enforced suspension. The walks and drives outside, and the bright white walls on the inside, spoke unmistakably of the character of work that had been done. From the enthusiasm of the young men, one would not have thought that there had been any interruption at all in the regular order of the institution. Prof. Achland has done much during the Snmmer to beautify the grounds, and under his skillful hand the campus at Millsaps will ere long rival in beauty any in our Sonthland. I was told of his novel way of studying the grounds preparatory to executing his work, and I was convinced that such interest would meet with success. When he would know exactly how to shape and pitch his gutters for the better drainage of the grounds, he would stand in the rain and watch the flow of the water, and then fix his stakes. A professor studying nnder difficulties! Well, he succeeded, and who deserves to succeed if not the man who is willing to encounter difficulties?

The very first number of the ADVOCATE admonishes me that Conference is near at hand. The call of committees to meet the final report of the brethren and the many notifications all reminded of the meeting.

We have just had our last Quarterly Conference, and the stewards are in full hope of reporting every claim in full. We are closing a pleasant and, we hope, a profitable year. That we have passed through such trying times and have suffered so little as a Conference is cause of much gratitude from us. May our meeting on the Pearl be pleasant!

Mrs. E. R. Kennedy, of Louisiana Conference.

On Nov. 27 Winona very hospitably opened her doors to the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society of the North Mississippi Conference. This meeting was an occasion of much gratitude, and the praise service Saturday night elicited many expressions of thanksgiving to our heavenly Father for the blessings which have come to us, and for the privilege of holding this annual meeting.

The Sabbath day was one of spiritnal uplifting. The Sabbath-school was full and interesting. The eleven o'clock service was opened with grand anthems of praise by the well-trained choir, and the music throughout that holy Sabbath day was soul-inspiring. Rev. T. W. Dye preached from I. Cor. iii, 9, "For we are laborers together with God." A most excellent sermon, showing the great privilege and dignity of this relationship, and stressing many points of interest in woman's work. This one we would call attention to. He said that the pioneer preacher goes forth and blazes the way for the gospel; but when the women build a parsonage, they plant the gospel there. Is not this some encouragement to every Christian woman in the North Mississippi Conference to help plant the gospel? The sermon was replete with words of helpfulness and encouragement.

In the afternoon Mrs. Taylor, of Cleveland, conducted a sweet service for the children, and several little girls recited beautifully for the Master's cause.

The words of welcome which greeted us through Mrs. Blackston caused our hearts to well up with more than usual appreciation, which was beautifuly expressed by Mrs. Saunders, who responded in behalf of the society.

The president's address was full of encouragement and earnest entreaty for more laborers in this field of the Master's vineyard.

The corresponding secretary reported the unusual demands upon our people this year, and the manner in which they were met, and reminded us of what might be accomplished with more earnest effort.

The fraternal greetings from the local auxiliary of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society by Mrs. T. W. Dye, from the North Mississippi Conference Society by Miss Ella Grider, and from the Baptist Missionary Society of Winona, were indeed an inspiration to us.

Notwithstanding it has been a year of calamities in our State, our treasurer reported as follows: Amount collected: Dues, $422.33; Contingent Fund, $32.75; Baby Roll, $14.50; Week of Prayer, $53.15; Lucinda B. Helm Loan Fund, $45.65; Incidental Fund, $25.10; Angel Band Fund, $20; ship, $25; publishing reports, $11.30; amount collected on the S. Myra Smith Scholarship in the Scarritt Bible and Training-school, $211.10; total, $865.88. About $100 more was paid during the meeting which is not included in this report, making a total of $965.88 raised during the year. We hope to complete the pledge for the Lucinda B. Helm Loan Fund, $100, by March 1, 1898.

The business sessions were presided over by our president, Mrs. J. B. Stone. Owing to the continued postponement of the meeting, and short notice of the time, the attendance was not as large as usual; but district secretaries who could not attend sent full reports, and written reports were sent by most of the auxiliaries having no delegate. The entire session was most harmonious and profitable, and we are glad to note that interest is increasing throughout the Conference in this work. Seven new auxiliaries have been organized—four adult and three juvenile.

Cleveland again extended a cordial invitation for the next annual meeting, and was unanimously selected.

A memorial service was held in honor of Mrs. Annie Bynum Thrasher, the much-loved secretary of Corinth district, and Miss Lucinda Heim. Tributes of love and respect were read which will be sent later.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. Logan Walker, Holly Springs; first vice-president, Mrs. J. B. Stone, Winona; second vice-president, Mrs. A. B. Finlay, Greenville; recording secretary, Mrs. D. L. Cogdell, Amory; corresponding secretary, Mrs. J. S. Featheratun, Macon; treasurer, Mrs. Walter Trotter, Winona; auditor, Mrs. W. Witty, Winona; editor, Mrs. H. W. Foote, Macon.

Selections.

THE UNWRITTEN GOSPEL.

Very few readers of the New Testament probably ever stop to think how brief the biography of Christ is, and how much must have been omitted from the narrative. There must have been another history of the Divine Teacher, written, not by the hands of his disciples, but in the hearts of those whom he had cheered and helped and healed by the way. There must have been a beautiful unwritten gospel passed from mouth to mouth for many generations, the light of which faded very slowly as the night of barbarism and wandering camo on. For a personality like Christ's, filled with divine compassion and love, must have poured itself out in a thousand unseen rivulets as well as in the great channels so definitely marked in the New Testament story. There must have been thousands to whom he spoke words which were not recorded; there must have been multitudes whose lives were renewed by his power of whom no mention is made.

As this was true of the divinest personality known to men, so it is also true of every human personality. The most searching and influential power that issues from any human life is that of which the person himself is largely unconscious. It flows from him in every form of occupation, in every relationship, in rest or in work, in silence or in speech, at home or abroad. There are hosts of men and women who are healers and teachers and helpers almost without consciousness of the fact. Light shines from them and help flows from them at times when they are utterly unconscious that the hem of the garment is being touched. The real test of the possession of the highest power of character and the most perfect devotion to the noblest things in life is not the quality of the direct touch; it is the presence of the virtue even in the hem of the garment.—The Outlook.

If you trust in God and yourself, you can surmount every obstacle. Do not yield to restless anxiety. One must not always be asking what may happen to one in life, but one must advance fearlessly and bravely. —Prince Bismarck.

A true perception of the gospel is the entire forgetfulness of self, utter absence of any pretension, and the complete and entire refusal to accept the world's praise or judgment.—General Gordon.

For all whose hearts are passing through the deep shadows of sorrow, it is well to remember that it takes both darkness and light to make up the complete day.

The Bible is not a mass of precious material thrown together in chaos, but a progressive revelation, with order, plan, and purpose.

What sick man would send for a doctor who had gone no deeper into medical books than some preachers have into the Bible?

Don't talk much about giving the devil his due until you are sure if he had it, he would not have you.—Ram's Horn.

We ought to thank God that our foolish prayers are never answered.

HOSPITALITY TO PREACHERS.

Once a Methodist preacher was welcome in every Methodist home in town and country. It is not so now. The lack of hospitality on the part of town and city Methodists is quite noticeable these days. If a Methodist preacher visits a town, he is expected to put up with a Methodist pastor or go to a hotel. The presence of a prophet in the family is not as much so as formerly considered a boon. The prophet's chamber has been torn away or devoted to the storage of onions. Wm. G. Brownlow hoarded Dr. Samuel Patton while he was editor of the Holston Christian Advocate, for months, free of charge, and he said with emotion, in open Conference, that the influence of such a man among his children was worth more to him than the usual price of board.

It is a damper on a presiding elder to go to a city to hold a quarterly meeting, and after preaching a warm gospel sermon, to see every steward and every leading member walk out of church and go to his dinner, leaving the presiding elder to go to a hotel or to accept an invitation to dine with the preacher in charge.

This state of affairs is not only unfortunate, but abominable. Language is inadequate to characterize such stinginess or rather such want of affection for those who labor with us in word and doctrine. It is one of the unfavorable signs of the times, and it bodes no good for Methodism. Some plain talk in the pulpit and some plain writing, as we are endeavoring to do, is demanded on this subject.

It is more creditable to live in a log shin with the door latch hanging outside than to occupy a stately dome, whose household gods are mammon and at whose board selfishness presides. Such homes never entertain angels unawares, and their occupants can not trace their spiritual lineage to the father of the faithful.

There is scarcely a Christian trait more beautiful than hospitality. Where there is genuine piety there is genuine hospitality. The blessing of God is always upon the house that is a home for preachers. Obededem was blessed because the ark of God was there. Good angels guard the house that shelters God's ministers.

A few loaves and fishes and a soft bed are a small sacrifice for the moral and spiritual blessings that linger behind one who has power with God.—Holston Methodist.

Chauncey Depew, against whom no one would think of charging a Puritanic spirit, speaks as follows on the temperance question: "Twenty-five years ago I knew every man, woman and child in Peekskill. And it has been a study with me to mark boys who started in every grade of life with myself, to see what became of them. I was up last Fall and began to count them over, and it was an instructive exhibit. Some of them became clerks, merchants, manufacturers, lawyers and doctors. It is remarkable that everyone of those that drank is dead; not one living of my age. Barring a few who were taken by sickness, everyone who proved a wreck and wrecked his family, did it from rum and no other cause. Of those who were church-going people, who were steady, who were frugal and thrifty, every single one of them, without exception, owns the house in which he lives, and has something laid by, the interest of which, with his house, would carry him through many a rainy day. When a man becomes debased with gambling, rum, or drink, he does not care; all his finer feelings are crowded out. The poor women at home are the ones that suffer in their tender emotions—suffer in their affections for those whom they love better than life."—Northwestern Advocate.

One of the sure tests of wisdom is its power at proper times to keep silent. The man who boasts of victory before it is won and exhausts himself in explanations after the battle, telling how the fight was lost, or fills the air with lamentations over his losses and disasters, has not yet mastered even the alphabet of wisdom. To learn how and when to be quiet is a great lesson. Students of the life of our Lord may learn much from the occasions when in the midst of danger and alarm, "he answered not a word."—Central Advocate.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. W. T. Currie, Gilmer, Texas, Dec. 13, 1897: "This has been the best year of my life working for the Master. Over one thousand have been converted to him; some two or three hundred have been sanctified. Many family altars have been erected. I came to Texas, Aug. 3; have been here ever since; This makes ninety-five days that I have preached from two to three times each day. The Lord has been so good in giving me health to do his work. I am so thankful to him that I can not help saying, Praise his holy name! I will close here Sunday night; then go home to spend a few weeks. Texas is a great State. I am now looking at a small range of mountains at a distance. While I gaze on them I think of the mount from which Moses stood and viewed the land of promise, and think how many of God's children are looking at the land, but will not go up and possess it. The weather has changed. It is now freezing out-doors. Praise God. Pray for me. May the Lord bless your paper."

D. F. Turner, Jackson, La., Dec. 13, 1897: "We are having one of the grandest meetings you ever heard of. We closed our meeting in our Y. M. C. A. Hall last Sunday night with one soul as the reward for our labors, and many others under conviction. Bro. Tom Carter, our pastor, began his meeting at the church Monday night, and under his earnest preaching all of our boys in the college classes, but five, who were not Christians are 'happy on the way,' and those five are talking about the meeting. We have just closed a prayer meeting in my room (one o'clock, Monday morning), and those who were only a few days ago taking God's name in vain were singing his praises and testifying as to 'How sweet the name of Jesus sounds in a believer's ear,' and praying for those five boys who are yet unsaved. Remembering how God released Peter from prison and chains in answer to the prayers of that little band of Christians, can we doubt his answering our prayers for those souls to be released from the chains of sin? Our meeting will continue another week. Pray for us and our dear pastor, that God may use us in drawing souls into the kingdom."

Rev. I. T. Reames, P. C., Lafayette, La., Dec. 10, 1897: "The second year of my labor among the kind people of Lafayette is now drawing to a close. While these two years have been filled with physical and mental labor, yet they seem rapidly to have passed away. Notwithstanding their brevity, our achievements along some lines have been in excess of our expectations. Last year quite a handsome church was erected, which has been recently estimated by the Board of Trustees at $2,500. This year we have built a parsonage, which is very comfortable—being quite large—which is valued by the same board at $1,250. Thus the increase in valuation of our church and parsonage property has been considerable. Thanks to the W. P. and H. M. Society for a donation to the amount of $100, which has greatly assisted in the erection of our parsonage. Thanks also to a generous sister (a liberal supporter of our church) for a beautiful site on which to build. This lot is near the church, and its dimensions are 100x200 feet. 'Last, but not least,' during the past year there have been some valuable additions to our church. I scarcely know how to express my appreciation of the many tokens of love and friendship extended to us by the people of the charge and community. I will consider it no affliction to be returned to this charge."

Rev. Jas. G. Galloway, Edwards, Miss., Dec. 7, 1897: "The awful scourge that swept over our community is a thing of the past; the guards have been removed, and the world is again open to us. What a change from our condition of six weeks ago! For two months or more we saw nothing but sorrow and suffering on every hand. We were shut out from the mails, and only by telegram could we notify our loved ones and friends of our condition. Letters of sympathy from many of the brethren brought comfort to our hearts in those days of trial. It is sad indeed, and our eyes fill with tears as we think of the many new-made mounds in the city of the dead. Seven of our members gone. What a loss our church has sustained! Two were stewards, Bros. R. H. and C. H. Noblin, good and true men, faithful in the performance of every duty prescribed by the church—men who loved God and loved his church, loyal to their pastor, who always knew that in each of them he had a friend and brother. By request of the families a former pastor will furnish an obituary of these worthy men. The other members gone are E. K. Noblin, I. C. Wimberly, Mrs. Anna Henry, Mrs. S. M. Redfield and Mrs. Mary Ward, who will be sadly missed. The taking away of several others who were of Methodist families is a great loss to the church. We pray that the vacant places in the church may be supplied, and that he who has promised to be a father to the fatherless may bless and comfort the hearts of sorrowing loved ones."

CENTRAL CHURCH, MERIDIAN.

We Meridian Methodists have, somehow, conceived the idea that Central Church, situated as it is, and among the oldest of the score or more churches in this growing and enterprising little city, is one of the leading churches of the Mississippi Conference, and that your readers will be glad to hear of the success with which God has blessed the labors of Dr. Featherstun, who is nearing the close of his first year's pastorate.

Though a stranger, personally, to most of the membership, the announcement of his appointment was received with great satisfaction, and a few weeks sufficed to discover that he had drawn to him the confidence and the hearts and the loyal support of his congregation. Early in the year Bro. Featherstun began to consider the question of a "home-made" revival. His plans were quietly developed. The church, in Conference, and individually, pledged support, and a great revival was the result. Bro. Featherstun, assisted by Dr. Andrews, did the preaching, and they proved themselves, under the guidance and the power of the Holy Spirit, to be "revivalists." There were forty conversions during the meeting, and many members testified to great enrichment in experience. There have been, altogether, over one hundred accessions to the church during the year.

Dr. Featherstun, we all know, is a strong preacher, but his success is due very largely to his great industry and his tact in drawing out and developing the latent forces in the young people of his church. But little had apparently been accomplished in the line of Epworth League work. The League has doubled its membership this year, having now a membership of over two hundred. The foundation was laid and much of the necessary work done under former pastors, and Dr. Featherstun would not claim all the credit. The League is fortunate in having in its membership a great deal of good material for officers and heads of departments—all of the latter being thoroughly organized. Notwithstanding the abundance of official timber, the officers for the past term have just been re-elected for another term. They have been "endorsed," as the politicians say, and they deserved it. The president is a "born" Epworth League president. He will be heard from in the councils of the church. His name, Heard Ledyard, indicates the character of blood that courses through his veins. His grandfather, Joshua T. Heard, of precious memory, would not be ashamed of this son of a devoted daughter. I must say also of this League, that if any feared the literary part of its work would be given more prominence than the devotional—and there were some, I have no doubt—their fears are now without reason. The spiritual and devotional features have been stressed and developed. The officers are converted young people, and I am told thirty of the young members lead in prayer in the devotional meetings. So we see this League is a positive force for good in the church.

Class meetings and Church Conferences are held regularly once a month, and are well attended. In the former but few decline to testify as to present experience. In the Church Conferences, if any of the Boards or societies fail to bring up a written report, they receive an admonition that generally secures one at the next meeting. The reports, however, are generally ready. The Sunday-school is largely attended, and seems to grow better in faithful and efficient work. The average attendance is about three hundred. The congregations are large, orderly and attentive. We have been, for many years, greatly in need of a large organ. Through the efforts of the "Organ Club," with Dr. Featherstun behind it, we have now in the church a fine pipe organ, upon which there has been expended over six hundred dollars. It will be paid for as the notes mature, and it will then be the property of the church. It doesn't take good church music long to pay for itself. It's a good investment.

The stewards and the preacher are determined to bring up all the "finances" of the church. Bro. Featherstun is behind, and ahead, and in the midst of that Board, too. If he doesn't make a good report at Conference, it won't be his fault.

Come to see us, Mr. Editor. Remember you did a great deal of sowing here yourself, and no little reaping.

S. B. WATTS.

When a woman gets sickly, nervous, fretful and despondent the average husband doesn't have the faintest conception of what is the matter. When she gets worse, and he finally realizes that ill-health of some description has something to do with it, he calls in some obscure neighborhood doctor. The chances are that the doctor says it's stomach, or liver, or heart trouble. Nine times in ten he isn't within a mile of right. He treats for these troubles and charges big bills until the husband gets disgusted and throws him out. The trouble is usually weakness or disease of the distinctly feminine organism.

Many husbands, after paying big doctor-bills while their wives grew steadily worse, have at last written to a physician of national reputation and learned the truth. They have been justly indignant at the ignorant pretenders who have experimented upon their wives' health. By writing to Dr. R. V. Pierce, any ailing woman may receive the free advice of an eminent and skillful specialist, for thirty years chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, at Buffalo, N. Y. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a marvelous medicine for women. It cures all weakness and disease of the organs distinctly feminine. It heals all internal ulceration and inflammation and stops debilitating drains. Over 90,000 women have testified, over their own signatures, to its wonderful merits.

"For several years I suffered with prolapsus of the uterus," writes Miss A. Lee Schuster, of Box 12, Rodney, Jefferson Co., Miss. "I had a fall from my horse, causing retroversion of the uterus. Our family physician treated me for kidney trouble and everything else but the right thing. I grew worse and worse. My body was emicated, hands and feet clammy and cold, stomach weak, with great palpitation of the heart. I dreaded for night to come, for I would suffer from nausea all night, and I continued until I began taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and I began to improve right away. I am now well and happy."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels.

The Holman Self-Pronouncing S. S. Teacher's Bible

Divinity Circuit, Round Corners, etc.

CONTAINS THE FOLLOWING HELPS TO THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE.

Concordance, with Contexts, over 40,000 References; Index to Persons, Places and Subjects, 16,000 References; Scripture Atlas, with Index; Glossary of Bible Words; Bible Calendar; Summary and Analyses of the Old and New Testaments.

A Self-Pronouncing Dictionary of Proper Names and Foreign Words contained in the Bible, comprising about 3,500 words, giving the pronunciation, the meaning, and the location of the text where the word occurs for the first time.

Exhaustive Articles on Biblical History, Geography, Topography, Natural History, Ethnology, Botany, Chronology, Music and Poetry; a Complete Harmony of the Gospels, Tables of Parables, Miracles, Prophecies, Prayers, Money, Weights and Measures, Jewish Sects and Orders, etc.

TWELVE FULL-PAGE MAPS IN COLORS.

Every proper name in the text is syllabified and accented, and has the vowels marked according to the most authoritative modern standards of pronunciation. The text is in exact conformity with that of the world-famous Oxford S. S. Teacher's Bible. All the valuable "Helps to the Study of the Bible" contained in the Oxford Bible are retained.

The only Teacher's Bible with a self-pronouncing text. No similar Bible was ever obtainable heretofore; in fact, no publishers ever attempted its publication.

"The essence of fifty expensive volumes, by men of sacred learning, is condensed in these 'Helps.'"

The large-type (Bourgeois) edition sells to persons who are not subscriber for $3.75. Our subscribers get it, on conditions specified below, for $2.35. The same Bible in Minion type, which is somewhat smaller than Bourgeois, we offer to our subscribers, on conditions named below, for $1.55. To those who are not subscribers we sell it at $2.75. We also handle an edition in still smaller type (Emerald). Our subscribers get this for $1.00.

In order to get anyone of these at these rates it is necessary to pay your subscription one year in advance, viz., to December, '97. (A little later it will be January, '98.)

For twenty cents we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside of the book.

It was only a glad "good-morning,"
As she passed along the way.
But it spread the morning's glory
Over the livelong day.
—Carlotta Perry.

Work is our business, its success is God's.—John Ruskin.

The temple of perfection is entered by the gate of sacrifice.

Be cheerful. "Let a little sunshine in." A light heart lives long.

You must never judge of character by circumstances.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Do not allow yourself to be deceived by your emotional experiences. Your heart is not pure unless your life is clean.

When you find a man making calculations to see whether honesty will pay or not, it would be well to trust some one else.

Nothing endures but personal qualities; charity and personal force are the only investments worth anything.—Walt Whitman.

Religion is not something that is fastened upon the outside of life, but is the awakening of the truth inside of life.—Phillips Brooks.

About the silliest thing in all the world is the practice of ridiculing creeds. Every man has his creed, not excepting him who reviles creeds. Even the infidel has a creed.

Lost yesterday, somewhere between sunrise and sunset, two golden hours, each set with sixty diamond minutes. No reward is offered, for they are gone forever.—Horace Mann.

Suffer, if you must; do not quarrel with the dear Lord's appointments for you. Only try, if you are to suffer, to do it splendidly. That's the only way to take up a pleasure or a pain.—Phillips Brooks.

Let us not forget that there are two sides to dying—this earth side and the heaven side. The stars that go out when morning comes do not stop shining; only some other eyes in some other land are made glad by them.—M. J. Savage.

The best families, the most useful families and the happiest families in every congregation are those in which family worship is regularly maintained, the church paper taken and carefully read, and the work of the church often talked about.—United Presbyterian.

You will find out who your friends are when misfortune overtakes you. A few may cling to you, but many who have been loud in their professions of friendship will so act as to remind you of the poet's word:

"The friends who in our sunshine live,
When Winter comes have flown,
And he who has but tears to give,
Must weep those tears alone."

CHRISTMAS.

The revolving year has brought another return of the great feast of Christendom. It is the time of the people. No class, however favored, can monopolize it. Free as the air, wide as human love are the gladness and joy of this happy season. It is pre-eminently the feast of good-will. As if by magic, when the time approaches, from the great metropolis to the sequestered mountain valley, from the mansion of wealth to the hut of poverty, from the splendor of fashionable society to the plain habits of honest peasantry, from the king to the humblest subject, the mighty thrill of altruism, of a desire to make others happy takes possession of all hearts. We say all hearts, for dead is the soul that feels not this electric current of human sympathy and good-will.

The season finds response in the human breast, because it meets a demand of the human heart. Men are made to love, and make happy and sympathize with their kind. Men need and long for the love of their kind. Without this reciprocity of love and benevolence life is not life. The miser, the misanthrope, the heartless oppressor do not live in any true or high sense. Real joy and pleasure are to them like undiscovered countries. They dig their own graves and bury themselves alive. The happy man is he, however meagre his ability, whose heart kindles with warm love for his fellow and who enters into the innocent mirth and good feeling of others. The poor as well as the more fortunate can have this happiness.

Open your heart and the sunshine will come in, and when the sunshine takes possession, it will go out again in life-giving streams of warmth to others. Open your heart, and you will catch the inspiration of the season and get so full of Christmas joy and good-will, that all you meet will feel the refreshing and invigorating influence.

Our common brotherhood is the great foundation principle of our liberties and the bulwark of Church as well as State. It helps us in every respect to emphasize occasionally by practical expression this great truth. Let the wheels of business pause for a moment, suspend the wear and tear upon the nerves, look within you and then around you, speak a word of cheer to your fellow-soldier in the battle of life or lend him a helping hand. Make your children happy, make your wife or your husband happy, or, if you are so unfortunate as to have none, make your neighbors happy, make the poor happy, and when the holiday is past you yourself will be happy. Making others happy is the great secret of being happy, a secret which the world will not learn, but which it must learn before its quest for happiness will end.

Oh! selfishness, the enemy of all happiness, the destroyer of our peace, the despoiler of the poor, the promoter of strife, the author of a thousand woes, when will thy tyranny of human hearts be overthrown? Never, until love and good-will for others shall every moment of every day become the motto of every man.

We offer the heartiest greetings of the season to all, and wish for every one the brightest, best, happiest Christmas. When it is past, may the memory of good deeds done, of kind words spoken linger with you and cheer your heart, and may the softening influence of the joyous season be a benediction to you throughout the coming year!

THE WHITSITT AFFAIR.

The spirit of free inquiry is in the air, and the search for truth is helping to dissipate not a few theories hoary with age, though its progress in overturning this and that pet denominational belief is viewed by the unsophisticated with serious alarm. The Southern Baptists have for some time been in a state of feverish excitement and indignation over the claims and discoveries of Dr. Whitsitt, who a year or two ago startled the religious world, particularly his own church, by proclaiming the historical incorrectness of the Baptist position with reference to immersionist succession, proving most conclusively from unquestioned historical documents in the keeping of the British Museum, that the Baptists in England did not practice immersion prior to 1641, and that the Baptists in America were not immersionists at first.

If a bomb-shell had exploded in every Baptist camp, it could hardly have produced more consternation than did this announcement of a simple historical fact. Though the facts as set forth by Dr. Whitsitt have not been and can not be disproved, though they in no wise affect the validity of immersion as believed to rest upon a scriptural foundation, the advocates of "land-markism" fancy they see in this admission the downfall of their faith, and an unpardonable humiliation of their denominational pride. A large multitude of the Baptist folk are seeking to get rid of these troublesome facts by ignoring them, and by pouring out vials of indignation upon Dr. Whitsitt for making his discoveries known. A perfect storm of criticism and abuse has for months been directed at the head of the discoverer. Convention after convention has called for his removal as president of the Louisville Theological Seminary, though he and his followers are as orthodox in holding to immersion as the only valid mode of believer's baptism as is the most ardent advocate of successionism.

No doctrine or practice founded merely upon tradition or insufficient historical evidence deserves to be perpetuated. Facts are stubborn things, and can not be blotted out at the wish or dictation of those whom they offend. Hence the disturbance the anti-Whitsittites are kicking up is both ridiculous and senseless. Since the truth is against them, they might as well submit gracefully; for "nothing is ever settled until it is settled right." Let the truth be told though the heavens fall.

We note with pleasure that Dr. Whitsitt has a large and respectable following, and that despite the attempts to boycott the institution over which he presides, it has opened well. It would be a real calamity to the denomination should those in authority yield to the present foolish clamor for the Doctor's removal. Freedom of thought of which our Baptist brethren oft pose as champions, and the interests of truth demand that nothing rash be done. The more enlightened and thoughtful of the denomination do not see anything in the Doctor's discoveries to excite alarm or to nusettle their faith in the essentials of Baptist doctrine. Immersionist succession, however, like apostolic succession, is doomed.

BISHOP FITZGERALD'S ADDRESS TO THE CLASS OF THE SECOND YEAR (VIRGINIA CONFERENCE).

What is faith? I am reminded of a Confederate soldier who had been born into the new life. In answer to this question he said: "Faith is the substance of things hoped for," etc. I said to him: "Faith is choice in the present tense. Choose Christ as your Savior, the king of your soul and the guide of your life." "I see it," said he. Are you going on unto perfection? Going? Where? Perfection in the present tense (Amens). Perfection in what? In polemics? To write on the subject and define it scientifically? That has been tried and the failure is manifest. Perfection in judgment? The man whose judgment is perfect may exist, but I've never met him. Is it to live and not to be tempted? To be above the necessity of fighting sin? No! Life is trial; life is a fight against the world, the flesh, and the devil. They must be fought; but blessed be God, fought victoriously. Perfection is what, then? Perfection is love—a thing that a child of eight can understand. It is the love described in the 13th chapter of I. Corinthians. Have you got it? If so, what do you groan for? Stop groaning and sing, sing joyously and go on—go on forever. Instantaneous or gradual? You can prove both sides. It has been very successfully done. (Laughter.) Here are two vessels. One holds a pint, the other a gallon. Both are full. There is a difference in quantity, but the quality is the same. Are you in debt so as to embarrass you? Are you in debt so as to embarrass others? (Laughter.) If so, get out; if out, stay out. Board cheaply, sell your gold watch and get a cheap one or look at the sun, do anything rather than go in debt. I left California $1,500 in debt. When it was at last all paid I felt like calling on the whole church to keep the year of jubilee. (Laughter.)—Baltimore Advocate.

In the path of duty we have nothing to fear.

CHEERFULNESS AS A DUTY.

How many who read these lines really consider it a duty to be always cheerful? There may be occasions when it is very difficult to maintain an even temper and make others feel the uplift a bright spirit and joyous heart always send forth, but every duty is sometimes hard to perform. For the sake of oneself it is always a duty to be cheerful. Melancholy is a mild form of suicide; it wears upon the nerves, and tends to break down the whole physical man; it disfigures the face with ugly wrinkles, and sours the heart with unpleasant broodings. The cheerful soul lengthens life on earth, and greatly increases the pleasure of its own existence. For the sake of others, everyone should be cheerful and joyous, under all circumstances. It is a pleasure to be associated with a person who has a bright and happy disposition. No one can long retain friends and constantly burden them with a wail about his woes. People soon learn to shun a whimpering, complaining person as a bother and a nuisance. Everybody wants the companionship of a cheerful spirit and a pure heart. Children should be taught the value of such a spirit to themselves and everybody else, from early childhood, and carefully trained in the best way of preserving an even temper and always maintaining a cheerful spirit.—Observer.

In his address to the class of young men admitted to full connection at the Western North Carolina Conference, Bishop Key said: "What we call sanctification is not reached at the hour of your conversion. Not a church in the world teaches that. One man has his theory, and another has another theory. Mr. Wesley said: 'The work of sanctification begins when we are converted.' It goes on and on. There is efficiency in the blood of Jesus for the cleansing of all sin, original or actual. I do not like the expression, 'second blessing.' I never use it. I would call this blessing the completion of the work of grace begun in conversion. Mr. Wesley never intended that the expression, 'second blessing,' should become a shibboleth. The work begun in conversion must go on to Christian perfection—the perfection of love in the human heart."—Baltimore Advocate.

We need not be surprised to hear nineteenth century people talking about "the good old times" when we find that the folks who lived away back yonder in Solomon's day did the same. In view of the improvements which the king had introduced into Jerusalem, it was not pleasant for him to hear them asking, "What is the cause that the former days were better than these?" and he informed them very plainly that they did "not inquire wisely concerning this." Matthew Henry says, "If men's hearts were better, the times would mend." So instead of bemourning the degeneracy of the times let us seek to have our hearts made better that the times may improve.—Baltimore Advocate.

Here is what a prominent preacher writes us, and to the shame of the Methodist preachers who have been on that work, without naming it, we copy it: "I find old members of the church who did not know there is such a paper. But you may be sure they shall all know of it before the close of the present Conference year." That is the sort of men we want in Methodist pulpits; men true to the church, and who will look after the best interests of their people, and guard well the literature which goes into their homes. May their number increase! — Central Methodist.

Educated natives in Japan and India are beginning to realize the value of Christian home life. A Japanese gentleman lately remarked: "The religion that makes the purest and happiest home will always be the best for any country. If Christianity does that, it is the right religion for Japan."

"No one can teach who has stopped learning. There is only one thing that will keep your teaching and preaching alive, and that is to be perpetually studying." There is no "dead line" to one who works on this principle in the class-room or in the pulpit.—Archbishop of Canterbury.

THE BOOK WILL TELL.

A real Christian will be a true lover of the Bible. There is scarcely a better test. If the novel or the newspaper take the place of the Bible on his table or in his mind, then it is clear that the world has taken the place of God in his heart. If a man's Bible be clean and bright, and unsullied by use, undefiled by contact with daily life, his soul is not. There is no better spiritual barometer to test the true condition of the soul's atmosphere. He to whom the Bible seems wearisome, monotonous, uninteresting, has good cause for alarm. The neglect of it springs from coldness of affection towards its Author, and dislike of his rebukes. Whoever wants to grow in grace simply must study the Bible. It is the way to gain stability of doctrine, so as not to be carried about with every wind of opinion.—Christian Standard.

We begin to live when we begin to love. "We have passed out of death into life because we love." That part of existence which the body and the mind pass through before the heart is wakened to love is prenatal; it is existence, but it is existence without the full birth into life. The totally selfish man never comes to the hour of birth at all. He never knows what life is. "He that loveth not abideth in death." Life begins when love begins; life dies out of a man when love dies out of that man. Life is eternal when "love never faileth," when it "endureth forever." For life is like an organ with its many keys, with its many swelling tones; only as a master's hand rests upon it, and rules each varied sound, does it wake to life; the keys and tones of life are its thoughts, its words, its deeds, its prayers; the master's hand is God's, and God is love.—Sunday-School Times.

My friend, you may be only a penny candle, but do not smoke or go out; shine. You may be only a very humble private in the vast army of the Lord; yet the most brilliant commander-in-chief would be powerless if he had not his thousands of private soldiers to do the fighting. Christ's battles must be fought and won by the rank and file. The negro that carries the water-pail behind the regiment has his place.—Dr. Cuyler.

We want no more powerful arguments for missions than this: "Who loved me and gave Himself for me"—Himself, so infinitely much, for me, so insignificantly little. Then woe to the Christian who can hoard his gold, when the dying millions are crying out for more missionaries to be sent to them; and our burdened and anxious Boards are crying out for more money with which to send them.—A. J. Gordon, D. D.

The bitterest tears shed over graves are for words left unsaid and deeds left undone. "She never knew how I loved her." "He never knew what he was to me." "I always meant to make more of our friendship." Such words are the poisoned arrows which cruel death shoots backward at us from the sepulcher.—Harriet Beecher Stowe.

No man comes into the full possession of his powers and the realization of the same except by most thorough discipline and painstaking application. Herein is to be found the secret of success of many upon whom the spirit of genius never breathed.—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

Put our church papers into the homes of your people. Send for specimen copies to distribute. Urge the people for their own sake and for the sake of their children to read them. Insist upon it. You can if you will more than double their circulation.—Bishop Vincent.

Of Rev. Joseph Parker it is written: "Preaching is his one hobby; he has no other." This is reproduced for the benefit of the preacher who wants to do six other things which cripple his work as a preacher and pastor.—Michigan Advocate.

Speak well of everyone. If you can not, then speak no ill. Silence here is golden. This does not mean that no criticisms are permissible, but never say of others what you would not be willing to say to them or in their presence.—Exchange.

Why do we not always smile whenever we meet the eye of a fellow being? That is the true recognition which ought to pass from soul to soul constantly. Little children in simple communities do this involuntarily, unconsciously. The honest-hearted German peasant does it. It is like magical sunlight all through that simple land, the perpetual greeting on the right hand and the left between strangers as they pass by each other, never without a smile.—Helen Hunt.

Consistency is not being forever in accord with our views as expressed yesterday or the day before, but in being studiously in accord with the truth and the fact. This gives liberty for change of views in accordance with further information, fuller data or with the larger developments and deductions of truth. Do not fear to be what the world calls inconsistent in your views, but fear lest your views be wrong.—Recorder.

If dissensions exist in your church, do your best to heal them. Promote harmony and good will. Harbor no ill feeling, or variance, or strife, but be a loving, helpful and devoted worker yourself, and do all in your power to foster and develop a united and devoted brotherhood to the honor of your Lord and the welfare of souls.—Presbyterian.

NOTES.

We invite special attention to the notice on our fifth page headed "Our Homes."

Rev. C. H. Ellis is in the city taking a rest after an absence of several months holding revival meetings in Mississippi.

Rev. M. H. Moore, of the Mississippi Conference, made an appreciated call at the ADVOCATE office last week on his way home from a visit to his parents at Scooba, Miss.

We received an appreciated call a few days since from our friend and former preceptor, Rev. J. M. Pugh, of the Mississippi Conference, who was on his way to Yazoo City to visit relatives.

J. C. McAlister, a widely known Methodist of this city, died a few days since at the advanced age of seventy-nine. He was a man of most excellent character, and had the esteem and confidence of all who knew him. A more extended notice will doubtless appear in due time.

Our correspondent, Mrs. Alice Coleman Oats, whose breezy letter in this issue our readers will enjoy, promises to write several letters during the year. The Grand Canon of the Colorado, the mammoth copper mines of Arizona, the Hall and Well of Montezuma, and other remains of Aztec life, and various other matters of interest, will be treated.

Under the wise and aggressive leadership of Rev. H. W. Knickerbocker, Louisiana Avenue Church will meet all its obligations for the current year. The attendance upon public worship has been largely augmented, and evidences of true prosperity are abundant. The people confidently expect Dr. Knickerbocker's return for another year.

Rev. Christian Keener, eldest son of Bishop Keener, died on Thursday, the sixteenth, at his home in this city, and was buried on the seventeenth at Baton Rouge. The funeral services were held on the afternoon of the sixteenth in Carrollton Church. Addresses were made by Dr. J. T. Sawyer and Rev. A. E. Clay, both of whom paid glowing tributes to his high character as a man and his ability, fidelity and efficiency as a minister. A suitable memoir may be expected soon.

The Board of Directors of the Mississippi Methodist Orphans' Home, at their recent meeting elected Rev. Martin Luther Burton, of the Mississippi Conference, to the position of manager. Bro. Burton has not yet signified his willingness to accept the position, but has the matter under consideration, and will make known his decision at an early day. For the sake of the institution we hope that Bro. Burton will accept, as he possesses the requisite qualifications in as great abundance as any man we know.

THIS OFFER IS GOOD FOR 30 DAYS ONLY

We make this Special Unprecedented Offer to Quickly Introduce and Obtain Agents in New Localities.

To quickly introduce and obtain agents in as many new localities as possible for Dr. Horne's New Improved ElectricBelts and Appliances, we have decided to sell for 30 days only, our No. 4 Dr. Horne's New Improved Regular $20.00 Electric Belt for only $6.66, a price that will make it possible for every person reading this advertisement to get one of our best belts at a nominal price. Never in the history of our business have we offered to sell this Belt at such a price, but we want an agent in your locality, and we believe that if you buy a Belt you will be so well pleased with it that you will either act as our agent or help us to get one.

Remember, the Belt we are offering you for only $6.66 is our No. 4 Dr. Horne's New Improved Regular $20.00 Combination Belt for men or women. It is adjustable and can be worn by any member of the family. Suspensory free with every male Belt. It is the best Belt we manufacture; in fact, the Best on Earth, and we make no exception to this statement. We have sold hundreds, yes, thousands of them, up to $40.00. There is not a family but what should have one of these Belts. Call on the best and cheapest doctor, and you do not have to go out of the house to get it. It will last you for years with proper care, and will save itself in doctor bills ten times over. These Electric Belts have cured thousands and will cure you if you will only give it a trial, as the many testimonials which we publish in our catalogue will prove.

YOU RUN NO RISK IN DEALING WITH US.

We do not ask you to send any money in advance. If you want one of these belts we are perfectly willing to send it to your nearest express office, C. O. D., so that you can see and examine it free of any cost, just the same as if you came into our office or go into any store, and if you are perfectly satisfied with it, pay the express agent the price of the Belt and express charges and take it; otherwise it will be returned to us. Can any fairer offer be made you than this? We are the only manufacturers of Electric Belts who send Belts C. O. D., without asking one cent in advance. If you wish to send cash with order we will prepay all express charges and guarantee the Belt to be exactly as represented, or forfeit $100.00.

WE HAVE NOW OFFERED YOU AN OPPORTUNITY OF YOUR LIFE

and if you do not accept it you may be sorry for it, as we shall never again offer this Belt at such a price. It seems needless to say that we are sustaining a loss on every Belt we sell at the above price, but it is cheaper to introduce them in new localities in this way than to send traveling men to do it for us. If you want one of these belts and send to us with your waist measure in inches. Don't delay. Order today if possible, otherwise you may forget it.

CUT OUT COUPON

DR. HORNE ELECTRIC BELT & TRUSS CO.
112-114 DEARBORN ST., CHICAGO, ILL., U.S.A.

P. S.—If you have no use for an Electric Belt please hand or mail this advertisement to some one that you know, who is not enjoying good health. By doing this you will favor them and us. We want a good agent in every locality to whom we can give steady employment. We only employ those who have used our Belts and can speak of their merits from personal experience.

REFERENCES:—As to our reliability we refer to any Express Company, any Bank in Chicago, and the many thousands all over the United States who have used our Electric Belts and Appliances during the past 20 years.

Monumental Records.

THE GREATEST SPECIAL PERIODICAL OF THE DAY.

Monumental Records has its Correspondents in every field where ruins mark the Civilizations of the Past. These men are photographing and giving the results of the excavations which are being carried on by the great Exploration Societies, Museums, and Governments of the World, and the greatest explorers are its friends and promised contributors.

Monumental Records interests old and young; it appeals to the scientist and attracts the reader who is influenced through the imagination. Its presentations of the past come to some as a fairy story—a romance; to others as a scientific dissertation and a truthful record of the older civilizations. The scientist needs it because it is a record of fact. The Biblical student must have it because many of the discoveries bear on the historical records of the Bible. All interested in the development of man will find it an invaluable help.

Inscriptions are translated by the most eminent scholars.

To bring the wonderful Past before the intelligent masses of the Present, the subscription price of MONUMENTAL RECORDS is put at the cost of production. A year's subscription is only $1.50, its size is 10½x14 inches to admit of the most ample illustration and photographic reproductions are from originals, and the paper is the best, manufactured. Taken in every way, there is no monthly published in any language that surpasses MONUMENTAL RECORDS.

It has already on its paid subscription list (it has no other) many of the most prominent men of this country. Those sending $1.50 for 1898 will receive the November and December Numbers of 1897 free; or the November and December numbers will be sent on receipt of fifteen two-cent stamps or a four months' subscription for fifty cents.

TOPIC FOR DECEMBER.

THE CHURCH OF ST. PAUL.

DEC. 26—THE DIVINE PANOPLY.

(Eph. vi, 14-18.)

1. The equipment of the Christian is neither distinctly offensive nor defensive, but a combination of both to be used in the warfare with sin. The armor is to protect him—to conserve his spiritual integrity—while he fights with "the sword of the Spirit"—mercy, humility, prayer, meekness, love, against the hosts of darkness. With spiritual armor and spiritual weapons the Christian, reversing the method of the world, "overcomes evil with good."

2. "Loins girt about with truth." Relative truth is in reach of every man. The Christian ought to see that his creed squares with the Bible. Having conscientiously satisfied himself that it does, it saves him from being "carried about by every wind of doctrine," and gives force and direction to his life.

3. "Breastplate righteousness." A consciousness of right intention is proof against calumny and a powerful stimulant to the life.

4. "Feet shod." The gospel is a message. The Christian a messenger. "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings." Give the message to the world. Turn your whole life into this channel. Be so busy in saving others that there shall be no time left in which to lose yourself.

5. "Shield of faith." Faith is the condition upon which things "unseen" and "hoped for" become subjectively real. It is the only protection against the "fiery darts of the wicked" for this unseen life.

6. The helmet of salvation, the sword of the Spirit, prayer, etc., are but different parts of that equipment which all soldiers of the cross should have.

DOTS.

There was a large crowd present at the meeting of the Union League at Carrollton last week. It was the farewell service of President Fontaine. He left the next morning for his far New Mexico home. The best wishes of his many friends and of the League go with him.

OUR HOMES.

The January issue, a memorial number, will shortly appear. It will give in attractive form the life story of its lamented editor, the founder of the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society, Miss Lucinda B. Helm. Every family in Southern Methodism should read this account of the life and labors of one of the heroines of our church.

Extra numbers can be furnished at five cents per copy. Address, Miss Emily M. Allen, editor and agent, pro tem, Nashville, Tenn.

TO MAKE THIS YEAR THE BEST.

I stand upon the threshold of two years,
And backward look, and forward strain my eyes;
Upon the blotted record fall my tears,
While, brushing them aside, a sweet surprise
Breaks like a day-dawn on my upturned face,
As I remember all Thy daily grace.

Thou hast been good to me; the burdened past
Thou hast borne with me, and the future days
Are in Thy hands; I tremble not, but cast
My care upon Thee, and in prayer and praise
Prepare to make the coming year the best,
Because of noble work and sweeter rest.

SMALL COURTESIES.

One evening last week I entered a room where several young people, with books and work, were sitting around the lamp. The young man with the lexicon and the grammar on the table before him was the busiest of the group, but he instantly arose and remained standing until I had taken my seat. The little action was automatic; the habit of this family is to practice small courtesies, and the boys have been trained from childhood to pay deference to women. They always rise whenever a lady, their mother, sister, friend, or guest of the house comes into the room where they are at work; they place chairs gallantly and gracefully for ladies at the dinner-table, they take off their hats when they meet their mother on the street, and they never kiss her with a hat on; in saying good-morning or good evening to her it is with hat in hand. Her bundles are carried, her way is made easy, a beautiful politeness waits for her word in the domestic discussions, and refrains from interrupting her even in the most heated argument. Neither mother nor sister goes out after dark without an escort. One of the boys can always go out of his way, or find it in his way, to see her safely to a friend's door, or to the meeting which she wishes to attend. Most winning and sweet is the air of good breeding which these young men have acquired—which they wear with an unconscious grace.

Equally charming are the manners of the girls in the home I speak of; gentle, soft-spoken, appreciative, considerate and reverential. To old people they are tender; to children, kind; to each other, lovely.

One can not too sedulously look after the small courtesies in one's conduct and, if one be charged with the management of a household, in the accustomed ways of the family. Habits count for everything here, and example is better than precept.—Margaret E. Sangster, in Interior.

HALL'S Vegetable Sicilian HAIR RENEWER

Cleanses the scalp and puts new life into the hair. It restores the lost color to gray hair. It means youth and beauty.

EVERY MAN SHOULD SWEEP BEFORE HIS OWN DOOR.

He is a wise man who has wit enough for his own affairs. It is a common thing for people to mind Number One, but not so common to see people mend it. When it comes to spending money on labor or improvements, they think that repairs should begin at Number 2, and Number 3, and go on till all the houses up to Number 50 are touched up before any hint should be given to Number One. Now, this is very stupid, for if charity should begin at home, certainly reformation should begin there too. It is a waste of time to go far away to make a clearance; there's nothing like sweeping the snow from your own door. Let every dog carry his own tail. Mind your own business, and mend your own manners, and if every man does the same all will be minded and mended, as the old song says:

"Should every man defend his house,
Then all would be defended;
If every man would mend a man,
Then all mankind were mended."

A man who does not look well to his own concerns is not fit to be trusted with other people's. Lots of folks are so busy abroad that they have no time to look at home. They say the cobbler's wife goes barefoot, and the baker's child gets no buns, and the sweep's house has sooty chimneys. This comes of a man thinking he is everybody except himself. All the wit in the world is not in one head, and therefore the wisest man living is not bound to look after all his neighbors' matters. There are wonderful people about, whose wisdom would beat Solomon into fits; and yet they have not sense enough to keep their own kettle from boiling over.—Spurgeon.

That man is unfortunate whose reputation for ability is so great that he sometimes feels that he can afford to do less than his best. —Cumberland Presbyterian.

EMERSON'S ADVICE TO A DAUGHTER.

Finish every day, and be done with it. You have done what you could. Some blunders and absurdities no doubt crept in; forget them as soon as you can. To-morrow will be a new day; begin it well and serenely, and with too high a spirit to be encumbered with your old nonsense. This day is all that is good and fair. It is too dear, with its hopes and invitations, to waste a moment on the yesterdays.

SUNSHINE AND HEALTH.

A merchant noticed, in the progress of years, that each successive bookkeeper gradually lost his health and finally died of consumption, however vigorous and robust he was on entering his service. At length it occurred to him that the little rear room where the books were kept opened into a back yard so surrounded by high walls that no sunshine came into it from one year's end to another.

An upper room, well lighted, was immediately prepared, and his clerks had uniform good health ever after.

A French lady became ill. The most eminent physicians of her time were called in, but failed to restore her. At length Dupuytren, the Napoleon of physic, was consulted. He noticed that she lived in a dim room into which the sun never shone, the house being situated in one of the narrow streets or rather lanes of Paris. He at once ordered more airy and cheerful apartments, and "all her complaints vanished."—Home Doctor.

Kidney and Bladder Troubles Quickly Cured.

Men and women doctor their troubles so often without benefit, that they get disconraged and skeptical. In most such cases serious mistakes are made in doctoring and not knowing what our trouble is or what makes us sick. The unmistakable evidences of kidney trouble are pain or dull ache in the back, too frequent desire to pass water, scanty supply, scalding irritation. As kidney disease advances the face looks sallow or pale, eyes puffy, the feet swell and sometimes the heart acts badly. Should further evidence be needed to find out the cause of sickness, then set urine aside for twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling is also convincing proof that our kidneys and bladder need doctoring. A fact often overlooked, or not always understood, is that women suffer as much from kidney and bladder trouble as men do.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is the discovery of the eminent physician and scientist, and as such is not recommended for everything, but will be found just what is needed in cases of kidney and bladder disorders or troubles due to weak kidneys, such as catarrh of the bladder, gravel, rheumatism, Bright's Disease, which, in fact, is only advanced kidney trouble.

The mild and extraordinary effect of this great remedy is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures. Sold by druggists, price fifty cents and one dollar. So universally successful has Swamp-Root been in quickly curing even the most distressing cases, that if you wish to Prove its wonderful merit, you may have a sample bottle and a book of valuable information, both sent absolutely free by mail. Mention CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The fact that this liberal offer appears in this paper is a guarantee of genuineness.

WHY WE CAN NOT SLEEP.

Everything which increases the amount of blood ordinarily circulated through the brain has a tendency to cause wakefulness. If the brain is often kept for long periods on the stretch, during which the vessels are filled to repletion, they can not contract even when the exciting causes cease. Wakefulness, as a consequence, results, and every day the condition of the individual becomes worse, because time brings the force of habit into operation. Everything that tends to throw the blood to the brain and to accumulate it there should be avoided. This is a vital matter, and prevention is better than cure. Tight or ill-fitting articles of dress, especially about the neck or waist, and tight boots and shoes, should be discarded; the feet should be kept warm so that the circulation may be promoted. Wearing cork soles in the boots or shoes and changing the socks every day are excellent means to this end and strongly recommended. Apart, however, from physical causes, there are various moral causes acting on the brain equally inimical to sleep; whatever keeps the attention fully aroused, keeps the blood vessels of the brain distended, and the consequences of that we know. On the other hand, when the mind is quieted, the tendency of the vessels is to contract and for sleep to follow.—New York Ledger.

A SIGN OF THE TIMES.

One of the most significant signs of the splendid triumph of Arminianism and the utter rout of Calvinism, along the whole line where it fought so fiercely a generation or two ago, is found in the admirable series of Yale Lectures put forth recently by Dr. Henry Van Dyke under the title, "The Gospel for an Age of Doubt." His orthodoxy is apparently certified to by Princeton as well as Yale, for he carries a degree in divinity from both these conservative institutions; but it is an orthodoxy that might well make the fathers turn in their graves. He clearly sees that no gospel which sympathizes with what is distinctively Augustinian can have a hearing in this age, and he expresses himself about as plainly on the subject as did the Methodist itinerants a hundred years back. He says that "this theory of the absolute and unconditional sovereignty of God is so far from being for God's glory that it is apparently for his shame and dishonor," "reflects a dark shadow of discredit upon his moral character," "is a moral nightmare." "Between the unknowable God of agnosticism and the unlovable God of absolutism, the choice, such as it is, lies on the side of agnosticism. It is unspeakably better to doubt God's very being than it is to doubt his eternal goodness and his moral integrity." Speaking of the doctrine of election and of the natural question based upon it, "Is God arbitrary, partial, unjust?" he says: "It is an idle thing to answer this question by an appeal to God's absolute right to dispose of all his creatures as he will." "It is an idle thing to answer this question by saying that God is under no obligation to be good to everybody, and that, therefore, he may be good to whomsoever he pleases." "It is an idle thing to answer this question by an appeal to ignorance, and to say that God elects some men to be saved and leaves the rest of mankind to be lost simply for his own unsearchable and inexplicable glory." He shows, just as Method-ist preachers have always shown, that God's glory is identical with his goodness, that "the idea of an irresponsible God is a moral mockery," that a thing may be logically true, yet morally false, and that both Jesus Christ and Paul expressly taught the very doctrine of free-will for declaring which John Wesley was called the vilest of names by those who claimed to stand for free grace and accounted themselves the only authorized orthodox expounders of Scripture. Verily, the world moves, and in the right direction.—Zion's Herald.

FOR THE YOUNG PREACHER.

If we might be permitted, we would like to speak a word of caution and, perhaps, of instruction to the young preacher. Do not fear that your ideas and thoughts can ever be above the people. No matter how humble their circumstances in life, or how limited their advantages of education, they will understand the greatest thoughts you can think if you will only present them in an intelligible way in language with which they are familiar. The difficulty is not with the ideas, but with the language of their presentation. The truth is, we are all living in the midst of a babel. Every profession and every trade and almost every occupation has its own peculiar language, which is a sealed book to all who have not learned its terminology. Take up the every-day newspaper and read it through from beginning to end intelligently and understandingly. Some will stumble at scientific reports, others at the description of the toilets at the social function of the night before, in market reports will mystify some, while the sporting columns are mere jargon to others. To attempt to describe and impress some great moral or religious truth upon a miscellaneous congregation of people by the technical phraseology of the sporting world would perhaps have little effect and would be understood only by the few. Endeavor to explain the same truth to the ordinary and unlearned congregation in the technical language of the schools or your theological books, and you would, perhaps, have no better success than before. The fault lies not with the truth, but with expression of it in language. Hence sometimes when you have the feeling that your preaching is not understood, inquire and see whether the blame is not with yourself rather than a lack of intelligence on the part of the people. Now bear this in mind, that notwithstanding there is confusion of tongues—and this in the higher circles as well as in the lower—there is still a common language which is generally understood and spoken by all classes without regard to the occupations, the schools, or the amusements of life. It is the good, strong, vigorous English of every-day life—the language with which men of every degree express their wants, their longings, their affections, their hopes, and impress their thoughts upon their friends. Forget the long, hard and technical words which you learned in the schools and with which you are so familiar, and translate your ideas into this common language of the people, and you need never complain that your thoughts are too great or too deep to be understood. This in some measure explains the power of Mr. Moody, and is a reason why he is heard gladly by all classes alike. The highest culture has the simplest expression.—Recorder.

Method may be used or abused. A blind devotion to cast-iron systems may fetter and devitalize. To ignore established processes and trust entirely to spontaneity is to allow one's power to evaporate. The point is to avoid slavish subservience to and presumptuous disregard of time-honored usages. One's methods may prove an incubus, and the absence of them may produce aimless freedom and a wanton intoxication of spirits. We have seen men dominated by their plans and systems, and others ruined by the lack of them. The golden mean is wisdom. Order is heaven's first law. True method is economy of time and labor.—Texas Advocate.

Friendship is the noblest, purest relation that can exist between two human beings, and to be able to make a friend is one of the most glorious distinctions between man and the creatures beneath him.—George Dawson.

MORELAND—Died at his home near Homer, Claiborne parish, La., on Wednesday, Nov. 17, 1897, J. B. MORELAND, aged sixty-six years eight months and seven days, after an illness of about three weeks of malarial fever. He had been for about fifty years a consistent and pious member of the M. E. Church, South, illustrating his profession by an upright walk and godly conversation. Kind and affectionate in disposition, he was a useful member of society, and gained many friends. Early in life, in Alabama, he married Mary A. Phillips, with whom he spent many years in happy wedlock. She and a considerable family of grown-up children still live to mourn their loss, which is his gain. May the good Lord comfort them in their affliction! "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord; they rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

A FRIEND.

SMITH—Mrs HAGERTY SMITH (nee Matchett) was born Feb. 11, 1817, and departed this life Jan. 30, 1897. She joined the Methodist Church when fifteen years of age, and lived a consistent member until God took her home. It is hard to part with one so dear, but the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away; blessed be the name of the Lord.

My heart swells with emotion of the deepest grief. There seems to gather about me great billows of sorrow. The brightness of the noon-day's sun can not dispel the gathering clouds of sadness, as I realize that I shall never again hold sweet council with you; but God, in his infinite wisdom, has seen best to take her home. Grief-stricken, yet submissive, we bow to the will of our Father. May the Lord comfort those whom he has so sadly bereaved! Dear one in your heavenly home, you are still dear to us. Though angels' robes are gathered about you, yet your influence will live and strengthen us to meet you in that home where there is no parting.

H. E. HERRING

JONES—ROBT. R. JONES, youngest son of Alfred and Mary Jones, of Big Point, Jackson county, Miss., was born Aug. 19, 1876, and fell on sleep Dec. 9, 1897, aged twenty-one years three months and twenty days.

Robert was a model of morality from his childhood, having never been heard to utter an oath or an unchaste word, but early in life realized that morality did not satisfy the yearnings of his soul for happiness, and threw himself in loving, obedient faith upon the Lord Jesus Christ as the only name given under heaven or among men whereby he must be saved, and thereby realized the blessedness of adoption into God's family as an heir of God and joint heir with the Lord Jesus Christ.

He joined the M. E. Church, South, at Big Point Chapel, and although not demonstrative, lived a consistent Christian life till called to the church triumphant. We would say to the bereaved loved ones: Grieve not as those who have no hope, for Robert is not dead; he has only gone before.

WM. T. BEALL, L. E.

BROOKS—Bro. HENRY BROOKS was born Feb. 17, 1817, aged eighty years seven months and twenty-seven days.

Sister MARY MARGARET BROOKS (nee Anderson) was born June 9, 1820, aged seventy-seven years four months and eleven days.

Bro. and Sister Brooks were married Jan. 6, 1843. Bro. Brooks died at his home near Linton, Miss., on the fourteenth of October, 1897, and only six days afterward, on the twentieth of October, his beloved companion of almost a half century went to join him on the other shore. She first joined the Baptist Church. After her marriage to Bro. Brooks she joined the Methodist Church with him, and both have been loyal members of the same ever since. God blessed this union with four children—two boys and two girls—three of whom preceded their parents to the land beyond. Sister N. S. E. McRee is the only surviving child. Also a step-daughter, Sister S. M. Brooks, and an adopted daughter, Sister S. E. Boykin (nee Parker), remain to mourn their departure.

May the Lord comfort them in their sad bereavement, and prepare them to meet papa and mama where partings do not come!

Papa and mama are at rest;
Their journey now is o'er.
O may you meet them with the blest
On Canaan's happy shore!

Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.

The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take-up, convenient foot rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearing polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF THREADING—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell, without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and seissless and are very durable.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

It is said that there are more Methodists in Philadelphia than in any other city of the world. There are over 40,000.

President McKinley has signed the joint resolution passed by Congress for the relief of miners in the Klondyke region.

The Brooklyn aldermen have adopted an ordinance compelling the trolley companies to provide cars for the accommodation of smokers.

Mayor Strong, of New York, has appointed Mrs. Jennie June Croly an inspector of schools for five years. As an authoress, Mrs. Croly's name has been familiar for many years, and as president of the Sorosis and of the Federation of Women's Clubs has earned the right to be considered in a peculiar sense a representative of her sex.

All the members of the Louisiana State Board of Health have resigned. They were asked to do so by the commercial bodies of New Orleans.

When Congress reassembled three weeks ago, it was understood that the Hawaiian annexation treaty would be promptly called up in the Senate. Now, however, the same confidence does not prevail; but, on the contrary, there is a marked indisposition to bring up the treaty.

The Chicago aldermen have come to the conclusion that they are not in receipt of large enough salaries, and have passed an ordinance raising them from $3 a week to $1500 a year. The vote was taken under a suspension of the rules, and stood at 56 for the increase to 8 against.

A camp meeting of 2000 Indians was held a few weeks since in South Dakota, and among the questions discussed were many having a social and educational, as well as a religious, bearing. Evangelical work among them is conducted by a union of the Congregational and Presbyterian Churches, taking in the Sioux of North and South Dakota and Nebraska.

The hottest question in Congress is that of the repeal of the civil service law. At present it obscures all others. The spoilsmen have been greatly irritated by a statement of Carroll D. Wright, commissioner of labor, that had the civil service rules been applied to the appointments under the last census, at least two millions would have been saved to the government.

FOREIGN.

In the hospital at Brisbane, Australia, the use of the Brand method of treating 1902 typhoid patients has reduced the mortality from 14.8 to 7.5 per cent.

A special dispatch from Shanghai asserts that China will acquiesce in Germany's retention of Kiao Chau. Russia and France are irritated at Germany's precipitancy in thus prematurely disclosing her plans to England and Japan in a manner likely to defeat the objects in view.

The total output of sugar from the Hawaiian islands for the year just closing, according to the figures of the Hawaiian Sugar Planters' Association, transmitted to the State Department by United States Consul General Haywood, is put down as 248,567 tons, as against 248,555 tons last year. The planters have had more trouble than usual, on account of desertions, especially with the Japanese.

The adoption by the United States of the system of countervailing duties on sugar imported from countries paying a bounty on exports has placed the governments of continental Europe in rather an awkward position with respect to the bounties they pay on the beet sugar exported through their markets. The ability of the beet-producing countries of Europe to unload their immense crops upon the English and American markets has greatly injured the cane-sugar producing countries.

Lieutenant-General Marin, captain-general of Puerto Rico, is about to resign, owing to the impossibility of reconciling the different parties in the island and of establishing autonomy.

According to all the reports which are permitted to reach the outer world from the scene of the trouble along the northern frontier of India, the British government has the most serious disturbance on its hands which it has had to encounter since the Transvaal war, twenty years ago.

The Japanese do not intend to rest supinely under the classification of the colonial government of New South Wales, which last month decided to include the Japanese in the Chinese restriction act, denoting them "as other colored people." The Japanese consul at Sydney has protested against the proposed legislation.

Everybody who is at all interested in music will be delighted with an article which the famous prima donna, Madame Nordica, has written for the next volume of THE YOUTH'S COMPANION. In it she interweaves many incidents in her professional career with hints that can not fail to be of the highest value to students of vocal music. Its interest is not limited to students alone, however. She tells of how she sang before the Tsar of Russia on the night before his assassination by the Nihilists, and gives many anecdotes of celebrated singers, which all lovers of good stories will appreciate.

KINDERGARTEN TRAINING-CLASS.

A training class for young women who desire to fit themselves for kindergarten teaching will be opened in this city, Jan. 4, under the auspices of the Free Kindergarten Association of New Orleans. The class will be under the direction of Miss Katherine W. Hardy, of Louisville, Ky., who, during an experience of several years in this city, has shown herself a teacher of exceptional ability.

The course will cover two years of eight months each, and the tuition will be sixty dollars for the course. Applicants should be at least eighteen years of age, and should have passed successfully through a good high school course or its equivalent.

A written application should be sent to Miss Katherine W. Hardy, 1408 First street, New Orleans.

OUR HOPE AND STAY.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

We are often weak and weary,
We are often faint and frail,
The eyes are blurred with weeping,
And the lips are wan and pale.
But Christ is our strength and gladness,
His love sustains the soul,
In the day of our utmost dearth and loss,
His love can make us whole.

We can never perish, holding
Fast to his tender hand;
His care will lead us safely
Through all the desert land.
The blessed love of Jesus,
And the look in his gentle face,
Are cordial to the fainting,
Are full of light and grace.

Oh! love divine be ours,
In the night-time and the day;
Forever with us, Jesus,
Remain our hope and stay;
Thine be the love that keeps us,
Ours be the love that clings,
Till we rest beneath thy banner,
Oh, gracious King of kings!

THE LITERATURE OF THE BIBLE.

By H. M. DuBose, D. D.

Superstitious veneration and servile credullty have made the Bible an unnatural and impracticable book. Mysticism has invested its statements with a duplex, a triple, and, in some instances, a manifold meaning, appreciable to the individual mind in proportion to its spiritual or hierarchical rank. Scholasticism has dogmatized away its simplicity and the straightforwardness of its doctrinal teachings. Bnt it is, in fact, the most comprehensible of all writings, as it is the most natnral. It developed on the plane of a simple historical, discnrsive, descriptive and technical literatnre. Its statementa and teachings are chronologically and logically related. It is literature in a pre-eminent sense. In its every part it is reforable to a literary motive, a literary necessity, and a literary law. The recognition of this fact is of comparatively recent date. It is a discovery second only in importance to the settlements of the canon and a belief in its inspiration. Criticism may now be regarded as tnrning on this fact. A new era of Bible reading and Bible stndy has begun, and it is marked by this thonght: that the Bible is a book literally instinct with hnman interest and sympathy; not a riddle, bnt a revelation; not a jumble of sibyl speeches, bnt a story of life, of love, and of hope; in form and in spirit a literatnre susceptible of all the uses to which any human composition may be put. Every shade of sentiment, every ideal of literary art, and every degree of literary taste is illustrated in that marvelous ensemble known as the Scriptures. These are the things which the teachers of religion mnst recognize, explore and apply as the means of making the Bible the best-loved, the best-understood, and the most-sought-after book in the world. Such an understanding and nse of the Bible is the cure for a multitude of the fanatical misinterpretations of Scripture which vex the religious life and thought of the day. When the evangel is grasped as a whole, and its literary consistency is perceived, it is seen to be pervaded by an air of unexampled sanity; nothing is strained, nothing is unreal; the sense of proportion is never lost, and the "mysteries" about which so many talk disappear. It holds no mystery save the mystery of God and life.

A great service was meant to be done readers of the Bible by somebody (scribe or doctor, rabbi or monk, it mattera little now) who divided the holy books into arbitrary chapters, and disjointed and oftentimes fragmentary verses; but much loss and confnsion came along with the small gain of convenience. The process of infinite bisecting and isolation destroyed the original literary form, disturbed the continuity of the narrative and the reasoning, and put into the hands of the ignorant and careless a means of wresting the primitive meaning of the treatises. The new movement emancipates the text from the shackles of disarrangement, and restores it to its original order and simplicity. It is not too much to say that this has made the Bible a new book. Thns restored, what was once a landscape fnrrowed and fissured, as by an earthqnake, becomes a landscape whose unity of hillside and vale is swarded with continuous green. Thus a completed ideal is presented to the mind which of itself differentiates in that natural order essential to an understanding of the narrative or discourse.

The Bible is the very Word of God, as containing the trnths of salvation, and these truths were got into it throngh a divine ordinative, and not by chance; bnt, as litoratnre, it was created in a natnral and orderly way. It grew as life grows, as the visible form of the church has grown; but it grew about the divine ideals and infolded a divine spirit. That its books were composed in the ordinary way, for immediate nse and ends, can not be donbted; some after carefnl and painstaking inquiry; some after long seasons of meditation; some were spoken in the exigencies of State, hot with sudden passion and terrible with swift invective; some nnder the afflatns of rapt sonls as hymns of praise, as idyllic life stories, or as the burden of love-telling; some as warnings; some as sonl-soothing promises; some as dread or joyful forelookings; bnt all as the messages of those who had whereof to tell, and might not refrain, since the Spirit of God impelled thereto.

Perhaps it is not generally understood that much of the Bible, possibly the greater part of it, is a compilation, derived from original sonrces. In such cases the compiler, or compilers, mnst be regarded as invested with the same anthority as the original writors. In a few cases the books appear to be the work of coliaborators. The discovery of this fact led to the development of a destructive criticism in the middle Tubingen schooi, the theory being that the evidence of several styles of anthorship in a book, as in the prophecy of Daniel and the Book of Job, vitiated its anthority. A later stndy has accepted this evidence of diversity as of surpassing interest, and as snggestive of a principle of revelation consonant with the most enlightened views of spiritnal development and the laws of progress. Where the former critioism was destructive the latter is constructive and restorative. The inspiration and authority of the Scriptures do not depend upon particular or individnal authorship; nor is snoh a claim made in the books themselves. They have one Author above all, the Holy Ghost, who is the avoucher of their truth. If many hands contributed to their creation, their integrity is not lessened.

It is likely that in most cases the original substance of the Scriptures was not committed to writing, bnt was preserved orally for generations, until it permeated the national heart, and from being thns impressed on fleshly tables, it came to have a permanent written form, snch as we now possess. This we know was true in the case of the discourses and parables of our Lord, and of the sermons and teachings of the early disciples. The Book of Deuteronomy is a striking illnstration of how a body of sacred literature would come to find a permanent and consistent form after existing as literary fragments and traditions for centuries. On the eve of the passage of the tribes of Israel over Jordan, Moses took his farewell of the elders and of the congregation of the people. This ceremony lasted a number of days. Dnring this time Moses delivered several lengthy orations to the tribes, and composed a farewell song or hymn, in some sense his own requiem. In a later time these orations were gathered together and articulated by means of pertinent explanations. The Book of the Covenant, with the ritnal of the blessings and cnrsings of Gerezim and Ebal, which had been laid in the ark, was introdnced between the second and third orations, of which they were an interpretation; the farewell song closed the anthology, and the whole was rounded off with a lengthy addendum, or foot note, meant to be a brief character sketch of the great leader and legislator. This book, the most spiritnal and sublime in the Old Testament, was not at first considered to be one of the books of Moses, and dnring the reign of the early kings of Israel was unknown or neglected. It was discovered in the reign of Josiah, and its reading brought about a great national reformation. This fixed its place in the nnmber of the sacred treatises, as the Holy Ghost had ordained.

Many attempts have been made to restore the Scriptures to their original literary form. Some early translator, or copyist, introdnced the section markings, which were meant to segregate homogeneous passages; but the effect was small. "Interwoven gospels," and kindred attempts at interphrasing, have afforded some help; but where the "interwoven" literatnre has gained in narrative order, it has lost in spiritnal effect. The story stands ont, bnt the life-power is obscnred. The Lambeth Palace Version took a long stride in throwing the literary fabric into something like its primitive ontline; but the best service is being done in our own time in snch works as Prof. Moulton's "Modern Readers' Bible," in which an entirely new and natnral literary arrangement is presented which gives to the whole a fascination so strange and engaging as to snggest that a new revelation has been making. It is as the breaking of the seals. The old, dead world lives and moves like the apocalyptic visions.

There is one thing which can not, I believe, be overlooked in Bible stndy without confnsion to the student, and that is, that the literary motive and the spiritual teaching of the Scriptnres go together. To fully appreciate and apply the teaching, the motive mnst be nnderstood. Nobody is competent to teach the Scriptures nntil he has explored the relations—doctrinal, historical and literary—of the passages he seeks to nse; so manifold are the sympathies and affinities of trnth. This is not a question of classical scholarship, bnt of stndionsness. The information is within the reach of all. Lingnistic acquirements are desirable, and for certain uses of criticism necessary; bnt to understand the literary ideals and nses of the Scriptnres so as to strengthen spiritual teaching, a critical knowledge of Hebrew and Greek is not indispensable. Neither Christ nor any one of the twelve spoke or probably even read Hebrew. Their daily speech was Syriac, and their quotations of the Scriptnres were invariably made either from the Aramaic or the Septnagint Greek translations. Of all the men who contributed to the New Testament canon, St. Paul alone nnderstood classic Hebrew. That eloqnent Alexandrian, Apollos, who probably wrote the Epistle to the Hebrews, like his early illnstrious master, Philo, knew no Hebrew; and, like Philo, he knew Jndaism only through the Greek Septnagint. Lingnistic attainments are not to be disparaged, bnt a large familiarity with scriptural literatnre is possible to the man who knows only his mother tongne.

The settlement of the Jewish canon, like the creation of its several books, was a long history. In a great mass of national writings certain compositions were distinguished, and came to be especially venerated and looked npon as especially authoritative. The voice of God was heard in them, and the history of his goings was read in them. This was the law of a divine and providential selection. It is not necessary to know that the men who wrote or compiled these separate books nnderstood that they were contributing to the volume of a greater book that should remain to the end of the ages. They spoke the burden of their souls and faithfully portrayed the life of their times. They wrote with a purpose—a purpose of present and immediate use. A human judgment, divinely guided, put their work in the catalogue of authority. Many good, and no doubt inspired, writings were left out and perished, having served their day. The Book is eclectic. Not all that Jesus spake or that Paul wrote is in the New Testament. Was there a prophecy against Idumean Herod and his hordo of fanatical priests and doctors? Doubtless, bnt lost. Where are the "Annals of the Kings," so often referred to in the historical books compiled from them? Where is the Book of Enoch, and the Book of Noah, and the Songs of the Captives, which they would not sing by the river Chernb? The keepers of the "lively oracles" knew what was precious, and God helped them. How happily the judgment which made the canon was guided one can readily see by comparing the canonical books with those which narrowly escaped canonical rating, as, for instance, Tobit, Ecclesiasticus, and Maccabees. The first is an idyl of unparalleled beauty; the second, a book of transcendent wisdom; the last, an heroic and thrilling history; bnt each is marred by ethical or doctrinal blemishes, yet so slight are these as to be apparent only in an after study. But the Spirit knew.

What I hope to do in this writing is to suggest how much the Scriptures may be enhanced in interest, and how greatly their teaching force may be increased, if one brings to them the diligent and enthusiastic stndy which is so readily and constantly brought to outside classic literature. In addition to the high spiritnal use of the Bible, which every devout sonl understands, it is possible to find in it a perpetnal literary inspiration, and to derive from it the same intellectnal delight that is derived from the works of the Greek masters. "There are," exclaims Chateaubriand, "bnt two brilliant names and recollections in history—those of the Israelites and the ancient Greeks." In the same day one may read with equal enthusiasm Epictetus and Solomon; find loftier poetic visions in Job than in Homer or Æschylus; a statelier oratory in Moses than in Tully; a truer transformation in Ruth than in Ovid, and in the parables of the Master an art so exquisite, so complete, as that the finest Venetian vase can not suggest the delicacy of its structure and color.

Every writing in the Bible, as literatnre, may be studied in the light of its literary motive, its historical situation, its anthological relations, and its historical preservation and destiny. Take the Book of Ruth. It is literature in the widest sense. No loftier literary motive, no more genuine literary purpose ever inspired any human writing. The literary ideal was a spiritnal parable; the literary motive was an idyl to celebrate the house of David, as that of the Æneid was to celebrate the descent and glory of Augustus. The historical situation of the Book of Ruth is the keystone of a regal genealogy. Its teaching is of unselfish friendship, of unutterable spiritual aspirations in the heart of a lonely girl, of purity in womanhood, of honor in manhood, and of human love—the reciprocal love of man and woman—with a conclusion so natural, so tender, so real, that the heart centers on it forever.

"We know not which, the husband or the wife,
Had purer soul, or more of happiness."

The historical exigency sealed here the highest type and passion of old-world life, and the Spirit gave to the book of the story of the Moabitess this meaning, "The kingdom of heaven is like unto this." And so men heard it, and sang it, and believed it as the best, for they saw the best in it, even in the words of Ruth,

"And where also,
If aught but death part me and thee;"

and when the best was gathered into one—the enduring anthology—this was not permitted to be left ont. Its preservation is known, its destiny can not be mistaken; it has common hope with the other treasures of the Book. As long as there are hearts to love and homes of ministry, the Book of Ruth, with the others, will last. The same motives which moved the Jew and the early Christian to reverence and preserve these books moves the generations of the present. They are the world's best. This thought is of man, but it was first of God. The Bible is a garden of delight. Its trees are the Paradise trees, and not the wormwood of El Sakkim; it is a song of rejoicing, and not a canticle of sorrow; it is the history and prophecy of an ever-rising, expanding, perfecting race, and not the Iliad of a stricken, blighted humanity. This is the Book to love and study.

"Awake, O north wind; and come, thou south;
Blow upon my garden,
That the spices thereof may flow out."

TRUSTEES AGAIN.

A QUESTION OF IMPORTANCE.

Mr. Editor: Recently through your columns we had some conflicting ideas about the powers and possibilities of trustees. Bro. A. F. Watkins brought ont, in good style, a true view of the points then under discussion.

But there are other questions of moment pertaining to the composition of our Boards of Trustees, which greatly need some legislation to settle. Such a degree of uncertainty exists as leads to variant rulings by different presiding elders. Some of these hard worked and harrassed brethren rule that only one Board must be constituted for holding all the churches within one circuit. Others equally wise and careful hold that each church-building ought to have its own Board. The weight of law in our Discipline appears to be in favor of the first view—e. g., Question 24 in Quarterly Conference proceedings; also Paragraph 204 (which is almost conclusive); 423, first part, only a little less so, and 201. On the other side may be reckoned 426—specially the clause, "the Board of Trustees of any church"—not using the terms, "circuit" or "station," as is elsewhere written; also last two lines of 200 and first lines of 203. Thus paragraphs very near in position seem wide apart in teaching.

I wish to show some reasons why we ought to have the law well defined, and in the direction of establishing a separate Board of Trustees for each piece of church property. Stations and some compact circuits do not suffer the inconveniences arising in wide-spreading circuits from the interpretation usually put on our uncertain sounding law—that first mentioned, viz.: one Board for, maybe, eight or ten churches. However, even in these compact works the application of 423 is difficult, and a part of it is never complied with, thus bringing all our law into contempt. Who has ever seen a deed from a set of trustees of a former circuit to another Board for the newly created circuit or station? This suggests the further inconveniences that arise in settling who makes up the Board of Trustees when a change is wrought in the composition of a circuit. All of us know how frequently this is deemed expedient by the Bishop and his council.

Again, on large circuits it is practically impossible to get the widely scattered members of the one traditional Board together. Even Quarterly Conference does not assemble them. Hence nine-tenths of our Boards never secure organization. Therefore when time for annual report rolls around none is brought in (unless the preacher in charge prepares it), because there is no president or secretary to see that such report goes in. In exceptional cases, where the Board is organized, the several church-buildings are widely severed—sometimes in different counties. Where are trustees found who will trouble themselves enough to go to two or more court houses to obtain such items as 3, 4 and 5 under Question 24, Paragraph 87—"Where are the title papers, etc? Give book and page." Much of the looseness of administration and consequent losses to our church occur because of "magnificent distances."

Again, when a transaction with our Board of Church Extension takes place, such as securing a donation or loan, there is great difficulty in getting the members of the large and scattered Board to agree to the reasonable demands of "Uncle Davy" & Co. Those trustees who expect never to use the house as their own place of worship are unwilling to take the personal obligation required. Thus laceration of feeling and sometimes final failure ensue.

I submit that preachers in charge have enough labor, responsibility and opprobrium without having this added, simply for lack of a well-defined and compact law about Boards of Trustees. Everyone of the difficulties above suggested (and they are of frequent, if not constant, recurrence) may be precluded by a little wise legislation. I would have each church-building deeded to a small Board (3 or 5) of persons living near by, and if possible belonging to that society. This Board can be easily organized and readily notified. At hand, they can protect the church-building and its appurtenances from damage and desecration and aid in securing improvements. In fine, such a body might be relied on to see to the honor of God's house. This, alas! is frequently and grossly neglected under our present system or lack of system.

As to parsonages on our circuits, a slightly different plan would serve best. A larger Board, say seven or nine, should hold this piece of property in which all parts of the work are about equally interested. On this Board let every society on the circuit have a representative if possible, and the home church two or three members. To avoid needless multiplication of names on the Quarterly Conference roll, the same persons might be on both the church and parsonage boards. But a few additional names to be written and called on the Quarterly Conference roll ought not to weigh against the many and cogent reasons for allowing each society to have a Board of Trustees accessible to its buildings and to the records which they are required annually to report upon. To place the needful legislation in our Discipline, the General Conference has only to substitute for Paragraph 204, words like these: "Each piece of church property shall have its own Board of Trustees—not less than three—consisting of capable persons, and if possible, living near the same; provided that the Board for each parsonage may be taken from all parts of the charge or district, as the case may be." This, with a few verbal changes such as the Book Editor can make to adapt other paragraphs to this idea, and the striking out of first ten lines of 423 is all required to deliver us from much confusion and "dead-letter" law. Shall we not move in this direction of definite improvement? I hope so.

THE TRUE SEER.

BY JAMES BELL.

There lived upon this earth a man of God,
Who moved abroad with glory in his face,
Seeing God's secret purpose in the race,
Even in the meanest that life's pathway trod.
In broken lives, marred by misfortune's rod,
[redacted]
Through battered features struggling gleams of grace,
A touch of heaven that thrilled the earthen clod.

Love glorified for him all mortal things;
Gave him a heart divinely pitiful;
Taught him to heal the wounds affliction brings,
And be to others' failures merciful.
That man of God still lives, and still he sings
Of love that makes the whole world beautiful.

Yea, all things speak to him of love sublime,
Love high as heaven, broad as the common earth,
And colored now with sadness, now with mirth.
Eternal spirit clothed in weeds of time.
For living in love's fair and genial clime,
Where sympathy and hope can know no dearth,
He cheers the warm, pulsating, human hearth,
While still his heart beats to the heavenly chime.

Though oftentimes along dark ways he fares,
Hearing sad voices moaning all around;
Though sometimes droop his shoulders 'neath the cares,
Wherewith the weary lives of men abound,
Yet carries he clear light within, and dares
To walk the world as if on hallowed ground.

LETTER FROM KENTUCKY.

BY REV. CHAS. F. EVANS, D. D.

This hails from the capital of the "Blue Grass Country," famous as far as Anstralia and Japan for the beauty of its women and the quality of its horses, and as far as the English tongue is spoken for the imperial gifts and achievements of very many of its men. I have a mind to tell you of some of these, and preface these lines by saying that, though but an hours' ride from the famous Bourbon county, the fount of a ruinous exhilaration, I am still loyal to a sober record.

At a great sale of blooded coursers last Spring, sporting men from France and Germany, and others a few days ago, from Gotham and Japan, were here to buy the fleetest in the world for the road and for the track. For two generations great wealth and skill have been invested in the horse "culture," and one needs to reassure his eyes lest they read amiss the fabulous prices sane men are paying for stock and stock farms. The Belmont place, for instance, has four horses that cost the great banker the neat sum of two hundred thousand dollars, and a pretty little white dog for which he paid only eight thousand dollars. Of course, we have a cur or two that cost hardly so much, and now and then a horse that does not need a curb. This is also said to be the greatest market in the world for mules, though a number of States have gone zealously to work in competition.

This is the birthplace of H. F. Given and J. P. Harrison, affectionately remembered at Carondelet Street Church, and of Joel T. Hart, the sculptor of the bronze statue of Henry Clay which graces the corner of Canal and Royal streets. The famous Hiram Powers said, "Hart is the best sculptor in the world;" and as I looked upon his masterpiece, "The Triumph of Chastity," recently destroyed in the burning court-house of this city, I thought human genius could not achieve more than he.

The morning paper announces the death of an old citizen—whom Harriet Beecher Stowe made as famous as herself—George Clark, the black hero of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," whose familiar face has for many years been sought here by tourists from all parts of our country.

Here is the Transylvania University, for seven years presided over by Bishop Bascom; and until within a year past the modest home, and more modest brick study adjoining, of Methodism's greatest orator, and the author of the "Protest" in "1844" of the Southern delegates, has been curiously visited by his admirers. By the way, Transylvania University once sheltered as its gifted senior Jefferson Davis, and his boarding-place is around the corner from this parsonage. Going hence to the site of this famous University, now in hands of the Campbellites, one must pass the bronze statue of Gen. Jno. C. Breckenridge, who represented this district in Congress, and who lived in this city—and whose name suggests that of his near kinsman and fellow-citizen, Rev. Robt. J. Breckenridge, equally famous in Presbyterian annals. If you deflect but a little from the path, you will pass by the home of the gallant Gen. Jno. Morgan, who when the Federals once closely pursued him through the town hurriedly rode into the hall of his house and took his wife's kiss without delay of dismounting.

Of course, everyone knows that Henry Clay—"The Mill-boy of the Slashes"—thrice a candidate for the presidency—fifty years in public life, elected Speaker of the House the first day he entered the Hall of Representatives, and continued Speaker for fourteen years—a distinction never rivalled before or since—Henry Clay gratefully remembered by Louisianians, because he introduced the bill enabling the territory of Orleans to form a State Constitution and government and be admitted into the Union; Henry Clay, the purest of statesmen and the most eloquent on this continent, was from this region. We love to remind our children that "Ashland" is just outside the corporation, and was one of our first citizens.

The unfortunate Tom Marshall—brilliant as an electric flash, as a scholar and logician the superior of Clay, and the only one who dared to rival his gifts of speech, but who never knew how to control his upper—or lower manhood, lived here also—and many anecdotes are told of his erratic genius. He and R. J. Breckenridge, then a lawyer, were opponents of Clay in a celebrated law case, and conspired to excell themselves in order to defeat the most successful jurist of the commonwealth. In the forensic encounter they never did so well, and rested in quiet assurance of victory till Clay rose to the occasion and swept away their art and learning like a school-boy brushing spider-webs spun across the path. Breckenridge, in after life describing Clay's triumph, said, "Clay with one wave of his hand sent me into the ministry and Marshall to the bottle." Bishop Kavanagh was a great admirer of Marshall—for his eloquence, learning, generosity, magnanimity—and often chided him for his inebriety. Marshall in turn venerated and loved the portly and unhandsome Bishop, and frequently joked him upon his want of proportion and unsaintly appearance. One morning the venerable Bishop, on his way downtown, discovered the lawyer and statesman emerging from his hay-loft, where he had spent the night, and said: "Tut! tut, Tom! I am surprised at you." "Bishop!" he replied, "why are you and I both like the 'Man of Galilee'?" "Can't see any resemblance, Tom," replied the Bishop. "Well," said Marshall, "I have not where to lay my head and you are without form and comeliness."

Speaking of the "Old Man Eloquent," as they called the Bishop, reminds me to say that his home was just across the street from my parsonage, and that he used to be pastor of my charge. So also was Richard Deering, once at Felicity Street in your city; also Posthress Stevenson, Tydings, Peter Cartwright, Lynn, L. D. Huston, B. M. Messick and Bishop Hargrove. I feel very small in such a company of brave, gifted and noble men—but I am content to stand in my lot and do the best I can, looking to a divine source for inspiration and strength, and to his mercy for success.

To the Louisiana Conference, and my many old and dear friends in my native State, and especially to my friends in your city, and more especially at the ADVOCATE office, I wish a happy Christmas and New Year.

IN AND AROUND "THE HUB."

MR. EDITOR: I have been a long time in fulfilling my promise to "take my pen in hand to drop you a few lines," but doubt not that the readers of the ADVOCATE have borne the silence with commendable fortitude.

Martin College is having a prosperous term under the energetic administration of Dr. Barker and his accomplished wife, and, although about twenty girls from Mississippi and Alabama were lost to us by the panic occasioned by the yellow fever, coupled with the stringent quarantine regulations, there are still about as many on the college roll as there have been for years, and a goodly number expected to come in with the second term of five months.

The ADVOCATE, always a welcome visitor, was especially so during those dread Autumn days when the dread of yellow fever hung like a pall over all the Gulf States, and the long line of "refugee trains" became a familiar sight. As Pulaski, and, indeed, the entire plateau of Middle Tennessee, is above the "fever range," numbers of panic-stricken people sought safety here.

Perhaps no more pathetic incident, occurring in connection with the fever, was known than the case of Miss Annie Redfield, a Mississippi girl who will long have reason to remember the "Fall of '97." On the very day on which "Mississippi and the rest of the world" quarantined against the fated little city of Edwards, two young ladies from that place entered Martin College as boarders for the ten months' term. They were Misses Eva Hamilton, a niece of Dr. Hunter, the president of the Mississippi State Board of Health, and Annie Redfield, a sister of the mayor of Edwards. As the fever cloud drew darker and closer around Edwards, it was painful to witness the agonizing suspense of these two girls cut off from any communication with home save by telegraph, and depending largely upon the Associated Press reports for news of those who had been stricken with the fever. One by one the members of the family of Miss Redfield were stricken down, her brothers, four sisters and her idolized mother taking it in rapid succession. She bore it all with unexampled fortitude until she saw in the list of those "seriously ill" Mrs. Redfield, Sr., and her daughter, little Lilian. This was followed in a few hours by a telegram from a friend, who was himself a corpse a few days later, "Your mother and Lilian both dead." I turn away from a grief so sacred, yet borne with the fortitude of the heroines of olden times. It is pleasant to relate that Miss Hamilton's family, who were on a large plantation four miles from Edwards, escaped the fever entirely.

The great State Centennial at Nashville was certainly a success from many points of view, though we hear from some of the pulpits that the financial profits will not compensate for the moral deterioration occasioned by the introduction of many evils, especially among that high-toned (?) upper element of society of which lovely woman forms so large a contingent. The newspapers chronicled faithfully the repeated cards and wine suppers given to distinguished guests, and some of the names prominent there are prominent also on the rolls of some of the leading churches, those churches which—it is being claimed openly—are losing their grip upon the masses. Perhaps it is true that the church has one law for cities and another for small towns and country churches, and, perhaps, people in "society"—"swell church society," at least—should be free from comment; but as it is said that "the cat can look at the king," I suppose that I, a vender of small literary wares, may be allowed to gather up the crumbs that fall from the tables set by the great city "dailies," whose reporters have uppermost seats in the synagogues, and are the most welcome guests at the great society gatherings.

The Tennessee Centennial was, no doubt, the most typical of the real South ante-bellum, as well as post-bellum, of any that has been or will yet be celebrated. New Orleans is cosmopolitan, and Atlanta, being the gateway through which sweeps all the wealth and culture of both sections of the country, did not exhibit so strikingly that delightful provincialism which is seen at its best in this State, and which makes it the favorite resort for the dialect novelist in his search for "material."

It was at Nashville that the "cracker"—and not the Tennessee cracker alone, as neighboring States sent a large contingency—was seen in all his or her glory. The doctrines of "extremes meeting" was certainly exemplified when on the streets of "Vanity Fair" you saw a benignant patriarch, with flowing beard and slouch hat of a pattern popular "befo' the wah," blue jeans trousers short in the skirts and hitched up by home-knit white cotton "gallusses," seeming to have stepped right out of one of Craddock's novels, and bowing affably to everyone who passed, especially if she was a lady, in which case the hat was touched or removed entirely. His good wife beside him in a costume of the "sixties," they looked with loving admiration on everything that bore the marks of home production, and smiled superciliously at everything "furrin." The whole difference between "you-uns" and "we-uns" was embodied in that smile. There was a fine spirit of independence and contentment about them that I, for one, admire immeasurably. They touched elbows with the families who now boast of affiliation with counts and earls, and held their heads as high as if they had been "goin' to meetin'" in "Lonesome Hollow;" they were jostled—not moved—by the dapper Yankee who, perhaps, stopped long enough to take out his note book and jot them down as an interesting species of "native;" they gazed with innocent wonder at the softly stepping "heathen Chinee," who was so largely in evidence, and wondered at the slippered and bearded Turk who accompanied his whirling and bowing and knife-swallowing with such unearthly wailings.

There was one place, however, in which the interest of their souls shone straight through their honest eyes, and another where they were not afraid to laugh with the merriest. The first was the "Battle of Gettysburg," where, with bated breath, they watch the struggle for "Little Round Top," and ask to be shown Pickett's last charge "into the jaws of death, into the mouth of hell." The second was the "Old Plantation," where the darkeys were so irresistibly funny that it didn't take any time to "laugh a quarter's worth," and where, strange to say, the people who seemed to enjoy it most were those who had been familiar with such scenes all their born days. Going along with the rest of the "hoosiers" I would have been happy, but that there was a flaw in my enjoyment of both these spectacles. I could but notice in the first that the artist always represented his "rusty Rebel" as being "on the run" with coat-tails flying in the air, and his blue-coat pursuer who never did run fast enough to overtake him, and that in the "Old Plantation" Sambo was sometimes too careful of his final "r's" and "g's" for one whose black covering was more than "skin-deep."

Fisk University, however, stands near to where "Vanity Fair" then stood, and as Vanderbilt is also close by, perhaps after awhile our darkeys and our oracker, too, will learn to speak so "proper" that the dialect writers will find that their "occupation's gone."

The home of Charles Egbert Craddock (Miss Murfree) is only a few minutes' run from Nashville at Murfreesboro, where the scene of one of her best novels, "Where the Battle Was Fought," is laid. All the world is talking of "Hall Caine's" new novel, "The Christian," whose plot and motive have been handled mercifully and otherwise by the professional critic. Dr. D. C. Kelley recently took the book for his subject—he dispensed with a text—at McKendree Church in Nashville, the daily papers extending its circulation by laying it before their readers by breakfast next morning. The reverend Doctor thinks the book is calculated to do much good, though he wonders why Mr. Caine gave it the title it bears. I read the book in serial form, and must confess that I had to learn from the critics that it is the "greatest book of the century." Placed in the balance against Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables," or Thackeray's "Vanity Fair," I fear that Mr. Caine's book would have an upward tendency. Amidst a jumble of inconsistencies and contradiction, it seemed to me that the author always had two assertions to prove: First, that the church of the present day is a failure, and, secondly, that a woman may retain her high estate through all the compromising positions of a great city, whether she walked friendless and alone through the vice of the slums or stood before the footlights of the Varieties Theatre, the pet and darling of the fashionable world. A greater genius than Hall Caine—Nathaniel Hawthorne—has said that a woman's modesty is like the layers of skin on the bulb of a plant—it may be removed by imperceptible degrees, but you can not say just when it is gone, just when purity ceases and vice begins. Dr. Kelley thinks "Gloria," the heroine of the "Christian," a splendid type of womanhood. We read that at one time she discarded her feminine apparel for the clothing of one of her gentlemen (?) friends, and in that charming costume sings a song to her mixed audience that was enchanting. At another she goes with a "male friend" on the outside of a stage-coach to witness the "Derby races." She bets enthusiastically on her escort's blooded steed, and when she wins is so overjoyed that she throws her arms around his neck and kisses him publicly. She drinks with the men of the turf, including H. R. H. Prince of Wales, who reminds her that he has seen her on the stage. In a semi-intoxicated condition she goes to a drinking hall with a party of her fast friends, but becomes sober enough while there to realize that she "has lowered herself in the eyes of the man who brought her there by coming."

It is said that Ellen Terry, the English actress, is the model from which Mr. Caine drew his heroine. It is hard to know whether Mr. Caine intended to draw just the man he did in the "Christian," John Storm, or whether, having mixed his ingredients, the character escaped his control and just "drew itself." A less manly, less lovable character can not be imagined. If John Storm is a type of the "robust Christianity" of the day, then it is well to inquire, Whither are we drifting? Always weak and inconsistent, never satisfied with his lot in life, he goes through every stage of fanaticism until finally he becomes for the time a maniac, and decides to murder the girl he loves to save her from the contaminating influences of the stage. He goes to her room for the purpose of killing her, but changes his mind, not because it would be a crime, but because her beauty overpowers him. A death bed wedding scene winds up the last stormy chapter, and we feel actually a feeling of relief that John Storm is at last out of the way, and can commit no more wild absurdities in the name of religion. Mr. Caine received $100,000 for the first edition of the book.

Much comment has been indulged in recently by the secular press over the fact that the paid organists and choir singers in the fashionable city churches are in the habit of disguising under sacred words, and to slow time, airs that are the reverse of sacred, and that were introduced into the city by the strolling musicians of "Vanity Fair" and the "Streets of Cairo." I quote verbatim from a recent number of a prominent city daily: "A Bishop of the Methodist Church startled his hearers at a recent meeting up North one day last week, in the course of an address, by asserting that the songs that are being sung at Epworth League conventions and Sunday-school gatherings over the land are hardly decent enough for a bean dance; and now we are startled by the sensation of the organist at McKendree Church selecting 'Vanity Fair' music to play in church. The story goes that recently, after a wedding 'in high life,' after the minister had performed his part of the ceremony, and the wedding party had started to the door, the great organ pealed forth, 'There'll Be a Hot Time in the Old Town To-Night.' Those of the congregation who had taken in 'Vanity Fair' were shocked, thunder-struck, amazed, paralyzed! It was the first time they had ever heard such music in church, and they had a right to be astonished. They knew that the gay little organist sometimes gave them, 'When the Swallows Homeward Fly,' and even 'Dixie' and 'Yankee Doodle,' to slow and solemn time, but this 'Vanity Fair' music—that was another thing."

The "Hot Time" tune is evidently getting to be a favorite with church organists. In one of our churches, not many Sabbaths ago, after the benediction had been pronounced, the organist struck up that soul stirring air and continued it while the congregation was making its way out of church. Those—or some of those, at least—who were there say the music had a wonderful effect on the moving congregation. Anyone who has tried it knows how difficult it is to walk within hearing of music and not keep time with it. It is done unconsciously. Anyway, it was so with the good church-goers spoken of above. The man who told one reporter says their walk was something between "Wearily Wheat" and "Old Molly Haire," and all the while the organ was bellowing forth "There'll Be a Hot Time," etc. Other popular tunes with the organists of our up town churches are: "All Coons Are Alike to Me," "My Gal's a High-Born Lady."

A long time ago, Mr. Editor, when some of the good old fathers and mothers in Israel who loved the "prosperity of Zion" objected to the introduction into the Methodist Church of organs and paid choirs, they were laughed at for their pains and sneered at as "old fogies" when they said no good would come of it, and that it was as necessary for those who sang the praises of God to have pure hearts as for those who prayed to him or preached his Word.

I wonder if the condition of things in the Methodist Church to-day is a confirmation of their fears. We all know that no qualification spiritually is required of choirs and organists. It is purely the æsthetic taste that must be gratified in church music. If they sing with the "understanding," it matters not what "spirit" they may have. John Wesley is quoted as having said, "We must not give all the good tunes to the devil;" but there are some tunes sung in our churches that would be repudiated by his Satanic Majesty himself, granting he has the intelligence attributed to him by Milton in "Paradise Lost."

I turned over a "tune book" used by a popular evangelist in the Southern Methodist Church last Summer, and found song after song marked, "Tune, 'After the Ball.'" Thus the church picks up the cast-off tunes of the beer-gardens and profanes the house of prayer, and still people wonder that it can be said the church is losing its hold upon the common people.

All over the country we find devout Methodist families who do not allow even the best secular music to be heard in their own homes on the Lord's Day, and it is not to be expected that they will be otherwise than shocked to hear profane music in the church. The reporter quoted above is mistaken in his assumption when he says, "Everyone to his taste." It is presumed that the members of the churches in the city prefer that style of music, otherwise they would have none of it. The writer confesses to a preference for the old tunes, "How firm a foundation!" "Oh, for a closer walk with God!" etc.; but if the church people can stand it, he can. I do not believe that the majority of the church members sanction or approve of these innovations. I suppose they submit to them as one of the conditions of a "progressive age."

This is a long letter, and must be closed somewhere. Wishing you a "Merry Christmas" and a "Happy New Year," I am,

Very truly, MARY V. DUVAL.

ENJOYING CHRIST.

Can we enjoy him while living for ourselves, while indulging in sin, while prayerless and cold and dead? Does not God directly seek our highest happiness when he strips us of vain-glory and self-love, embitters the poisonous draught of mere human felicity, and makes us fall down before him lost in the sense of his desirableness and beauty? The connection between glorifying and enjoying him is, to my mind, perfect—one following as the necessary sequence of the other—and facts bear me out in this. He who has lost self go, and lives only for the honor of God, is the free, the happy man. He is no longer a slave, but has the liberty of the sons of God; for "him who honoreth me, I will honor." Satan has befogged you on this point. He dreads to see you ripen into a saintly, devoted, useful man. He hopes to overwhelm and ruin you; but he will not prevail. You have solemnly given yourself to the Lord; you have chosen the work of winning and feeding souls as your life-work, and can not, must not, go back. These conflicts are the lot of those who are training to be the Lord's true yoke-fellows. Christ's sweetest consolations lie behind crosses, and he reserves his best things for those who have the courage to press forward, fighting for them. I entreat you to turn your eyes away from self, from man, and look to Christ. Let me assure you, as a fellow-traveler, that I have been on the road, and know it well, and that by and by there won't be such a dust on it. You will meet with hindrances and trials, but will fight quietly through; and no human ear can hear the din of battle, nor human eye perceive fainting, or halting, or fail. May God bless you, and become to you an ever-present, joyful reality! Indeed he will; only wait patiently!—Life and Letters of Elizabeth Prentiss.

FROM REV. W. D. BASS.

I desire to say through the columns of the ADVOCATE to those pastors who have engaged my services for revival meetings, and to others who may invite me, that I shall use The Young People's Hymnal as my music book. Have made arrangements to get them from Bro. Baehman, our Conference colporter. Also correspondents will please address me at Tupelo, Miss., instead of Corinth.

In my revival work this year, as has been my custom heretofore, I shall do a helper's part by way of aiding stewards and pastors in looking after the finances of the church. I delight in taking collections on unpaid salaries, parsonage debts, church-buildings, etc., when requested to do so by pastors and stewards. I feel it my duty to give those pastors I help a lift at every corner of the work pertaining to the glory of the Master's kingdom. In my work I have found it very acceptable to both pastor and people to cover all the ground included in a genuine revival. I am anxious for the time to come when every pastor can report all assessments and collections paid in full at Conference.

While doing my evangelistic work, with all sincerity, in co-operation with pastors, I do not want any people with whom I work in making me remunerations for my labors to pay me, and then deduct the amount from the pastor's salary. That belongs to him, and it is generally small enough at best. Of course, I think the local-preacher evangelist should be rewarded for his labors just like any other "ox that treadeth out the corn." But I do not think that the pastor should pay all of the bill, if he does have the work done for himself. Hence, in order to do honest and acceptable work for God and the church, I prefer always in my work to know that the pastor's salary is provided for first. An evangelist who can not, by the help of the Good Spirit, lift things high enough above the regular channel in his revival work so as that his pecuniary awards will be sufficient to give him a living without interfering with the regular collections of the church, is not the man for a live pastor to employ. This is where I stand in the matter of finance. I have intended this to be my record with those pastors whom I have assisted in the past, and it shall be my record in the future. All other success depends upon a genuine revival of religion.

I intend to make this the best year of my life. It is my purpose, by the grace of God, to serve my blessed Master as a local elder of the M. E. Church, South, with all devotion and loyalty, so long as that office is under recognized law; and I suppose the local-preacher office will continue as long as the itinerancy does, and that will roll its wheels to the end of time. We are all brethren of the same church under law. Local preachers have always been and always will be agents in the church of God, co-operating with the itinerants in the propagation of the gospel of Christ. I hope all pastors may not fail to read the paragraph on the first page of the Nashville Christian Advocate, of Dec. 16, and to insure, perhaps, a little more attention given to it, I will copy it, as it is just what I want to conclude this little article with, and better said than I can say it: "It is a mistake for the new preacher to wait too long before beginning his protracted meetings. If he is a wise man, he will not postpone direct effort for the conversion of sinners till the end of the year. On the first and second rounds he should let it be known that he means to push the battle to the gates. In the towns and cities, also, the Fall and early Winter is the very best season for revivals. All the people are then at home, and the weather is not too severe to keep them from attending upon the services of the church. Would that we could blow a trumpet blast loud enough to be heard in every part of the land. A deep, all-pervading, genuine revival of religion is our greatest need. May God give us such a season of refreshing as we have never before known!"

I say, let all the pastors sing aloud, and spare not; by calling their forces together at once, and beginning a battle against the enemy of souls that will shake this continent with the shouts of one hundred thousand new-born souls by early spring. Some of the greatest displays of divine love and power I ever saw were during the Winter. People—saints and sinners—will attend an old-fashioned revival, rain or shine. Let no brother imagine I am blowing this bugle for mere selfish motives. I already have a good list of engagements for the Winter, and good meetings at those places will accumulate more invitations than I can attend to.

Mr. Editor, I shall endeavor to help circulate the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE as I have opportunity.

FAULT FINDING.

Fault finding is a practice that some people are skilled in, but one that no one should ever become a victim to. Persons who see grave errors in everybody and everything, are very apt to be wrong themselves. An habitual fault finder is never happy long at a time, for the reason that something is constantly happening to disturb his peace, and he is not only troubled, but those to whom he imparts the news of the malady are also troubled; and, strange as it may seem, those that find so much to object to in others, hardly ever find anything commendable in those in whom the objection is found. In the church and among Christians, fault finding is very much to be deplored. When we hear people condemning the church, and those in authority in the church, it makes no difference how much they profess, we are apt to doubt their possessing true Christian charity. More love among believers is what is most needed. "Love hides a multitude of faults;" "Charity suffereth long, and is kind," and, above all, is not "puffed up."

A brother once said to me: "If you will get what I have got, you will be all right." So I thought he considered himself better than I was, which may have been true, but I thought some one else should have said so. When I was a youth I used to go to hear a very old preacher preach. I remember once, while he was preaching, that he said, "I wish I was as good as Brother C." I thought, surely you are a better man than Mr. C., for you are a preacher. I could not understand why he said what he did then, but I think I do now. I think he was completely disarmed of fault finding, and could see all the beauties in his brother's life clearly.

Almost every person has faults. This few will deny. But we should frequently speak of that that is worthy of praise, and seldom of the faults, and when we do speak of them do so only to help our friend to overcome them.

We will profit much more to live the teaching of the first twelve verses of the fifth chapter of St. Matthew than to be always complaining at the way the church is managed and at the decisions of the Bishops.

Let us avoid becoming pessimistic.

A GREAT MAN'S MOTTO.

It is said of the great Swedish botanist and scientist, Linnæus, that he had placed over his door the motto, "Live innocently, God is present."

Linnæus was a busy man, and during his life classified and named all the known plants and animals of the earth, besides writing a great many books on plants, natural history and science; but he knew where to look for success, and believed that the only useful life was a Christian life. Beginning in poverty, he was lifted above want by his marked success in his profession, and he often told his friends that he was grateful to God only for the great success he had attained, counting his own work nothing compared with the assistance God had given him.

If God helped Linnæus for being a Christian in his profession, he will help us at home, in the office, and in whatever we undertake to succeed.

If we keep before us the motto, "Live innocently, God is present," it may save us many a regret when another year closes. It is a constant check-rein, guiding us to the right.—W. M. Smith.

Nothing writes itself more inevitably and indelibly upon the countenance than a sullen and fretful temper. A pretty face is soon spoiled by the lines which an ugly disposition indents upon it. The converse of this principle is also true—cheerfulness is one of the best cosmetics. We have apostolic authority for declaring that one of the most precious ornaments of womanhood is a meek and quiet spirit. Such a spirit, breathing forth contentment, trustfulness and hopeful courage, exerts its transfiguring ministry not only upon the life, but upon the very face. There is, in this connection, a profound meaning in the Psalmist's wonderful prayer, "Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us."—Central Advocate.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

SESSION DEC. 8–14, 1897

In an attendance upon the Annual Conferences in their sessions for nearly fifty years, this was the most enjoyable of any I have met with. The preachers were more cordial, loving and brotherly in their meeting and intercourse with each other. The business sessions were most harmonious and went on without jar or discord.

The preaching was of a high order, intellectually and spiritually. Every sermon seemed to have a special force and power in its delivery, and each was a "feast of fat things." I have heard as good preaching—sermons which would, perhaps, compare favorably with any one sermon delivered during our session—but never such preaching as came to us at Oxford, Miss., in consecutive discourses, one following another, each with its peculiar force of argument and spiritual life, eliciting responses from every godly man and woman, many of which came rolling in loud-volume over the audience.

The Bishop's sermon on Sunday morning at eleven o'clock, on Spiritual Worship, will long be remembered by many who heard it. The Bishop while passing over his exordium was not distinctly heard nor well understood, but when he had well and fully laid his foundation and began to build, he warmed up with his theme, his voice fully rose to the demands of the occasion, his message was well heard and received by that large audience.

May we live to enjoy more such Conferences!

J. D. NEWSOM.

There are people who, like some insects, as naturalists tell us, have microscopic eyes. It is only the little things which can be properly focused in their field of vision. They see the little faults and imperfections of their neighbors and friends which nobody else can see at all, and these are magnified by their peculiar vision into objects of great size and wonderful importance. When these microscopic eyes are coupled with a vivid imagination and an inclination to gossip, the community is regaled with the recitals of the littles until it is filled with a restraint and suspicion. Beware of the man or woman with microscopic eyes.—Mid-Continent.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. Paul D. Hardin: "We are closing our year's work on Decatur circuit very nicely. Our Conference collections will be in full. We have repaired the parsonage at a cost of about $200. We have now a very comfortable house, and one that is creditable to the church. Have two splendid Sunday-schools, three prayer meetings and one Epworth League doing good work. Have received forty-five into the church."

Mrs. Mollie Carter, Fernwood, Miss., Dec. 20, 1897: "Another year will soon be numbered in the past, and we will start out upon a happy New Year, and the time is near at hand when we will raise shouts of joy at what Smity has brought. We are very much grieved to say that on last evening we heard Bro. Abney's last sermon for this year, perhaps, forever. God forbid that it may be so! In our short acquaintance he seems so much like a brother to us; how we have learned to love him! We pray that many stars may be added to his crown for the great work he has done in the years he has been with this people. May God's most choice blessings rest upon him where he may be sent next year! is my prayer."

Rev. Sam Q. Bass, Corinth, Miss., Dec. 16, 1897: "Please say in your columns that the publication in the Baptist Layman, of Dec. 9, against me in regard to a tombstone is an infamous falsehood. The Baptist Church at Pleasant Ridge (as a body) had nothing whatever to do with that matter. I never was inside of that church in my life, nor do I know the name of a single man that belongs to it. I have a written statement to show that I did just as directed to do with the very small amount which was promiscuously collected. If the Baptist Church at Pleasant Ridge, or anywhere else, got up any money to buy a tombstone with, they did not turn it over to me. I have replied to the Baptist Layman, and a fuller history will appear later, if need be. A Baptist preacher who lives not far from where this thing was gotten up, said to me last Summer that 'Methodism was injurious to the gospel.' I reckon they have gone to work to stop its preachers. I am in the field ready for my issue. Now, Mr. Editor, please let me say to our pastors having engaged me to assist them in their meetings that I will use as a song book, 'Our Young People's Hymnals,' instead of 'Revival No. 2.' Mr. McMinn will be with me to lead the music, which adds much to the success of a meeting. I want to do more work and better work this year than I have ever done."

Many men fool with sickness just as a bear fools around a trap. A man doesn't like to own up that he is ill. He says "O, it amounts to nothing. I shall be all right to-morrow." But he isn't. "All right to-morrow; nor the next day. Pretty soon the trap snaps to; and he has some serious disease fastened on him.

The only sensible course is to keep away from the trap, and not allow sickness to get any hold on you. It is a frightful mistake to trifle with indigestion and bilious troubles in the belief that they will cure themselves. On the contrary they drag the whole system down with them.

When the appetite and digestion are irregular it shows that the machinery of the body is out of order and is not doing its proper work; the blood-circulation is poorly supplied and is being gradually debased by bilious poisons.

The proper alterative for this condition is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It acts directly upon the digestive functions and the liver; and enables the blood-making glands to supply an abundance of pure blood, rich with the nutritious vital elements which build up healthy flesh and enduring strength.

In all impoverished and run-down conditions the "Discovery" is far better than malt "extracts" or nauseating "emulsions." It creates genuine permanent strength. It does not make flabby fat but solid muscle. It is a perfect tonic for corpulent people.

A full account of its properties and marvelous effects in many so-called "hopeless" cases, verified by the patients' own signatures, is given in one chapter of Doctor Pierce's thousand-page illustrated book, "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser." This splendid volume will be sent free on receipt of 21 one-cent stamps to pay mailing cost only. Address, Dr. R. V. Pierce, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y. For a cloth-bound copy send 31 stamps.

"Having suffered for several years with indigestion," writes Samuel Walker, Esq., of Parkesburg, Chester County, Pa., "I concluded to try your valuable Golden Medical Discovery.' After taking five bottles I was entirely cured. I also suffered from bladder trouble, which was also cured by the 'Discovery.' I feel like a new man."

IN TIME OF SORROW.

I can not think you dead; it must be only
That you have traveled far;
And while I find my path on earth more lonely,
My sky has gained a star.

A star whose place in heaven I see more plainly,
Because, with me, 'tis night;
Yet through my tears I sometimes seek it vainly,
And can not find its light.

—Harper's Magazine.

Sweetness has often saved a soul; sourness never.

Charity is the perfection and ornament of religion.—Joseph Addison.

Some people pray for a baptism of the Holy Ghost who would run from it if they saw it coming.

Obedience from a sense of duty is good, but obedience growing out of a spirit of love is far better.

When thou prayest, rather let thy heart be without words than thy words without heart.—John Bunyan.

The greatest pleasure I know is to do a good action by stealth and have it found out by accident.—Charles Lamb.

Think of your sins long enough to repent heartily; then ever afterward forget them as far as possible and think of Christ.

If we would learn patience, there is no school but experiences that require us to exercise patience.—From the Westminster Teacher.

A loving confidence in the God we have offended is the key to his heart, the key which unlocks the treasury of his grace.—Rev. E. M. Gouldburn, D. D.

Some people may make large demands upon your patience, but not half as large as you have made upon the patience of your heavenly Father.

A curry-comb is a good thing in its place, but it was never intended as a substitute for provender. This may seem a truism, but some preachers would profit by remembering it.

In judging others, a man labors to no purpose, commonly errs, and easily sins; but in examining and judging himself, he is always wisely and usefully employed.—Thomas A. Kempis.

Remember that we have no more faith at any time than we have in the hour of trial. All that will not bear to be tested is mere carnal confidence. Fair weather faith is no faith.—C. H. Spurgeon.

I delight in believing myself immortal as God himself. Independently of revealed ideas, metaphysical ideas give me a vigorous hope of my eternal well being, which I would never renounce.—Montesquieu.

LOOKING FORWARD.

As age increases the greater is the tendency to live in the past. To many the joys and successes of bygone days appear far more glorious than do the pleasures and triumphs of the present or the promises of the future. The past should not be forgotten, for its history furnishes many an encouragement as well as many a warning and instructive lesson; but to let its visions and recollections constantly usurp the attention is unwise, since it unfits us for present duties and clips the wings of aspiration. Occasional reflection, however, upon past mistakes and defeats is highly beneficial, for thus are we brought to see the unwisdom of many of our actions and the causes of our failures. The remembrance of former triumphs and blessings, on the other hand, is ofttimes as refreshing to the spirit as is the sight of an oasis to the traveler in the desert.

But he who aspires after still better things, who is not content with the achievements of other days, must look forward with earnest hope and deep resolve. To fancy that one has achieved the topmost round of individual progress is to render further progress impossible. If we would grow better, wiser and happier, not only must we toil diligently in present tasks, and be ready to seize opportunities as they come, but we must hope and plan for better things. Great inventions and improvements were never made by timid conservatives and worshipers of the past. Contentment with our mental and moral state and with our achievements is a sure sign of lethargy and stagnation. It is a glorious thing to be able to look back over a life well spent; but how few there are who can recall the past without many misgivings and sore heartburnings! Were it not for the future with its song of hope, its prospects of success and its opportunities for improvement and the rectification of errors, life would be dark indeed. Truly "the time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles." The remembrance of former sins and mistakes ought ever to be grievous unto us.

With most people the advent of a new year is the signal for self-examination and the occasion of new resolves. New hopes are born and new achievements planned. Pitiable indeed is the condition of the man who at the approach of a new year sees no rainbow of hope athwart the skies, who feels no impulse to nobler, more earnest effort. Yet there are some everywhere whose lives are so darkened by sin or misfortune that they see no brightness in the future, neither feel the kindlings of lofty aspiration. In sullen despair they consider themselves helpless and depressed.

Fortunate are they who, in spite of calamities and grievous yielding to the tempter, refuse to be disconraged and look for future victory. The year just closing entailed upon a vast multitude in this section an unusual number of misfortunes and hardships; and, in consequence, not a few are discouraged and downcast. Looking forward seems vain when there is so little upon which to base expectation of better things. But he who remains most cheerful and retains most confidence in his ability to cope with future difficulties is the surest to win.

Even when earthly hopes have well nigh vanished, and every prospect seems dark, the Christian can look forward joyfully to a brighter day and a more blessed experience. Though he has little of earthly goods, he rejoices in the love of God and in the prospect of deeper and richer spiritual blessings. Whatever have been the sins and errors of the past, he knows that by divine help he can "walk in newness of life," and grow more and more like his Lord.

The Christian, if he would make sure of salvation, must both look forward and press forward. Inaction and self-contentment are dangerous. Unless we hope and strive for greater self-mastery and likeness to Christ, there will be neither progress nor stability. The churches all over the land are full of people who, thinking themselves good enough, are resting on their oars, and so bring forth no fruit to perfection. Dissatisfaction with our present attainments is not only a sure promoter of growth, but it is emphatically enjoined in the Scriptures. "This one thing I do," says Paul; "forgetting those things that are behind, and reaching forth unto those that are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus," etc.

"Not, my soul, what hast thou done,
But what thou now art doing;
Not the race which thou hast run,
But that which thou'rt pursuing;
Not the crown which thou hast won,
But that which thou art wooing."

It is a blessed thought that, with aid from on high, our loftiest hopes of spiritual victory and improvement can be realized. Not one good thing of all that the Lord hath promised shall fail. Let us then as we enter upon a new year take fresh hope and plan great things for God and for humanity. Let us so labor as to bring sunshine and gladness into the hearts and homes of those who lead treadmill lives, and whose spirits are saddened by earthly woe.

We must not, however, so count upon the future as to despise the present and neglect its duties and opportunities. Only by making a wise use of each day and hour as it comes can we prepare ourselves for future emergencies and usefulness.

As Dr. Joseph Parker felicitously says: "The only way in which earnest men can provide for to-morrow is by looking well to immediate duty. Rest assured that if we are faithful to day, we shall not be left without comfort to-morrow. A wonderful feat has been played by 'to-morrow' in human life. It is not ours, and yet we could not do without it; we have never seen it, yet it is necessary to us. But for the future the past would be a great mockery. The Christian has no to-morrow as a fear; he has an everlasting to-morrow in the hope of growth, progress and advancement in all capability and faculty for divine service. Woe to the man who has so used his yesterday as to have hope of to-morrow."

BISHOP WILSON AT MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

By H. M. DuBose, D. D.

The faculty and student body of Millsaps College, together with the other literary folk in the capital of Mississippi, have been enjoying, during the past ten days, an intellectual luxury in a course of lectures delivered in the college chapel by Bishop A. W. Wilson, of Baltimore. The series comprised a survey of the life, labors and writings of St. Paul, and a philosophical and theological analysis of "Paul's gospel," as correlated with, not (as the later Tubingenite would have it) contradistinguished from, the Johannine, Petrine and Jacobine interpretations. From his apt and impressionable pupilage at the feet of Gamaliel to the exception of his heaven-appointed ambassadorship before Cæsar and the Prætorians, the character of Saul the Pharisee and Paul the Christian was pictured as a marvel of individuality, unmixed integrity, intellectual strength, and clarified spiritual emotions.

The Bishop's treatment of the story of the apostle's conversion departed from the too hasty popular conclusions reached in a study of that event. The conversion of Saul was not the conversion of a morally degraded and corrupt man, but a change of conviction wrought in the mind of the most sincere and astutely upright Jew of the old dispensation. That was not a caricature, but the noblest form of man, that went riding up to Damascus. His sudden conversion brought him no new moral code, no higher rule of conscience. Touching the written law and the statute of conscience, he was blameless before God; but his attitude toward Jesus of Nazareth was changed—whom before he hated, he immediately loved; whom he persecuted, he ever afterwards served. The change revealed in him the Son of God. His old life was a preparation for his new. In the new he found but one regret concerning the old: he had persecuted the Lord Jesus. Out of a morally degraded man, even with conversion, an apostle could not be instantly made. Law and obedience in their long and steady processes and results are necessary to complete the character that God can greatly use. Obedience, and not sudden crucifixion, perfects life into the shape of "a chosen vessel" of the kingdom. So stern, yet so natural; so practicable are the ways of God in redemption.

The lecturer invested the history of St. Paul with an interest as real and human-like as may be found in the biography of any modern. The man renowned for his suffering of persecutions, stripes, shipwrecks, imprisonments, bonds, was made to move and speak in vividness and reality. Foremost everywhere, in quelling the tumults which his own preaching had raised, in the debates of apostolic councils, in action in the extremities of the sea, in wise and manly defenses of the gospel "in the Prætorium and all other places," he ever justified the divine judgment which separated him to the ministry of the world's greatest message in the crucial day of its history.

The epistles of the apostle, the best and most lasting output of his genius, were shown to be, for the most part, the aftermath of his labors. When he had matured his conceptions through long preaching and profound meditations; when a sufficient history of gospel endeavor lay behind him; when all his teachings were embodied and confirmed in a living, witnessing church, his scheme of the gospel went to record in the epistles. Not according to his early wish, but according to heaven's better plan, he finished his ministry at Rome, not in public preaching, as at Antioch and Athens, but in confinement, his teachings percolating slowly through the single hands and hearts of the few to reach at least the wider world.

Bishop Wilson's style is one which the younger men of our ministry should study. A master of general learning, of rhetoric and logic, he preserves "the Greek middle" in statement, in argument, and in the employment of rhetorical accessories. In a series of lengthy extempore lectures dealing with post-Pentecostal events, no statement was made that would not read evenly with any in a history of modern missions, or even of state diplomacy. The logic was of a piece with the form of statement, and the language never once dropped to the level of the prosaic so much affected in certain quarters to day; nor yet did it even become rhetorical air-plants, but grew always deep-rooted in nurturing soil, and wide-branching through genial warmth above. The days of stately speech and Athenian rhetoric are not past. The best types of these are to be found in the Southern pulpit.

Jackson, Miss.

AN IMPORTANT MATTER.

The North Mississippi Conference, lately in session at Oxford, adopted a resolution urging each pastor to get up in his charge a petition to Gov. McLaurin, asking him to recommend to our next State Legislature the repeal of that provision in the code which permits the existence of "hop-tea saloons." This duty thus impressed upon our preachers should be attended to at once. The Legislature will meet on the first Monday in January. As the approaching session is a short one, aside from appropriation bills and questions relating to public revenue, only such other matters can be considered as are recommended by the governor; hence the necessity of immediate action. If we allow the present opportunity to pass, we will not have another within two years.

"Hop-tea joints" are nearly as bad as open whisky saloons. In many parts of the State they are debauching the morals of our boys and young men, and are demoralizing whole communities. The friends of temperance and good morals need to bestir themselves. So let every pastor draw up petitions, secure as many signers as possible, and forward them to Governor McLaurin. The citizens of each county should also strive to interest their State senator and representatives in this movement. They must be made to feel that we are in earnest. Let us, by organized effort, strike down these agencies of evil, and rid our beloved State of every form and vestige of the nefarious liquor traffic. We trust that the preachers of the Mississippi Conference will co-operate with us in this undertaking.

R. A. Meek.

Tupelo, Miss., Dec. 22, 1897.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Nine-tenths of the contributions to foreign missions are given by one-tenth of the church membership, while only one-half of the membership give anything. The average amount per member is fifty cents per annum—only the seventh part of a cent per day for the conversion of a thousand millions of heathens! An average of five cents a week from every member of the Protestant churches of the United States would bring into the treasury during a single year, $16,500,000. Ninety-eight per cent. of the church's contributions for religious purposes is spent at home, while only two per cent. is applied to the foreign mission field. There are 75,000 ministers in the United States, or one to about every 600 persons, while only one is allotted to half a million in heathen lands. There are 1500 counties in China without a single missionary. All missionary workers in heathen lands, native and foreign, would now be represented by less than one-twentieth part of one of the squares on this diagram.

MAN MAKING.

What is all the world doing at once? My answer is, building. I admit that a large part of them, probably the great majority, do not know it and have never thought of it. Yet building they are, and have ever been and ever will be. Aye! and not only are they builders, but they are builders of that which they love the best, and in which they have the nearest interest; they are builders of themselves. In this great and universal trade there are no trades unions and no strikes. There is no distinction of employer and laborer. Bankruptcies and failures, I fear, there are many. Be that as it may, let every man—high and low, rich or poor, young or old, the loftiest genius and the veriest dunce, the most careful husbandman of the gifts which God has entrusted to him and the most profligate and abandoned gambler—let them all know that at all times, and in all conditions and circumstances, they are builders, and are builders of themselves.

As trees make their largest growths in periods, not, perhaps, of their infancy, but of their early spring, so mental and moral actions, over and above what they are in the very process of thought and deed, leave behind them as portions of the actual character of the agent the largest actual results. Everyone, at the end of the action, is in himself different from what he was at the beginning; and if the act be done in youth, the difference in him between what he was and what he is, is then the widest. Do not tell me in reply that the difference is small and imperceptible, for thus it is from moment to moment, in being well or ill, in its being light or dark; in all the processes which in the mass make up the experience of life, with the fruits of that experience.—Gladstone.

A WISE COLPORTEUR.

It is said that a certain Conference colporteur has a unique way of replenishing clerical libraries. When he goes to a parsonage he says nothing to the preacher about buying books, but waits until the preacher is absent, and then brings out a number of first-class books suitable for a preacher's library and shows them to the preacher's wife, expatiating upon the vast amount of help they give a preacher in sermonizing. The good woman feels that her darling needs help of that sort, and so she places an order. What can the preacher do but foot the bill? It is said that this colporteur has already elevated the standard of preaching in the region in which he operates, and the good work is still going on.

A GREAT ORGANIZATION.

I had the pleasure last Sunday of looking upon the Methodist Conference, which was in session at Oxford. It was a magnificent body of men—intellectual in appearance, meek in manner, firm in purpose, pure in intentions and noble in aspirations. It was an inspiring spectacle—four hundred or more men had congregated there to take counsel of each other, to devise ways and means whereby humanity might be benefited and the world made better. Think of it. These devout men consecrated to the service of God—forgetful of self, laying aside the gratification of the flesh, despising the blandishment of the world, and devoting all of their energies, both body and spirit, to the propagation of right and the salvation of immortal souls. It was indeed a pleasant prospect. I have long since concluded that the great man is he who does the most for humanity. The things of this life are in the very nature of things ephemeral, transitory, as fleeting and unstable as a bubble. One may win the praise of the multitude, he may reach the apex of human renown, he may have his name and deeds made the theme of song and poesy, his decaying form may be carved in adamantine, yet it will be but a few days when it shall all be swallowed up by insatiable oblivion, and his record as though written upon the sand, will have been effaced by the ebb and flow of the onward rolling ocean of time. Not so with good deeds and kind words. They are eternal. I sometimes think that at the final settlement before the bar of infinity the a man's words and deeds done in the flesh will appear as living witnesses whose testimony will work his conviction or his acquittal. The Methodist Church is a magnificent organization. It has accomplished a great deal of good, and it has scarcely entered the threshold of the field of its usefulness.—J. K. V., in Greenwood Commonwealth.

LOVE QUICKLY, CHANGE SLOWLY.

"Nothing goes against the grain. The new pastor, hardly warm in his seat, who undertakes to set aside or reverse the traditions of a church or parish, is likely soon to discover that he is a "persona non grata." But let him win the right to be a leader by wise gentleness, by patient and forceful faithfulness, and the "grain" will be modified. Love will make the people loyal: then any word or wish of his will go for all it is worth. —Christian Register.

NOTES.

Rev. Henry B. Carre, of Vanderbilt University, is spending the holidays with his mother in the city. He is in good health and spirits. He will receive his diploma at the next commencement.

Rev. Ruffin T. Davis, formerly of the Mississippi Conference, after serving in the local ranks for about eight years, has joined the Little Rock Conference, and is now stationed at Lonoke, Ark.

Rev. Henry E. Partridge, of the Mississippi Conference, has been transferred to the Florida Conference and stationed at Bartow. He will attend the Mississippi Conference next week at Jackson before leaving for his new charge.

Dr. John O. Keener, president of Southern University, Greensboro, Ala., is on a visit to his father, Bishop Keener, in this city. He preached Sunday morning, at Dryades Street Church an eloquent sermon to the delight and edification of the congregation.

By invitation of the pastor, Rev. V. V. Boone, we spent last Sabbath at Summit, reaching there in time to take an elegant Christmas dinner with Bro. Boone. We occupied the pulpit on Sunday, morning and night. Bro. Boone is in high favor with his flock and with the community in general. As a preacher he takes high rank, his people speaking of him as "a star." The desire for his return seems to be universal. We made headquarters at the parsonage during our stay and were most hospitably entertained by Bro. Boone and his delightful family.

Miss Jessie Ackerman, the famous "round-the-world missionary" of the National W. C. T. U., is with Miss Belle Kearney at her home at Pontotoc, Miss., where she will remain until February, at which time she and Miss Kearney will begin a joint six months' lecturing tour through the Gulf States. In April she will sail for foreign lands. Miss Ackerman has traveled more, perhaps, than any woman of our day, having compassed the circuit of the globe twice, and visited every civilized country on earth. The people of our South will are to be congratulated upon the privilege of hearing this distinguished pair.

ARIZONA.

Colorado and Southern California claim the finest climate in the United States for persons suffering with pulmonary troubles; but those who have tried both, unite in saying that Arizona is incomparable. The air is dry twelve months in the year, is almost entirely free from cyclones and thunder storms, and full of invigorating power even in the dead of Summer. Its high altitude in many places, lack of rain and distance from bodies of water, save it from the least suggestion of humidity. The country, besides the advantages it possesses from a sanitary standpoint, is full of the deepest interest on account of the unusual appearance of the landscapes, its rich mines, the presence of people from all parts of the earth, to say nothing of the Indians and Mexicans who swarm there, the great number of ruins belonging to a pre-historic race, and, above all, the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, which is said to be the most magnificent thing in America in the way of scenery. I had the privilege of visiting only the southern portion of the Territory as far north as Phœnix.

Tempe is a sleepy little place full of dobe wrecks, sitting in the midst of barren buttes and wide prairies. Thousands of cattle roam over the vast expanses of the latter, and alfalfa and grain grows in profusion. If Arizona were well irrigated, it would produce as luxuriantly as other portions of the West that have grown so famous in the last few years. It will only be a question of time when this great waste will be changed into fields of abundant crops of fruits and cereals and bowers of blossoms. Arizona, like all States and Territories that lie in this direction beyond the Mississippi river, is abreast with the times on educational matters. At Tempe, the Territorial Normal is located. The buildings are new and elegant, and filled with live young people who have determination and a noble ambition stamped all over their faces. In the suburbs of Phœnix a Government Indian School is situated. The campus is large and well-kept, the buildings commodious, clean and in perfect order, possessing every facility for training the Indian boys and girls in industrial and intellectual pursuits. All things possible are being done by the United States government to care for the red man and his children, but it is a difficult task and a discouraging one, as the Indians often go back to their savage lives after spending years in the center of civilization. The Assembly of Arizona meets in an ordinary brick building, but a fine new State House is soon to be erected. There are handsome banks and different prominent public buildings in the capital of the Territory. Another striking feature of the West, besides its educational institutions, are reading-rooms—almost every town can boast of one, however small it may be, and they are largely patronized. The one in Phœnix is owned and run by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, as hundreds of others are.

Casa Grande is nothing but a handful of adobe houses thrown upon the sand and occupied almost exclusively by Mexicans and Spaniards, numbering in all about 150 inhabitants. Nearly every little hut has a dirt floor and is filled with filth and children. Occasionally I stumbled upon a pretty senorita dressed in a clean yellow skirt and bright blue waist, looking pensively up to the mud roof, picking a guitar and singing softly, while her old mother doubled herself up against the wall and smoked a cigarette. In several of these houses I was fortunate in finding some of the curious baskets made by the Maricopa Indians, and a great quantity of the pottery manufactured by numerous tribes. By a little persuasion of tongue and looks and lucre, I succeeded in possessing some of these treasures. Casa Grande is situated in the valley of the Gila. It gets its name from the oldest ruin in [illegible] grand castle built by a race that flourished in this region long before the feet of white men stepped upon Columbia's shores. From evidence left, it has been proven that these people did not belong to the Indians, nor Mexican nor Anglo Saxon races. Who they were and from whence they came will, perhaps, ever remain a mystery. They built houses four and five stories high, dug canals and established towns and villages. They used pottery like that now seen and axes made of stone; but further than this, we know nothing. The noted Casa Grande ruin is considered so valuable that arrangements have been made by the national government for its preservation; the veteran missionary, Rev. Isaac T. Whittimore, being made custodian. When Coronado explored the ruin in 1540 it was four stories high and its walls four feet thick, but the wear and tear of the elements since then and the souvenir fiends have decreased its dimensions.

Tucson was settled about the same time that St. Augustine was, and is the second oldest city in the United States. It is 2,420 feet above the sea level and as dry as Sahara. Several high mountains encircle it; some near—some far away; but just around Tucson there is nothing but sand, sand, sand! The place is quaint beyond all conception, and has very much the appearance of an Oriental city, with its narrow little streets, square, plain houses and the dusky faces of the Mexicans seen glimpsing about in every direction—the men tipping along in their unemphatic fashion and the women gliding smoothly with their heads and shoulders draped with shawls and mantillas. The hotels are on the most approved modern plan and equally as expensive as those found elsewhere. Consumptives fill them and the streets and the highways, their dismal coughing reverberating through the air, bringing up thoughts of the cold, dark grave, and casting a gloom over the sunshine. Just outside the city limits the Catholic sisters have a hospital. It is wonderful that there are not more; but Tucson is within itself a great natural sanitarium. Hundreds of invalids drag themselves out to it, hoping to get well; but it is often too late—no power could save them. Many suffer horribly for the common necessaries of life, and at last die a miserable death. Others, financially able to come before the dread disease clutches them too closely, get well and strong, and "take up the burden of life again;" but if they return to the States, the old trouble almost invariably comes back. The Territorial University is situated at Tucson. In appearance and general equipment it easily ranks with the first institutions of a similar nature in the East. President Tillman has recently resigned, and his place is now filled by Dr. Parker, who has done so much to forward the present splendid system of education in Pasadena, Cal. Tucson is the home of Ex-Gov. L. C. Hughes and his wife, who have for years been at the front of the temperance reform and the movement for the political emancipation of women in Arizona. At one time, while Mr. Hughes was in the gubernatorial chair, he made a campaign for woman's suffrage throughout the Territory. On the ragged edge of Tucson are the adobe homes of the Mexicans, and the little pointed, circular dwellings of the Indians. The last are made of poles, and covered with daubs of dirt, old pieces of tin and filthy rags. Squalor reigns supreme. The cabins of our negroes are palaces compared to these and to many of the Mexican adobes. These weaker races lead idle, lazy lives. How they subsist at all is a mystery. They would perish if it were not for the effort of the women who work to keep body and soul together. They lift heavy burdens, delve in the fields, hire out as servants, and do every imaginable form of labor, while the men look on complacently. One of the chief occupations of the Mexican women, and a prime source of income, is doing laundry work for the "white people." This is performed in a very primitive way. The water is poured into a hole scooped out of the ground, and the clothes are soaked in it and then flapped upon a stone until clean. The Mexican is said to be a difficult factor in politics out here. They vote just as they are ordered to by their bosses and ringleaders, but usually they are bought, as the low foreigners in our large cities are, and marched to the polls in battalions at so much a head. This massing of suffrage makes it slightly hard for the other side. A different character is given to the Mexicans in different quarters. Some declare that there was never a more honest, harmless set of humans in the world; others say they are exceedingly treacherous, and will steal anything upon which they can lay their hands. I noticed one fact in their favor: doors are never locked, except in large hotels, and I was told that in Summer many people sleep out in the open air with purses and watches under their heads, without being disturbed in the slightest degree. There is an Indian school at Tucson conducted under the Presbyterian Board of Missions. I found it very interesting to listen to the pupils recite their lessons. The tone of the Indians' voices are so low that the teachers, in order to make them speak sufficiently loud to be understood, have put the recitation benches in the rear of the room. The old regime and the new were vividly contrasted as I sat in that modern school-house. In the midst of the Indian boys and girls, with their clean-shaven heads and spotless clothes, there sat three Indian men who had come in from the reservation to note the progress made by their offspring. These three wild, rugged sons of the prairies sat with their painted faces and long black hair falling in heavy masses low over their backs and shoulders, looking with keen enjoyment glinting from the corners of their small, bead-like eyes, while the teacher taught their children the language of the once-hated white man. On a blackboard in the Indian school at Phœnix were words similar to these, which a large class of Indian boys were copying: "When Columbus landed on the shores of the country, now known as America, a great number of a strange-looking people crowded to the water's edge to behold the Spaniards. These men were red and savage in appearance, being perfectly nude, but, on the whole, were inclined to be friendly." Indeed, "alas! the poor Indian." He is being crowded to the wall by the steady march of civilization. A few more decades and his face will disappear forever in the dying light of a pathetic day, sinking, to rise no more, in the deep, deep waters of the sunset sea.

Some publishers are putting off Bibles on their subscribers which they claim are just as good as the Holman. There is no other as good. It has all the Oxford helps and the self-pronouncing feature besides. Every person, whether educated or uneducated, needs help in pronouncing Bible names. The Holman Bible gives you the pronunciation, not in an appendix where it has to be hunted up, but in the book itself wherever the name occurs. Paper and binding are excellent. Epworth League

BY REV. HERMANN W. KNICKERBOCKER,
813 Fonchet St., New Orleans.

TOPIC FOR JANUARY.

"WORKING FOR GOD."

JAN. 2.—OCCUPATION FOR THE NEW YEAR.
(Prov. xi, 30; Dan. xii, 3.)

1. Resolutions are in order. A resolution is taking aim. A life that is not backed and directed by good resolves is without aim and accomplishes little. In order to the best results there must be a plan of action as well as resolution. One must not only resolve to do a certain thing, but how to do it. The reason so many resolutions are broken is because they lack this feature. Plan is the track upon which the resolution is to run. Without a track, the most powerful locomotive can not run far. Napoleon never blundered into victory, but won his battles in his head before he won them on the field. His success was due not only to his determination to win, but to his carefully worked-out plans. Let the League not only resolve to save souls this year, but have also a definite plan of action. Each individual should sit down, and carefully make his plans. Try this—single out some unsaved person; pray for him constantly; get him to come to church; talk to him in the spirit of love about his sins and his soul, and hold on to him until he is saved.

2. Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners—that is all. All the forces of the gospel converge upon this point. Anything that does not, directly or indirectly, look to this end is not in accord with the gospel. The League must save souls. It may do a vast number of other things; but if it does not do this, it falls short of its mark. Is your League a soul-saving institution?

3. The incentives to this work are glorious. "They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and ever." Though you follow Jesus in this great mission, through persecutions and trials, even up to Calvary, remember that you will also follow him in his triumphal march along the star-lined avenues of God into the New Jerusalem. O Leaguers, look at the men and women dying around you, remember that you are sent of God to serve them, look to heaven for your reward, and, in the name of the Master, go to work!

THIS OFFER IS GOOD FOR 30 DAYS ONLY

To quickly introduce and obtain agents in as many new localities as possible for Dr. Horne's New Improved Electric Belts and Appliances, we have decided to sell for 30 days only, our No. 4 Dr. Horne's New Improved Regular $20.00 Electric Belt for only $6.66, a price that will make it possible for every person reading this advertisement to get one of our best Belts at a nominal price. Never in the History of our business have we offered to sell this Belt at such a price, but we want an agent in your locality, and we believe that if you buy a Belt you will be so well pleased with it that you will either act as our agent or help us to get one.

Remember, the Belt we are offering you for only $6.66 is our No. 4 Dr. Horne's New Improved Regular $20.00 Combination Belt for men or women. It is adjustable and can be worn by any member of the family. Suspensory free with every male Belt. It is the best Belt we manufacture; in fact, the Best on Earth, and we make no exception to this statement. We have sold hundreds, yes, thousands of them, up to $10.00. There is not a family but what should have one of these Belts, as it is the best and cheapest doctor, and you do not have to go out of the house to get it. It will last you for years with proper care, and will save itself in doctor bills ten times over. These Electric Belts have cured thousands and will cure you if you will only give it a trial, as the many testimonials which we publish in our catalogue will prove.

YOU RUN NO RISK IN DEALING WITH US.

We do not ask you to send any money in advance. If you want one of these belts we are perfectly willing to send it to your nearest express office, C. O. D., so that you can see and examine it free of any cost, just the same as if you came into our office or go into any store, and if you are perfectly satisfied with it, pay the express agent the price of the Belt and express charges and take it; otherwise it will be returned to us. Can any fairer offer be made you than this? We are the only manufacturers of Electric Belts who send Belts C. O. D., without asking one cent in advance. If you wish to send cash with order we will prepay all express charges and guarantee the Belt to be exactly as represented, or forfeit $100.00.

WE HAVE NOW OFFERED YOU AN OPPORTUNITY OF YOUR LIFE

and if you do not accept it you may be sorry for it, as we shall never again offer this Belt at such a price. It seems needless to say that we are sustaining a loss on every Belt we sell at the above price, but it is cheaper to introduce them in new localities in this way than to send traveling men to do it for us. If you want one of these belts CUT OUT COUPON and send to us with your waist measure in inches. Don't delay. Order today if possible, otherwise you may forget it.

DR. HORNE ELECTRIC BELT & TRUSS CO.
112-114 DEARBORN ST., CHICAGO, ILL., U.S.A.

P. S.—If you have no use for an Electric Belt please hand or mail this advertisement to some one that you know, who is not enjoying good health. By doing this you will favor them and us. We want a good agent in every locality to whom we can give steady employment. We only employ those who have used our Belts and can speak of their merits from personal experience.
REFERENCES:—As to our reliability we refer to any Express Company, any Bank in Chicago, and the many thousands all over the United States who have used our Electric Belts and Appliances during the past 20 years.

Happy Homes
..AND THE..
Hearts that Make Them;
Or, Thrifty People and Why They Thrive
BY
SAMUEL SMILES,
AUTHOR OF SELF-HELP, CHARACTER, DUTY, THRIFT, ETC.

CAREFULLY REVISED WITH ADDITIONAL MATTER BY CHAS. A. CASKELL, A. M.

A beautifully illustrated book of 644 pages, cover stamped in gold, marbled edges, size 8vo, red cloth. Probably no books of the same general type were ever written that have so much interested and inspired to worthy action the various classes to whom they were addressed, as have the productions of SAMUEL SMILES. The marked interest which attaches to MR. SMILES' productions is chiefly due to his happy use of biography. Readers who tire of extended biographical histories find here groups of the wise and distinguished of earth, each giving testimony to the various principles the author wishes to inculcate. The interest excited by the novel arises solely from our interest in the lives and struggles of men and women. They are interesting biographies but much more interest should attach to lives actually lived and conquests actually made, provided they are produced with equal care. The home is the epitome of society and government. The application of these principles to every member of the home—the importance of their inculcation in the home where character is chiefly molded—and the value of such lessons in making every home what it may be and should be, has dictated the title,

"Happy Homes and the Hearts that Make Them."

THE DEATH-BED.

BY THOMAS HOOD.

We watched her breathing through the night,
Her breathing soft and low,
As in her breast the wave of life
Kept heaving to and fro.

So silently we seem'd to speak,
So slowly moved about;
As we had lent her half our powers
To eke her living out.

Our very hopes belied our fears,
Our fears our hopes belied –
We thought her dying when she slept,
And sleeping when she died.

For when the morn came dim and sad,
And chilled with early showers,
Her quiet eyelids closed - she had Another morn than ours.

MAKING A FRESH START.

The desire to begin over again is one of those longings so common and universal that we may say it is a native instinct. Sometimes it acts upon a multitude of men at once, and then we call it reform or revolution. When it acts upon the individual it is the spirit of self-improvement, and the most valuable stimulant and restorative nature exhibits. All that chloride of sodium is to the physical life, this longing to begin anew is to the spiritual and intellectual life, and the man or woman who never feels it is either hopelessly self-satisfied or hopelessly despairing.

Now, it is true that we can not pass a private Act of Congress in order to make our future life fit our best intentions. Most of us, before we arrive at middle life, have become conscious that there are things—good things—which will not be ours simply for wishing for them. We can remember many New Years as periods when we made excellent resolves that we never put into practice, and we have realized that self-improvement is a duty to be done with all our energy, because we feel that "the night cometh, when no man can work."

But next New Year we will make another fresh start, and in order to give us hope and strength we will remember, first, that it is never too late to mend. "The Man at the Gate" has never yet said to any applicant for admission: "The door is shut. It is too late!". If the past is irreparable, the present is our own, and we may have another opportunity. It was this hope and aspiration that made Ahab "go softly," and the prodigal return to his father, and David write the Fifty-first Psalm, and which in our own cases has over and over led us to pour out our souls in contrition and determine to turn a new white page and leave a better record upon it. That we have failed, and failed again and again, need not intimidate us for a new trial. Aspirations, imperfections and failures are intimations of future achievements. Defeats foretell future successes. The sin to be dreaded is the unlit lamp and the ungirt loin. Our light must be burning, however dimly, and we must keep on the right road, however often we stumble on the way.

Under no circumstances can it be true that there is not something to be done, as well as something to be suffered. Let us sit down before the Lord and count our resources, and see what we are not fit for, and give up wishing for it. Let us decide honestly what we can do, and then do it with all our might. Let us wisely determine what physical circumstances in our lives impede our progress, and then remove them, or else remove ourselves from them. Let us honestly acknowledge our faults, and not do as Catullus says—"carry them in the back knapsack." Let us bring them forward to the front and the light, and then have nerve enough to lay the axe to their root. Let us forsake improper friends. Let us study that divine and difficult arithmetic which will teach us to "number our days, so that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."

We have all an irrepressible wish to see success attend our efforts for improvement. We want to enter the Promised Land in our own lifetime. To toil constantly in faith and hope, and yet to die in the wilderness, "not having attained unto the promises, but only seeing them afar off," is a prospect that makes our hearts fail. What shall we do to succeed? Let us lay down at God's feet our failures and successes, our hopes and fears, our knowledge and ignorance, our strength and weakness, our confidences and misgivings—all that we are; all that we may be—content to take up thence just what God shall give us.

Those so seeking shall surely find him; and if not here, even then we will not be discouraged in trying to do well, for man's destiny ends not with the grave; and many will know him there who did not know him here. If we only are trying to find the way, the stages may be lonely and dark, but they will lead at last to the light longed for.

We have before us now an arc of our orbit, large enough to let us judge of our trend. Dare we look critically at it? Are we better, purer, more in earnest now, than we were at the beginning of the year? Has the lesson of the cross been cut more sharply into our hearts? Have we learned more self-denial? Have we been more self-sacrificing? Can we take the Ninetieth Psalm—that grandest of all human compositions—as our New Year's hymn, and, acknowledging all the deep sadness and truth of the first twelve verses, cry earnestly, "Return, O Lord," and then enter joyfully and hopefully into its happy prayers for the future years? If so, then each of us may say confidently, as we enter 1898:

"I go to prove my soul:
I see my way, as birds their trackless way,
I shall arrive; what time; what circuit first,
I ask not. In some time, his good time, I shall arrive.
He guides me and the birds. In his good time."

—Amelia E. Barr, in Christian Herald.

The noblest thing in the universe is honest labor. It is the preservative principle of the world. Labor raises cities, adorns the earth, and beautifies with works of art; whitens the sea with wings of commerce; binds continents together by means of the telegraph; extinguishes barbarism and plants civilization upon its ruins. Thank God for a nation of workingmen.—Rev. G. O. Bacchus.

Helen, aged four, was spending a night away from home. At bedtime she knelt at her hostess' knee to say her prayers, expecting the usual prompting. Finding her friend unable to help her out, she concluded thus: "Please, God, 'cuse me. I can't remember my prayers, and I'm staying with a lady that don't know any."—Ex.

Hair Hints

Is your hair dry, harsh, and brittle? Is it fading or turning gray? Is it falling out? Does dandruff trouble you? For any or all of these conditions there is an infallible remedy in Dr. Ayer's Hair Vigor.

"For years, I was troubled with dandruff, large flakes scaling and falling off, causing great annoyance. Sometimes the itching of the scalp was almost unendurable. Prescriptions from eminent physicians, put up in my own drug store were tried, but failed to afford relief. At length I used Dr. Ayer's Hair Vigor, and in one week I found it helped me. At the end of only two weeks, my head was entirely free from dandruff, and as clean as a child's. I heartily recommend Dr. Ayer's Hair Vigor to all who are suffering from diseases of the scalp."—EDWIN NORDSTROM, Drugs, etc., Sacred Heart, Minn.

OVEREATING.

Half the people we know have violent attacks of indigestion, because they will persist in eating hearty meals when in an exhausted condition. They seem never willing or able to realize that there are times when the system is in no fit state to grapple with a full meal. They come in tired and hungry, almost ravenous, not thinking that maybe a good deal of what they consider hunger is gastric irritation, then sit down to a table covered with the substantials of life and deliberately go to work to overtax the already overstrained vital powers. No person should ever eat heartily when very tired. The wisest thing to do is to drink a cup of hot water with three teaspoonsful of milk in it, sit down for five minutes, and then begin slowly to eat, masticating thoroughly. In a little while the vigor of the stomach will come back, and all will be well. If this course were followed, there would not be one case of dyspepsia where now there are a dozen. It seems to be the most difficult of all things to properly control the appetite. It seems to be the master. It requires will power to get it under control. When once mastered, something important has been accomplished in self-discipline.

Epworth College

(Formerly MALONE)

Is located in Holly Springs, at the intersection of the Illinois Central and Kansas City, Memphis and Birmingham Railroads, and has always been noted for the health, culture and refinement of its people. Ten passenger trains come and go every day, except Sunday, when we have eight.

We shall continue to work under the auspices of the North Mississippi Conference, and pledge ourselves to use every effort in behalf of those entrusted to our care that they may be developed into educated, polished Christian women.

BOARDING DEPARTMENT.

Pupils boarding in the College have the personal attention of the President and his wife, who, together with the teachers, strive to make their stay while here as pleasant and profitable as possible.

An abundance of substantial food is furnished; ample time given at each meal for everyone to be satisfied, and President's family, teachers and pupils all fare alike. Special attention is paid to their manners and morals at all times, and every effort is made to impress them with the necessity of constant growth, physically, mentally and morally.

We board at $11.00 per month where they take their meals regularly at the table; extra charge when the meals are carried to their rooms, and extra servant hire. This includes pupils and teachers.

No incidental fee is charged unless something is destroyed, and in this case the cost of the article is charged to the party who destroys it.

ENTHUSIASM.

You can do nothing without enthusiasm. You can not carry on a charitable relief society or a political club with cold-blooded men.

And the kingdom of God is more than a club. No enterprise depends so absolutely on the high enthusiasm of its members. It utilizes all kinds of power, but it succeeds in proportion as the mercury stands high in the thermometer. Its great captains have all been of the impassioned order. George Buchanan was the finest Scottish scholar of the sixteenth century, but it was fiery John Knox, and not the Latin writer, that rescued Scotland. Erasmus was the finest scholar anywhere of that century, but Luther led the European Reformation. It was not the learned Alexandrian, Apollos, that evangelized the Roman Empire, but that inspired madman, St. Paul.

History affords at every turn some impregnable fortress which was the despair of the wise and prudent, but was carried by some enthusiast with a rush. He cast his reputation, his life, his all, into the breach, and his body made the bridge over which the race entered into its heritage. Christian sentiment condemned the gladiatorial show, and a pseudo-Christian emperor forbade it. But many were butchered to make a Roman holiday, till a monk, carried beyond control, flung himself into the arena, and was stoned to death. From the days of Telemachus until now the kingdom of heaven has been served by "the violent," and the violent have carried it to victory.—Ian Maclaren.

NEWELL—December 14 Miss MARTHA A. NEWELL, aged eighty-four years, died at her residence near Pineville at 11:30 o'clock, after a long illness; the last of an old and respected family who resided for many years in the parish of Rapides. She was buried in the old family graveyard, Holloway's Prairie. The writer is one who shared her hospitality. She was a pure Christian woman to be loved; kind to the sick, charitable to the poor. No one was ever turned from her door. Her face shone bright from a pure heart. The door stood open for you, my friend. Jesus receives you into glory. L. L. C.

HAYS—On Oct. 6, 1895, God sent into the home of Wm. Allen and Cora Campbell Hays a bright little boy, HARRY ALLEN. His mission on earth was short, ending Oct. 5, 1897, lacking one day of being two years.

No philosopher can explain why the stay was so short, but we believe in Him of whom it is said, "He doeth all things well." It is hard for the father and mother to be so soon separated from this, their first-born. All we can do is to commend them to our Father, whose grace is sufficient, and who sanctifieth all our trials and afflictions to our good and his glory. May the Lord bless the afflicted ones! M. L. B.

Resolutions of the Carrollton Avenue Sunday-school on the death of Miss MATTIE GOODRICH, JULIA ANGEL, CORBIN SMITH, and WALTER ALLEN:

Whereas, During the present quarter of this year it has seemed good to our heavenly Father to remove from our midst our faithful teacher, Miss Mattie Goodrich, and three pupils, Julia Angel, Corbin Smith, and Walter Allen; And, whereas, We deeply deplore their loss to church, Sunday-school and community; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we tender to the families of the deceased our tenderest sympathy, and pray our Father's loving care and comfort may sustain them in their sorrow.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be presented to each of the bereaved families, and a copy be presented for publication in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

THRASH—LITTLE DAVID S., son of Bro and Sister W. E. Thrash, was born Nov. 22, 1896, in Hickory, Newton county, and died Aug. 29, 1897.

While his stay was of brief duration, he had so endeared himself to the home by his bright, winsome ways as to make them feel his presence a necessity; but God had need of this "little jewel," and transplanted it to a brighter clime, where no sin can blight or sorrow darken his life, but where a loving Savior watches over his own.

He was baptized May 23, 1897, by the writer, for whom he was named. This was the first visitation of the "angel of death" into this large, happy household, which made it very sad; but, thank God for the faith which sustains, and comforts, and causes us to look beyond to the life eternal, where "God shall wipe away all tears!" D. P. BRADFORD.

Newton, Miss.

FOSTER—Mrs. ELIZA M. FOSTER (nee Raymond) was born in Cornwall, Canada, July 20, 1832. In early childhood she, with her parents, moved to Coburg, Ontario. At the age of fourteen years she lost her mother, and had thrust upon her the care of three younger children. In 1868, with her father, she moved to the State of Minnesota, and in 1872 to Iowa. On the seventeenth day of April, 1872, she was married to J. W. Foster, with whom she lived happily for twenty-five years. Fifteen years of her married life were spent in the State of Iowa. Failing health prompted the family to seek a milder climate; hence their removal in 1888 to Terry, Miss. Here Sister Foster lived for ten years, surrounded by a multitude of friends. On June 25, of this year, she suddenly and unexpectedly passed away.

In early life Sister Foster settled the question of salvation by accepting Christ. Hers was a life of humble devotion to God and his church. She was ever faithful to her every obligation, and has left an example worthy of emulation. She leaves a devoted husband and two daughters, for whom she is waiting and watching on the other shore.

CANADA—Bro. U. C. CANADA was born about seventy-one years ago in Tennessee, and died at his home in Hinds county, Miss., Dec. 9, 1897.

Many years ago Bro. Canada emigrated from Tennessee to Mississippi. In the State of his nativity he married Miss Louisa Moore, who, with six sons and one daughter, survive him. About twenty-five years ago he was converted and joined the Methodist Church at Woodlawn, near Jackson, and lived and died true to his church.

It is said that he was truly sympathetic and an excellent neighbor. No kinder and more indulgent father or more exemplary husband ever lived. At the time of his death he was a member of the Learned Church. In old Bethesda Presbyterian Church the writer, assisted by Rev. F. L. Allen, the pastor of the church, pronounced the last sad rites over his remains. He sleeps in the cemetery there.

Truly, a good and useful Christian gentleman has joined the "choir invisible;" has gone to his eternal home of reward. He now rests from labor, but his "works do follow him." The writer has known him from boyhood, and that to love and honor him, and with the loved ones he drops a tear of affection upon his grave, but expects to meet him again in the "Father's house of many mansions." JOHN W. CRISLER.

BIGGS—Bro. J. L. BIGGS died in Bellevue, La., Bossier parish, Dec. 5 in the eighty-fourth year of his age. He was born in Warren county, Tenn., Sept. 12, 1814. His father, in the fourth year of his age, moved to Alabama; in 1837 removed to Mississippi, and in 1852 to the place of his death. He was married in 1844 to Miss Betsey Elizabeth Brian, in Mississippi. He started to the war in 1862, and did faithful service for twelve months. He was converted at the age of fourteen, in Blount county, Ala. He rejoiced to often tell his experience, and rarely ever told it without shouting praises to God. He was a typical Methodist; believed in a religion that made one happy, and his every-day life, even amidst racking pains, was a practical illustration of his faith. He was greatly afflicted with deafness, but his place at church was rarely vacant, and his raptures of joy were at times sublime. He was a true and untiring friend to the ministry. Many a care-worn preacher has been cheered by his kindnesses and hospitality. His last visit to the parsonage (on an errand of kindness) will ever be remembered by the writer. A pretended skeptic was present, a man who had spent his life in unbelief and sin, and whose days are almost spent. He remarked that he would "give the world did he have such assurance, and could spend his last days in such happiness as manifested by Bro. Biggs." His influence will ever live. His life, character, and triumphant death is an inspiration to us who are left to follow in his steps. May God bless and comfort the bereaved ones! R. W. VAUGHAN.

FLOWERS—Died at his home in Crystal Springs, Miss., Nov. 30, 1897, Mr. HIRAM G. FLOWERS. He was born Dec. 19, 1827, and on Jan. 23, 1849, was happily married to Miss Levitia Hennington, who, after nearly half a century of faithful companionship, survives him. Six children were born to them—five sons and one daughter. The tragic fate of a son just budding into young manhood threw a shadow over the father's spirit which was never lifted in this life; and a short time thereafter another son, the Rev. Richard French Flowers, was called to his reward. A few years later the widowed and beloved daughter-in-law entered into her Redeemer's rest. These repeated bereavements saddened life for the devoted father, but his cup was not yet full, and a few weeks before his decease his only daughter, Mrs. Dora Clement, and her only daughter, a charming child of seven years, preceded him to "where beyond these voices there is peace."

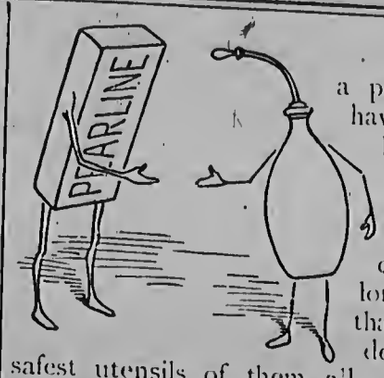
He professed conversion in 1849, in a meeting led by Rev. L. L. Scott, and his deep devotion to whatever he believed to be his duty, his constant, earnest efforts to provide for his family "things honest in the sight of all men," his fervent desire to make full provision for his beloved wife, to so arrange his business that she should be spared all trouble, show that in these things he followed Him who, "having loved his own, loved them to the end."

As a friend, he was kind and true. His many acts of sympathy were so quietly, so unostentatiously done, as to be known to few save the recipients and to Him who has said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." FANNIE M. MONTGOMERY.

Well! For Over Fifty Years

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind-colic, and is the best remedy for Diarrhœa. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

If you would know the taste of the bread they have in heaven, do the thing God wants you to do.



This is what a prominent physician says: "I have given my own children the benefit of very careful study in the matter of absolute cleanliness in bottle feeding. I have studied the so-called easily-cleaned nursing bottles, and I long ago came to the conclusion that a little Pearline would render ordinary nursing bottles the safest utensils of them all. I firmly believe that children properly fed and cleanly fed will avoid the majority of the difficulties which they encounter during the first two years of life. I believe that if every feeding bottle was washed with Pearline, many innocent lives would be saved."

Surely, this is a matter to interest every mother. Nothing so thoroughly cleanses as Pearline. 546

Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.

The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take-up, convenient foot rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one guage, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearing polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF THREADING—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

OUR OFFER.

To anyone, not now a subscriber to this paper, who will send us $19, we will send the machine and the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE one year. To old subscribers we make the following offer: Pay your subscription to April, '99, and send $17 additional, and we will send you the machine. This price does not include freight.

We allow purchaser to test the machine for ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

The Brooklyn postoffice yielded a net profit to the United States government last year of more than $250,000. The profit on the New York City postoffice was $4,700,000.

It is expected that the present session of Congress will authorize the construction of at least two battleships, one to be constructed on the Atlantic and the other on the Pacific coast.

The Coliseum, in Chicago, in which the last Democratic National Convention was held, was burned to the ground on Dec. 24. Six people are said to have lost their lives, and about eighteen have been injured.

Bishop Warren, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who is to make a missionary tour of several South American countries, has just received final instructions from New York City concerning the work which he is to do.

The grand jury in Chicago has voted true bills against thirty-five men as the principals and proprietors of alleged gambling houses, poolrooms and bucket shops in the down-town district. Three of these against whom true bills were voted are aldermen.

The public school system seems to be inimical towards matrimony. In several States no married woman can be employed as a teacher, and now a test case is about to be made in St. Louis to see whether a married woman may attend a public school as a student.

One of the most unique affairs of the dying year was a dinner on Christmas Day to the young men of Cartersville, Ga., tendered by Evangelist Sam Jones. His place was aglow with life, and even presented a scene of wholesale hospitality never before witnessed there. He made a ringing appeal to the young men present to overcome the evils of the world, the flesh and the devil, and then the feasting began.

At the meeting of the Cabinet at Washington, during the past week, the action of Germany and Russia in seizing upon certain Chinese ports came up for consideration. Although there is, of course, no official knowledge as to just what determination the Cabinet reached, it was rumored that it was resolved to watch the course of events closely and to take steps to fully protect Americans residing in China, as well as this country's large trade interests in the far East.

THE MISSISSIPPI ORPHANS' HOME.

The North Mississippi Conference heartily endorses the action of the Joint Board of Directors in their election of Rev. M. L. Burton, of the Mississippi Conference, manager and agent of the Home, and we have unanimously requested the constituted authorities to appoint him to this important position. We believe that Bro. Burton is the most suitable man that could have been selected. We know that he has the universal love and esteem of his own Conference, and we congratulate the Methodists of Mississippi on the able management of the Home. We earnestly request all the preachers and people to actively co-operate with Bro. Burton in sustaining this sacred cause. Our Conference has set apart the first Sunday in April, or as soon thereafter as practicable, as Orphans' Day. Remember that the Epworth Leagues of the State have pledged $1000 to the Home. This amount is needed soon as it can be collected. Capt. I. T. Blount is the treasurer of the North Mississippi Conference Board, and all money and other things collected for the Home in the bounds of our Conference should be sent to him till further notice.

SUGGESTIVE.

In the ADVOCATE, of Dec. 23, "Rex" asks why did not God "take the inclination to eat the apple out of Adam's heart"? Perhaps the answer to this question may be found in the fact that, so far as the record shows, Adam did not ask to be delivered from the inclination to eat the apple.

NOTICE.

The corner-stone of Gouldsboro M. E. Church will be laid next Sunday, at 3 o'clock P. M., Jan. 2, 1898. All our friends are cordially invited to be present. Cross the river on Richard street or Jackson street ferry.

J. M. ALFORD.

IMPORTANT.

Let all delegates to Conference obtain certificates when they purchase tickets over the S. P. R. R. This will entitle them to one-third fare on return trip. We fear that we will not have homes for any besides delegates.

A. J. NOTESTINE.

Crowley, La.

NOTICE.

The Southern Pacific railroad agrees to give the regulation one and one-third fare on the certificate plan to the Louisiana Conference in Crowley, reduction beginning on Jan. 4. It is probable that other roads will make the same terms.

R. H. WYNN.

The Illinois Supreme Court has rendered a decision sustaining the constitutionality of the civil service law and jury commission law of that State. The decision throws about 200 city officials out of employment, and compels the city to fill their places in the manner prescribed by the civil service law.

Always ready—Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It needs no mixing, no shaking, no disguise—nothing but a spoon. At dead of night your child startles you with a croupy cough. Immediately that you give this remedy the little one is relieved, and the household is again at rest.

Governor Atkinson, of Georgia, has determined to forward to Congress, with his disapproval, the national quarantine resolution, passed by the Legislature of that State. He is a state's-rights man, and does not favor surrendering such power to the federal government.

Governor Jones, of Arkansas, has commissioned Miss Emma Whittington an honorary colonel of the Reserve Militia. This is the first appointment of this kind ever made in that State.

According to a recent order the curfew law is to be read at least twice a week in every public school in Denver, Col. The provisions of the law are to be henceforth rigidly enforced.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy, for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block Rochester, N. Y.
